3 1761 11854000 4

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from University of Toronto

https://archive.org/details/31761118540004

CA2 ON
X1
-D23

Government Publications

76

No. 232

Nº 232

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly of Ontario

First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Thursday 18 September 1997

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Jeudi 18 septembre 1997

LIBRARY
SEP 23 1997
University of Toronto

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY
OF ONTARIO

Thursday 18 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE
DE L'ONTARIO

Jeudi 18 septembre 1997

The House met at 1001.
Prayers.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT (LICENCE SUSPENSIONS), 1997

LOI DE 1997 MODIFIANT LE CODE DE LA ROUTE (SUSPENSIONS DE PERMIS)

Mr Grimmett moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 154 An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act with respect to the suspension of drivers' licences / Projet de loi 154., Loi modifiant le Code de la route en ce qui concerne les suspensions de permis de conduire.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bruce Crozier): The member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay.

Mr Bill Grimmett (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): It's a pleasure for me to open debate on Bill 154, my private member's bill. The bill has been fairly heavily circulated and most of the members will know this, but I don't think it's a problem for me to repeat what the bill tries to do.

Currently, if people are convicted of impaired boating they lose their privilege to operate a boat for a period of time, but there is no sanction against their driver's licence. This act would, upon conviction either of impaired boating or blowing over 80 on a breathalyser or refusing to blow, remove the privileges of the convicted person to drive their automobile for a minimum one-year period.

Before I embark on an argument to persuade all the members to support the bill, I'd like to give some thanks to people who have helped me in my preparation and research, including Susan Swift of the legislative research service, who provided me with a great deal of background information on this issue, and from the Attorney General's ministry, Caroline Pinto, Michael Wood and Sheilagh Stewart, who helped with the drafting of the bill. Also, officials with the Ministry of Transportation and the Solicitor General and the Ontario Provincial Police have been very helpful in helping me put this bill together.

I thought I would speak for a moment about my own experience as a boater. I've been quite surprised at the bad boating habits of people in the vicinity of my riding in Muskoka-Georgian Bay. As a person who occasionally boats with my family, I find it quite alarming that when the Canadian Coast Guard did a survey of boaters across Canada recently they found that 37% of those people who boat indicated they drink alcoholic beverages every time they go boating, and about 66% of people who boat in Canada occasionally or regularly drink alcoholic beverages while they are boating.

I think this is an indication of lack of sensitivity by boaters to the issue of alcohol and boating and how they don't mix well. I also feel that there is in my riding a strong sense of dissatisfaction with the judicial system and the way it deals with impaired boaters, particularly with some of the high-profile accidents that have occurred on the water in recent years in Muskoka-Georgian Bay, where unfortunately the boat operators who were in the wrong received little or no sanction after the act, although there were some very serious victims in many of these incidents.

I don't know whether I can say that the number of bad accidents on the water in Ontario is increasing, but they seem to happen with regularity. I think it's time that we sent out a message to all people who boat in Ontario that there will be a very significant penalty if they choose to mix alcohol with their boating.

The statistics kept by the Ontario Provincial Police indicate that about 40% of all fatal boating accidents are alcohol-related, and that's a similar ratio to what occurs in automobile accidents. Currently we focus a good deal of attention on impaired motorists and I think it's time we levelled the playing field so that people who choose to drink alcohol and put others at risk while they're operating a boat be given similar attention. I think it's noteworthy that in Ontario currently if you're convicted of being impaired while operating a snowmobile, you lose your driver's licence.

I know from talking to the police that on most occasions when they find the operator of a boat has been drinking excessively and they indicate they will be charging them with impaired operation, the first question that's asked is, "I'm not going to lose my driver's licence, am I?" It is a tool the police want to have. They feel it's a tool that will help to discourage people from engaging in this kind of activity.

The other thing the bill would do is give police officers the ability to suspend for a 12-hour period the driver's licence of anyone involved in this kind of offence, even if they blow only a warning on the roadside breathalyser test. I think this is something the public would support strongly because it would take away the possibility of the person in the boat driving a car for a 12-hour period. I think in many cases the police would find it to be an adequate remedy, rather than going through the lengthy and sometimes frustrating process of an impaired charge.

The bill I am presenting today has provisions in it that have already been enacted in three other provinces. Alberta, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland have been suspending the driver's licence of persons convicted of impaired operation of a vessel for some time, and several states have enacted this kind of legislation.

At present, an individual convicted of operating a vessel while impaired is prohibited from operating a vessel for a minimum of three months for the first offence, six months for the second and one year for the third offence. The maximum prohibition from operating a vessel under the Criminal Code is three years. Under the current system, if you're convicted of impaired operation of a water vessel you can leave the courthouse, jump in your car and drive away.

I think the tougher sentences that have been imposed on impaired operators of motor vehicles have had some effect. I know that in the 24 years I've had a driver's licence in Ontario, I have noted among my friends and in the communities in which I've lived an increased awareness of the perils of drinking and driving. You will know, from talking to people who operate restaurants and bars, that people who are driving have a tendency either to have a designated driver or they don't consume as much alcohol. This is the kind of the thing that we have to impress upon the boating community and I think this bill would do that.

The effects of alcohol on operating a vessel are worthy of note, and this has been studied by the Canadian Coast Guard and many experts in the field. If a person has been consuming alcohol when they're going boating, they're going to have to deal with the problems that alcohol creates in their body. One is that it affects the balance. When you're in a boat your balance is already going to be more unstable than it is in a car, and if you've been drinking, your balance is not going to be as good.

1010

It affects your judgement. It reduces your inhibitions and it can cause normally cautious people to take more risks. Given that 37% of boaters have admitted that they drink and operate boats, it's a scary thought to think, when you're out in a boat with your family, that the judgement of a third of the boaters out there is affected by alcohol.

Studies have also indicated that when you're drinking alcohol, your vision is impaired. It has an effect not only on your peripheral vision but also on your ability to see certain colours. Two of the colours that have been identified are red and green, and of course, as people who boat will know, those are used as running lights on boats and they're also the colour of navigation markers out there. So it is quite a matter of concern that boaters would have their vision affected by their drinking.

Another effect is the reaction time. You will not have the ability to react quickly if you need to, as you often do in a boat.

I've been quite encouraged by the support I've received on this bill. The Ontario Provincial Police has been in touch with me on a constant basis. I've also had a voice mail message from the father of a victim of a boating accident all the way from Massachusetts, and today in the members' gallery we have with us many members of the group Mothers Against Drunk Driving, including Mr John Bates, who himself was a victim of a boating accident involving alcohol. Also in the gallery is Mr David Stewart, the president of the Ontario Community Council on Impaired Driving, who is supporting the bill, and his executive assistant, Ann Leonard.

I've also heard supporting encouragement from the Canadian Power and Sail Squadrons, the Georgian Bay community policing group and many individuals, both in my riding and in other parts of the province.

Personally, I feel this is a tool that the police have long asked for. They expect that this will have an impact on the attitudes people have when they are embarking on a boating voyage. I was myself out in a boat doing a cable TV show with our local MP and the police in Gravenhurst Bay in the spring of this year. It was a lovely day. The police pulled three boats over, and the third boat was full of beer and the people had been drinking at 11 o'clock in the morning. So it's a very common practice and it's something we need to do something about. Send a message to those people out there that they cannot drink and operate a boat.

Ms Annamarie Castrilli (Downsview): I'm pleased to speak in favour of this private member's legislation which would considerably tighten the rules for those who recklessly abuse their boating privilege — and it is a privilege we're talking about. When one abuses their privilege by consuming alcohol, there ought to be penalties that follow because we must never forget that this is not a right but a privilege.

It's important to remember that while police enforcement is less stringent on water, boaters still have a responsibility for their own safety and recreation must be combined with responsibility.

Bill 154 represents an effort by the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay to respond to the concerns of his constituents. He points out, quite wisely, that there is a linkage between the irresponsible use of a boat and of a motor vehicle. Those who consume alcohol on a boat may well have consumed alcohol in advance of being on the vessel and therefore that is something that needs to be considered.

The proposed legislation addresses the problem in two ways. There's a short-term and a long-term issue. In the first instance, if a person's breathalyser reaches a warning or a charge were to be laid, enforcement officers would have the ability to suspend a boater's driver's licence for a 12-hour period. It would also suspend a person's driver's licence if convicted under the Criminal Code for impaired boating.

The major purpose of Bill 154, of course, is to act as a deterrent. The member has pointed out that there are three other provinces and six states that have enacted legislation similar to this. It's not clear, though, whether there has been any assessment of whether it has proven to be a deterrent, but one can imagine that it might have. I think it would useful at some other time to see what the impact of that legislation has been in those states.

I commend the member as well for being very thorough in providing excellent statistics that he has culled from marine statistics. It's obvious that there is a need to do something in this area which has been left unattended for a very long time. There are about 150 people a year charged with the impaired operation of vessels as it is. I'd say this seems a rather low number.

In looking at the figures I have, page 2 of the member's question-and-answer handout which he was very kind to give to us, he mentions statistics from the Canadian Coast Guard which found that 37% of Canadian boaters report that they consume alcohol always before boating and that 66% consume alcohol always or sometimes. This is before boating. Those are pretty shocking statistics and so it strikes me as odd that only 150 people would be charged, given the statistics which have been presented from the Canadian Coast Guard.

The figure may well be low because there was a difficulty with enforcement of provisions that currently exist, and this is really the heart of the matter. I'm very much in favour of this legislation because these cause such tremendous damage: 40% of those who were killed in boating accidents are found to have had a great deal of alcohol in their bloodstream. There is clearly a relationship between accidents and alcohol, so I'm surprised that only 150 people would be charged in any one year. The answer of course is that we do not have the enforcement mechanisms in this province, and that has only been made worse in the last couple of years.

The Ontario Provincial Police have been diminished so that you do not have the kind of enforcement you would like. You might say, "Maybe you could expand the enforcement activities to allow employees with the Ministry of Natural Resources who have charge of parks and provincial lakes and campgrounds" —and there too we find that there have been tremendous cuts in staffing. There is no capacity to enforce legislation which currently exists. That's the problem.

The member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay has an excellent piece of legislation, but if it remains just a piece of paper, it will look wonderful on the member's résumé, it will look wonderful in the annals of this Legislature, but it will do nothing to change the statistics we have; it will do absolutely nothing to change the deaths that are occurring with great alarm. That's really the issue.

I say to the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay, I'm prepared to support your legislation, but I would like to see a commitment from this government to enforcement of the legislation. I'd like to make sure that we have fewer accidents and that we have fewer deaths as a result of your well-meaning piece of legislation. It has to have some teeth, and the teeth come from enforcement.

1020

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): I'm going to speak to this, obviously in support of it and with the intention of voting for it.

Of course, the sponsor of the bill made reference to the Criminal Code and the fact that prohibitions can be imposed by a sentencing judge. Interestingly, though, the Criminal Code only permits a prohibition of operating a vessel upon a conviction for operating a vessel. It doesn't permit the cross-prohibitions.

The Criminal Code prohibitions carry with them far more significant sanctions than the province, I suspect, is entitled to impose by virtue of its limited jurisdiction. I would invite the member to encourage federal counterparts to consider an amendment to the Criminal Code to permit the cross-prohibitions. I have no doubt there are going to be lawyers who argue the appropriateness of the Highway Traffic Act imposing a suspension of a driver's licence when the offence was one that wasn't related to highway traffic. God bless, they'll argue that and they'll litigate it and the judges will decide.

The rationale is that if somebody cannot exercise sufficient good judgement to not operate a motorized vehicle, be it a water vehicle, a vessel, an airplane, a skidoo, a snowmobile or a motor vehicle, in one context, can they be trusted to exercise better judgement in another context? If they have poor judgement on the waterways, can they be expected to exercise good judgement on the roadways? That's the obvious rationale and perhaps one of the arguments that would be offered in the case of any challenge to the legality of this particular amendment.

I also have, though, concerns about not the enforceability but the capacity to enforce. We've witnessed increasing penalties for drunk drivers, yet we witness annually numbers of apprehensions. One has to shake one's head because you wonder, how much stricter does the penalty have to get before people, or at least certain people or a certain segment of our community, get the message? I suspect that you reach a point of marginal return where you can no longer address the matter of penalty but you've got to start thinking about the fact that the likelihood of detection becomes the major deterrent.

The fact is that every drunk driver who does get caught didn't expect to run into an ALERT machine or a roadside breath-testing operation. The fact is that most drunks operating motor boats or Sea-Doos, those types of things, don't expect — quite frankly, most of them know there's little likelihood of detection, because if they're familiar with certain areas of their cottage country or recreational country, they know whether or not the police are out there patrolling.

I have some concerns — and I invite the member to speak to this — because I know down in Niagara region where Niagara Regional Police have to police two lakes and share the policing of one waterway, the Niagara River, they've expressed to me great concern about their capacity to do effective policing on those waterways — on Lake Erie, Lake Ontario and the Niagara River.

There's clearly got to be a need to enhance the enforcement, to increase the likelihood of detection. At some point that's where more attention has to be diverted because you've maximized or at least optimized the penalties and the deterrent impact the penalties alone could have.

We've still got to address attitudes and public education. Clearly this is a bill that isn't solely related to cottage country but has significant impact on cottage country. Let's understand that, at the same time as we're standing here condemning drunk driving on waterways, drunk operation of motor boats and speedboats and Sea-Doos, we're struggling with incredibly powerful and effective advertising and mindset campaigns, in no small part by the beer industry itself, campaigns that in my view and in the view of a whole lot of other people are directed primarily at young, and younger, people.

Watch your television, the nature of summertime beer ads and the length that these operators, Molson, Labatt, the whole gang of them, want to make between cottage life and drinking beer. Of course, they're very careful. They've become oh so cautious about making sure they don't show somebody sitting on a speedboat — I guess your steering wheel's on the right-hand side — holding a beer in their left hand, but the case or keg of beer is sitting there on the dock. You can't escape the inference that they want people to draw, and that is that a cold beer is part and parcel of enjoying your weekend at the cottage.

Let's go one further. Molson, Labatt, the whole gang of them will argue, very much as cigarette manufacturers argue, "We don't force people to overconsume." You've heard the defences in some of the litigation that's arisen in the States: "We don't tell people because if you only smoke five cigarettes a day" — and I suppose the statistics demonstrate this — "your likelihood of getting lung cancer or other diseases is far less than the two- and three-pack-a-day smoker."

Let's be honest. The beer industry doesn't make money off people who drink two or three beers a week, any more than the tobacco industry makes money off people who only smoke two, three, four or five cigarettes a day. It's absolute hogwash. The industry would be devastated if all Ontarians were but even one-case-a-month beer drinkers. The industry would be finished. It couldn't maintain the economies it has to maintain to carry on its business. The industry is selling an addictive substance and it's selling and marketing it in such a way that notwithstanding their hogwash about drinking responsibly — and I've seen the blood ads that they've engaged in where they've tried to placate the criticism of that industry.

The fact is, that industry very much wants to expand its already large market. It looks to young people as a means of doing that. I mentioned the cottage ads, the lifestyle ads. Witness again the attempt to lure young people into the perception that drinking, and I suppose what young people might call party drinking, you know, the two-fisted kind of drinking — witness the rock-and-roll-themed ads that are associated very much with the beer industry, very sophisticated, very slick, very expensive ads, and I have no doubt all with actors, persons playing roles in these ads who are of age. You take a look and you can't help but think that some of them were actually selected to appear perhaps even younger than their actual age. They're appealing very much to a very vulnerable market and one which continues to succumb.

We have to look at the whole issue of drinking and driving, in the sense that I don't care whether it's a motor boat, a car, a motorcycle, a Sea-Doo or an airplane, what have you. Obviously one of the problems that a whole lot of people have is trying to calculate the numbers: "Let's see. I've had two beers in the course of two hours. Am I over 80 or under 80?" You've encountered that, I'm sure, that argument and that effort to try analyse exactly where you stand, to try to slide in under the wire.

Quite frankly, I think John Bates and MADD and his colleagues have had a whole lot to do with changing perception. You, Mr Grimmett, made reference to an earlier time when the phenomenon of drunk driving was regarded as often as not the next day with a chuckle and an elbow in the ribs about how you managed to make it home, albeit one-eyed and albeit on the wrong side of the road. I think those attitudes have changed a great deal, in that it's no longer a subject of mirth or joviality. Not that it doesn't happen, but it's not something people are inclined to brag about to their colleagues or co-workers or friends the next morning or the next evening. That was the result of some significant education going on in the public and a change of attitudes, but I don't think that same level of education and change in attitude has taken place with respect to boating and the boating community. They're somehow regarded as distinct.

I refer to lakes more than rivers because of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario down where I live. Lakes are huge, massive places and it seems as if you could weave and curve and sway all you wanted without hitting any victims. The fact is that drinking while operating a vessel is a highly dangerous activity, dangerous of course to the persons in the boat itself and dangerous to other persons who have every right to use those waterways. It's important that the alcohol industry — the beer industry in particular, because the spirits industry has been far less successful at making its product attractive to new, ingenue drinkers, to the tyros, the neophytes of the drinking community — take some real heat. They've got to be required to accept some real responsibility and to acknowledge that whatever percentage of their revenues they invest in anti-drunk-driving campaigns doesn't begin to arrest the impact of very powerful advertising campaigns which are undeniably focused on a very vulnerable group; to wit, young people.

1030

If we're going to have laws like this, and if they are laws that are going to be held in some regard by the public — I go back to the issue of enforcement — we've got to give cops in our communities the tools to enforce this. Police forces across this province find themselves increasingly stressed in terms of person-power and the capacity to put people out there on the street, and also stressed in the capacity to acquire the types of equipment, in this case motorboats, that you need to be out there on the lakes and rivers and so on policing the activities of boaters.

You can pass all the laws you want, but if the law is understood — and the public is increasingly conscious of the absence of police officers out there. If the bad guys only knew how few cops there are out on the road in any given numbers of communities at any given point in time, the consequences would be scary. I mentioned that to police officers and they assured me that the bad guys indeed do know and are incredibly sophisticated at avoiding detection because they're well aware of police forces increasingly underresourced here in Ontario.

Quite frankly, it's not a matter of doing more with less. Policing is a labour-intensive activity. Police officers deserve to be paid decent wages in view of the types of work and the tasks that they undertake, the risks that they undertake on a daily basis and the high level of professionalism that exists among policing here in Ontario.

We can reduce policing costs even more by simply reducing the number of police officers that are out there. We've already witnessed incredible and tragic increases in response time by police forces, through no fault of their own, across the province. I'm most familiar of course with the consequences of the destaffing, the defunding, in Niagara region. I speak with police officers there on a regular basis and I hear the stories as frequently.

If people want, and I think Ontarians do, to be protected from that outlaw element of our community — and yes, I put drunk drivers in the same boat, if you will. If people want to be protected from those, and I believe they do, people have got to be prepared to invest in the resources that are going to enable them to be protected. That means this government has got to be prepared to invest in policing. This government talks a big game about law and order, but it fails to deliver in terms of getting right down to the real issues.

We support the bill. I applaud it. But I ask you please to consider the issues we've raised in relationship to it.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): Today I have the honour of standing in support of Bill Grimmett's — the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay's — amendment to the Highway Traffic Act with respect to the suspension of drivers' licences of individuals convicted under the Criminal Code of impaired operation of a vessel. Anything to do with boater safety, I can tell you, I support.

We don't have to be told that drinking and then driving a car is a deadly combination. Statistics show us grim numbers every year and we see the devastating results on the 6 o'clock news.

Ministry of Transportation statistics show that, on average, 60 people die every year in boating accidents in this province. That is not acceptable to me, it's not acceptable to the people of Ontario, and I'm sure it's not acceptable to any member in this Legislature.

Our Minister of Transportation has made it clear he expects firm action when a driver is found to be over the legal limit. If a driver of an automobile or a motorized snowmobile is found guilty and penalized with a licence suspension, the person's right to operate a water vehicle should also be denied.

Drinking and driving don't mix; drinking and boating don't mix. Alcohol and the operation of any motorized vehicle are a deadly combination. The penalty for breaking this law should be the same: vehicle licence suspension.

Currently, when someone is found guilty of operating a water vessel while impaired, they pay a fine, leave the courtroom and drive their car home. By the same token, a person found guilty of impaired operation of an automobile will have their licence suspended, will leave the courtroom, take a bus home, and will still be able to drive their boat on Ontario's lakes and waters. This is an irresponsible motor vehicle and water vessel operator. They should not be allowed to operate any type of motorized vehicle until their penalty has been served and they have proven themselves a responsible operator.

Alberta, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, as well as several American states, have enacted legislation suspending a person's driver's licence on conviction of the impaired operation of a vessel. This bill is supported by the OPP, who feel there will be no additional workload on front-line policing, since they already have the equipment and training needed to deal with impaired boaters. It was just two years ago that I was stopped by the OPP on the water. Just this past summer I was stopped by the Ministry of Natural Resources people on the water. So they are out there and I appreciated their visit.

I've worked for most of my term as an MPP to have all water craft operators take a vehicle safety course before venturing out on to Ontario's lakes and rivers. However, all the safety courses in existence cannot create a safe boater out of an impaired boater. Tragedies and fatalities on the waterways are no more acceptable than tragedies and fatalities on our highways. We must act, and act now, to educate boaters and enact tough penalties for impaired operators. I agree with the quote from the marine operator in a Peterborough newspaper when she said, "We've got idiots behind the wheels of cars and we've got idiots driving boats."

The marine industry promotes boater safety; distillers promote boater safety; the municipalities, law enforcement, public health and safety groups also promote boater safety. As an example, this summer, Labatt's, in partnership with the Canadian Power and Sail Squadrons, launched a WaterWise Boat Pro education campaign in Ontario. They worked together to heighten awareness of boating safety and responsible alcohol use. In July, Labatt's was joined by the OPP and the Ontario Marina Operators Association to remind boaters never to operate a vessel while under the influence of alcohol or drugs, along with promoting many other boating rules of the waterway.

We have regulations. We need to add education and tough penalties, like the suspension of drivers' licences, for persons convicted of dangerous operation of motorboats, including personal watercraft, while under the influence of alcohol and drugs.

For some time, some nine years now, I've been promoting boater safety and education. Two weeks ago I had a resolution hoping that we could get the amendment to the small vessels regulations to have certificates issued to boaters. It was raised in the House with regard to who's going to issue the certificates and how it is going to operate. It's a federal law, but I would be happy if the province took the responsibility to issue the certificates to make sure that people operating a water vessel have had a test.

Really, what I'm looking at is the same as individuals who would get a driver's licence: They go and write an exam. That's what I would like to see, that boaters who are operating on our waterways today have that certificate. I would certainly be happy to grandfather that for three years, which my resolution spoke on, to allow those boat operators to have three years to get their certificate.

We need overall boating safety in this province. We have manuals, we have the boating manual, the pro boat manual, we have a booklet on boating essentials which is taught in Georgian College in Orillia, we have the tools, we have the power squadrons. We need to educate the voters in this province. I commend the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay for bringing Bill 154 forward so that the police will have more authority on our waterways.

1040

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): Let me first of all say that I concur with the last speaker when he said we certainly need to do a lot more by way of education. I think it's a lot like the impaired driving situation or the drinking and driving situation. I can recall 30 or 40 years ago it was certainly much more acceptable for a person to drink and then to get behind the wheel of a car. I'm not saying they were necessarily all impaired, but it was an acceptable way for society to deal with those situations.

Now it's no longer acceptable. It's no longer acceptable to drink and drive. I think, particularly with young people, it has become quite acceptable to have a designated driver so that when they go out partying that individual doesn't drink at all. I would commend the young people on that. I think this is as a result of an education process that has taken many years to develop, but it has become part of the social conscience of a lot of the young people in our society. We need to do the same sort of thing with boating safety, because it is just as unacceptable to get in the boat and start driving it — you don't drive a boat, but start riding it or whatever — as it is to do so behind the wheel of a car.

The statistic the member for Muskoka has brought forward that almost 37% of the people who get behind the wheel of a boat always drink before doing so is surely totally unacceptable. I think a lot of the advertising, as the member for Welland talked about, is almost predicated on the fact that it's an acceptable thing. You get behind the wheel of a boat, you start drinking and everybody's having a grand old time. I'm sure that is simply not the right way to go about it. We have to spend a lot more time on education, on making sure that it becomes just as unacceptable, particularly for young people but also for older people, to get behind the wheel of a boat as it is to get behind the wheel of a car when you've been drinking.

I would like to turn to one other issue, though, which I think is very closely related to this. We can pass all the laws we want in this chamber and if we don't enforce them properly or correctly, then really we may have done something from a symbolic viewpoint that, yes, we are against drinking and driving whether it's in a boat or whether it's behind the wheel of a car, but if the government of the day doesn't set aside the proper resources to actually make it happen, then all the good intentions of the laws that are passed simply are totally wasted.

I would urge the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay to start taking a look at the OPP budget. When you see that budget has actually been cut over the number of years, specifically when it comes to the aspect of enforcement, then I would ask him to talk to the Solicitor General and say that once this bill is passed, if we want to give it some meaningful enforcement mechanism, let's make sure that the officers are out there on the water doing that sort of thing.

I think it's a lot tougher to catch an impaired driver in a boat than it is in a car. It's much tougher to have RIDE programs and things along those lines to have spot checks. It just doesn't work that way. It doesn't totally surprise me that most of the people who are charged have alcohol in their system, because they're normally charged only after something happens. That happens much more frequently with respect to a boat than it does with a car because you don't have the kind of RIDE programs that you do in driving situations.

I commend the member for bringing this bill forward. I think it makes eminent good sense. An impaired driver behind the wheel of a car or behind the wheel of a boat is just as dangerous to the general public. They have, in effect, a powerful tool in their hands with which they can maim and kill, and I think the same sanctions should apply. But I would urge the member to talk to the Solicitor General to make sure that sufficient resources are available so that the laws we pass in this chamber can be effectively enforced.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): I'm very proud this morning to stand and speak in support of Bill 154. This member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay, in my opinion, is one of our new bright lights in our government and this bill manifests his superb intellect and ability. It also demonstrates his compassion not only for the people who die as a result of alcohol-related boating accidents but also for those whose lives are changed forever as a result of permanent injury.

Sixty people died on average in each of the past five years in alcohol-related boating accidents. It is also significant that three other Canadian provinces and several states in the United States have already passed this progressive and very necessary legislation.

Times have changed. As a recreational boater myself for the past 40 years, I've changed my own boating habits.

I don't go out any more after dark on the lakes. I'm very nervous about coming on a boat without lights. You can say it's floating — it's not parked but it's not running — it's drifting in the dark, because of course they're sitting in the boat in the dark, with their lights off, drinking. I just don't go out any more after dark because of that.

The other aspect of boating is, for the most part it is recreational; it's not usually for transportation, except to and from island locations. When you're dealing with recreational boating it usually means it's in combination with visiting and entertaining friends. Quite frankly, alcohol makes a refreshing drink and is far more likely to be served than milk, because obviously the refrigeration requirement isn't the same and it's very easy to keep beer cold on a boat. It's also very easy to have in that kind of environment a lot to drink before people go out boating.

Obviously the penalty for drunk boating is not a deterrent. In fact if you look at the penalty, it's absolutely absurd. The first offence for drunk boating is three months, the second is six months and the third is a year. Isn't that just great. It means that they probably would miss one boating season, so obviously the deterrent is not there at the moment. This private member's bill is a realistic penalty.

Isn't it ironic. I was listening to the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay on the radio this morning, on Metro Morning, and he gave the example of the irony that you can drive a snowmobile on a frozen lake and be charged for impaired driving and lose your driver's licence, yet a few months later when that lake is unfrozen and you're on the same body of water with an individual watercraft or an ordinary boat, you cannot receive the same penalty for drunk driving.

The other point I want to make is that there isn't a question about whether it really makes sense to suspend an individual's motor licence for violations unrelated to the operation of an automobile. The answer to that is very clear in law, and that is that a precedent has already been established in this area in that a motor vehicle licence can be suspended under the Highway Traffic Act for impaired operation of a motorized snow vehicle, although it is not considered a motor vehicle by provincial law. So the precedent is there.

I believe we've made huge progress in this House in the last 12 months in passing legislation to fight drunk driving. Naturally, I had a personal interest in the government legislation because it addressed the concerns that I had brought to this House in my two private member's bills about drunk driving. This morning, the passage of this bill will work as an addition to combat drunk driving on the water as well as on our roads. I sincerely congratulate Bill Grimmett, the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay.

1050

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Of course I will be, as everybody would be, supporting these bills this morning. I can't think of anybody who is going to oppose them. They are both laudable in terms of the goals they set.

I simply want to set out one of the problems that I see with all this legislation that sounds good, looks good on paper, gets a good headline, and that is that we have to have the resources to carry it out. It is one thing to have a bill on the books. It is another to have the necessary resources to enforce the law. I'm sure that the member who has brought this forward, the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay, will be working hard on his cabinet colleagues to ensure that there is adequate provision made in terms of the resources available to enforce it and, if there are more convictions, that the courts will have the resources to proceed with these cases so that those who are in violation are punished in the appropriate fashion.

Right now we've had three Supreme Court justices in Ontario say that the court system is "woefully inadequate" in terms of the financial resources it has to carry out its responsibilities. We are supposed to have, with the addition of some crowns on contract, some 535 crown attorneys to deal with 250,000 charges in the province. I suspect what's going to happen is that we're going to see more plea bargaining taking place and therefore a reduction in the kind of penalties that the member would like to see and I would like to see for violations of the law. Clearly, there is a problem on the water, as there is a problem on highways or across land with snowmobiles, and that problem has to be addressed.

It's the same thing with the victims' rights bill which will be dealt with later. Everybody is on the side of the victims, I'm sure. I have seen personally in my riding some very high-profile cases where victims and their families have been very saddened by what has happened and annoyed with the justice system. I welcomed the initiative by the member for Downsview, Annamarie Castrilli of the Liberal Party, bringing in her bill for victims' rights and then the government essentially adopting that bill and implementing it. What's happened, however, is the resources haven't been there to carry out the provisions of that bill.

While we applaud in this House, while there is a good headline, while there is some nice coverage and some newsletters, what happens down the line is that we start to find out from the victims themselves that it isn't all it's cracked up to be, that the resources aren't there, that the supports aren't there, that the participation they were looking for will not take place. That's what's important. That's what I urge members of the House to be working on: providing those resources.

It's very difficult to give an income tax cut which will cost the treasury $5 billion in lost revenue and most benefit the wealthiest people in our society, to make severe cuts in other areas and still be able to carry out the provisions of this legislation. I'm sure there will be unanimous support for both bills today. I simply urge the members to try hard to get the resources to carry out the bills.

Mr John Hastings (Etobicoke-Rexdale): It's really a tremendous delight to join in this morning's debate in private members' hour, particularly to focus this Legislature's attention on Bill 154, the member for Muskoka-

Georgian Bay's bill dealing with drunk driving on our waterways.

At the outset I want to say that both the Ministry of Transportation and I personally would like to congratulate the member for bringing this important bill to our attention and commend him for the hard work he has put in on this issue. His riding has the essential recreational water routes to the north and to the south, and I know from speaking with him that he has seen many of these accidents and fatalities impact on his own constituents. I think to a great extent that is what impels him in bringing this bill forward, and for that he needs to be commended.

When I first examined this particular issue, I was absolutely shocked by the statistics of deaths and injuries due to drunk boating on our waterways. As of July this year we've had nearly 44 alcohol-related charges made against boaters. In the same period, seven people unfortunately lost their lives needlessly because of not taking the proper precautions and having this dangerous mix of boating, speeding and drinking. It's an extremely lethal combination. The OPP has estimated that there have been approximately 150 people charged this year with drinking and boating.

Unfortunately, many Canadians associate alcohol and boating as a pleasurable exercise and forget about the statistics. Even the Canadian Coast Guard has noted that an alarming 66% of Canadian boaters report always or nearly always consuming alcohol when boating. Clearly the need to reduce the amount of drinking and boating on Ontario's waterways is an important issue and priority to this government and to the Ministry of Transportation.

As the member for Mississauga South has noted, the effective deterrents aren't there. I think this particular bill is going to pave a very influential way in moving this government towards making a public policy decision on drinking and driving, as we have in the comprehensive road safety bill. Over time we are going to see the inevitability of this kind of bill becoming law in Ontario dealing with drunk driving and boating. The member's efforts in this area are going to prove to be a bold step along that public policy process, in making this particular bill eventually a fruition.

I'd finally like to comment that this government has already dealt with drunk driving on our road system. We have brought in the toughest legislation, under Bill 138, the comprehensive road safety bill, passed in June by this Legislature. The provisions, the philosophy and intent set out in that new bill address when a vehicle driver decides that he or she is going to combine alcohol and driving on our roadways. We're going to have a similar intent follow on the roadways our water system. I'd like to congratulate the member again for bringing forth this bill at this time.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay, you have two minutes.

Mr Grimmett: I'll be brief. I would like to thank the members for Downsview, Welland-Thorold, Simcoe East, Mississauga South, Kingston and The Islands, St Catharines and Etobicoke-Rexdale for their supportive comments. I'm encouraged by the fact that they share my concern for safety on the water, which this bill is trying to address. I'd say to those people who raised issues about enforcement that it would be interesting to them to review the statistics available from the Ontario Provincial Police about enforcement on the waterways in recent years. If they look at them closely they'll see that there's been a dramatic increase in the number of charges laid on waterways in Ontario in the seasons of 1996 and 1997 respectively.

Part of this has arisen I think from the passage at the federal level of the Contraventions Act, which was a matter the police had asked for to make it simpler for them to lay minor charges against boating offenders without having to deal through federal legislation.

The police have been asking for the kinds of penalties that are in this bill. They asked for the changes that are in the Contraventions Act, and now that they have got the changes in the Contraventions Act, they have acted on that and there has been a dramatic increase in the number of charges laid. I'm confident that if this bill is able to pass through the Legislature, it will provide the police with the tool they need, and they will be able to carry out the enforcement that's required.

I certainly encourage all members to help ensure that we have safe waterways in Ontario. I think it's essential for our tourism industry that we are able to say to people our waterways are safe, and I think this bill will be one step closer to making sure that we can say to everybody, "Ontario's waterways are safe, and we're doing what we can to prevent bad boating habits."

1100

VICTIMS OF VIOLENT CRIME COMMEMORATION WEEK ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR LA SEMAINE DE COMMÉMORATION DES VICTIMES DE CRIMES DE VIOLENCE

Mr Baird moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 155, An Act proclaiming Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week / Projet de loi 155, Loi proclamant la Semaine de commémoration des victimes de crimes de violence.

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): The people of Ontario desire to live, work and raise their families in communities free from violent crime. Until that vision becomes a reality, violence against any one member of a society diminishes us all. All victims of violent crime, whether surviving or deceased, deserve to be treated with dignity and respect. The people of Ontario should always remember the lives of those taken by violent crime. We should always reflect on the suffering and hardship that the survivors of violent crime and their families and friends of all victims of violent crime, whether or not the victim survived, endure with such courage.

Twenty years ago, there wasn't a place in our justice system for victims. Some even openly advocated the position that there shouldn't be a place for them. But over the last 20 years we have seen a good number of Canadians stand up and demand to be heard and demand a place in our justice system. Many sought to directly influence the outcome of a case in which they had a personal interest. These actions led this Legislature to pass the Victims' Bill of Rights. It was an important step in our efforts to acknowledge and respond to the needs of victims of crime.

The Victims' Bill of Rights legislated a set of principles to support victims of crime with timely, respectful and courteous treatment throughout the criminal justice system. It also simplified the process for victims to sue their assailants in civil actions for damages and provided better support for children who must testify in court. We are all committed to creating a justice system that does not allow victims of crime to suffer twice, first at the hand of the criminal and, second under a justice system that does not respond and does not respect their needs.

A good number of victims have gone far beyond dealing with their own cases. A large number of them got involved in collective action to work to change our laws and the whole criminal justice system. I'd like to relate a very personal story of how I became involved with some of these remarkable people. More than 18 months ago, a drunk driver took the lives of two constituents of mine in Nepean, Linda LeBreton Holmes and her young son Brian. I was able to see at first hand how important the role of their family was in the justice system in this case.

While they made a tremendous contribution to their own case, ensuring that the perpetrator of that crime received one of the longest sentences imposed in the country, they also did something else. They got involved with others, particularly with Mothers Against Drunk Driving, with people like Colleen MacKenzie and Susan McNabb, and worked to change our laws. Their efforts paid off and played a tremendously important role in lobbying this government and this Legislature to eventually pass what is the toughest drunk driving law in North America. Simply put, decision-makers on all sides of the House could not look them in the eye and explain why we couldn't or why we shouldn't, and the remarkable thing was that this law was supported by members on all sides of the House.

I had a large town hall meeting on that issue in support of a private member's bill put forward by my colleague the member for Mississauga South. At that meeting I asked everyone in attendance, if they weren't from my riding, to call their member of provincial Parliament and indicate their support for tougher drunk driving laws and Mrs Marland's bill.

A few days later the member for Ottawa South, now the Leader of the Opposition, approached me and said he got a call from an Evalyn Collins, an Ottawa South resident who was at my town hall meeting, and she had asked him to support those efforts. That morning the member for Ottawa South told me, "John, I told your grandmother that I would support it." So these efforts don't have to be political and they can cross party lines.

A Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week would also serve to commemorate the contribution and the lost potential of those lives that were taken by violent crime. It would foster awareness of the suffering and hardship endured by the survivors of violent crime and their families and friends, an awareness of the courage with which they endure the suffering and hardship.

Most important though, it would encourage reflection on the treatment of victims in our justice system. It would make clear to governments, elected officials and police authorities the need for constant vigilance to ensure that victims of violent crime are treated with the dignity and respect that they deserve. It would invite accountability to the government of the day, regardless of its political stripe, to reflect on its own performance with respect to victims' issues and broader justice issues, and it would provide a forum for victims' groups and the general public to hold their government accountable for its own performance. Once a year it would provide the many diverse victims advocacy groups an opportunity to focus their energies on government and to come together to share their concerns and resources and to focus public attention on the importance of dealing with violence in our society.

A number of representatives from these groups are here today with us in the gallery: Sharon Rosenfeldt, one of the founders of Victims of Violence, and Debbie Mahaffy, director of Action for Victims, have made a remarkable contribution to our province and our country, not just for their advocacy of victims' rights but for their work in pushing for important changes in our justice system. I'm also pleased that Steve Sullivan, the executive director of the Canadian Resource Centre for Victims of Violence, John Bates and a contingent from Mothers Against Drunk Driving, and Paul Walters, the president of the Metro Toronto Police Association, could be with us today, because they have made a remarkable contribution to victims' issues throughout their organizations' long careers. Some of them have pushed for a special week of commemoration for quite some time.

Bill 155 proposes to designate the third week of April as Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week. This would coincide with the same practice in the United States, which has taken place for many years south of the border. It is hoped that Ontario could provide the national leadership to see such a week recognized across the country in provinces from British Columbia to Newfoundland and by the federal government and serve as an important symbolic move to push the federal government to bring in a national victims' bill of rights. It is our hope that the Attorney General could take that message to the federal-provincial justice conference taking place later this year. In fact, the federal government celebrates a week for prisoners, Restorative Justice Week. This event professes to include victims on one day of the week, but regrettably, few victims feel a part of it.

The third week of April is also a date with some meaning for two constituents of mine in Nepean. Sharon and Gary Rosenfeldt's son Daryn went missing during the third week of April 1991. Since that tragedy, Sharon and Gary have made a remarkable contribution to working with other victims and have been a strong and effective voice for reforming our justice system. Our country, our province and my community of Nepean in recent years are so much richer for that contribution. Gary Rosenfeldt now serves as the executive director of Victims of Violence and the Canadian Centre for Missing Children. In a letter to MPPs, he writes:

"In 1983 a federal-provincial task force on justice for victims of crime concluded that victims of crime had been 'forgotten' in the justice system. Since then, some major improvements have been made, allowing crime victims more active participation in the system. As an organization dedicated to the improvement of the situation of crime victims, we are constantly faced with the difficult task of bringing attention to the needs of victims. A week once a year dedicated to victims would serve as a focal point for our efforts to educate the community, governments and the justice system on these needs. An increased awareness of victim needs will inevitably result in better services for crime victims in the province of Ontario."

As I said at the outset of my remarks, all of us deserve to live, work and raise our families in communities free from violence, but until that goal becomes a reality, I believe collectively we all have a responsibility, because an act of violence against one member of our society indeed diminishes the safety and security of us all. This bill would not only commemorate the victims of violent crime; it would also serve as a vehicle to hold the government of the day accountable for how it deals with victims — that is an accountability which I believe the government would welcome — and cause the government to reflect on its performance in the area of criminal justice. I believe there's is a tremendously important symbolic message in the bill that I'm presenting this morning, and I respectfully ask for the support of my colleagues on all sides of the House. Thank you.

1110

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): We will of course all be supporting this bill and respect its intent, but I do want to say in the very few moments that each of us will have to speak to this bill that I for one will be very concerned if all we do is, and I quote the bill, reflect "on treatment of victims in our judicial system." I'll be very concerned if our reflection does not lead to action.

I'll be further concerned if we continue to be more concerned with simply commemorating victims, as important as that is, and less concerned with doing everything we possibly can to ensure that there are fewer victims. In this regard, I believe there is much more that we have to do.

I refer back to a study that was released in the spring of this year, and I want, because we have such a few minutes, to address my comments specifically to my concern about the continued victimization of women in their homes. The study that was released last spring deals specifically with women who continue to be murdered by their partners. The study indicates that greater awareness of violence against women and harsher penalties from the justice system have not reduced the risk of death at the hands of husbands and boyfriends for Ontario women. At least 159 women were shot, stabbed, bludgeoned or choked to death by current or former partners in the four years from 1991 to 1994; an average of 40 a year, compared with 32 a year from 1974 to 1990.

It was just this week that I had a phone call from a women who lives in southern Ontario whose husband is currently in jail for having abused her in very violent ways. He was in jail because he was not able to make his initial bail payments but he is now coming up for bail review and the information this woman has is that he has the resources now to be able to meet the bail. She is obviously fearful that when he is released from jail on bail, her life is going to be at risk.

She has made contact with every available resource in her community. She has been told basically that her only option is to keep a suitcase packed for herself and for her children so that when her husband is released she can flee. I don't know what to tell this woman, other than to say that this Legislature must be absolutely committed to doing more to ensure that women and children can be safe in their homes.

When this report was released last spring detailing how many women continue to be killed by intimate partners, the fact that 70% of all female homicide victims are killed by intimate partners, they said that the 1992 recommendations of a previous report on how to prevent such killings had not yet been acted on. They said we need to give police more tools to prevent men from harassing their partners immediately after separation; we need to keep better records on men with a history of violence against women. I believe we must have much stronger bail provisions for any who have broken peace bonds or restraining orders.

I believe too that we have to take steps beyond that to make sure women have the ability to leave abusive situations and to find a safe and supportive haven and, to go beyond that, to have an opportunity to establish independent, secure lives for themselves and their children.

It is important that we commemorate victims. It is important, as the member for Nepean has said, that we ensure that our justice system provides every possible support for victims and for their families. I believe some steps have been taken in that regard with the establishment of the domestic violence courts, but I believe we must take further steps to prevent victimization and to stop the violence.

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): I just want to say at the outset that of course I'll be supporting this bill. It almost goes without saying. If one just has a look at the preamble for the bill, it says, "The people of Ontario desire to live, work and raise their families in communities free from violent crime." It would be hard for me to imagine anyone in Ontario who wouldn't agree and support a statement like that.

It goes on to say as well that "all victims of violent crime...deserve to be treated with dignity and respect." Once again, that's something that's very difficult for any of us to disagree with. It also goes on to say that it would make clear to governments and elected officials the need for "constant vigilance to ensure that victims of violent crime are treated with dignity and respect." I'm wondering whether the member for Nepean is suggesting that we need a week to commemorate the victims of violent crime so that his own government will pay attention to their plight and take action for them.

This bill, I'm concerned, is really almost trivializing the pain that's suffered by victims of violent crime by dedicating only one week to their suffering. This is something that needs to be paid attention to 52 weeks of the year. Anyone who has come in contact with victims of violent crime — and I can tell you that I have on numerous occasions, as a former assistant crown attorney, dealt with victims of crime, in my private practice as a lawyer and working in the criminal courts as well — knows the suffering they go through. Anyone who has had a family member who is a victim of violent crime knows the suffering they have to endure.

Victims of violent crime don't need just a week to commemorate the suffering they are experiencing as a result of criminal activity. What victims need are things like psychological counselling, and we've seen cuts in health care and in psychological counselling availability since this government was elected in 1995. We need increases in those types of services.

We know that victims of violent crime are very often spouses, oftentimes women, oftentimes children, who find that trying to obtain residential treatment after they become victims of violent crime is becoming increasingly difficult. We've seen diminished resources for residential programs as well for women who are victims of violent crime. In my own community we have a very well-respected residential home for women. It's called Hiatus House. That was an institution that had been established by volunteers several years ago and has been finding that it has become increasingly more reliant on volunteer and fund-raising activities as the support from the government is decreasing.

We also need to see simpler ways to ensure that victims of violent crime are able to obtain restitution. The member for Nepean mentioned some of the steps that have been taken with respect to legislation to ensure that easier civil actions are able to be brought to try and recover restitution for victims of crime. However, we know that oftentimes people who are involved in criminal activity don't have the resources to make restitution or satisfy civil judgements, and that's something we really need to address our minds to as well.

Of course, we need further resources. That was a similar suggestion that was made with respect to the previous bill about penalties for persons who are in involved in impaired boating. We need to take steps to try and prevent violent crime and not have to deal so often with victims of violent crime, but try to prevent those crimes from happening in the first place. Police are under continuous pressure to try to do more with fewer resources. If police were receiving further support or more resources to try to prevent the incidence of violent crime, that would go a long way to prevention.

Crown attorneys are under increasing pressure as well to try to deal expeditiously with full dockets of criminal cases in our criminal courts and are under pressure to try to resolve cases by plea bargaining. Oftentimes it's difficult to try to obtain remedies or penalties that are in the best interests of victims of violent crime as a result of trying to plea-bargain because the court space just isn't available to prosecute as many cases as the police are laying charges. So further resources for crown attorneys are needed as well.

Of course, if there's an increase in the number of investigations and charges that are laid by the police, further courtroom space is required as well. In Windsor, we've been working on a court building replacement in our city. That's a project that's been going on for a number of years. I would urge this government — I see the Attorney General here — to take steps to try and expedite the construction of that new court building as quickly as possible so that cases are heard on a speedier basis and the victims of crime don't go through the suffering that comes from the fact that cases take so long to get through the court system. I would ask him to try and speed up that project.

To summarize, I just want to reiterate that I will be supporting this bill. I would hope that all of us consider the interests of the victims of crime not just one week per year, but every week per year.

1120

Mr Jim Flaherty (Durham Centre): I rise today on behalf of the government to speak in support of the member for Nepean's private member's bill, Bill 155, the Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week Act.

Bill 155, which was authored by my colleague John Baird, proposes making the third week of April an annual week of commemoration for victims of violent crime. This annual commemoration will foster awareness among all people in Ontario of the suffering, hardship and, above all, the great courage exhibited by victims of violent crime, their families and their friends. Just as importantly, this week will also highlight the great potential that is forfeited every time a life is lost to the actions of a violent criminal.

Mr Baird tells me that should Bill 155, and similar bills which may be introduced in the legislatures of other provinces and territories, be passed, this would provide most of North America with a concurrent week of commemoration for the victims of violent crime. I support such an initiative. Our government is wholeheartedly committed to correcting a grievous imbalance that has developed in our justice system where the rights of the accused take centre stage and the needs of victims are pushed off to the wings. We refuse to tolerate a system that allows victims of crime to be victimized twice: first at the hands of the criminal and then again at the hands of a legal system that does not respect, understand or respond to the needs of victims.

In our government's first year, we took immediate steps to introduce a Victim's Bill of Rights, which was proclaimed into law on June 11 one year ago. This legislation, among the most comprehensive in Canada, brings about long-overdue changes to the way victims of crime are treated by the justice system.

I listened a moment ago with interest to the comments by the NDP member for Windsor-Riverside about restitution being appropriate in the matter of victims' rights. I invite the member to read the Victim's Bill of Rights that became law a year ago in Ontario, which sets out not only restitution rights but a simplified method of accomplishing restitution for victims of crime in the province.

With respect to the courthouse in Windsor, I might also add that our government is providing five more courtrooms in that courthouse than the original plans even called for and that the building is being built as quickly as it can be built. The city of Windsor is well advantaged in that regard, since there are many areas in the province that are looking for new courthouses and don't have a courthouse under construction. The city of Windsor does, as a result of the efforts of our government and our Attorney General.

Among its various provisions, the bill of rights enshrines the victim's justice fund to ensure that money collected from fines imposed on offenders will be used strictly for services to victims. During the first two years of its term, our government allocated more than $10.2 million from the fund to improve and expand services to victims across Ontario. We will continue to invest additional funds for victims' services in the future. We have dedicated funds to double the number of victim/witness assistance programs available to assist victims of crime as their cases proceed through the courts and to enhance the services provided in existing sites.

Victims in 26 communities will soon have the support of their own local program. These programs help people through the court process so they won't be traumatized again. In 1996-97, approximately 20,000 victims of crime were served by this program. These programs focus on the most vulnerable. More than 80% of the people receiving this support are victims of spousal assault, sexual assault or child abuse, while families of homicide victims and families of people killed by impaired drivers make up the remainder of those who are helped by this program.

The Ministry of the Solicitor General and Correctional Services will also be expanding its programs which provide immediate, onsite services to victims of crime. We will be adding eight new victim crisis assistance and referral service centres across Ontario, bringing the total number of sites to 20. This includes the addition of eight new sites across Ontario. This further guarantees that services will be available when needed to victims in their local communities.

Our government established domestic violence court projects at Toronto's old city hall and in North York. Launched in cooperation with judges, police, crown attorneys and the victim/witness assistance program, these new court projects are designed to do a better job of both supporting victims and holding abusers accountable for their crimes.

We are looking for solutions to the problem of domestic violence by trying different approaches. In North York, the focus is on breaking the cycle of violence. In assault cases that do not involve serious injury or use of a weapon, first-time offenders undergo intensive batterer's counselling. The downtown Toronto court at old city hall focuses on prosecution, employing improved investigation techniques such as the use of 911 tapes to obtain better evidence and improve the chances of obtaining a conviction.

Both projects are supported by increased victims' services and are gaining recognition as creative responses to the crime of domestic assault. In July, the government announced that these innovative projects were being expanded to six new locations across Ontario. Victims of domestic abuse in Ottawa, London, Hamilton, North York, the regional municipality of Durham at Oshawa, and Brampton will soon have access to these creative new approaches to dealing with the difficult and long-standing problem of domestic violence.

I would be remiss at this point not to acknowledge the ongoing efforts of the Honourable Dianne Cunningham, the member for London North and the minister responsible for women's issues, who this summer announced the spending of an additional $27 million to deal specifically with violence prevention issues. She has shown incredible leadership in coordinating nine ministries in their plans to reduce violence against women in Ontario.

This government will not stop here. We will continue to expand victims' services, to seek policy solutions and to make the real changes necessary to ensure the rights of victims are protected in Ontario's justice system. An annual week of commemoration for victims of violent crime represents another step on the journey towards an Ontario in which the needs of all crime victims are considered. I ask all members of the House to join me in supporting Bill 155 and reaffirming the commitment of this government to rebalancing the scales of justice by offering victims of crime the respect they so richly deserve.

Our government has done more to assist victims of crime than any other government. For those who may not agree, including perhaps some members opposite, I invite them to speak to those present in the galleries today who have experienced loss as victims of crime.

May I commend the member for Nepean for bringing forward this important piece of legislation to be debated in this House. I urge all members to support it.

1130

Mr Alex Cullen (Ottawa West): I rise to speak on Bill 155, the Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Act, which, as members have said, is an act which seeks to designate the third week in April as Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week.

In reading the documentation provided by the honourable member opposite who's sponsoring the bill, I note that the purpose of the bill — he says in the backgrounder, "Victims of violence are represented by a wide range of diverse advocacy groups." I want to spend just a little moment acknowledging the hard work of those groups. In my own experience as a civil servant back at the Department of National Health and Welfare, I've seen the efforts of these groups and I want to commend them for their efforts and their successes to date.

To quote again from the backgrounder: "A commemorative week would provide an opportunity for these individuals to focus their attention and resources in an effort to educate the public, elected officials and police on the issues facing victims and their treatment within our justice system. During the commemorative week, the government of the day will be forced to assess its performance with respect to the needs and rights of victims. In addition, the week provides a forum within which the public can hold its government accountable on its treatment and response to victims."

This is further accentuated by some of the letters we have received from some of the groups. Victims of Violence has written to speak about the need for a Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week, not only to recognize the pain and anguish suffered by those who have fallen victim to senseless acts of violence, but also to educate the public and government officials about the physical, emotional and financial hardships many victims are forced to endure as a result of crimes committed against them.

In another letter of endorsement from the Canadian Resource Centre for Victims of Crime: "It not only provides us with an opportunity to remember victims of crime and hardships they endure, but it will also be an opportunity to educate the public about what the impact of crime can be on people and what they face in the criminal justice system."

While we debate this bill, I think it would be perfectly appropriate to review what the government has done to help victims of violent crime, particularly steps to ensure that there are no victims of violent crime, because surely that is our ultimate goal. As the honourable member opposite said so well, we all ought to have the right to live, work and raise our families in communities free from violent crime.

We then turn to the government's performance here. I of course have to turn to the document that became famous two years ago, the Common Sense Revolution. In this document we find the wording under "Law Enforcement": "The people of Ontario are rightly concerned about community safety in our province, particularly the increasing incidence of violent crime. That is why funding for law enforcement and justice will be guaranteed."

Unfortunately, the rhetoric in the Common Sense Revolution falls a bit short of reality. In my own community of Ottawa-Carleton, we are faced with cuts in the government's grants to support policing in our community. With a budget of some $99 million in the region of Ottawa-Carleton, when the provincial grant falls from $7.8 million in 1995 to zero in 1998 — we find the community struggling to deal with the incidence of violent crime, and losing resources in our effort to deal with this important social problem does not help. It certainly doesn't help the victims of violent crime. It does not help the honourable member's laudable goal of ensuring that we can live, work and raise our families in communities free from violent crime.

Yesterday a colleague of mine raised in the House the cuts the government has made to community policing and prevention, some $3 million. Again, the intent falls far short of reality within our own communities here in Ontario.

We also have to look towards what the government has done to support communities in their effort to reduce crime, setting aside issues of law enforcement. I can only draw on my own experience with the children's aid society in Ottawa-Carleton, which found itself losing government funding at the very time when stress was being placed on families — domestic violence being an important contributor to violent crime — to the point where the children's aid society had to bring in Harris days. They literally closed down the operation of the children's aid society, except for emergency intake, to respond to the government cuts.

What does this mean? This means that families who require counselling, who need help to go over some of the crises they are facing, particularly the 21.6% cut in welfare rates, were without that 12 times within the year. They were called "Harris days," unfortunately.

All I can say is that it is important that we have an evenhanded approach. While it is important to support this bill — and no one can deny the symbolic importance — it is also necessary to ensure that there is sufficient concrete action to reduce the incidence of violent crime. That ultimately is our goal, to reduce the incidence of violent crime. It is the government's responsibility to ensure there are sufficient resources to do that. I call upon the government to follow through on the intent of this bill by ensuring that there are sufficient resources.

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): I suppose — no, I'm simply not going to. There are going to be plenty of opportunities for me to criticize this or any other government for what it has or hasn't done. I find some of the comments, particularly those of the member for Durham Centre, regrettable in that they were part of a discussion and debate around this particular bill, which I indicate, as has my colleague from Windsor-Riverside, complete support for.

I come from a part of the province which understands all too painfully that victims of violent crime are victims, and yes, the families, the survivors, but communities also are scarred and mutilated as a result of the wanton violence, the simply unspeakable violence that has been imposed and that we run the risk of having imposed in our communities or upon any of us at any time.

I want to speak very specifically about violence and how we have to develop a zero tolerance. We know all too well that far too many victims of violence are children; they're our nieces and nephews or our neighbours' kids. We know the tragedy of a parent burying a child, the abnormality of it. It's simply not natural, and it's surely not the way God designed the human order that parents should have to bury children. We also know that violence against children begets violence against children, as we begin to understand how that nurtures among those victims a propensity to be violent in their own right as adults towards their own children or perhaps towards the children of others.

I'm confident the bill is going to pass. One of the ways by which we have to give effect to the bill is to enunciate very clearly zero tolerance towards violence. We have to express a repugnance for violence towards others. We've gone through a process over the last generation or two where there's been increased intolerance towards violence that in the course of even some our lifetimes was disregarded or turned away from.

We have to express as a provincial community, as families within our cities and regions, this total repugnance for acts of violence. We've got to talk about guarding ourselves and our children from it, but also guarding those whose lives are so beleaguered, so distorted, so maligned, hoping that we can detect as youngsters those people who otherwise would become the perpetrators of violence, detect them and prevent yet more of the crimes we've been witnesses to and all of us victims of, it seems far too often during the course of our lifetime.

1140

I support the bill. I applaud the comments of the member for Windsor-Riverside. I don't think anybody has any dispute about the fact, although one can select a particular time frame in which our minds address the issue of violent crime, that it's something we should be conscious of and concerned about on a daily basis.

I do want to recognize that one of our institutional safeguards is the police in our communities. I suppose anybody who's pulled over for a speeding ticket or a seatbelt ticket finds themselves hard done by by the cop who did it, singled out unfairly. Yet at those points in our lives when we become victims or when our neighbours become victims or our family become victims, we want the biggest, toughest cops in the world to arrive as promptly as possible on the scene — we do — and as many as possible, and we want them to do everything that the law would enable them to do to either interrupt the attack or catch the perpetrators and make sure that perpetrators are dealt with in our courts and that the community is protected.

Once again, we support it. Once again, with no great pride — I don't take any pride in coming from a part of the country, a part of the province, that has collectively suffered, as have other regions — we're not unique — but the impact of incredible, inhuman and unspeakable violence against members of our own community.

I say that this impacts and, as I've indicated before, leaves an indelible mark on that community, one that I'm not sure can be erased or relieved promptly. Quite frankly, in the Niagara region it is going to be a considerable period of time, perhaps generations, before the impact of violence in our community and the memory of it and the effect of it has been appropriately erased.

I hope that during weeks of commemoration there's also reflection on the need to act in very practical and meaningful ways, a need to ensure that victims of crime and their families and the survivors of victims of crime have access to growing resources, have access to compensation, as has been said. I understand that with the civil procedures that were simplified in the Victims' Bill of Rights, the sad reality is most criminals can't be called upon to compensate their victims. That means that we, collectively, as a community have to be prepared to compensate victims, monetarily and in every other possible way.

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener): I'm pleased to be able to rise today and express my views in support of Bill 155 and in support of the member for Nepean, who is another very bright light in our government.

In most crimes there is at least one victim. In most crimes the entire family is affected, and the family victims are too often the ones who are left drowning in the wake of the rush that we as a society have created in trying to provide assistance to the criminals or to guarantee rights to the criminals, criminals whose crimes have often destroyed the lives of the victims and their families.

Our courts often hear sob story after sob story, rationalization after rationalization, about how violent criminals are not responsible for their actions. It's always somebody else. Somebody else is to blame, whether it's their parents or their teachers or their doctors or their chiropractors or their psychiatrists or the devil, and the bleeding hearts in our society buy this nonsense.

In their desperate rush to defend their criminal defendants, defence lawyers often attempt to convince us that the violent criminal isn't really a violent criminal; they're misunderstood victims. How often do we read in the media of an event, and of course we can quickly forget that event. The media, in their attempt to increase sales or to increase hype, whatever, highlight every minuscule detail of a crime. Again, the families have to go through this over and over again.

I say this because a number of years ago a friend of mine committed suicide. I tortured myself for about two or three years after that, thinking, "What could I have done to prevent that suicide?" I was one of the last people to whom he talked. I realized after a number of years that I couldn't have done anything. These families also go through that. They say, "What could we have done?" and of course they are tortured day after day through the media.

We can't do anything about the media, but we can heighten public awareness. We do have the ability to heighten public awareness, and Bill 155 is a step in that direction. Establishing a week of recognition would be perhaps one of a series of initiatives that we could enact which would heighten public awareness.

One of the things I would like to see is a school curriculum to target some of the root causes of crime, to help young people understand that committing a crime against someone else also scars them, because it reflects on who they are and who they will become as a member of society. We could establish a specific goal in our educational system to help youth understand themselves, understand the type of person they want to become. An important component in that strategy would be to help youth establish for themselves the type of person they do not want to become.

In the primary grades, we could give consideration to children learning about themselves in relation to violence, ie: "What is a good person? What type of a person do I want to become? What are the important similarities between people, what are the important differences between people, and how do our differences benefit each one of us? Why is a violent person violent?" What image do we want to implant in the minds of our youth about violent people? This is all part and parcel of having a week to commemorate the families and the victims of violent crime. It's an educational process.

At the secondary school level we could reinforce what they have learned at the primary school level. "What should I do when I become angry?" That is something we could have at both the primary school and the secondary school levels. "Is there a way that a violent person can be taught to overcome being violent? Why are people violent towards others?" Let's do some analysis on this in the school system part of this week. "What do I think about being violent? How do people overcome being violent?" Students could do essays on this, five- or 10-page essays, in high school. Of course, they can always be taught how to think about how they want other people to treat them.

I want to thank my colleague Mr Baird, the member for Nepean, for his efforts in bringing forth this bill. I believe it's a very positive initiative and I will support it.

1150

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): I'm proud and happy to be able to rise and speak to the bill presented by the member for Nepean. Let me say from the very outset that I will certainly be endorsing and supporting this bill because I think it fills the purposes for which it was introduced, and I think they're important purposes.

Let me, though, just outline a little more what I believe a bill such as this should also incorporate. There should be a celebration within the bill, a celebration of the lives of the people who have been taken away from us. Let me relate the Sudbury experience to the members in the House and to the families who are in the gallery today.

In October 1993, a very, very good police officer by the name of Constable Joe MacDonald was gunned down tragically by two hooligans. Joe devoted his life to youth in the Sudbury area. He was a coach at Lasalle and later of the New Sudbury Wildcats. He loved football and he loved children.

Sudbury wanted to know what it could do to celebrate Joe, to remember Joe but to celebrate Joe. Sid Forrester, the long-time coach of the Sudbury Spartans, thought we should start a football league called the Joe MacDonald Youth Football League. A group of football enthusiasts and coaches — Frank Pagnucco, Mike Staffen, Al Lekun, Mike Fabilli, Marty Rupnick, John Larsen and my brother, Chris Bartolucci — came together and worked very closely with the then deputy chief of the regional municipality of Sudbury police force, Dennis O'Neil, worked well with city council, and we ended up with this wonderful league that now has two divisions, for children aged 10 to 15. Every Labour Day we kick off the Joe MacDonald Youth Football League. We celebrate Joe MacDonald, his life and his contribution from Labour Day until the first week in November when we hold the championship game.

Part of the coaching is to remind the kids who are playing football what Joe MacDonald was all about and why this youth football league was created. Indeed, we don't only commemorate but we celebrate his life. I would suggest to you that 145 kids remembering why they're playing football every Saturday and Sunday, remembering why their parents come out with them, remembering why the camaraderie is found at Lily Creek in the football games is education in itself to remember that the families of victims of violence deserve some form of recognition.

I commemorate with the MacDonald family, with Nancy MacDonald. I remember being a former police commissioner and hiring these young, wonderful people to enforce the law. It is important that this bill passes. It is important that we remember that these victims of violence possess the opportunities for profound, positive influences on the people they impacted upon.

Indeed it's important that we remember the families. It's important that we remember the Rosenfelds, the Mahaffys, all the family members in the gallery today and all those family members who are victims of violence. If that happens, then some day as we continue to strive for what we believe to be a better society, that will come about.

This type of bill is not paying lip-service to it. The member for Nepean and I don't always agree, but on this one we agree. If this week has even a fraction of the impact that the Joe MacDonald Youth Football League has on the community of Sudbury, this bill is very worthwhile, this bill is very necessary and in fact this bill will help in the healing or grieving the families go through. The grieving doesn't stop a week, a year or two years after the violent crime. The grieving continues. As long as these family members realize that we remember with them and we celebrate the lives that were taken from us, then, ladies and gentlemen who are gathered here this morning, this bill will accomplish the goals that the member for Nepean has set out in presenting Bill 155.

The Acting Speaker: The government has but nine seconds left, so I'm assuming we'll move to the member for Nepean and his reply.

Mr Baird: I want to thank the other members of the House who took the opportunity to speak today and particularly thank for their thoughtful remarks the member for Fort William, who mentioned the importance of anti-violence measures with respect to domestic violence; the member for Durham Centre, who spoke on the bill; the member for Welland-Thorold, who spoke about a zero tolerance for violence, and I certainly share his views in that regard; and particularly the member for Sudbury. I can think of few tragedies which match the tragedy of a community losing a police officer, someone there to protect the community. We all owe a special debt of gratitude to those victims of violence who serve in the community to protect us all.

I have a quote from a prepared text, some remarks from Debbie Mahaffy this morning which I might add to the record: "A week designated Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week will create an opportunity for specific sharing of information and techniques in assisting victims of crime. There is no one better qualified to teach professionals, citizens of the community than victims themselves. Elevating the status of victims in the community, in the media and the justice system to a level of equal importance to that of the offender would guarantee that the system itself would be held more accountable to those most affected by crime." That accountability is one that is welcomed by this government.

One of the members opposite mentioned that perhaps a week was insufficient and that we need a week to get the attention of the government. I would simply indicate that we've been privileged to have with us this morning — normally the cabinet don't show up for private members' hour as a symbol that this is a genuine private members' hour — the Attorney General, who has been here for the complete hour. I do note and appreciate his attendance this morning. It is our hope that this will be the beginning of a campaign to launch a national victims' bill of rights, a national week of commemoration. I'm pleased that the Attorney General will take that message.

We can go back and forth and talk about what we're doing, but the reality is, we can all do more.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT (LICENCE SUSPENSIONS), 1997

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bruce Crozier): I want to thank the members for their cooperation in consideration of having a neophyte in the chair this morning.

Mr Grimmett moved second reading of Bill 154, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act with respect to the suspension of drivers' licences.

All those in favour of the motion, say "aye."

All opposed, say "nay."

I declare the motion carried.

Mr Bill Grimmett (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): I'd ask that this bill be referred to the standing committee on resources development.

The Acting Speaker: Agreed? Agreed.

VICTIMS OF VIOLENT CRIME COMMEMORATION WEEK ACT, 1997

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bruce Crozier): Mr Baird moved second reading of Bill 155, An Act proclaiming Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week.

All those in favour, say "aye."

Opposed?

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): I ask that the bill be referred to the standing committee on the administration of justice.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour? It shall be done.

It being near 12 of the clock and private members' business being finished, this House is adjourned until 1:30.

The House recessed from 1159 to 1331.

Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

TVONTARIO

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): I want to use this opportunity to invite all members of the Legislature to TVOntario's sixth annual open house this Saturday, September 20, an event that will allow them to understand just how important TVO is to the people of Ontario.

This is truly a fun event, but it must be said that this year's open house is also being held under a bit of a shadow, the shadow being the government's decision to put TVO under review by the Office of Privatization.

We acknowledge that the government, with its majority, can force this review process to take place. The Ontario Liberal caucus, though, believes that review is wrong and that TVO should remain publicly owned and operated.

But what bothers us, what truly concerns us now, is that Privatization Minister Sampson and Culture Minister Mushinski promised full public consultation before any decision would be made. Yet here we are three months into the process, there has been no consultation done, and as far as we can tell, no consultation is planned.

TVOntario belongs to the people of Ontario and they have a right to a say in its future. The people won't be shut out of the process. A massive petition campaign is now under way, and last week the Wawatay radio network, which uses TVO's signal to provide native-language radio service across northern Ontario, went silent for two days in a moving display of support to draw attention to the concerns about possible privatization.

Minister, the public must have a say. Let the people of Sioux Lookout, Kenora, Fort Frances, Thunder Bay, Geraldton, Sudbury, Schreiber, Terrace Bay, London, Ottawa, Windsor and Toronto tell the people how they feel.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): Speaker, you're going to be as pleased as I am to learn that Welland city council has passed a resolution opposing this government's Bill 136. Welland city council understands that Bill 136 is a direct attack on collective bargaining and the rights of workers across this province, including workers in the community of Welland and across regional Niagara.

Public sector workers and their friends in the private sector understand full well that this government's real agenda is to attack collective bargaining, in fact to destroy collective bargaining here in the province of Ontario, to set workers back 40 and 50 years, to lower wages, and in the course of all that to create yet more unemployment while picking the pockets of the sick, the elderly, youth, students, low-income workers and workers across the board, paying for a phoney tax break, two thirds of which is going to the top 10% of income earners.

As I join CUPE members this evening in previously unheard-of numbers, we'll discover how angry and how resolved these workers are to resist this government, to oppose this government and to send this government into the exile it deserves. People across Niagara, across this province, are not going to tolerate the viciousness of this government's attacks on working people.

ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION

Mrs Lillian Ross (Hamilton West): I am proud to be able to rise to salute the hundreds of veterans in my community as they join in marking Legion Week next week, September 21 to 27.

The Royal Canadian Legion holds a prominent and special place in the hearts of Canadians, particularly for those whose families have been called on to make personal sacrifices for our country and for our freedom. Yet the work of the members of local Legions has gone far beyond the defence of our country in times of conflict. Over its 72-year history, the Legion has served hundreds of thousands of Canadians through its veterans' and community services. Its ongoing efforts in educating young people about the history of the Legion and its contribution to making Canada what it is today make all of us proud and help in a most meaningful way to pave the road for the Legion's future service.

Throughout its history the Legion has had to cope with changes in its membership, as well as in society at large. The Legion has been breaking new ground in its membership among the children and grandchildren of Canadian veterans.

The record of the Royal Canadian Legion speaks for itself. I know all members of this House join me in wishing all members of the Legion the very best as they mark this Legion Week and set their course of service for the future. They have earned our respect and our sincere thanks.

COMMUNITY HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Alex Cullen (Ottawa West): Grave concerns are being raised in Ottawa-Carleton concerning the ability of the government to honour its commitment that community health services are in place prior to hospital closures. The hospital restructuring commission, in issuing its August 13 report on hospital closures for Ottawa-Carleton, stated explicitly, "Reinvestment in alternative community-based services such as home care and long-term care is essential before hospital restructuring can occur."

It is apparent that the restructuring commission can close hospitals. It is up to the government to make the necessary reinvestments. To date, not all of the $100 million in savings from closing the Grace, Riverside and Elisabeth Bruyère Health Centre have been reinvested in health care in Ottawa-Carleton. Now the Ottawa-Carleton district health council is fearful that what is being reinvested will be too little and too late. For example, the Grace hospital is to stop admitting patients on May 15, 1998, Riverside on May 31, 1998, and the Montfort emergency is to close by March 1998.

The concern expressed by the Ottawa-Carleton district health council, which I share, is that the closure of these services and others will be implemented before the necessary renovations at the General and Queensway-Carleton hospitals are completed, renovations necessary to offset the impact of the planned closures. Further, the reinvestment the government is proposing to make, according to the Ottawa-Carleton district health council, falls far short of providing what the current hospital system now provides.

I would therefore urge the government to rethink its unrealistic time lines and inadequate investment in order to ensure that people's health in Ottawa-Carleton is not endangered during this difficult time of transition.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): We're at a very grave moment in the history of Ontario. We have seen for the first time a government that is prepared to provoke public sector workers to the brink of illegal strikes, chaos in our province, services that people won't be able to access, and a government that made a commitment to this Legislature, to the people of the province, to those public sector workers that they would have democratic input into this legislation that will affect their very lives. In fact, the minister stood in this House and said, "We will have public hearings and we will travel this province." As you know, the minister has completely gone back on her word, the word she provided to this House.

I can't tell you how saddened and angered I am to see a government that would force people to the brink of such precipitous action, people who just want to do their job, provide for their families, who want to provide services. It's a very grave day and it's hard to find anything of humour, but there are some resourceful people out there who can bring humour even to these very difficult situations.

As you know, on September 26 and 27 in North Bay the Days of Action will be taking place, in the Premier's home riding. I want you to know that there's an entrepreneur, a deli up there, Today's Lunch Co of Phil White, who's got a new addition to the menu. It is the Sink Harris Sub. We'll all be there to eat it in North Bay.

1340

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Mr Jerry J. Ouellette (Oshawa): I rise to address the House today regarding Durham region's fifth annual Take Back the Night walk. Take Back the Night was initiated in 1978 in San Francisco when some 5,000 participants from across the United States marched in San Francisco's pornography district. Since then, Take Back the Night has grown into an annual event in many communities across Ontario and North America.

Take Back the Night is an opportunity to educate people and to raise awareness of the issues around violence in our communities. Tonight the Durham region's Take Back the Night walk, organized by the Oshawa-Durham Rape Crisis Centre, will take place in Oshawa beginning at 5:30 at Oshawa city hall and the walk starting at 7 pm. Following the walk, guest speakers, one a young girl, will speak on the impact of violence in their lives.

Take Back the Night is a statement of the commitment towards ending violence against women and children. The recent announcements of a domestic violence court and a victims' crisis assistance referral service being located in Oshawa and other locations in Ontario should assist in the challenge towards ending these crimes, along with my colleague Mr Baird's Bill 155, passing second reading today, the Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week Act.

But we must do more. We must all seek new ways to end violent crime and to support those who have been victimized by crime. I urge all Ontarians to hear the message against violence that Take Back the Night sends out and to apply that message not to just one night but to every night.

MEDIA REPORTING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Not satisfied with the reduction by the media giants in the number of reporters and columnists covering events and issues at Queen's Park and the results of millions of dollars of self-serving, blatantly partisan advertising by the Conservative government, paid for by the taxpayers of this province, the Mike Harris government has reached for a weapon in its arsenal that it has employed with some success in other situations and with other people and organizations — the act of intimidation.

Members of the news media who dare to present an issue in anything other than glowing terms for the Harris crowd are chastised, criticized or called to account by the taxpayer-paid flacks for the ministers in the right-wing regime of Mike of North Bay.

Such bullying intimidation tactics may work with some health councils, hospitals, boards of education, municipalities or other agencies that rely upon the Mike Harris government for funding and favours, but flacks be warned: It's unlikely to work on the Queen's Park press gallery, who pride themselves on their independence, their objectivity, their persistence and their sense of fair play.

Control of the media and the message may be the goal of the backroom boys in the Harris regime, but no matter how big the bat they wield, they are likely to strike out. You see, you simply cannot intimidate the news media at the Ontario Legislature with whining or whimpering. As the old saying goes in the hallowed halls of the main Legislative Building, "Don't poke the badger."

PRIVATIZATION OF PUBLIC SERVICES

Mr Floyd Laughren (Nickel Belt): On August 16, 1996, a cataclysmic event occurred in the province. It was an event that some people did not hear about, that some people were excited about, that some people were angry about and, unbelievable as it may seem, that some people ignored.

It is not often that we can be precise about what constitutes a defining moment in the history of a province, but I believe that August 16, 1996, was such a moment. Bay Street was ecstatic, Main Street was apprehensive and Wall Street was orgasmic. Finally the Ontario Tories were going to deliver to their friends exactly what their friends wanted.

That defining moment, as I say, was August 16, 1996. But wait a minute. That was over a year ago. How is it that a defining moment that occurred so long ago is still not appreciated by all those Tory supporters out there? Believe me, those sycophants are getting restless. "Where's the meat?" they're asking. If the big event occurred on August 16, 1996, how is it that nothing tangible has resulted from that cataclysmic event? Am I wrong? Was August 16, 1996, not a defining moment in Ontario?

Well, it is time to end the suspense. It's time to remind all the Tory members exactly what happened on that magic day. That was the day Rob Sampson, MPP for Mississauga West, was appointed by Premier Harris as the minister responsible for privatization. While I don't support privatization, I do have to ask you, what does Mr Sampson do for his extravagant salary?

MAGNETIC RESONANCE IMAGING

Mrs Julia Munro (Durham-York): York County Hospital joins an impressive list of hospitals in Ontario that now offer magnetic resonance imaging, or MRI, services.

MRI is a non-invasive diagnostic technology that provides cross-sectional or three-dimensional images of structures and organs within the body. It provides scans of the head, central nervous system and spine, as well as detailed images of the heart, major blood vessels, blood flow, joints and soft tissues. MRIs can detect brain and spinal diseases, several forms of cancer, musculoskeletal disorders and several cardiovascular conditions.

Canada's first three MRI machines were installed in late 1982 and 1983 at St Joseph's Health Centre in London, University of British Columbia Hospital and Princess Margaret Hospital in Toronto. In the past, only teaching hospitals could operate MRIs, but several years ago the Ministry of Health changed its policy to allow hospitals to apply for the MRI diagnostic service.

The best way to keep Ontarians healthy is to detect signs of illness early, to act quickly and to prevent problems before they arise. Expansion of MRI services by Ontario's Ministry of Health will ensure residents will not have to endure a long wait to receive vital diagnostic services.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): I beg leave to inform the House that yesterday the Clerk received the 44th report of the standing committee on government agencies. Pursuant to standing order 105(g)(9), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Simcoe Centre): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly and move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table (Ms Lisa Freedman): Your committee begs to report the following bill as amended:

Bill 150, An Act proclaiming United Empire Loyalists' Day.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed? Agreed. The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I rise today to respond to some of the rhetoric I've heard in the past 24 hours from the union bosses.

In this morning's paper Gord Wilson, the president of the OFL, is quoted as saying, "We consider it a war room exercise." Earl Manners, the head of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation said, "There is a mood in the room that extraordinary actions are going to become necessary." Sid Ryan said, "We have moved people to a war footing and issued a red alert."

This is very strong rhetoric and not, in my opinion, constructive or productive. While I do not agree with these tactics, I understand that Mr Manners and Mr Ryan must get elected and that they believe they must engage in this type of rhetoric to appeal to their constituency. But I'd like to remind this House, and through this House, the taxpayers of this province of some facts. After 10 years of high-taxing and big-spending governments, Ontarians called for change: lower taxes, less government, quality services. They called for change because high taxes, big deficits and big government were not giving them quality services.

To achieve these goals, our government and the broader public sector must engage in new thinking and new approaches to quality service delivery. In the spring of this year, prior to the introduction of Bill 136, we heard from the union movement that they would strongly oppose any legislation that removed successor rights or overrode freely bargained contracting-out restrictions. Despite the specific request for these provisions from the municipal and hospital employer groups, we listened to the workers and agreed to the union request.

After the introduction of the bill by the Minister of Labour, the union bosses insisted on a meeting with the government to discuss further changes beyond the concessions we already gave on successor rights in particular. Minister Witmer offered repeatedly to meet with Gord Wilson, but he refused. In a meeting between Minister Witmer and myself and several union leaders on September 2, we undertook to engage in serious discussions about further amendments to our labour proposal.

On the education front, prior to the introduction of legislation, the Minister of Education's staff engaged in extensive, around-the-clock discussions. Officials in my office also indicated a willingness to talk with representatives from various teachers' federations. The Ontario Teachers' Federation walked away from the table at 9:30 pm, Tuesday, September 9, after three days of around-the-clock discussions with the government.

1350

We have indicated a willingness to continue to talk to both the OFL with respect to Bill 136 and the Ontario Teachers' Federation with respect to the education reform legislation. For political reasons, the union leadership has decided to walk away from these discussions and engage in a war of rhetoric. This is an old-style tactic. They engage in fearmongering and hyperbole to whip up their membership. I think we have demonstrated in the past that that approach with this government is unproductive.

We are engaged in a difficult agenda of change. We are managing this period of change for the long-term benefit of all Ontarians, including those workers and their families in the public sector unions. I do not need to remind this House that it is our commitment to eliminate the job-killing deficit we inherited. We are determined not to leave our children with a crippling debt.

We are determined to deliver quality education for our children. We are introducing province-wide tests, standard report cards, and increasing emphasis on the basics. We will limit class sizes and implement a comprehensive plan to ensure our children can compete with anybody in the world. Next week, the Minister of Education will be introducing a bill to implement the necessary changes to ensure our tax money is spent in the classroom, where it is needed.

By managing this difficult period of change, our goal is to maintain the services taxpayers expect and to enhance the overall quality of life in our health care system, in our education system and in every municipality of this great province. As we have repeatedly indicated, and here I'm quoting from page 20 of the Common Sense Revolution, "We are unconditionally committed to reaching our goals, but we are very open to discussing how we get there."

We were willing to engage in a meaningful dialogue with the teachers' federations and with the OFL. In fact, that's what we were engaged in, and we are prepared today to continue. However, the union bosses have chosen to leave the negotiating tables and engage in a war of rhetoric. We will not engage in this old-style exercise.

We as a government would have preferred to work with the union leadership to develop alternative approaches to achieving our goals. They have chosen to take another course. That does not change the fact that we have some difficult challenges before us. We want to continue to work with them and with all workers to ensure that all Ontarians continue to receive the quality service they deserve.

The changes that we were prepared to deliver at the negotiating table should not be jeopardized as a result of this most recent flight of rhetoric. Therefore, today the Minister of Labour will announce to the House the changes we were prepared to make at the table. We will remain committed to working with all public service providers in the interest of providing quality service at a reasonable price.

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Minister of Labour): In the months since the introduction of Bill 136, we have continued to meet with labour unions, municipalities, hospitals and other employers and employees to discuss the best way of ensuring smooth, stable and fair public sector restructuring. Our objectives are simple but firm: providing the necessary tools for restructuring, ensuring a smooth transition, and to be able to deal fairly with employees, both union and non-union, while providing better quality services at less cost to taxpayers. However, as we said on page 20 of the Common Sense Revolution, "We are unconditionally committed to reaching our goals, but we are very open to discussion as to how we get there."

In the case of Bill 136, public sector employers have shared this government's flexible approach to meeting these objections. The Association of Municipalities of Ontario has indicated that it is critical that the two levels of government continually dialogue with each other on where we agree and where further work needs to be done. We are doing this.

Last week, the Ontario Hospital Association wrote saying it would support changes to Bill 136 that respond to union concerns, provided those changes "do not dilute the intent of the bill."

Individual unions as well as the Ontario Federation of Labour have suggested alternative ways of meeting our goals. Mindful that public sector employers have encouraged us to be open to change that addresses union concerns without compromising our objectives, the government intends to introduce a series of amendments to Bill 136. These amendments are the product of our dialogue with the trade union movement. The dialogue has been frank yet fruitful. It has produced a series of amendments that, if adopted by the House, would respond completely to concerns raised by the trade union movement about the contents of Bill 136.

The OFL has told us, "The right to strike is essential to free collective bargaining," and they have assured us that the retention of the right to strike would not jeopardize public service or create instability. Based on our discussion with the union movement, our amendments to Bill 136 would remove proposed restrictions on the right to strike.

Trade unions said that, upon restructuring, they want free collective bargaining for a first collective agreement. Our amendments would provide for this. The first-contract provisions of the Labour Relations Act would apply.

I would remind members that the existing first-contract provisions of the Labour Relations Act were introduced at the request of the trade union movement. They formed part of the Peterson-Rae accord, and in 1986 were passed by the minority Liberal government with NDP support.

During committee we will be seeking views as to whether a temporary public interest test should be applied during the first-contract negotiations.

The OFL said there is "no need or justification for the proposed Dispute Resolution Commission." Our amendments would eliminate the DRC.

The union movement has requested a return to the current legislative provision governing the appointment of arbitrators. Our amendments would do that.

The OFL has said there is no need for a Labour Relations Transition Commission, and they have said that the Ontario Labour Relations Board should assume the responsibilities and functions proposed for the LRTC. In fact, the OFL indicated that "the Ontario Labour Relations Board has a long and trusted history of independent and impartial adjudication." We agree. Our amendments would replace the proposed LRTC with the OLRB.

The OFL supports making provisions for expedited arbitration and for the use of other forms of arbitration. As they suggest, our amendments would apply these procedural reforms to the current arbitration system.

The OFL has asked that bargaining agent issues be resolved by continuing "to respect the democratic right of all employees." We agree. Our amendments would ensure that, following a restructuring, employees' choice of union representation be determined by a democratic, secret ballot vote.

During the last few months, we have also had separate, ongoing and very productive discussions with the Police Association of Ontario. These discussions have led us to propose a series of amendments to Bill 136 which we shall also introduce. We agree with the PAO on the retention of a separate and distinct arbitration regime for police. At the association's request, the existing Ontario Police Arbitration Commission, with a chair appointed by the government, would be retained.

We heard concerns from other associations such as the Ontario Nurses' Association regarding the important of continuing specialized bargaining units for professional staff. We will be addressing these concerns.

Our dialogue has also included the Ontario Public Service Employees Union. OPSEU is concerned that in the restructuring that involves employees currently represented by OPSEU, that union's name must appear on the ballot when employees in a new workplace vote on representation rights. We agree. Our amendments would address this very legitimate OPSEU concern.

It is with a sense of pride that I report on the outcome of our discussions on Bill 136. Our proposed amendments addressed completely the union's concerns about Bill 136 without adversely affecting the employers' objectives and without sacrificing and compromising a single one of our objectives. I would urge all members in this House to work cooperatively together, to support these amendments when they are tabled before the committee and to ensure prompt passage of this very important piece of legislation.

1400

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): I want to begin by thanking both the Premier and the Minister of Labour for their wonderful performances. They give every impression that they are bargaining in earnest, that they have a genuine interest in bringing about a settlement and that they have the public interest at heart. This is nothing more than a very cynical attempt to manipulate public opinion, and I ask that our public keep their eye on the ball in this matter.

Let's begin with the record of a government which has as its hallmark, as its signature product, confrontation. These people thrive on confrontation. It is their very oxygen. Let's look at it from the beginning. Just a few months after this government sat we were faced with a labour strike and unrest outside on the very steps of this Legislature, something unheard of in the history of this province. Only a short while after that we had Bill 26, when we were forced to bring the Legislature to a halt because this government was trying to sneak in powers of an unprecedented nature in order to grab hold and bring about change in this government, which we are continuing to experience, notwithstanding.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): I think in all fairness, the statements were allowed to be given with a minimum of heckling. I just ask the government to offer the same to the opposition.

Interjection: They've been told. The truth hurts.

Mr McGuinty: The truth hurts, Speaker.

In the fall of 1996 we had physicians throughout the province, specialists in many regions, forced to withdraw services and stop seeing new patients. We've also had hospital closures in small towns throughout this province force some of the largest public gatherings we've ever seen in the history of those small towns.

In March of this very year we had the megacity referendums where over 400,000 people came out and voted against this government's proposals. So when this government tells us that it is interested in listening and interested in learning and interested in bringing about change as a result of what they have heard, they are not telling us the truth. It's as simple as that.

Let's look at —

The Speaker: You can't charge them with that. You must withdraw.

Mr McGuinty: I withdraw that, Speaker.

Let's take a look at the specifics. The Premier would have us believe that once again they are bargaining in good faith when it comes to Bill 136. Let's understand that at the outset, before they drafted the bill they refused to consult our workers. Furthermore, they have now invoked a closure motion, limiting debate on this important bill in this Legislature. Furthermore, they have now told us that there will be four days of committee hearings only. Furthermore, there will be no travel of any kind whatsoever for those committee hearings.

I don't know if the Minister of Labour or the Premier has taken the time, but I was asked that they do this. They should talk to nurses. They should talk to our police. They should talk to our firefighters. They should talk to our bus drivers. Do you know what nurses want to do? They want to nurse patients. Do you know what teachers want to do? They want to teach our students. Do you know what our police want to do? They want to police our streets. Do you know what our firefighters want to do? They want to fight our fires. Do you know what our bus drivers want to do? They want to drive our buses. That's what they want to do. They don't want to go on strike, they don't want to be driven to the wall, they don't want to be taken to the precipice, and for some reason that is all this government wants to do. They are leaving them with no choice. They are hoping, they are praying that they will go out on strike, and this obviously is contrary to the public interest.

If they took the time, if they left this precinct and went into classrooms and went into hospitals and went into the occasional fire stations and talked to those men and women who serve us throughout this province, they would quickly understand that those people do not want to go out on strike.

This government, notwithstanding what the Premier told us today and notwithstanding the kind utterances of the Minister of Labour, has as its very intention to drive these people to the wall, to drive them out and to force us, the public, to experience the kind of pain that is going to come about. There's no doubt about it, and this government should not be mistaken in that regard.

People should keep their eye on the ball. Once again, this is a cynical attempt to manipulate public opinion. This government is not bargaining in good faith. This government has not taken the time, this government has not shown any genuine interest whatsoever, because if it were really interested in doing that, if it were really interested in doing the right thing, it would withdraw Bill 136. If it refuses to withdraw Bill 136, then at a minimum it would give us more committee days.

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): Let me start off by saying that there is nothing in the Premier's speech today that surprises me, absolutely nothing. This government has wanted to have a conflict, this government has wanted to engage in rhetoric, this government has wanted to provoke a fight with public sector workers in this province for a long period of time. This government has from day one manipulated the agenda, manipulated their rhetoric so that they can be certain of having that fight.

Let's just reflect on how we got here. I remember that firefighters were here in the gallery when I asked the question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs: Is it true that the government is bringing forth legislation which is essentially going to wipe out many of the rights that public sector workers have fought for over the last 40 years? He had to admit that without any consultation with those public sector workers, firefighters, police officers, ambulance attendants, yes, that is what this government was going to do.

That is how we got here. You didn't talk to people in the first place. You just rammed ahead, determined to steamroller over people. When people said, "This is wrong, this is going to lead to a conflict, a provocation," you then engaged in a strategy to ensure that there was a fight. But you're going to play the public relations game on the way to that fight, and that is exactly what you're doing here today.

But people who work in the broader public sector are not going to be fooled. They know you have taken over $1 billion out of hospital budgets. They know what that means for patient care in our hospitals. They know what that means in terms of waiting lists. They know what that means in terms of people who are not able to get the quality of patient care they have had in the past. They know that you now intend to take some of that billion dollars out of the pockets of the very people who are working so hard in our hospitals and in our health care system to provide those services; now through Bill 136 and the other legislation, you're going to take the money out of their pockets. They know that.

Let's take a look at education. Talk about rhetoric, Premier. Your Minster of Education has been the chief of rhetoric from the very beginning, a Minister of Education who says he is going to create a crisis in education in order that he can wreak havoc on the education system.

You people have engaged in the rhetoric so that you can get to where you are going to go now: to provoke a fight with public sector workers, provoke a fight with teachers. But those people out there know that you've already taken, on an annualized basis, $1 billion out of education. They know that you plan to take another $1 billion, and they know what that's going to do to the quality of education in our classrooms. They know. They care about education. They care about teaching. They care about teaching kids. They know what you're up to, and they know that this is all a strategy to provoke that fight so that it can be the smokescreen while you pull the money out from underneath. That's what this is all about: You want to have a fight and you want the media who are here to focus on that fight. Meanwhile, you take another $1 billion out of education, and meanwhile you download $1.4 billion in new costs on to municipalities.

1410

The people who work in municipalities, the people who are the ambulance attendants, the people who give care to our children in day care centres, the people who look after seniors' apartments and seniors' housing, know what your agenda means. They know what it means in terms of a lowering of quality in ambulance services. They know what it means in terms of policing services out there in rural Ontario and small-town Ontario. They know what it means in terms of the quality of fire services when you take out this much money.

You want to provoke a fight with those people to cover up that ugly part of your agenda. While the fight is going on, while you've pushed all those public sector workers into that fight, you're going to use that as a smokescreen to take out the money.

I say to you, it's not going to go that easily. It's not going to go that easily out there. People don't want to have this fight. Those people who engage in teaching, those people who look after the elderly and the sick, those people who look after our children, don't want to have this fight. If you force them into it —

The Speaker: Thank you.

ORAL QUESTIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Premier. As people woke up this morning, they picked up their papers to learn that there is the distinct possibility that hundreds of thousands of public sector workers would be going out in a massive strike some time beginning as early as next week. Maybe the saddest aspect of all of this was the gentle resignation with which so many people accepted that fact. There is a sense that we have seen this all too often before, a sense that, as I said just a few moments ago, this is what this government is all about. They're into confrontation, big-time. They're looking for crises. They love showdowns.

Premier, you didn't consult our workers before. You've invoked closure. You've restricted us to four days of hearings. You're not allowing the committee to travel. I'm going to ask you, Premier, why should we believe now, at the final hour, that you are genuinely interested in looking out for the interests —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you. Premier.

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): Let me share a little bit, and agree with the member, that there seemed to be a resignation. That kind of call, you would have thought, might have been the headline instead of story four or five in the major dailies. The public reaction — our phones have not been extraordinarily busy one way or the other. The talk shows have been overwhelmingly in favour of the government.

What we've found, I think, is that there perhaps wasn't the same concern among the public, since they've heard that old game and that old rhetoric before. The fact of the matter is, we have been listening at the negotiating table with the OFL. We turned down not one of their requests. Not one single one of their requests was refused by the Minister of Labour at the table. We were actually quite surprised ourselves that they walked away from the negotiating table.

Mr McGuinty: The reason, Premier, that your phone isn't ringing on this issue is because people have given up on your government. They refuse to get their hopes up any longer.

Interjections.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): The line of the year is, "We have vision." Coming from you guys, it's a line

Interjection.

The Speaker: I think she said "line."

Mr McGuinty: Premier, I've spent a lot of time lately travelling around the province and I can tell you one of the questions I get time and time again —

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener): We know you haven't been here.

Mr McGuinty: By the way, I've been in your ridings, just in case you want to know where I've been, talking to your constituents, and I'll tell you what people are saying. They were asking me: "What can we do? Because it seems to me that we just can't get the government of the day to listen. Tell us, what can we do?" There is an incredible amount of despair out there when it comes to our public and this government. They can't understand why you simply refuse to listen.

The reason we find ourselves on the brink of a disaster here in this province when it comes to labour relations is because you have stick-handled this all the way to the edge of the precipice. This has been very deliberate; there's no doubt about that whatsoever. You thrive on confrontation.

Premier, once again, why should we believe you now? Why should we believe that you are genuinely interested in settling this matter in the greater public interest?

Hon Mr Harris: I don't know who it is you're talking to as you travel this province. Every survey, every poll, every group is talking about enthusiasm, optimism, "optimistic about the future." Jobs are up, record job creation in the province of Ontario; interest rates down, unemployment down. Even the city of North Bay —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Member for Ottawa West, I'm not going to warn you again to come to order. Member for Hamilton East, I'm not going to warn you again to come to order either. Premier.

Hon Mr Harris: All I can say to you is, I don't know who you're talking to, but I can tell you this: We had one union member I think in North Bay who talked about public sector job losses. What he forgot to tell you was that most of them occurred under the NDP. Second, he forgot to tell you that there has been significantly more private sector job creation in the city of North Bay, unemployment rate below 10%, for the first time in a long time, certainly since this government has been in power.

Is it good enough? Of course not. But there is a spirit of optimism and enthusiasm and hope for the future that were not there when you guys —

The Speaker: Final supplementary.

1420

Mr McGuinty: Do you know what they are starting to talk about out there? They are starting to talk about two lost years in Ontario. They're talking about a government that has lost sight of the needs of the people of Ontario. Go out there and spend a little time and, for example, talk to those who make a living on our behalf looking after the needs of children and ask them whether or not they think you are on their side. Go out there and talk to our teachers who, despite $533 million of cuts, of late —

Mr Gerard Kennedy (York South): Your cuts.

Mr McGuinty: — your cuts, imposed by your government — are doing their best to educate our students and ask them if they think they have your support. You go out there and talk to nurses, who are doing their damnedest to look after our patients in hospital wards, what few hospitals are left in this province, and ask them if they think you are on their side. Talk to our workers right across the province and ask them if they think you understand their needs, that you are with them when they want to do their very best for us. Ask them that, Premier, and you go ahead and tell me what you think their answers are going to be.

Hon Mr Harris: I have been. This morning I was at the Donwood clinic, where we have reinvested over $800,000, creating 14 new jobs in the last period of time. The employees, the nurses, the workers, the management and the volunteers there were excited about the new building, about the new commitment. They commented that this was a building that was planned under Premier Davis, under Premier Miller, under Premier Peterson, under Premier Rae, and finally after all that time Premier Harris opened it, delivered it and gave them the funding and the new jobs and the new programs that went along with it. That is what they are telling me.

That is in the public sector. In the private sector, 201,000 net new private sector jobs in the last six months alone — over 200,000 net new private sector jobs in the last six months alone. Those families are telling me, "We got a phone call that said, 'You got the job.' Thank you." They are now productive members of society. That is what I'm hearing.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): This question is for the Minister of Education and Training. You insist on telling us that your cuts are not hurting our students and that the $533 million you have stolen from the education system has had no adverse effect on education in Ontario.

I want to tell you about Victoria Eccles, who is a four-year-old student starting school for the first time this year, and she's enrolled in kindergarten. She was very excited about starting school with her friends in her home town of Wyevale and she was delighted by the fact that she lived eight houses away from her school. But at the last minute, Victoria's mom got a phone call saying Victoria couldn't start kindergarten with her friends, that she was going to be put on a bus, and she is going to be bused to Midland, an adjoining community, at least half an hour away from her home town, all of this because the board cannot afford to hire another kindergarten teacher to accommodate Victoria and five of her friends. She lives eight houses away from the school. Her school board cannot afford to hire the necessary teacher. She is going to be shipped via bus to the adjoining community to go to school there.

You tell me what to tell Victoria.

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I don't think there is any question in anyone's mind that the general legislative grant program that has been funding education in this province for many, many years and all of the patchwork of regulations that go along with those grants doesn't serve the needs of our students. That is why this government announced many months ago that we were going to get rid of that system of funding that didn't meet our students' needs, didn't meet the needs of students in kindergarten, doesn't meet the needs of students in grades 10, 11 and 12 in Ontario, and replace that with a funding system designed to meet the needs of those individual systems. We are working very hard right now with experts in the field, with teachers, with students and with parents to make sure we get that funding formula right because we need to make those changes to have a quality education in Ontario. That is what I'd tell that student and the other students of Ontario.

Mr McGuinty: Minister, I understand that you can find comfort in academic discussions of programs and policies and substantial savings, but I want to bring you back to Victoria Eccles. She is four years old. She lives eight doors away from the school. Her plan and the plan of her parents was to send her to that school, and they were very much looking forward to it. Now the school board tells them they are going to have to ship their daughter, via bus, to the adjoining community. It's going to take at least a half-hour to get there by bus. She could walk to her school in two minutes. The school board is saying the reason they have to do this is because of cuts made by your government to their funding. They cannot provide education eight houses away to a four-year-old girl. I want you to tell me why this is a good thing for Victoria Eccles.

Hon Mr Snobelen: I think all of us regret that your government, when it was in power, didn't make the changes to a funding system that clearly doesn't meet the needs of students. It is regrettable that for whatever — a failing of imagination or courage, I'm not sure what kind of failing it was — you didn't address this issue.

We are addressing this issue. We don't believe the right choices are made in education. We have made that very clear. You have criticized me for criticizing a system that allows that kind of situation. We are taking action. We have asked the tough questions, we have listened to people and we are building a better funding system right now.

Mr McGuinty: As painful as it may be for the minister to accept, your cuts are hurting education, they are hurting our students and they are hurting our future. You have so far stolen $533 million out of our education system. You have told us you are going to get another $1 billion out of our education system.

So far your cuts have resulted in the closure of 25 junior kindergarten programs throughout Ontario. You know that experts have been telling us for a long time that the single best and most reliable indicator of academic success is readiness to learn in kindergarten. That is why junior kindergarten is such a valuable and wise investment. You have got to stop seeing it as purely an expense.

I'm going to ask you this and make it pure and simple. People of Ontario, students and parents, want to know when we are going to have a Minister of Education who stands up for education, who stops attacking education and who believes that students have got to come first.

Hon Mr Snobelen: I want to assure the Leader of the Opposition of this one thing, and you can count on this: As long as this government is in power, you won't see a Minister of Education defend a status quo that doesn't fund the individual needs of students across the province, you won't see a Minister of Education who defends mediocre student results, you won't see a Minister of Education who is happy until Ontario students have the best performance of any students in Canada. That is our objective and that is why we are willing to ask the tough questions, that is why we're willing to spend hours and hours listening to people on how to build that better education system and that is why we are acting on that now.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a question to the Premier. Your Minister of Labour spoke glowingly today. We trust that she will table the amendments she is referring to because we want to see these amendments.

While I am talking about that, Premier, do you understand why all those people who work out there providing public services are angry? You brought in Bill 136 without notice. When a majority of the delegates at AMO voted to see Bill 136 withdrawn because they didn't want it, you ignored them. Now your government is going to steamroller it through by means of time allocation and you are only going to allow very limited hearings here in Toronto. You are going to shut out all those people across Ontario who work so hard teaching our children, who look after our children, who look after public safety, who staff the ambulances. You're going to shut them out of the process. Do you understand why they are so angry? Do you understand why they are so hurt by what your government has done?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): The unions had significant notice before the introduction of Bill 136. In fact, we accommodated a number of the requests as a result of about six months of meetings leading up to the introduction of Bill 136.

The problem with your question is, you premise it with a bunch of statements that don't come anywhere close to the reality of the situation. So you want me to answer questions and the questions have no basis in fact. That is the difficulty I have in responding to you.

We have consulted extensively with the union representatives. That, I think, has even been acknowledged privately to you. I know the public posturing is, you know, "We've got a convention this fall and we've all got to re-elected." I don't expect the union leaders to say, "Hey, this government's so good, stop paying your dues; you don't need us." I understand that. We don't expect it to ever go that far.

On the other hand, for the leader of a party that stripped away their bargaining rights, you have the gall to stand in this place when we have restored free collective bargaining and all the rights that go with it, something you took away during three years of your term.

1430

Mr Hampton: We know the Premier has his own interpretation of history. While the United Nations talks about Canada being one of the best places in the world to live, he refers to it as 10 lost years. I'd prefer to believe the United Nations.

But not to let the Premier get off the topic: Workers across this province who work in our hospitals, who work in our homes for the aged, who drive the ambulances, who look after child care, who make sure that our highways and our streets are safe, who provide us with fire protection, were very angry when you introduced Bill 136 in the way you did. What they then sought was the opportunity to have public hearings. They wanted public hearings across this province so they'd be able to tell their stories.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Question, please.

Mr Hampton: Your Minister of Labour said on June 4: "Yes, I commit to you that there will be full public hearings. We will travel the province, we will be in Toronto and we will listen."

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon Mr Harris: Let's set the record straight. Their anger was nothing compared to the anger when you and Bob Rae at the time stripped away their right to negotiate. Their anger was nothing compared to when you imposed the social contract without one hearing anywhere in the province, including here in Toronto. Their anger was nothing compared to that they expressed to you in the last election when the majority of card-carrying union members voted for the kind of change that would balance the books, give their kids a job, give them hope, bring this kind of change.

Your five-year record was net 10,000 fewer jobs in the province at the end of five years. That's your five-year record. They voted for the kind of change that has brought over 200,000 net new private sector jobs to this province in the last six months alone. That is the record, if you like, or the memory or the thoughts of the card-carrying union members we are providing hope and opportunity to, including their children.

The Speaker: Answer, please.

Hon Mr Harris: I don't know how you have the gall, when you stripped away their bargaining rights and gave them not one minute of public hearings, to criticize —

The Speaker: Thank you, Premier.

Mr Hampton: My question was a very simple question. On June 4 in this Legislature the Minister of Labour was asked, would there be public hearings across the province on Bill 136. She said, "Yes, I commit to you that there will be full public hearings. We will travel the province, we will be in Toronto and we will listen."

What's happening here is this: All those people who want to provide health care services, who want to look after our elderly, who want to look after public security, who want to look after our children, who wanted this opportunity to have those public hearings, are now finding out that your government lied again, that this is simply a lie. That's why they're so angry. That is why they are so angry.

Interjections.

Mr Hampton: Premier, are you going to do what you said you are going to do? Are you going to —

The Speaker: Order. I'm sorry, I was preoccupied and I didn't hear it, but now it's been clarified. You must withdraw that statement. You can't make that comment.

Mr Hampton: Speaker, I can't withdraw that. It's clear. It's on the record of the House.

The Speaker: Then I will name the member for Rainy River, Mr Hampton.

Mr Hampton was escorted from the chamber.

The Speaker: Premier.

Hon Mr Harris: I think we were all notified this morning that he wanted to be thrown out, and he was successful in that, one of the first things since being leader that he's been successful at.

Let just say to as many people as I can, I have here three pages of communities that will be accessible to hearings on Bill 136: Atikokan, Aurora, Aylmer, Bancroft, Blind River, Espanola, Fort Frances, Kenora, Manitouwadge, Mississauga, Moosonee, Nepean, Nipigon, even North Bay, Ottawa, Owen Sound, Parry Sound, Pembroke. Perth, Toronto; you won't let me read them all, but I'll be happy to share them with the members of the committee and they can pick which communities — I think with video conferencing they can go to them all.

That's the commitment of this Minister of Labour, as opposed to the New Democratic Party that took away and stripped away bargaining rights with a piece of legislation that allowed absolutely no hearings. That's the difference between this government and this consultative Minister of Labour that we're so proud of.

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): My question is to the Minister of Environment and Energy. Since July 21, I've been calling for a public inquiry, joined by my colleague the member for Hamilton East, Dominic Agostino, to bring to your attention the fact that we need and desire and deserve a public inquiry in Hamilton. You have dodged and weaved and tried to avoid the fact that you have a responsibility under the law. Never mind changing the rules of why there ought to be one; the only threshold is a matter of public concern.

Let me say to you, here's who's on side with this so far. We've got local residents, firefighters, OPSEU, nurses, environmentalists, Oshawa city council, Ajax council, Burlington city council, Halton, Niagara, Toronto, Hamilton, Hamilton-Wentworth, Cambridge, the medical officer of health and the fourth editorial from the Hamilton Spectator. We've got firefighters and residents here in the gallery. I want you to stand in your place and tell them why they don't deserve and why they cannot have the public inquiry that you owe them.

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Environment and Energy): I've said in this Legislature before that if there are any unanswered questions, we are willing to answer those questions. I've invited that member and the other member from Hamilton to forward to me the hundreds of questions which they've alleged are there. They have not forwarded those questions to me. I await their questions. I will answer their questions. We have answered the residents' questions. We have answered the medical officer of health's questions. We have answered the fire department's questions. We will provide all of the information necessary to anybody who asks.

Mr Christopherson: Since you refuse to show any respect to any elected official in our community regardless of what level of government they may be at because you believe it's politics at play, I guess, let me read to you from third parties who have an interest in this. How about the Hamilton Spectator again for the fourth time, and I'm quoting:

"To date, no one has offered a convincing reason why the province can't arrange for a concise but detailed independent examination of the circumstances prior to the fire. The air needs to be cleared on key issues: the supervision of the plant and the track record of its owners in meeting the fire code and hazardous materials storage requirements, the effectiveness of existing laws and regulations for companies that handle them," and on and on and on.

Hazardous Materials Management magazine — this is an industry magazine — raises questions about: Why wasn't the fire declared a hazardous material incident? Why wasn't a decontamination unit made available to the firefighters? They state that it's standard procedure that you overprotect, then downgrade in the case of an emergency. You turned back federal aid when it was offered and on the road to our community. Police didn't have adequate respiratory equipment.

There are lots of reasons to hold this inquiry, Minister. Stop holding out. Say that you'll do the right thing and hold a public inquiry.

1440

Hon Mr Sterling: The problem of course is that the member continues to put forward rhetoric, incorrect facts on which he is basing his rhetoric. Until he gets his facts straight, no rational decision can be made with regard to holding an inquiry. I believe I know the facts. I've invited him to present evidence to me that there is some kind of coverup or whatever. Nobody has at this point in time presented evidence to me that an inquiry is necessary.

Mr Christopherson: Minister, you just don't seem to get it; you don't seem to be listening. The law says the threshold for calling a public inquiry is "a matter of public concern." My community's been concerned since the first flame. The firefighters and residents who are here today have been concerned about this every day of their lives since this happened. There are unanswered questions. We have the most toxic hot spot in the nation.

We have over 200 firefighters who are now ill as a result of exposure. We had a hospital that never was evacuated; somebody was standing on the roof, and when they saw the smoke coming, pulled up the ventilation system. If for no other reason, other than to make sure that we can do the best job possible, you owe it to my community and my citizens and every other community where this might happen to find out all the details, put it on the public record and make sure it doesn't happen again. That can only happen with a public inquiry. Do the right thing and call it.

Hon Mr Sterling: The member mentions two issues. He mentions the health of the firefighters; he mentions the evacuation orders that were under the jurisdiction of the medical officer of health. I would remind the member that under the Municipal Act and the regional municipality act, the municipality can hold an inquiry into matters relating to their own firefighters and those matters.

Interjection.

The Speaker: I've warned you a number of times, member for Hamilton East, and I'm going to have to name you.

Mr Agostino was escorted from the chamber.

Hon Mr Sterling: Second, I might add that the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth can hold their own inquiry with relation to the medical officer of health if they feel there are questions relating to the decisions made by her. They have the opportunity to hold their own inquiries. If they decide to do that, I wish them well.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Minister of Education and Training. I want to bring to your attention once again the case of young Gordie Kirwan. I have raised his case in this House on two earlier occasions. On both occasions you promised that at the commencement of this school year Gordie would be able to enrol and continue with his education notwithstanding the fact that he is 22 years of age and has special learning needs. It is now September 18; school has been ongoing for a few weeks. The only reason that Gordie is enrolled in school today is because his parents had to fork out the money. You promised to look after Gordie and all others like him. I want you to stand up in this House right now and tell us why you have broken that promise.

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I thought that the Leader of the Opposition would know that my office has been in contact with the Kirwans — and I have been personally — to work through this. We are all concerned with making sure that those students who are over 21 can access programs that allow them to develop as much as they possibly can, not just Gordie but also people in the same circumstances in Ontario. I think we've made some substantial headway on this over the course of the last few months.

We've assured the Kirwans — and I think you'll find they have been surprised by the amount of time we've spent on the file, the amount of response that we've had. I've worked with my colleagues to try to find the right solution, the right balance, for the needs of those students. We're working hard on that. I don't have any legislation I'm going to bring forward on it immediately, but I think you'll find that the Kirwans believe they have been well served in this regard.

Mr McGuinty: I can tell you without any reservation whatsoever that they do not believe they have been well served. They have been surprised by the amount of time that has been devoted to this, and surprised equally by the fact that nothing has come of it.

You said that at the beginning of the school year Gordie Kirwan and others like him, special needs students over the age of 21 in Ontario, could go to school and that our province would invest in them by paying for their education in those cases where they can continue to learn. He's there today only because his parents could afford to pay for him.

What about all those others throughout the province who are over the age of 21 and who have learning problems and who can't go to school as of this September? You promised that he would be there, and the Premier promised two and a half years ago when he happened to run into Gordie's dad and Gordie's dad bought him a cup of coffee and said, "Would you help me?" The then leader of the third party said, "Yes, I will." It is now September 18 and the only reason he is in school is because his parents have paid. Minister, when are you going to fix it as you promised?

Hon Mr Snobelen: Day in and day out we hear comments from the Leader of the Opposition that are simply not factual. I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that Gordie is in school this year and that his tuition is being paid for by the Ministry of Education and Training, as we promised the Kirwans.

The Kirwans are not interested in just their son; they're interested in all the children who have that difficulty, all the young adults who have that difficulty. Our bigger quest now is to make sure we meet the needs of all of those students.

Let's be very clear, because that is simply not factual: Gordie is in school this year, his tuition is being paid by the Ministry of Education and Training, and we intend to make sure that all of the young adults who are in that circumstance are well treated.

Mr McGuinty: On a point of information, Mr Speaker: I want to allow the minister the opportunity to correct the record.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): No. No such thing as a point of information.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Health. A couple of weeks ago I talked to you personally about repeated reports I'd had that patients and staff at St Thomas and London psychiatric hospitals were experiencing dislocation, that wards were being closed or combined, that critically ill patients were being kept on waiting lists, sometimes —

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Order. Member for Fort William, you must withdraw that heckle. It's out of order.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): What the minister said is contrary to the fact. I'll withdraw the statement, "Untrue."

The Speaker: No, you get one chance. You must simply withdraw.

Mrs McLeod: I'll withdraw.

The Speaker: Thank you. Member for London Centre.

Mrs Boyd: As I was saying, Minister, we spoke personally about the changes that were happening at the St Thomas and London psychiatric hospitals, contrary to the advice that was given you by the restructuring commission. The restructuring commission asked that no changes be made until there was some certainty about reinvestment.

I assumed you'd intervened, frankly, because there was an article in the London Free Press a couple of days later saying that there would be a moratorium on any of those changes, that layoffs wouldn't happen, that wards wouldn't close until you had made your announcement. But now I'm getting similar reports about changes that are exactly the same from the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital.

I guess what we need from you, Minister, is for you to clarify what your position really is with respect to the final recommendations of the restructuring commission as they affect St Thomas, London and Brockville psychiatric hospitals.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): It's a little early yet. We're still undergoing analysis of the Health Services Restructuring Commission's final directives with respect to those areas.

I do appreciate that the honourable member has brought concerns to my attention, and each time I've looked into those. The last time we looked into it, there had been premature layoff notices sent out by management, which I think was highly inappropriate. We've put a moratorium on the closure of beds over the last two years so that the mistakes of the past, which all parties admit were mistakes, in the 1970s and 1980s won't be repeated with respect to people who are suffering with mental illnesses in this province. I appreciate the honourable member continuing to bring concerns forward, and I will look into them as she continues to do that.

1450

Mrs Boyd: Well, Minister, the time is getting short. These hospitals are to close by December 30, 1999. In the case of the London and St Thomas psychiatric hospitals, the commission recommended that they be transferred to St Joseph's Health Centre as of December 31 this year. So the time is getting short.

You own and operate, as Minister of Health, these psychiatric facilities. The commission can't order you to close them; they've advised you. We have patients, we have staff, we have families, we have affected communities, all wondering what is going to happen in very short order.

Quite frankly, it is inconceivable to me that you have delayed so long in announcing, first of all, whether you are going to accept the recommendation that you close the facilities for which you are responsible and, second, that you're going to accept the advice to reinvest the savings from those closures into the community so those services are there.

This is causing enormous anxiety not just in the London-St Thomas community but in Brockville as well. I want you to know that as the restructuring commission goes on, there are other cities that are going to be facing the same uncertainty. When are you going to make this decision? When are you going to announce what you are going to do about these patients, who are very vulnerable?

Hon Mr Wilson: I say with all respect to the honourable member that it's because the patients are vulnerable and because no party in this House has a good record with respect to treating these patients over the years that we are taking our time to get it right. We will not be pressured by media stories, we will not be pressured by various people who may or may not have other agendas.

I think our agenda is the same as the honourable member's agenda. That is to make sure that for these people who are in our psychiatric institutions and the mentally ill people in our province, of which there are many — and with the growing and aging population unfortunately there will be more people afflicted with mental illness — we take our time to do it right. We have a moral obligation to do that. That's what we're doing. We're doing an extremely careful analysis of what the commission has handed to the government in terms of its advice and directives, and we are working very hard to make sure we fully live up to our commitment to have community services in place before there are any major changes to the psychiatric hospitals in the province.

So we are taking our time to get it right. I would ask everyone in the process to just be patient, to continue to bring their concerns forward but be patient, because we do want to get it right.

VOLUNTEERS

Mr Doug Galt (Northumberland): My question is directed to the Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation. Last winter we received a report from the mandated advisory board about the voluntary sector. It was called Sustaining a Civic Society: Voluntary Action in Ontario. The report contained a large number of recommendations designed to support and enhance volunteers and their organizations in the province. Volunteers and the work they do are tremendously important to our respective communities, and people in my riding are asking what progress your ministry has been making since the report was released. What is your ministry doing to carry out the recommendations in that report?

Hon Marilyn Mushinski (Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation): I thank the member for Northumberland for his question. I know his ongoing interest to support the work of volunteers in this province is greatly appreciated.

During Volunteer Week in April, I was pleased to announce the first of our initiatives to help strengthen and revitalize the voluntary sector. The voluntary linkages initiatives is a program that is designed to help voluntary organizations link with each other through technology networks.

My ministry is also working on the creation of a special achievement award which recognizes the efforts of youth volunteers. A public awareness campaign will be launched in concert with and after consultation with the voluntary sector, and plans for the Premier's round table on voluntarism and the role it plays in our society will also be announced shortly. Volunteer organizations will have the ability to access up to $180 million through our new charitable gaming initiatives. This is up from the current $10 million that charities currently receive.

Mr Galt: Volunteers are particularly concerned about personal liability, particularly when they're working for charitable organizations. Volunteer boards of directors are particularly concerned about the cost of liability insurance. I know that Bill 79, the Courts Improvement Act, when we get it passed, will provide some protection for volunteers on boards of directors. However, my constituents who are front-line volunteers are particularly vulnerable and they're concerned about their position.

You may recall that last December I presented a resolution to this House in private members' time, which was passed, to give some protection to volunteers in connection with liability. What are your thoughts and what can we do to protect our volunteers from liability?

Hon Ms Mushinski: Although there is some confusion on this subject, the directors of charities have in fact legal power to use charitable moneys to purchase liability insurance for their volunteers. The directors, however, do not have the legal power to use charitable moneys to purchase liability insurance for themselves.

Under Bill 79, provisions have been made which will allow the government to permit directors of charitable organizations to purchase liability coverage for themselves. My government believes that the greater availability of liability insurance for all persons working for charities will address the issue of legal risk and encourage and promote people to offer their services as volunteers.

I know that this issue of liability coverage will be one of many which will be raised and discussed at the round table discussions held by the Premier later this year, and its importance to strengthening voluntarism as a whole.

MAGNETIC RESONANCE IMAGING

Mr Gerard Kennedy (York South): I have a question for the Minister of Health. I'd like to talk to you about MRI machines. We learned last week how you have created a two-tier system in this province, where some people are having to rent out through private insurance companies after hours because you won't fund enough of the cost of running MRIs in this province. Hospitals in local communities — not you, Minister — are paying large sums of money to put in place MRIs, but you're only paying one third of the cost. That's what we heard last week.

This week we learned that you are putting money into MRIs. The problem is they're in the United States. Last year you spent more than $1 million paying for MRIs in American hospitals, and you're going to spend $1.3 million this year at the rate you're going. There are applications even on the Internet to get MRIs funded by OHIP in the United States.

Minister, will you stand in the House today and tell us that you will fully fund the operation of MRIs in this province and stop the backlogs and stop the trips to the United States?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): The Health Services Restructuring Commission has directed the government to pay $1 million in operating costs for each of the MRIs to be installed in Metro Toronto. We've already done that, so proof is in the pudding. I don't know why you keep bringing this particular point up. Thunder Bay is getting $1 million in operating costs — unprecedented.

Your government paid nothing, because you wouldn't even bring in MRIs in the province. The NDP paid $150,000 a year, which was the policy up until the commission came in and said, "Government, you've got to pay more of the operating costs," and we agree. We've done that in Thunder Bay, we're doing that in Sudbury. We'll do that as we bring in the 23 new MRIs across this province, to bring the total to 35, more MRIs than the rest of Canada combined, so that people will not have to go to the United States.

Yes, in emergency cases where the MRI is not available nearby because of the failure of previous governments to bring in this new technology, we do send people and we do pay for people to go to the States. We will be able to end that with 35 MRIs in the province.

Mr Kennedy: This minister hasn't got a grip at all on what he's doing. Not one MRI in this province has received $1 million. It might be interesting for the minister to know the facts. He is still paying less than one third of the operating costs. He is still forcing hospitals to rent them out to private insurance companies so people can jump the queue, and even Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, every province pays more of the operating costs than you do today. People are interested in your actions, because they've heard your words and they don't fit. We've got the longest waiting list in Canada for MRIs, Minister, and you have not even named the sites of those MRIs you talk about and the places that you're going to go. You won't put the money into it.

Again, instead of funding MRIs in the United States, which you're doing to an increasing degree — and people are just getting doctors' signatures and going down there — Minister, will you tell us today —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Question, please.

Mr Kennedy: Some people think that you're stripping the health care system on purpose. Prove them wrong. Tell them you'll fully fund MRIs in this province and in this country. Tell us today.

1500

Hon Mr Wilson: Again the honourable member is in error. There were 12 when we came into office; there are 24 today, because we have opened 12 more. I don't really have anything else to say. I can name off the top of my head almost 11 of them. I'll give you a list of the 12, which I would be happy to send over to the honourable member.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Wilson: I don't think it's a figment of my imagination when last weekend we opened the new MRI in Barrie; it's a machine that's there, and patients are going through it. It wasn't a figment of our imagination when honourable members and I opened the MRI in Oshawa, or the one in Sudbury where the magnet was put in the ground about six weeks ago and it will be fully operation; Mississauga, St Catharines, Burlington to come on line, Brampton, Sault Ste Marie, Timmins, Thunder Bay and soon Windsor, and five more coming for Metro Toronto.

We are doing better than any other government in Canada. We'll have more MRIs than the rest of Canada combined. We're going to have modern hospitals with the newest technologies. Get out of our way. Let us move on with restructuring and increase the technology in our health care system, which yes, patients have waited very patiently for through your government and the NDP. We're moving.

CHARITABLE GAMING

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): My question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Yesterday you told reporters that your government would not force charitable casinos on unwilling municipalities but that the municipalities would have to be accountable to the charities for that decision. Minister Leach actually took it a step further and said that if a municipality rejected charity casinos and video slot machines, the charities in that municipality may have to forgo the revenues. You won't force the communities, but it looks an awful lot like you're willing to coerce the communities.

You must clarify this. If Barrie, Burlington, Belleville or Brantford, who have all said they are opposed to this, say no to your permanent charitable casinos, will the charities in those communities be treated any differently with respect to gaming revenues from the charities outside of those municipalities?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): To clarify things a little bit more — I thought I was quite clear the other day — what we're doing here is replacing an old system that didn't work. I've said this ad infinitum, constantly, in terms of what we're trying to do here.

Charities are participating right now in terms of the roving casinos, as they were under your government, as they were introduced under the Peterson government. We all know that part of the rationale for the charities to participate is that they need to participate to really gain something out of this gaming initiative. That was the whole idea that you had and certainly espoused when you were in government. The Liberals did as well. The idea is that for charities to benefit they must participate.

Clearly we're trying to provide an opportunity right now, with the new permanent charity gaming clubs, for these initiatives to be more accountable to the charities. This is what the problem has been over the years.

I can only share with you perhaps — here is something that was in the Sarnia Observer. This is an indication that —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Answer, please.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Well, I'll finish the thought next round. What I want to say to you is that it is going to be far more accountable to the charities. That's the whole idea here. We're trying to help the charities.

Ms Lankin: Minister, you have got to answer this question. You seem to be suggesting that if there isn't a charity gaming casino in a municipality, then those charities cannot participate and therefore would not get the revenues. That's not what you said the other day. You said, for example, that Durham, which wouldn't have one of these, would participate in the Scarborough one. You've said before that there are other willing hosts in a 40-kilometre zone, that it doesn't have to be in a community. Make it clear. Otherwise, you're just being like a schoolyard bully: "It's my bat and it's my ball. If you don't play the game by my rules, I'm going to go home and take them with me so no one gets to play the game." Grow up, Minister.

There are communities that don't want video slot machines in their communities. There are others that you say are willing hosts. If you had started this process by going out and asking communities where they want to have these instead of handpicking them and forcing them and now coercing them, you wouldn't be in this mess. Start again and ask communities if they want these. Go from that premise. Respect local decision-making. Will you do that, Minister?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: I've been very clear. We have been consistent in saying we will not force communities to take any type of gambling initiative. We are talking about catchment areas here. I did not say that if you had a place in Durham, you could go in with Scarborough. I did not say that. I said we have catchment areas, that the catchment areas are to provide this opportunity, and it is an opportunity for charities to participate. It is an opportunity for charities to receive more in the way of revenue, what they didn't have before.

I will finish the thought I had before. This is from the Sarnia Observer and it says, "'This is good news for groups like the Blue Water Blades precision skating team,' said president Pat Kelly. She is optimistic Sarnia's charity casino will generate more money for her group and less commitment in volunteer time." They made about $8,000 before, but they're saying now that they are getting very little money for the effort they are putting into them. They believe that this new initiative, the permanent charity gaming clubs, is an opportunity for charities. They are an opportunity for more accountability to charities and they will benefit, and the charities know this. That is why in many communities we have willing hosts, areas such as Thunder Bay, for example, who understand —

The Speaker: New question.

NON-PROFIT HOUSING

Mr Jim Brown (Scarborough West): To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: Many of my constituents reside in social housing. They have invited me to several town hall meetings to express their concern over shifting the costs of social housing to the municipalities.

Yesterday the Advisory Council on Social Housing Reform released its report on non-profit and co-op housing. Minister, is this report a workable plan? Can the minister assure the House and my constituents that the quality of social housing will be maintained and that people in need will continue to have access to social housing?

Hon Al Leach (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I thank the member for Scarborough West for the question. I would be pleased to provide the House with further information on the advisory council's recommendation on social housing. The advisory council's report is extremely promising. They were excellent people and they produced an excellent report. It is a promising framework for the reform of social housing in Ontario.

We had asked the council to look at the current administration of social housing and they proposed a number of ideas that will aid with the transfer of housing to the municipal sector. My staff is currently reviewing these recommendations. However, it is important to remember the financial commitment this government has already made to improve social housing stock. Over the last couple of years, we've spent $500 million on repairing social housing, this year alone $100 million. Of course, the reasons for these upgrades and repairs is that the two previous governments let them go in rack and despair over the last 10 years.

Mr Jim Brown: There are some newer social housing units with relatively higher mortgage costs. How are municipalities going to pay these relatively high mortgage costs, and can you assure the tenants that they are not going to be forced to pay more?

Hon Mr Leach: I would like to respond to the member by reminding both him and the House of the efforts this government has made and already taken to ensure that funds are there for non-profit and co-op housing in the future. Our government this year reinvested $173 million into capital reserve funds for co-op housing. These are reserve funds, by the way, which the former NDP government dried up and drained as part of the cost-cutting measures while they were in government. Our government restored this money in order to ensure that co-ops and non-profit housing stock in Ontario becomes financially viable, not just for today, but for many years to come. We did this, before any transfer to municipalities, to put these co-ops and non-profits on a better financial footing.

Municipalities have been involved in co-ops and non-profit housing for many years. We feel confident that they will continue to manage social housing responsibly.

1510

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Minister of Education and Training. I have a copy of a receipt which I'm going to ask the page to provide to the Minister of Education and Training. A few moments ago in this House the minister stood up and said that his ministry had paid for the tuition fees of Gordie Kirwan. I am providing him with a copy of a receipt issued by the Ottawa Board of Education. It is marked "Receipt for tuition fees" from individuals. It's dated September 3, 1997. It says "Total sum received" for that month $1,036.80, fees for Gordie Kirwan attending Clifford Bowey for September 1997. The receipt was issued to his mother, Deborah Kirwan. Minister, may I have your explanation, please.

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): Absolutely and certainly; I'm pleased to provide it, because the Leader of the Opposition is the master of half of the story. Yes, in fact the Kirwans had sent payment to the Ottawa Board of Education, so the Ministry of Education and Training has agreed to compensate the Kirwans for this tuition. The tuition will be paid for by the Ministry of Education and Training, just as I said. I don't know whether the Leader of the Opposition only has half the story or only wants to tell half the story. But I'm tired of that sort of question in this House.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Member for Durham East, I'm not even certain where you sit any more, but I don't think it's there.

Mr McGuinty: Minister, you can't wriggle off this hook. A few moments ago you stood up in this House and said that your ministry had paid the tuition fees of Gordie Kirwan. I got on the phone with his mother, who couldn't believe that you had made that statement in this Legislature. She faxed to me immediately a copy of the receipt which she received as a result of her payment in the amount $1,036.80 for this month's tuition fees. You told me that your ministry had paid those fees. The fact of the matter is she paid for those fees. Will you stand up and just tell us the truth?

Hon Mr Snobelen: What angers me today is this. I think we've established very clearly that the Kirwans sent the cheque in; the ministry has agreed to compensate them, not just for this month's tuition but for the full year's tuition for Gordie. What disturbs me is this. There is a serious issue here and that is how to make sure that young adults over 21 who have developmental difficulties can get to the programs that they need to get to. That's the issue. That's what we've been working night and day on, to make sure, with my colleagues, that we get the right answer to that question, not just for Gordie but for all the young adults who have those circumstances in the province of Ontario.

To stand here in the House and twist this and make it a political issue over a young adult —

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): You are the one who is twisting.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Snobelen: I think that's just deplorable, because we need to address those issues for and on behalf of people with developmental disabilities across Ontario. That's what we're doing, not just for Gordie, but for all those young adults.

FISH HABITAT

Ms Shelley Martel (Sudbury East): I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources. Today your staff, on your order, will no longer protect fish habitat in the province of Ontario on behalf of the federal Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans. Specifically, your staff will no longer review projects proposed in and around water to determine the impact on fish habitat; your staff will no longer investigate or lay charges under federal law against those who destroy fish habitat. We know that as of today, the federal government has no staff on the ground in Ontario to do this. They have seven biologists who work in Burlington who deal with fish management but who do not have the power to lay charges under the act.

You're the minister responsible for protecting resources in the province, including the fishery. Why are you not protecting the Ontario fishery as of today?

Hon Chris Hodgson (Minister of Natural Resources, Northern Development and Mines): I want to thank the member of the third party for the question. It's the same question she asked in the estimates process, and we went through in some detail explaining to her that this is federal jurisdiction under the Constitution.

In 1989 the federal government entered into an interim arrangement with Ontario. We've asked that it be a permanent arrangement like they have with some other provinces. Quite clearly, after being told 11 months ago that this would be resolved in six months, and after a series of unreturned phone calls and declined meetings, the federal government obviously wants to maintain their jurisdiction over this area. I know that they care about fish habitat and the environment, and we're quite willing to let them carry on their mandated jurisdiction under the Constitution.

PETITIONS

MUNICIPAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I am pleased to present to the Legislature this afternoon a petition signed by hundreds of my constituents living in the townships of Murchison, Lyell, Sabine and Dickens in the district of Nipissing. These several hundred citizens are extremely upset at what they consider to have been the arbitrary, highhanded and unfair manner in which a vote was taken in the village of Whitney on or about August 16, 1997, having to do with plans for a municipal reorganization in that part of eastern, midnorthern Ontario.

PUBLIC CONSULTATION

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario signed by 35 residents, mainly from the Toronto area. The petitioners are wishing to ensure that the public is informed of bills with enough time to ensure that there will be public hearings so there can be amendments to the bills and they can be properly informed of what's going on in the House before bills are passed.

I support the petition and I affix my signature to it.

TVONTARIO

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): The people of Ontario want to have consultation for TVO before any privatization measure goes forward. I have a petition sent to me from residents of Schreiber, Ontario. The petition reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas TVOntario/TFO is owned by the people of Ontario; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has opposed public support for maintaining TVO as a publicly owned and funded educational broadcaster by putting TVO through a privatization review; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has not confirmed that full public participation will be part of this privatization review;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly to hold open and honest public consultation with the people of Ontario before making a decision on the future of TVO/TFO."

I thank the people from Schreiber for sending this petition in and sign my name to the petition.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas over half the people in Ontario are women;

"Only about 5% of the money spent on medical research goes to research in women's health;

"Women have special medical needs since their bodies are not the same as men's;

"Women's College is the only hospital in Ontario with a primary mandate giving priority to teaching, research and care dedicated to women;

"The World Health Organization has named Women's College Hospital as its first collaborating centre for women's health in both North and South America;

"Without a self-governing Women's College Hospital, the women of Ontario and the world will lose a health resource that is not duplicated elsewhere;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the comprehensive model of women's health pioneered by Women's College Hospital through ensuring self-governance of the one hospital in Ontario dedicated to women's health."

This is signed by more than 250 residents of the city of Metropolitan Toronto, and I am pleased to affix my signature.

1520

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr Tim Hudak (Niagara South): I have a petition from a large number of citizens from Fort Erie, Ontario, that reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas ownership of a domestic animal or pet is a responsibility, not a right;

"Whereas owners have a responsibility to treat their pet with care and utmost concern for their wellbeing; and

"Whereas cruelty to animals should be punished and sanctioned with fines, penalties and/or bans on animal ownership; and

"Whereas inspectors of the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals should not be obstructed from carrying out their duties to investigate abuse and neglect;

"We, the undersigned, support the amendments to the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act."

I affix my signature to the petition.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor-Sandwich): This is a petition on behalf of those fighting for good health care in Windsor, and we certainly appreciate the support we've had from our constituents on this issue.

"To the Ontario Legislature:

"We, the Windsor taxpayers, petition to keep our hospital rooms open and not to close entire floors due to a lack of funds from our government. With a population of 200,000 people and a new casino and other industries on the way, we as Windsor residents have a right to the same health care for our tax dollars as other large cities in Ontario. Our city is growing and we feel very strongly to keep our hospital rooms open.

"We ask the ministry to take this matter seriously and respond by reopening all the closed floors of the hospitals and designate adequate funding for the nurses so that we may be taken care of as taxpayers. Allowing hundreds of empty beds to stay closed while people are put in hallways for numerous days is a disgrace.

"As you will see by the amount of signatures, this issue will not be forgotten, nor will it disappear. We want our hospital rooms to be open and ready to care for the sick."

We have a significant number of names, Pam Gibb, Rose Lyncher, Vicky Warins, from all over Essex county.

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): I have a petition from my home town of Hamilton regarding the Plastimet fire and demand for a public inquiry.

"Whereas a fire at a PVC plastic vinyl plant located in the middle of one of Hamilton's residential areas burned for three days; and

"Whereas the city of Hamilton declared a state of emergency and called for a limited voluntary evacuation of several blocks around the site; and

"Whereas the burning of PVC results in the formation and release of toxic substances such as dioxins and furans, as well as large quantities of heavy metals and other dangerous chemicals;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to hold a full public inquiry on the Hamilton Plastimet fire; and

"Further, we, the undersigned, request that the Ministry of Environment and the government of Ontario take responsibility for the immediate cleanup of the fire site."

I would point out that they finally had to do that because the money wasn't there and we told them to take over the cleanup of that site right from the beginning. I add my name to theirs.

COURT DECISION

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): I am presenting some petitions on behalf of the member for Carleton from a Susen Shaver in Greely, Ontario. They read as follows:

"To the Parliament of Ontario:

"Whereas at this time in the province of Ontario it is not illegal for a woman to appear topless in public, and due to the fact that this lack of restriction offends a large percentage of Ontarians;

"We, the undersigned, petition the government of Ontario to introduce legislation that would make it illegal for a woman to appear topless in any public place, except in clearly marked designated beach areas."

There are over 600 signatures with that and 600 additional signatures without the last line, "except in clearly marked designated beach areas."

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas Bill 156 has been introduced as a private member's bill which is entitled the Regional Municipality of Sudbury Statute Law Amendment Act, 1997; and

"Whereas this bill provides for the direct election of the chair of the regional municipality of Sudbury by a vote of the electors of the area municipalities; and

"Whereas the election of the regional chair will be held concurrently with the regular election in the area municipalities; and

"Whereas we, the electorate of the regional municipality of Sudbury, want to be part of the electoral process in electing a regional chair; and

"Whereas we, the electorate, believe that as residents of the area municipalities composing the regional municipality of Sudbury we have a right to decide who is elected to the office of regional chair; and

"Whereas we, the electorate, support Rick Bartolucci's private member's bill which lets the people decide;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to support the private member's bill enacting the Regional Municipality of Sudbury Statute Law Amendment Act, which will provide the taxpayers of the regional municipality of Sudbury with a voice in electing a regional chair, and urge the assembly to deal with this private member's bill immediately."

I've signed my name to this petition.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Health Services Restructuring Commission has issued directions calling for the closure of the Wellesley Central Hospital; and

"Whereas the Wellesley Central Hospital has played an integral role in the health care needs of the people of Toronto's downtown core; and

"Whereas the Wellesley Central Hospital has become well known for its focus on urban health, minimally invasive surgery and expertise with diseases of the immune system; and

"Whereas the Wellesley Central Hospital's busy emergency department sees 33,000 visits per year; and

"Whereas the Wellesley Central Hospital is Ontario's premier HIV/AIDS hospital and is located in an area populated with a high number of people affected by this illness;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to stand by its responsibilities for hospitals in the province and overturn the directions of the Health Services Restructuring Commission, thereby allowing the Wellesley Central Hospital to continue to serve its communities with excellence."

I am proud to affix my signature to this petition, with which I agree.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr Tim Hudak (Niagara South): I have a petition from a large number of citizens of the Fort Erie area, like Ken Jones of Fort Erie, and Elaine Berger of Stevensville. The petition reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas ownership of a domestic animal or pet is a responsibility, not a right; and

"Whereas owners have a responsibility to treat their domestic animals with care and utmost concern for their wellbeing; and

"Whereas cruelty to animals should be punished and sanctioned with fines, penalties and/or bans on animal ownership; and

"Whereas inspectors of the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals should not be obstructed from carrying out their duties to investigate abuse or neglect;

"We, the undersigned, support the amendments to the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act."

In agreement, I affix my signature.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS

Mr Mario Sergio (Yorkview): I have a further petition addressed to the Legislature of Ontario with respect to protection for workers.

"Whereas the Harris government has enacted a variety of policies which will negatively affect the rights of workers in Ontario; and

"Whereas the proposed elimination of protections contained within the Employment Standards Act will further erode the basic protection afforded to working people in this province;

"We, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislature of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario reverse the unfair practices that have resulted in reduced protection and support for workers in this province and, in particular, that the proposed changes to the Employment Standards Act be withdrawn."

It is signed by a number of petitioners in my area. I concur and I will add my name to it.

ROCK MUSIC GROUP

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the rock group Marilyn Manson was permitted to play a concert at the Ottawa Congress Centre on Friday, August 1, 1997; and

"Whereas Marilyn Manson's wilful promotion of hatred, violence, immorality and obscenity has been linked to teen suicide and adolescent crimes across North America; and

"Whereas by allowing Marilyn Manson to perform at the Ottawa Congress Centre, a crown agency with a public mandate, helps legitimize the band and its unethical messages; and

"Whereas the Ontario Court (General Division) has ruled that Marilyn Manson's music does not meet the definitions of 'obscenity' or 'hate literature' in the Criminal Code;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to call on the Liberal government of Canada to amend the Criminal Code in order to ensure that Marilyn Manson and other people directing messages of hate and derision towards vulnerable children and youth are not permitted to perform in Canada and to ensure that the messages which offend the moral and ethical sensibilities of Ontarians are not given a voice at venues financed by the taxpayers of Ontario, including the Ottawa Congress Centre."

This is submitted by Chuck and Betty Speakman of Nepean, Ontario, and I've affixed my own signature thereto.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I am pleased to present a petition signed by 105 constituents from North Renfrew which reads:

"Whereas Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, imposes a new system of dispute settlement upon public sector labour relations which violates basic democratic principles by revoking the right to strike and denying the right to fair and impartial arbitration; and

"Whereas neither the Labour Relations Transition Commission nor the Dispute Resolution Commission can be considered independent or impartial, nor do they have the confidence of the workplace parties, and so fail to meet the internationally recognized standard for civilized labour relations practice as set out by the United Nations International Labour Organization, to which Canada subscribes;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned public sector workers and concerned citizens of Renfrew county, urge the government of Ontario to withdraw Bill 136 and strengthen the resources of the Ontario Labour Relations Board so that the existing collective bargaining practices and procedures can continue without political interference."

STANDING ORDERS REFORM

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): I'm very pleased to see that the government House leader is present. He can listen to this petition and no doubt will be able to do something about it so he can actually satisfy the people who have signed this petition. It deals with the so-called standing orders reform.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Order. There's no provision for proselytizing in the presentation of petitions.

Mr Gerretsen: I apologize for that, Mr Speaker. I was just trying to explain to you the nature of the petition. I will simply read it for you and for the House leader.

"Whereas the people of Ontario want rigorous discussion on legislation dealing with public policy issues like health care, education and care for seniors; and

"Whereas many people in Ontario believe that the Mike Harris government is moving too quickly and recklessly, creating havoc with the provision of quality health care and quality education; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has passed new legislative rules which have eroded the ability of both the public and the media to closely scrutinize the actions of the Ontario government; and

"Whereas Mike Harris and Ernie Eves, when they were in opposition, defended the rights of the opposition and used the rules to their full advantage when they believed it was necessary to slow down the passage of controversial legislation; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has now reduced the amount of time that MPPs will have to debate the important issues of the day; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government, through its rule changes, has diminished the role of elected members of the Legislative Assembly, who are accountable to the people who elect them, and instead has chosen to concentrate power in the Premier's office in the hands of people who are not elected officials;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, call upon Mike Harris to withdraw his draconian rule changes and restore rules which promote rigorous debate on contentious issues and hold the government accountable to the people of Ontario."

I have signed the petition as I am in full agreement with it, and I hope the House leader will be able to do something about it.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PUBLIC SECTOR TRANSITION STABILITY ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 VISANT À ASSURER LA STABILITÉ AU COURS DE LA TRANSITION DANS LE SECTEUR PUBLIC

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 136, An Act to provide for the expeditious resolution of disputes during collective bargaining in certain sectors and to facilitate collective bargaining following restructuring in the public sector and to make certain amendments to the Employment Standards Act and the Pay Equity Act / Projet de loi 136, Loi prévoyant le règlement rapide des différends lors des négociations collectives dans certains secteurs, facilitant les négociations collectives à la suite de la restructuration dans le secteur public et apportant certaines modifications à la Loi sur les normes d'emploi et à la Loi sur l'équité salariale.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Pursuant to the order of the House dated September 17, I will now put the question.

Mrs Witmer has moved second reading of Bill 136. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members; there will be a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1533 to 1538.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour, please rise one at a time.

Ayes

Arnott, Ted	Johns, Helen	Sampson, Rob
Baird, John R.	Johnson, David	Saunderson, William
Brown, Jim	Johnson, Ron	Shea, Derwyn
Carroll, Jack	Kells, Morley	Sheehan, Frank
Ecker, Janet	Klees, Frank	Smith, Bruce
Elliott, Brenda	Leach, Al	Snobelen, John
Fisher, Barbara	Marland, Margaret	Sterling, Norman W.
Flaherty, Jim	Martiniuk, Gerry	Stewart, R. Gary
Ford, Douglas B.	Maves, Bart	Tascona, Joseph N.
Froese, Tom	Munro, Julia	Tilson, David
Galt, Doug	Murdoch, Bill	Tsubouchi, David H.
Gilchrist, Steve	Mushinski, Marilyn	Turnbull, David
Grimmett, Bill	O'Toole, John	Vankoughnet, Bill
Harnick, Charles	Ouellette, Jerry J.	Wettlaufer, Wayne
Hastings, John	Palladini, Al	Wilson, Jim
Hodgson, Chris	Parker, John L.	Witmer, Elizabeth
Hudak, Tim	Ross, Lillian	Young, Terence H.
Jackson, Cameron	Runciman, Robert W.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, please rise one at a time.

Nays

Bartolucci, Rick	Kennedy, Gerard	McGuinty, Dalton
Boyd, Marion	Kormos, Peter	Patten, Richard

Bradley, James J.
Caplan, David
Christopherson, David
Churley, Marilyn
Conway, Sean G.
Gerretsen, John
Gravelle, Michael Kwinter, Monte
Lankin, Frances
Laughren, Floyd
Lessard, Wayne
Marchese, Rosario
Martel, Shelley
Pupatello, Sandra
Ruprecht, Tony
Sergio, Mario
Silipo, Tony
Wildman, Bud
Wood, Len

Clerk of the House (Mr Claude L. DesRosiers): The ayes are 53; the nays are 25.

The Acting Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Pursuant to the order of the House dated September 17, 1997, the bill is referred to the standing committee on resources development.

SERVICES IMPROVEMENT ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR L'AMÉLIORATION DES SERVICES

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 152, An Act to improve Services, increase Efficiency and benefit Taxpayers by eliminating Duplication and reallocating Responsibilities between Provincial and Municipal Governments in various areas and to implement other aspects of the Government's "Who Does What" Agenda / Projet de loi 152, Loi visant à améliorer les services, à accroître l'efficience et à procurer des avantages aux contribuables en éliminant le double emploi et en redistribuant les responsabilités entre le gouvernement provincial et les municipalités dans divers secteurs et visant à mettre en oeuvre d'autres aspects du programme «Qui fait quoi» du gouvernement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Pursuant to the order of the House dated September 16, 1997, I will now put the question.

Mrs Ecker has moved second reading of Bill 152. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

The division bells rang from 1543 to 1547.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour, please stand one at a time and be recognized.

Ayes

Arnott, Ted
Baird, John R.
Brown, Jim
Carroll, Jack
Ecker, Janet
Elliott, Brenda Fisher, Barbara
Flaherty, Jim
Ford, Douglas B.
Froese, Tom
Galt, Doug
Gilchrist, Steve Grimmett, Bill
Hamick, Charles
Hastings, John
Hodgson, Chris
Hudak, Tim
Jackson, Cameron
Johns, Helen Johnson, David
Johnson, Ron Kells, Morley
Klees, Frank
Leach, Al
Martiniuk, Gerry
Maves, Bart
Munro, Julia
Murdoch, Bill
Mushinski, Marilyn O'Toole, John
Ouellette, Jerry J.
Palladini, Al
Parker, John L.
Ross, Lillian Runciman, Robert W.
Sampson, Rob
Saunderson, William Shea, Derwyn
Sheehan, Frank
Smith, Bruce
Snobelen, John
Sterling, Norman W.
Stewart, R. Gary
Tascona, Joseph N.
Tilson, David
Tsubouchi, David H.
Turnbull, David
Vankoughnet, Bill
Wettlaufer, Wayne
Wilson, Jim
Witmer, Elizabeth
Young, Terence H.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, please stand one at a time and be recognized.

Nays

Bartolucci, Rick
Boyd, Marion
Bradley, James J.
Caplan, David
Christopherson, David
Churley, Marilyn
Colle, Mike
Conway, Sean G.
Curling, Alvin
Gerretsen, John
Kennedy, Gerard
Kormos, Peter
Kwinter, Monte
Lankin, Frances
Laughren, Floyd
Lessard, Wayne
Marchese, Rosario
Martel, Shelley
Pouliot, Gilles
Pupatello, Sandra
Ruprecht, Tony
Sergio, Mario
Silipo, Tony
Wildman, Bud
Wood, Len

Clerk of the House (Mr Claude L. DesRosiers): The ayes are 52; the nays are 25.

The Acting Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Pursuant to the order of the House dated September 16, 1997, the bill is referred to the standing committee on general government.

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It's our party's understanding that Bill 156, An Act to amend certain statutes with respect to The Regional Municipality of Sudbury, which would allow for direct election of the regional chair, may be called today. Our party is ready to have the bill called for second and third reading today. To the Chair of Management Board, is it the intention of the government to call Bill 156 for second and third reading today?

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry, this isn't question period. That is not a point of order. Orders of the day.

Mr Floyd Laughren (Nickel Belt): Point of order, Mr Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I'll hold that for a moment. I recognize the minister.

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, the 50th order.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): The 50th order: Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for changes to the membership of the standing committees.

The Acting Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Nickel Belt on a point of order.

Mr Laughren: Thank you, Mr Speaker. The reason I rose when I did, before the House leader called the next order of business, was that it was my understanding that we were to proceed with the Regional Municipality of Sudbury Statute Law Amendment Act. We had given our assurances, along with the official opposition, that we would ensure a speedy debate and passage of that bill, and that's what we'd like to do.

The Acting Speaker: I think I covered that particular order, but let me rephrase it. It's the understanding of this Chair that those sorts of things are determined by your House leaders, have been in the past and will be in the future.

Hon David Johnson: If the request is for unanimous consent that would involve five minutes for the Liberals and five minutes for the NDP —

Interjection: Ten.

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): Each Sudbury member.

Hon David Johnson: I'll buy 10 — five minutes for each member, 10 minutes, then the government would be prepared to give that unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker: If you'll give me a minute, I'd like to have that in writing from the table.

I want to be sure of what you are requesting unanimous consent on and what the House is giving unanimous consent to: Unanimous consent for 10 minutes' debate by the official opposition and the third party on Bill 156, and to call that order now.

Would you like that repeated?

Hon David Johnson: Sorry, Mr Speaker. If I can just clarify, that's for second and third reading, the whole thing. That would be agreed to.

The Acting Speaker: Are you ready now? Is there unanimous consent? It is agreed.

Hon David Johnson: Then, Mr Speaker, I believe the proper wording is that I seek unanimous consent to call the 82nd order, second reading of a private member's bill, Bill 156, An Act to amend certain statutes with respect to The Regional Municipality of Sudbury, which stands in the name of Mr Bartolucci.

The Acting Speaker: There's unanimous consent to call that order: Agreed? Agreed.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF SUDBURY STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LA MUNICIPALITÉ RÉGIONALE DE SUDBURY

Mr Bartolucci moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 156, An Act to amend certain statutes with respect to The Regional Municipality of Sudbury / Projet de loi 156, Loi modifiant certaines lois en ce qui concerne la municipalité régionale de Sudbury.

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): Certainly it's good news for the people of the regional municipality of Sudbury to have this bill called before the Legislature today for second and third reading. Let's outline a few of the reasons why this is not only timely but extremely important for the people of the regional municipality of Sudbury.

We all know, because we made a statement in the House earlier, that the chair, Tom Davies, will no longer seek the position, the honour, of chair of the regional municipality of Sudbury due to ill health. We bid him good luck in the future, and we're all with him.

While Tom was the chair, this region, the region of Sudbury, felt very secure in the direction it was going. The chair led us through some very difficult times. Being the experienced politician he is, he was able to work with all levels of government and all different governments.

There is now a time of change at the regional municipality of Sudbury. It's now important for the people to have their voice so that they can decide who will be elected as the chair of the regional municipality of Sudbury.

This is a decision that wasn't arrived at easily. There were extensive public meetings, extensive debate by a committee of regional council. At the time, it was decided by that council to not have direct elections of the regional chair because of the sensitivity which presents itself to the region and also to every other municipality in Ontario, and that of course is the bill we just finished passing, Bill 152, the downloading exercise of this government.

It was decided that Tom, the present chair, was needed to lead us and to direct us. But the rules of the game have changed, not because Tom wanted them to change, not because this region wanted them to change; they changed because Tom has an illness that will not allow him to continue on as the chair after this mandate is over.

1600

The region was quick to act. They held a special meeting and they decided that now is the time to allow for direct elections. So a special motion was presented to regional council and it was overwhelmingly passed. The vast majority of regional councillors decided that the people they represented wanted a direct election of the chair of the regional municipality in Sudbury.

At that time, they decided to send down a delegation to meet with the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. That meeting took place with representation from all three local MPPs as well as a delegation of three. At the urging of Councillor John Fera, my private member's bill was introduced to help expedite this event happening, to help expedite the fact that the people deciding is the purest form of democracy and should be incorporated into the next municipal election.

It was a very good meeting. There was an excellent exchange of ideas from all the people who were a part of that meeting. It was decided at that time that clearly it was the direction we should be taking, that an amendment should be made to ensure the direct election took place.

But there were some concerns on the part of the government, and I would say legitimate concerns. They wanted not only the perception of fairness but the reality of fairness. It was a concern that was debated by all the people at the meeting. The consensus was that if we acted on this bill quickly, the perception and the reality of fairness would be there.

Second, there was a concern that this might have an undue advantage to the person who won this election for the 2000 election, and that was debated extensively around the table. It was decided that if this happened now there would in fact be the opportunity for fairness throughout the system, because it would allow for anyone interested in running for regional chair to put his or her team together; it would allow for a fair nomination period; it would allow for a fair campaign period; it would allow for a fair exchange of ideas, so that in fact and without question everything would be aboveboard and considered to be in order. This would lead to the changes that may take place in the year 2000 but would not be a part of the changes that may take place in the year 2000.

It was imperative and I think it was a consensus — the member for Nickel Belt may want to address it later — that we should move very quickly, that this should be a standalone item, that it shouldn't be one that we use as a bargaining chip, that the people of Sudbury, the residents of the regional municipality of Sudbury deserve the respect from all three parties to deal with this as a standalone issue and not to be used as a tool for further negotiations. I believe that has taken place today.

The government has called this for second and third readings. If it passes, and I hope it does, then royal assent can be given and we can get on with the process of campaigning for the first time for the chair of the regional municipality of Sudbury.

It also does something else. It allows for the opportunity for an individual or individuals who may have partisan politics as their foundation for running to become a part of the process at the municipal level, at the regional level. I don't see anything wrong with that. I believe that's healthy. I believe that in a direct election the people get who they want because the majority speaks.

I'm also very happy and proud of this House today for calling this for second and third readings, because it clearly sends the message to the people across Ontario that, first, a private member's bill that has substance and importance will be dealt with and, second, that an opposition private member's bill, if it has merit, will be accepted by the government and by another party. If passed, it will be record time indeed for first, second and third readings with royal assent. I think that sends a very good message, to not only the people of the regional municipality of Sudbury but also the people of Ontario, that indeed a bill can be introduced on September 8 and passed on September 18 because everyone in this House believes democracy at its fullest is indeed the direction that we as provincial politicians want Ontarians to believe is our goal.

I hope that when it comes time for the vote this is carried unanimously, because democracy at its purest is always the example that we as politicians, whether we be at the federal, provincial or municipal level, want to set. I commend the Chair of Management Board for bringing this forward, I commend him for listening and I only hope that this bill is supported by everyone in the chamber today. It clearly sends the message that when in Ontario we allow for direct election we are allowing the people to decide what and who should represent them.

Mr Floyd Laughren (Nickel Belt): I rise in support of this bill to provide for the direct election of the regional chair in the municipality of Sudbury.

There has been a lot of behind-the-scenes work done to make sure that we arrived at this point here today, and I would like to extend a note of gratitude to the parliamentary assistant to the minister, Mr Ernie Hardeman, the MPP for Oxford. Mr Hardeman agreed to a meeting in Toronto last week at which there were in attendance myself; somebody from the office of the member for Sudbury East; Mr Bartolucci; Mr Fera from the town of Nickel Centre; Mr Jim Gordon, the mayor of Sudbury; and most important, Mr Lionel Lalonde, the mayor of the town of Rayside-Balfour in my own constituency.

At that meeting, the case was put most eloquently by the people from the Sudbury area as to why they wanted direct election of their chair. They put it most eloquently and received what I thought was a very fair hearing from Mr Hardeman. Mr Hardeman then took the matter to the minister, who obviously agreed to proceed in this manner.

It was important that we proceed with despatch because it would be unfair to leave it too late because that really would give an advantage to one of the people on the regional council in case someone else wanted to challenge for that position as well. It's important that the government recognized that and agreed to proceed with it today. I'm sure there were temptations to hold this back and use it as a bargaining chip to get something else through. But that was not the case and we are now proceeding with it.

This is a popular move, not just among the regional council itself, but among the people of the Sudbury community. This will be well received in the regional municipality of Sudbury. It's probably overdue that there be a direct election for the regional chair. It's not an easy job riding herd on a number of municipal councils. We were well served in the regional municipality of Sudbury by the person who chaired the region for the last I guess 10 years, Mr Tom Davies, and many of the members here will know Tom Davies.

1610

Mr Bartolucci: Fifteen years.

Mr Laughren: It's 15 years, I'm reminded, that he chaired. He did a very good job and he had a unique ability to put others out front while he himself did the job of chairing without seeking the limelight. It's very unfortunate that Mr Davies is ill and will not be able to carry on his duties or to stand again for regional chair. The people in Sudbury owe him a very large vote of thanks for the work he has done these many years.

I will sit down and allow my colleague from Sudbury East to make a few remarks, because she too represents part of the regional municipality of Sudbury. Once again I express my appreciation to all those who have made this possible today.

Ms Shelley Martel (Sudbury East): I'm pleased to participate in the debate. I will speak only very briefly because there are other issues we need to deal with. I appreciate that the government House leader has asked for and pushed for unanimous consent that we might deal with second and third reading of this bill today.

As has been mentioned already, the purpose of the bill is to allow for the direct election of the regional chair so that that individual be elected at large by the citizens within the regional municipality. In many ways that is a very historic change in our community. It is true that since the inception of regional government in our community, which would have been in and around 1973, the regional chair has always been selected by his or her peers and that practice has continued right from the inception of regional government to this point.

I think it's fair to say that process was strengthened over the last 15 years based very much on the individual who was regional chair, Tom Davies. It was a measure of both his personality and his strength and his very hard work on behalf of the people of the region that that process remained intact, that regional councillors agreed with that process and I think that the population at large in the regional municipality of Sudbury agreed with continuing that particular way of doing business, which was to select from among one's peers.

But it is a time of change. It is clear that the regional chair, who has been very popular, who has held this process together, is now not in a position to continue. He is ill and we all very much regret that, but both regional council and I think the population in general in the area we come from believes that the time for change is now. That time for change means very specifically that we move to a process of direct election of the regional chair from among the population at large.

I support that process. I very strongly believe that it is a fundamental principle of democracy. I think that process, direct election by the public, will strengthen accountability of the regional chair to the citizens in the region that he or she will serve. I'm very supportive of the mechanism that will now be in place once this legislation passes. I just think it will be a much better process from here on in. That's not to undermine the work that has been done or the decisions that have been made in the past to maintain the structure we have operated under since 1973, but I believe as a fundamental tenet of the democratic process in this province that we will be as well served or better served by a direct election by the population at large.

I would like to thank the three representatives from the regional municipality of Sudbury who came to Toronto last week to meet with the parliamentary assistant. That meeting was attended by the member for Nickel Belt and the member for Sudbury. I myself on that particular day was in court with my colleague the member for Welland-Thorold, dealing with another matter that this House has an interest in, so I was unable to attend. My constituents have a great interest in the family support plan and the reason for us being in court that day. But I had a representative there. I would like to have been involved but could not. I know that a great deal of discussion went on. A number of issues were raised, it seems they have been successfully dealt with and we are pleased to be here today to deal with this private member's bill to move this issue forward.

Once again I'd like to thank all those who were involved. I would like to commend Chair Tom Davies for the valuable work he contributed while he was in office. I am certain that his successor, who will have a difficult row to hoe, will do the very best job he or she possibly can. I think the citizens at large very much agree with the move we are making today, to move to direct election, and they will be supportive of that process when they go out to vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Mr Bartolucci has moved second reading of Bill 156. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Mr Bartolucci moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 156, An Act to amend certain statutes with respect to The Regional Municipality of Sudbury / Projet de loi 156, Loi modifiant certaines lois en ce qui concerne la municipalité régionale de Sudbury.

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Harmonious House.

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, we hope the harmoniousness continues with the 50th order.

COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

COMPOSITION DES COMITÉS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for changes to the membership of the standing committees.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): I rise to complete the leadoff of remarks on behalf of our caucus. When I was last speaking in this debate, I was referring to the number of bills, the very large agenda of the government, which are being referred to various standing committees that are established by this motion. I had talked specifically about the download bill on the Who Does What process the government is engaged in and what it will mean for various municipalities in this province.

I had referred to a periodical that is well respected in this province, the Kitchener-Waterloo Record. I'd like now to refer to another equally respected periodical, the Burlington News.

In the Burlington News dated Saturday, August 23 of this year, there is a report on a discussion of the effects on taxes of the download by the provincial government to the municipalities, a number of bills that have been introduced and are being referred to various committees.

In the report, Burlington councillor Denis Lee, who is described as a card-carrying member of the provincial Tory party, joined his colleagues on the council in condemning this government, the Harris government, and local Conservative MPPs for acquiescing to the agenda put forward by this government.

I'd just like to refer to a statement made by Mr Lee, who said:

"We have to embarrass and highlight the quiet voices of our provincial members in this whole affair. They are not listening to their constituents, who are also our constituents.

"We have to bring them to the fire with their bare feet and hold their bare feet there until they listen."

I guess a number of the local MPPs in the region of Burlington are going to get their feet burned, except apparently for Oakville South MPP Gary Carr, whom one of the other councillors, Kevin Flynn, described as a breath of fresh air, because Mr Carr, according to the report in the Burlington News, has openly disagreed with his government on the downloading. In that respect, he is considered by the councillors from Burlington to have properly represented their concerns and the concerns of the people of Burlington, unlike the other MPPs representing the area.

I just hope that when we deal with these bills in committee, particularly Bill 152, the so-called Services Improvement Act, the other MPPs from the Burlington area, as well as the Conservative MPPs representing other constituencies who are represented on the committee that will be dealing with Bill 152, will speak for their constituents rather than just parroting the mantra which has been given to them by the treasury bench.

1620

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: While I share the member's wish, since there aren't enough members in the House to make a quorum, I think it's a faint hope. Would you check for a quorum?

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Churley): Is there a quorum?

Clerk at the Table (Ms Lisa Freedman): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Algoma.

Mr Wildman: I am pleased that the members have been able to come in to listen to my speech.

I wanted to move from my analysis of the effects of the download, the tremendous increase in property taxes that ratepayers are going to experience across Ontario because of this government's transfer of services and costs to the municipal level of government, and the fact that most of the Conservative members of the Legislature have not had the fortitude to actually stand for their constituents, and instead have simply been parroting the mantra given to them by the treasury bench. I do want to once again congratulate Mr Carr, the member for Oakville South, because, as he is described in the Burlington News, he is indeed a breath of fresh air for speaking up for his constituents, unlike most of his colleagues in his caucus.

I would hope that on the committees, and I mean this quite seriously, the members of all parties, the members of the party supporting the government and the opposition parties, will speak for their constituents rather than speaking to their constituents on behalf of the Premier, and not even speaking to their constituents. I guess a better way of describing it would be speaking at their constituents.

I want to deal specifically with what has been the central issue brought to the Legislature today, brought to the Legislature by the Premier in his statement to the House and then followed up on by the Minister of Labour. That was Bill 136, which is designed to take away the rights of workers to free collective bargaining by constraining arbitrations, by taking away the independence of arbitrators and by taking away the right to strike, to withdraw services.

The Premier and his colleague the Minister of Labour tried to argue that they have listened to the Ontario Federation of Labour representatives, that they are prepared to make changes, that they are prepared to make amendments, but then they are unwilling to table those amendments and to let us know what the amendments are going to be. Instead, at the very time that they were supposedly listening to the representatives of the labour movement, the government moves yesterday on a time allocation motion on Bill 136 which will only allow for one week of hearings across the province, and only during a time when the House is sitting, next week.

I want to deal specifically with the issue that was raised by my leader in the House today. I have an excerpt from Hansard of June 4, 1997. That was a debate in this House, and questions were raised at that time about the bill, the bill that would take away the rights of workers. The Minister of Labour was asked specifically if she would commit the government to full hearings on this legislation across the province, and I have here her reply. She said: "Yes, I commit to you that there will be full public hearings. We will travel the province." That's a direct quote from the Minister of Labour in June.

Now we have a time allocation motion before the House which does not allow for travelling across the province. My leader stated the obvious, and for that he was asked to leave the chamber. The minister made a commitment in June and the government in September does something completely opposite.

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener): What about teleconferencing?

Mr Wildman: The minister did not say in her remarks on June 4, 1997, anything about teleconferencing. She said, "We will travel the province." Travel, not travel electronically. "We will travel the province, we will be in Toronto and we will listen." She didn't say they would be in Toronto only; she said they would travel the province. Everyone understood that to mean exactly what she meant it to mean: that there would be hearings in Toronto and there would be hearings across the province.

Mr Frank Klees (York-Mackenzie): That's not what she said.

Mr Wildman: I suppose the member for York-Mackenzie's response to my remarks is an example of how insincere the government is when it makes these kinds of commitments. He thinks it is quite funny. He thinks it is hilarious that the Minister of Labour would make a promise to the leaders of the labour movement, to the workers in this province and to the public of this province in June, and then the government will renege on that promise in September. He thinks it's funny. He seems to think it's quite hilarious that a minister of the crown gives her word in June and then the government of which she is a member goes back on that only a few months later.

How are we to understand this? How are we to believe that the committee will be serious in listening to people if the majority of the people who want to make presentations will not be able to participate? How are we to understand the government's position when at a time they are negotiating with the leaders of the labour movement, behind the scenes in the House leader's office and the Premier's office they are plotting to move forward without giving the members of the labour movement any opportunity to have real input?

1630

Most of us will be tempted to understand that the so-called negotiations, the dialogue with the labour movement, were simply a façade, that the government intended to move forward on this legislation denying the rights of workers and to do it as quickly as possible and they just put up a façade of negotiations with the leaders of the labour movement. Public sector workers are going to get hammered by this government. The government tried to cloak that hammer with some cloth, but when the sledge hits the head, it still feels the same way. The fact is, this government always intended to move forward as quickly as possible to remove the rights of public sector workers to free collective bargaining. They're doing it with this time allocation motion.

When the government says they are prepared to listen but won't give us the amendments, won't tell us what amendments they're prepared to make, we suspect there will be nothing substantial and that the workers will in fact be hammered by this government.

All I can say is that it's here in black and white. On June 4, 1997 the Minister of Labour said: "Yes, I will commit to you that there will be full public hearings. We will travel the province." The government now has moved a motion and forced a vote today because of a time allocation motion that refers Bill 136 to the resources development committee next week. They will hold hearings all next week. Everyone knows that the rules of the House preclude a committee travelling while the House is in session, so they will not travel the province despite what the Minister of Labour said.

Mr Wettlaufer: Teleconferencing, Bud.

Mr Wildman: That's not travelling the province. That may be called virtual travel, but it isn't travel.

Mr Wettlaufer: You can reach more people.

Mr Wildman: You won't.

In the Premier's statement today, he said that next week the Minister of Education and Training will be bringing forward his bill to change collective bargaining in the education sector. We've already had education legislation in this House that significantly changed the way education is governed in this province, Bill 104. That was referred to committee only after a lot of argument by the opposition. They did travel the province. They only went to a few communities, four or five, but they did travel. But the committee was unsuccessful in persuading the government to listen, to respond to the concerns raised by the people who appeared before that committee.

I was quite encouraged by the work of that committee. On two occasions that committee voted unanimously — all MPPs from all parties on the committee voted unanimously — to request that the Minister of Education and Training and the Education Improvement Commission consider changes in the boundaries of the proposed new school boards. Specifically, what produced that motion by the committee was a presentation made by representatives of the Hornepayne Board of Education, in my own riding. That board requested that their status be changed to that of a school authority. The committee members were persuaded. They moved motions to request the government and the Education Improvement Commission to respond. When the minister then responded, he didn't make the changes that the committee had requested.

He did make some changes in the northwest; I'll give him that. But he didn't respond to the concerns of Hornepayne. As a matter of fact, he put Hornepayne into another school board, which made that the largest proposed school board in the province as a result. He didn't respond to the concerns of the people in eastern Ontario, who will now have a board that consists of Lanark; Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry; Prescott and Russell.

Even when the committee works well together, when they listen to the people — and it doesn't happen very often, unfortunately, under this government — and they make recommendations, their recommendations aren't listened to by the government.

Do we have any confidence that this new education bill will be introduced and will be dealt with in a way that makes it possible that those concerned — parents, students, trustees, teachers, members of the public — will be able to have input and will be able to influence the government to ensure that the changes that are brought in will not force a confrontation and a disruption of education for kids in Ontario? I don't think so.

We know what's in the draft legislation. The government will have the power to make regulations concerning the length of the school day, the length of the school year, class size and other matters which up to now have been subject to collective bargaining between teachers and school boards. The legislation will allow the minister to make regulations on the use of people in classrooms who do not have teacher certification in this province. There is only one reason why the minister would want to do this. He wants to take money out, and by bringing in these kinds of less qualified people to teach in our classrooms, thus affecting the kind of education our kids will receive, he will be able to pay them less and get the money out.

The government has said they want to take an extra $1 billion out of education, over and above the millions of dollars they've already taken, that they are determined to do that and that is non-negotiable. The government, again, has put up a façade of negotiating with the teachers. Representatives of the minister's office went to meet with the teachers' representatives. They had discussions, but they started off from the point of saying the government is going to take the money out and that is non-negotiable. Even when the teachers' representatives put forward another proposal, an alternative, which would have made it possible for the government to receive savings —

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I don't believe there is a quorum in the House.

The Acting Speaker: Clerk, can you check to see if there is a quorum?

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Algoma.

Mr Wildman: The government has said to the representatives of the teachers that it is non-negotiable. The government is going to take the money out, they're going to take another billion dollars out of education. This is forcing teachers, who do not want to disrupt the education of their students, to the brink. The government wants a confrontation, they are pushing for a confrontation and, unfortunately for the students of this province, I'm afraid they're going to get it.

Mr Wettlaufer: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I've been listening to the member for Algoma —

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry, I can't hear you. Can you speak up?

Mr Wettlaufer: I've been listening to the member for Algoma for nearly 17 minutes and he has yet to talk about the membership of the committees in this debate.

The Acting Speaker: Member, go ahead. Frankly, I have been listening and I believe the member has mentioned at times — I believe he is speaking to the bill. If you are not, please do.

1640

Mr Wildman: I'm talking about the formation of committees that will be studying these pieces of legislation. I'm hoping that the members of the committee will take seriously the representations of students, parents, teachers and others who have an interest in education on this bill that is being introduced, according to the Premier, next week, because that bill is part of the whole Who Does What downloading. The government has tried to justify the other bills it is sending to committee on the Who Does What process by saying that in transferring these other services and costs to the municipalities, they are compensating the municipalities by taking over 50% of the cost of education, without telling us what the formula is going to be for education in the province.

The government, in referring most of these bills to the committees we are forming in this motion, is doing it by time allocation and is constraining the work of the committees so that the committees will not be able to hear all of the people who want to make representations. They are moving forward like a steamroller because they want a confrontation. They are prepared to use the people of this province who receive public services and the kids who attend the schools in this province as pawns in a power play against the teachers and the other public sector employees in Ontario. It is completely unacceptable for a responsible government to act in this way, and it is unacceptable for members of the committees that we are forming under this motion to support the government in this process.

It is incumbent on members of the committee to speak for their constituents as the Burlington News says Mr Carr, the member for Oakville South, does. It is incumbent on all members of the committee to listen, to ensure that there is enough time on committee for all of the deputants who want to make representations on the various downloading bills, including the education bill, to have their say and to listen to what they have to say, to respond to what they have to say and to make representation to the government requesting the government to back off, to rethink and to look at the implications of what they're doing. Because we are threatening public services in this province, we are threatening the education of our kids.

The members who are put on the committees under this motion have the responsibility to speak for the people of Ontario — not to speak at the people of Ontario, representing only what the Premier and the Treasurer want to have said. It is their responsibility to persuade the leaders of this government to listen, to preserve public sector jobs, to preserve public sector services in this province and to preserve, above all else, education for our children in a way that is going to serve their needs for the future of this province.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Wettlaufer: Much of what we are discussing here today relates to changes that our government has attempted to make regarding streamlining. I notice that the member for St Catharines has participated in the debate and much of his opposition to the changes in the standing orders relates to the fact that he is up many, many times discussing or prefacing his remarks with a reference to the speed with which our government is acting or, as he says, the reckless abandon, or that we're moving too quickly, or that we are creating havoc, or that we are acting with radical and reckless revolution with severe consequences.

Our government had a program and we were elected with that program. We have committed to balancing the budget within the term of our office. We also agreed that we would spend at least $17.4 billion on health care. What we never hear from the member for St Catharines or the members of the opposition Liberal Party is how that government would have balanced the budget in four years, because that was their commitment during the campaign. I wonder how fast that party would have had to move in order to attain their goals.

Mr Wildman: Speaker, on a point of order: I have listened very carefully for the beginning of these remarks, in relation to the point of order that the member himself raised about my speech. He hasn't yet mentioned anything about committees or the membership of committees.

The Acting Speaker: Let's give the member some time to come back to the committees.

Mr Wettlaufer: I'm building up to that. I have to give this background.

We also never hear from the Liberal Party or from the member for St Catharines how they were going to hold health care spending to $17 billion. We of course have increased health care spending to $17.8 billion in program spending alone, and we have increased total health spending to $18.5 billion. I want to move on to the changes in the membership of the committees, but I had to give this background.

We wanted to streamline government. We wanted to do more for less. One of the things we are doing is reducing the membership of the committees. What does that have to do with streamlining government? Many of the people watching today are wondering that. What it does is reduce the number of members who will be travelling.

In October 1995, we put together a motion increasing the maximum number of members to serve on committees to 14. Prior to our government coming to power, it was 11 under the previous government. What we have found since then, of course, is that committee rooms are a little bit stretched, and we find that when we travel we have monumental travelling expenses. Of course, the member for Algoma was very concerned about the fact we won't be travelling on Bill 136 and he is concerned that we are doing teleconferencing.

Mr Ron Johnson (Brantford): That's a tremendous way.

Mr Wettlaufer: Yes, it is, I say to the member for Brantford. It is a tremendous way of reaching more and more people. With teleconferencing we can reach 10 times as many people as we could possibly reach through physically travelling, plus we will be able to reduce the costs. It is far more efficient.

We also have found in our physical travelling on the committees that there have been occurrences in which reservations on planes have been made or there have been situations where we have had to reserve a big bus to transport all the members of the committee to various locations around the province —

Mr Ron Johnson: Huge expense.

Mr Wettlaufer: Yes, tremendous expense, to the member for Brantford, and what happens? We show up at the front of Queen's Park in the morning to go off on the bus and there are only the government members, or there might be one opposition member. Isn't that odd? We have committed to all that expense and the other members don't want to travel. They'll travel on their own at other expense — of taxpayers' money, I might add.

Let's not forget why we are here. We are here to serve our constituents. With the tremendous number of committee members, we are not able to properly serve our constituents if we're spending all our time in the committee. By a reduction in the number of members in the various committees, we can actually serve some of the committees with a reduced number of members and have other members able to serve their constituents. Some members will no longer have to sit on two committees. They will be able to sit on one.

In addition, we have a request from the independent member for Elgin, Peter North. He wants to serve on a committee so that he can serve his constituents by having input. This has never happened before, but under our motion the member for Elgin will be able to serve on a committee. He will have input into one committee. This makes perfect sense.

I don't know what the problem is. The people I speak to in my riding don't understand why the Liberals and the NDP are opposing this. They say: "Wayne, we want to see you more often. Don't their members want to see them?" I don't know; I really don't know if that's what's behind it. Maybe they don't want to speak to their constituents.

1650

Also, in our efforts to streamline government, to do more for less, we have committed to reducing the number of members in the House. After the next election we will have 103 members, no longer 130. That would make it a little bit difficult too for the members to serve on committees, because there will be reduced numbers.

I had a couple of other notes here; I've misplaced them. Oh, I know. One of the things I needed to talk about was other provinces. Other provinces don't have the number of members that we do. For instance, in Quebec, where they have, by the way, 125 members of the Legislature, they have 10 committees, 10 members on each committee. Very close to Quebec, in Nova Scotia they have 52 members of the government, 10 committees with nine members; New Brunswick, 48 members, and they have eight to 12 members on each of eight committees; Saskatchewan, 41 members, six committees with nine members. I don't see what the problem is. We're doing much of what other provincial governments are doing.

Some of the opposition we've had to streamlining, including length of time that one can speak and whatever — I spoke recently to the Saskatchewan Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Berny Wiens, and he could not believe the amount of time that we speak in this Legislature. He said: "Do you mean you actually allow the lead speaker from the parties to speak for an hour and a half? Heavens, we would never permit our members" — and I'm quoting him now — "to hijack the affairs of the House by speaking for such an interminable time."

Mr Bisson: Especially when it's you speaking.

Mr Wettlaufer: No, I don't speak that long, I say to the member for Cochrane South. I don't speak nearly that long. I'm a man of few words.

I just want to say that all the changes we are making under the standing orders, including this one, the number of members on committee, are designed to streamline government.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I haven't had an opportunity to speak on this resolution yet, although the previous member seems to think I had, for some reason. It deals with the committee structure in the House. The government has a way of putting forward a case which is simply not credible, a case that objective people simply will not believe.

I look at several examples of that happening. We have in committees, ordinarily, the opportunity to visit various centres in Ontario so the people in those centres can make representations on various pieces of legislation. Normally, that is what we have done, and I think that has been very beneficial for our system of government, our democratic system.

There are people who believe that the world does not start and stop on the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto, and I understand that. I want people to be able to have the input on legislation, because this is not legislation built of consensus, the kind of legislation I like.

The member for York-Mackenzie said I was a person who is a believer in consensus and a conciliatory approach, and he was right. Most of this legislation is not built on consensus, the way it was in the days of Bill Davis or Leslie Frost or John Robarts. This is radical and right-wing legislation, the kind you would expect to find in Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee and other progressive states of that kind. Therefore, we have to have adequate scrutiny by committees.

The real reason the government does not want Bill 136, the bill designed to take away rights from employees in the public sector, to go to various centres is that they're afraid of the embarrassment of the number of people who will show up in opposition. They would rather control it here where they have the security force, making it difficult and expensive for people to come from all over Ontario to Toronto. They want to control that. Therefore, we have what is called a time allocation motion, a motion designed to end debate, to terminate debate, the guillotine, if you will, on any debate on controversial legislation, so that it can be moved through expeditiously.

The contention of the government is that the opposition is not prepared to be cooperative in expediting that legislation, and the government is correct when it says that we do not want to see it whipped through the House quickly. But this afternoon, as my friend the NDP House leader, the member for Algoma, will agree, we passed a bill in a matter of a little over 20 minutes, a bill with significant ramifications for one community, Sudbury, a bill in the name of Rick Bartolucci, MPP for Sudbury, who had put forward this legislation that would allow for the election of a regional chair, a person to head regional government in the regional municipality of Sudbury. We moved through quickly on that. It was not a controversial bill. There was consensus. The government agreed, the Liberal Party agreed, the NDP agreed.

I should note in the middle of this that this is the 22nd anniversary of Bud Wildman — I won't say his real name — MPP for Algoma, so I'm going to lead the applause for him.

Applause.

Mr Bradley: Sean Conway and Bud Wildman are the only two left from the class of 1975. September 18, 1975, they were elected to the Legislative Assembly, respectively from Renfrew North and Algoma.

Mrs Boyd: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: While we're celebrating the work of two very vigorous members, I don't believe we have a quorum.

The Acting Speaker: Clerk, is there a quorum?

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for St Catharines.

Mr Bradley: I am pleased to see more government members have joined to listen with rapt attention to my remarks in the House on the committee structure. I want to look at the issue of the government's not wanting to travel to various communities. Suddenly, they say, "We're interested in hearing people from all over Ontario so we're going to have a teleconferencing opportunity," when in reality everybody knows — if they'd be up front and say this, I think it would be acceptable only in terms of the honesty — that the government simply does not want to face the people of this province in the various communities who would come out in significant numbers to indicate their opposition to the legislation and make recommendations for its modification or withdrawal.

1700

Originally, it was the government itself that constituted these committees with a large number of members, not the opposition. The government made this proposal and the opposition accepted the proposal. What has happened now is that some of the Conservative members are getting bored sitting on the committees. They're not finding the legislation stimulating, and most of all they've found out — and I think some of the members in their heart of hearts would concede to this — that their participation in the committee, unless they are doing the bidding of the Premier, is meaningless. They are asked only to raise their hands when the chief government whip gives the order to the whip in the committee. The government members hold their hands up and vote as they are told; they speak as they're told and they don't speak when they're told. So a lot of the members in the committee are getting bored and they are saying, "Why should we sit on these committees when all we are in effect are henchmen for the government?" That is what they are told to do in committee.

I am surprised to see that they would do that, because that is why somebody would probably leave a committee. That is why somebody would say, "I am bored in the committee." The Tory members have gone to the House leader and to the whip and said, "Look, I don't want to sit around the committee and simply do what the whip told me to do, therefore I want you to shrink the size of the committee." Unfortunately, when they shrink the size of the committee they provide for fewer opposition members in the committee, and the opposition members are always eager to participate.

Mrs Boyd: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: Speaking of shrinking, we have again shrunk the quorum in this place. Would you check for quorum?

The Acting Speaker: Clerk, is there a quorum?

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

Mr Bradley: I want to compliment the chief government whip, Mr Turnbull, on being able to find his members and escort them into the House again. I appreciate his efforts. He is so busy that I think he should get a raise for performing his duties.

The performance we have to look at today is quite an amusing one. We had the good cop/bad cop performance and it was all the Premier could do not to break out laughing after rehearsing his lines. He is the tough guy who is going to stand up to workers in Ontario, but he didn't say "workers"; he said, "union bosses." He used that inflammatory description of the elected leadership of the trade union movement. I don't say, "Tory bosses." I call our Premier the Premier of the province. I don't call him the Tory boss.

Mr Klees: I have heard a few other terms.

Mr Bradley: The member for York-Mackenzie has too good a memory. I'll have to concede that to him.

After talking about how tough the government was going to be, up gets the Minister of Labour, who says, "We're going to make all these changes to the legislation." So nobody knows what to make of that. Have they one group of people out there saying: "Have they capitulated? The Premier is up there like Phineas T. Bluster of the old Howdy Doody show, blustering on." Or indeed: "Are the various amendments meaningless? So all the bravado that is expressed is meaningless." It was something to behold.

It appears that many members on the governing side, when in trouble, want to pick a fight. There are some countries which, as members will know, when they have experienced trouble start a war to distract people from the real internal problems of the country. We have in this case the Premier's advisers saying: "You know, we're down in the polls. We're getting some unpopular vibes out there. Why don't we pick a fight with somebody? Why don't we provoke a fight with somebody who might be vulnerable in terms of public opinion? Why don't we just pick on somebody out there?" Of course they have picked a fight with those who provide many services to people in this province. That is most unfortunate.

I couldn't believe that Bill Davis would do that. I don't remember Bill Davis ever doing that. Morley Kells, the member for Lakeshore, is here. He was a member of the Davis administration. I don't remember the Davis administration deliberately picking a fight with anybody. There were some disagreements that arose, but they didn't go out to pick an enemy and pick a fight, because they were built on consensus. They represented middle Ontario. They represented the significant portion of thinking in this province. But this government when in trouble is picking a fight with somebody out there and it's most unfortunate. I think problems can be resolved with the various people with whom the government has picked that fight. Those problems can be resolved. If I could see the honourable Robert Welch in this House today, he would be an individual who would find common ground with others.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: The member for Etobicoke-Humber says I shouldn't make reference to the icons of the Conservative Party, such as Bob Welch. Perhaps I should send the Hansard to Bob, because the government just appointed him to the commission which deals with video lottery terminals. I know Bob will be concerned that this government wishes to place video lottery terminals at every bar and every restaurant, on every street, in every neighbourhood, in every community in Ontario. I know Bob would be concerned about that.

Tom Wells, another moderate around here; the late Larry Grossman, another moderate; Roy McMurtry, now in the High Court of Ontario, another moderate — these were people who understood middle Ontario. They ignored the YPCs. They said: "These are people who have to get a life somehow. They should get a life." So they ignored them.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: I'm glad the member for York-Mackenzie raises that case. I wasn't going to speak about this, but I will tie it into this. There was going to be a Young Progressive Conservative meeting in Brantford, as the member for York-Mackenzie reminds me. Someone invited Preston Manning, the leader of the small-c, ultra-conservative Reform Party. I think it was Mr Johnson who invited Preston Manning to speak. Then they had an argument and somebody said: "You'd better not let him speak at the regular convention. Why don't we say the convention is over and then we'll have Preston speak?" A call came in from Jean Charest and Jean Charest was unhappy. Mike Harris didn't know what to do, because he wants to support both the Conservatives and the Reform Party. As a result, it was cancelled. The YPC convention was cancelled. It had to be rescheduled for London, Ontario, the member for York-Mackenzie tells me, on October 18. I'm wondering if on October 18 Preston Manning will be available and somebody is going to invite him. Because remember — I ask you to recall this —

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: It seems to me that this is quite an interesting discussion. However, it has absolutely nothing to do with the motion we're debating.

1710

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for that point of order. I think, member for St Catharines, the government whip does have a point. I would recommend you get back to the debate at hand.

Mr Bradley: Thank you. I will try to tie this back into the motion we're talking about.

I'm a bit worried about this, though. Let me tell you this. I know Mr Johnson wanted Preston Manning to come, and I understand that. He's a friend of his. But, let me warn you, the member for London South may invite Preston Manning. I understood — I could be wrong — he was cosying up to Preston Manning and the Reform Party during the federal election. I just want to forewarn some of the more progressive members of the caucus, like Ted Arnott, one of the more progressive members of the Conservative caucus, that Preston may show up in London if you're not careful.

The member beside him, Bill Murdoch, is a member of the Reform Party, aren't you, Bill? He is. He squired Preston Manning around his riding when he was there. I've become worried. I'm going to phone Jean Charest to see what he thinks of this committee motion. Jean Charest has to be worried that some of the real right-wingers are abandoning the Conservative Party federally, with its long traditions, and going over to the Reform Party. That would worry me very much. I appreciate the member for York-Mackenzie, with his intervention, allowing me the opportunity to expand upon that particular situation facing the Conservatives.

I look forward to the future and what is going to happen. I have given examples in this House of how we have moved quickly to proceed with legislation that everybody thinks is fine and how we have taken a longer period of time and proposed amendments and made changes when we felt they were productive for the democratic system.

This committees motion does not enhance the democratic system. It limits and restricts the number of members who are members officially of committees of the Ontario Legislature. We're seeing a trend now where the government wants to hold fewer and fewer committee meetings. Yes, democracy does cost money. Some people are not happy with that. Some people who run their businesses one way say, "It's too expensive to do it that way." I don't expect them to run their businesses the way a Legislative Assembly or a Parliament is run. That's entirely different. I would not ask anybody who has a business to run it in that fashion, but I would nevertheless hope they would have a respect for a legislative body such as this.

By diminishing the number of Conservative members who can serve on a committee, and the number of Liberal members and the number of New Democrats who can serve, I don't think we enhance the operation. I don't think we contribute to democracy. I think we diminish it.

Take a look around at all the steps the unelected advisers to the Premier are suggesting to you people and you will see, in every case, that they are designed to enhance their power, the unelected whiz kids' power, and not the power of those who are elected. Whether I agree or disagree with elected members on the government side of this assembly, I want to be able to debate with them. I enjoy the opportunity to debate with them. I'm interested in what they have to say as individuals. However, all too often that opportunity is restricted by the backroom boys in the Premier's office, who don't want to see that happen. I can't debate with them. They debate with themselves and then they tell the Premier what should be done. They're not elected. They didn't have to go through what all of you had to go through to get elected.

I am speaking here on behalf of democracy. I can't help but believe that in your heart of hearts on the government side, those not in the cabinet agree with the contentions I've advanced today.

Mr Bisson: We are today probably hours away — if not in today's legislative day, possibly Monday — from passing a motion that in effect will say to the Legislative Assembly that we're going to reduce the number of members who sit on a legislative committee. To the government side, this is a good thing. They say, "If we have fewer members on a committee, it means our backbenchers don't all have to sit there and listen to the deputations of the public when they come forward to express their disfavour about bills." To the public, I would say it's probably a bad thing, because it means there is less of an ability on behalf of this Legislative Assembly, because of the diminished number of people on a committee, to be heard and to see in the final product, which is the legislation, what their comments might be. To the opposition, it creates a big problem.

We need to put this into the context of what this is really all about. That is, this government fundamentally believes that government is a bad thing. They fundamentally believe that the institutions of government, be it whatever department within the ministries, whatever service they deliver, or in many cases the institution of Parliament itself, are not necessarily a good thing.

I have the very opposite opinion of what the government says. First of all, I think government can and should play a positive role in our lives. I think it can influence many things in our economy and it can influence the betterment of how people live in our communities. I also think the Parliament, the Legislature of Ontario, can itself play a very positive role in making sure that the business the government does is done right. How is that done? One of the biggest things we do in this Legislature, other than debate bills in the House at second and third reading, is the work we do on committees.

For example, the government introduced a bill last spring called Bill 99, the Workers' Compensation Act changes. That bill went through a process in the Legislature, as most bills do in this House, where it went to a second reading debate. Members of the assembly elected from various constituencies across the province had an opportunity to have their say, based partly on their personal beliefs and partly on their political beliefs in terms of the party they belong to.

But more important, most members of this assembly, from all parties, went back to their constituencies and talked to the people who elected them. They said: "What do you think about this bill? Do you think there are good parts? Do you think there are bad parts?" Then we as elected members of this assembly say, "If you have problems with this bill or you have something to say that would make this bill better, we suggest you write to the committee as well as the minister. More important, if you have an opportunity, present your views to the legislative committee should it come to your community; if not, maybe you can travel to wherever the committee will be closest to where you live." Why? Because we as members of this assembly believe fundamentally that democracy is about giving people a voice.

That's my problem with this particular motion. The government, by way of reducing the number of people who sit on a legislative committee, is really in a lot of ways making it more difficult for people to find their voice in the legislative process. I think this government is quite deliberate in its attempt to limit participation on the part of the public.

Just to make the point, let me give you an example of the kinds of things this government does. We have just heard today in this House that the government is tabling another time allocation motion, something I heard this party, the then third party, the Conservative Party under Mike Harris, rail against when they were in opposition. They didn't like time allocation motions; they thought they were terrible. So does every opposition party. But they're bringing in a time allocation motion on Bill 98, the Development Charges Act, when only one party has spoken to the bill. The Liberal Party has just finished doing their lead speech on the Development Charges Act third reading, and the government has come into this House and has said, "We are tabling a time allocation motion that will limit the debate on this bill," not giving an opportunity to the New Democratic Party of Ontario to have its say and, even more dastardly, taking the opportunity away from government members, especially the backbenchers, who were elected and are trying to do their jobs in their constituencies, to reflect the views of their constituents.

I'm not saying there's not a case at times where governments have to use time allocation motions. I was a member of a government that used them. Quite frankly, I had a problem using them then; even more so now in opposition. The point I'm making here is that the government in this case is not even following the process that parties normally follow when it comes to time allocation motions. In the past the process has been that the government waits for three days of debate at second reading and then tables a time allocation motion; another day of debate at time allocation motion, giving four days of debate on that particular issue. In this particular case, the government is saying, "We're going to allow the Liberal caucus one lead speaker." Then they came in and they snuck a time allocation motion on the Clerk's table.

1720

There is something wrong with the democracy of Ontario when a government of the day tables time allocations in this House that basically don't even give the opportunity for parties that are recognized in this assembly to be able to speak on them. The government might say, "It's an oversight; we didn't notice; we did something wrong." I'm tired of this government making mistakes. I'm tired of this government saying, "We didn't notice; we slipped up again."

I wish one thing that this government would do is, if they want to do their agenda, that's one thing. I may not agree with it, but you have a responsibility to manage the change in an effective manner and to do it right. But don't come into this House and then say that you believe in that process, you believe in what you're doing, you believe in democracy and table a time allocation motion, not even giving our party the opportunity to speak on it. There is a process. I think the process in this case has been very much usurped in the sense that the government is saying, "We don't even have to listen to other parties now; we don't even have to listen to our own backbenchers have their say on a particular bill." I say that's wrong.

The other good example of what this government is doing around committees is what this government is doing around Bill 136. The government is going to make changes to the Labour Relations Act that are significant when it comes to the ability of working people in this province, working in the public sector, to be able to effectively manage the change when it comes to labour relations through this downloading. If the bill is passed in its original form, they're going to take away many rights that workers in this province have been able to get by working at the bargaining table with their employers for a number of years to be able to make a better living for themselves and better working conditions.

This government is undertaking this and is saying, "We're going to ram this legislation through the House, again by use of a time allocation motion, and we're going to limit the opportunity for the public to have their say about this bill to four days of committee here in Toronto." This is after the Minister of Labour stood in this House and promised that she was going to travel that bill throughout the province and that she was going to give people ample opportunity to have their say.

I listen to the government members say, "When you were in government...the social contract...you didn't have an opportunity to go out and travel." Excuse me, I was a member of the government that went through the social contract. There were six months of negotiations, face to face between the union movement and the government of Ontario day in, day out for six months. Those people affected had the opportunity to have their say.

I listened to the Premier today. The Premier tried to stand there and say: "You have a lot of nerve, the third party, the NDP, telling us that we shouldn't have hearings when it comes to Bill 136. Look at what you did on the social contract." I'll stand the social contract against what this government does any day. I've been at union meetings across this province, the same union meetings that I went to when we were government, when there were people who were upset with the social contract. When they look at what we did and they look at what you're doing, I can tell you they're saying: "At least we understand now what the social contract was about. It was about saving $2 billion, which you did, and at the same time trying to find a way to preserve services without kicking people out on the street. If I had to vote for that today, knowing what I know now, or vote for what Harris is doing, I'd vote for the social contract any day." I'm tired of the government trying to stand up and say that the social contract was such a terrible thing.

The other point that was interesting: The third party voted for the social contract. They've got a lot of nerve. I was in this House. I sat across at the same place where they are when I looked at the then leader of the third party stand in the House and say, "We think this is a good thing." Well, excuse me. Talk about utter hypocrisy, when the leader of a party takes one position like that and all of a sudden decides it's going to be something else.

Back to the motion. The point is that the government is going to reduce the number of members who can participate on a legislative committee, and I'm saying that is a problem. One day, if you're lucky as Tory members, you just might get re-elected in this House, and if you're lucky you'll still be a party. You're going to wish the heck that you had the ability to participate on legislative committees so that you can do your job to represent your constituents, because that's why you were elected, that's why you ran and that's what you're here to do.

When the government says, "We're going to limit the number of people who can sit on a committee," on the basis of some cockamamy idea that somehow this is going to be better for democracy, I remind the members across the way that every government eventually is defeated, I think much more quickly with you guys. The polls might say you're at 30%, but I'll tell you, I've got a sneaking suspicion that come next election you're going to resemble the caucus of Brian Mulroney after the 1993 federal election.

The point I make to you is that you think you're smart now, you think this is really cute, you think you're really intelligent by changing the rules of the House to the extent you have, by changing the membership on committees; you think you're doing a great job by making the changes around how you can use closure motions. But one day you will be on this side of the House, and that's when you're going to realize what you've done.

I've learned one thing sitting on both sides, and that is that what we really need to do in this Legislature is reform the rules so they work for the people of this province, not for the politicians at Queen's Park. We need to find a way so that people can see themselves in this Legislature through their representatives and that their voice can be heard here, and it cannot be heard here with the kind of rule changes this government has made.

I suggest that one of the things we should be doing in this House is looking, through a special legislative committee or the Legislative Assembly committee, at ways we can change the rules of the House to increase the participation of individual members of both the government and the opposition in the legislative process. That doesn't mean the amount of time you have to speak or when you can speak. It's not simply that. The problem we have in this system is that 40% of the people, or in the last Parliament 38% of the people, elect a government, it gets a huge majority, and then they do what the hell they want. It doesn't matter if 60%, or 62% in some cases, of the people don't support what the government is doing; they end up doing what they want. That's regardless of the back bench of the Tory caucus, because we know who makes the decisions: the Premier and the people around the Premier's office, and that's it. The cabinet follows along, along with the rest of the Tory backbenchers.

What I say we need to do is change the way this place works so that the people themselves, the people in our constituencies, have an ability to be heard in this Legislature, so that they know when they elect their member, be it a Tory, a New Democrat or a Liberal, they're able to come into this Legislature and have some voice and some ability to affect the legislative outcomes of this particular government or any future government.

How do you do that? Primarily, in my view, in two ways. You reform the standing orders so that you increase participation of members. I'm not talking about length of speeches; I'm talking about how members could actually influence things both at the committee level and here in the House. You reform the legislative process. I've got a number of ideas I've been talking to individual members of this House about for quite some time in terms of how we change the legislative process so people have an opportunity to participate.

One idea would be that the government would table not a bill at first reading but basically call it a discussion paper, a white paper, whatever you want. It would be: "Here's what the government wants to do. Here are the goals we're trying to achieve." After that, you'd have a short debate at first reading, not just rubber-stamping it, then send it off to a committee to let people have their say about what they believe is good or bad about this particular idea, this discussion paper, and then the government could draft up its bill. That way, the government is not put in the position of having to defend the bill even though it's flawed. How many times have we seen this government draft legislation that is utterly flawed and that government backbenchers have to sit there and say, "This is good"? That's what they have to do, because they're government backbenchers. It's the same with every party, I don't care who's elected. It's a problem of this House.

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): How many times did you vote against the government?

Mr Bisson: I voted against my government five times. How many times have you? I was there, you weren't.

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: Yes. I voted five times against my government on a number of different bills.

The point I'm making here is that because of the way the legislative process works, the minute the bill hits the House the government members have to defend it, even though it's flawed, and that's wrong. We should have an ability to have free expression by all members of the House to say: "It's a good idea, Mr Minister. You want to do something in education or whatever. Here's what we think is good. Here's what we think is bad." Backbenchers or party members or whatever you want to call them would not be in the position of having to worry about being disciplined. That's what people are upset about at home.

1730

I think one of the other things you've got to do, and my colleague Tony Silipo is one who shares this view, along with others, is that you have to change the electoral process. We need to look at what has happened in Germany and New Zealand and in a number of other modern economies where they've gone to what's called proportional representation. I think we could learn by what they've done in other particular jurisdictions about trying to find ways of balancing the power between the parties in the Legislature so that parties start to work with themselves rather than trying to beat each other over the head.

Interjections.

Mr Bisson: There's no use even listening to the guys across the way sometimes; they're really unbelievable. But anyway, the point is that you guys are changing yet again another rule of this House. In this case you're saying you're not happy by having new powers to invoke yet more closure motions; you're not happy in having new powers to be able to stifle the opposition; you're not happy enough in having new powers to be able to totally control the agenda of the House; you're not happy enough being able to pass a bill through the House in three days from beginning to end. No, that power is not quenching your appetite or your willingness to take more. You're now saying you're going to reduce the size of the committees.

I say there's a problem with that. There's a problem in the sense that you're limiting the ability of individual members to participate and to vote on matters that are important to them and their constituents. I think that's a problem. That's not a partisan view; that's my view. I would guess a lot of backbenchers in the Tory caucus and probably even some cabinet ministers would secretly admit the same if they had the opportunity.

The other thing is that by doing so, they're very much, in the end, reducing the ability that the public has when it comes to being able to participate in debate through the legislative process.

So I will vote against this particular motion for the reasons I have stated. I think it's wrong for a government to be able to do this kind of action. It's not going to serve, I believe, in the end, the constituents of the province of Ontario whom we are elected to serve. The quicker that the government figures that out, maybe the better off this government will be.

Ça a toujours été la même situation avec ce gouvernement. Ça démontre temps après temps que, quand ça vient à la question de la démocratie dans cette Assemblée, ce gouvernement retourne le dos au processus démocratique.

Ils disent, numéro un, qu'on a besoin de changer le Règlement de la Chambre parce qu'ils veulent avoir tout le pouvoir nécessaire pour être capables de passer la législation à travers cette Chambre dans trois jours.

Ils ne sont pas assez contents. Ils disent qu'ils veulent avoir la capacité de fermer par l'attribution de temps un projet de loi, en mettant une motion dans la Chambre. Ils ont changé les règlements selon leurs conditions, et là ils arrivent et ils disent que ce n'est pas assez bon.

Le gouvernement contrôle tout quand ça vient à l'Assemblée. Ils ont le pouvoir de tout arrêter et ils ont le pouvoir de passer la législation. Ils ont la capacité de fermer l'opposition quand ils veulent, et là, ils disent que ce n'est pas assez bon. Notre «candy» n'est pas assez gros ; on a besoin d'aller en chercher un autre. Puis ils disent qu'on va aller aux comités puis on va réduire le nombre de députés qui vont participer aux comités.

J'ai un problème. Le problème, c'est quand on limite l'habilité des députés de représenter leurs citoyens ou leurs citoyennes sur les comités, cela veut dire que le public a moins de chances de faire en sorte que leurs représentants sont capables de représenter ce qui est important pour les personnes de leur circonscription.

L'autre point, puis je l'ai dit tout à l'heure, c'est que ce gouvernement une bonne journée va avoir une élection. S'ils sont très chanceux, quelques-uns vont être réélus, même au troisième parti, s'ils sont bien chanceux. Eux-autres, ils vont être dans une situation, ces députés-là, les seuls qui seront réélus, de revenir à cette Assemblée et voir les règlements qu'ils ont changés.

Quand ils arriveront ici, je serai à l'autre bord de la Chambre. Ils seront assez chanceux d'être 12 ; ça va être vraiment quelque chose. Mais s'ils sont assez chanceux de revenir ici puis s'asseoir et regarder l'autre bord, et s'ils ouvrent les ordres du jour et les règlements de la Chambre et qu'ils les regardent, ils ne vont pas être contents, on va vous dire, parce qu'ils vont trouver que l'habilité des membres de l'opposition a été beaucoup réduite sous la direction du gouvernement de M. Harris. Puis une bonne journée, ils vont payer le prix eux-mêmes comme députés de cette Assemblée.

Madame la Présidente, je vous remercie pour avoir la chance de participer à ce débat.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): Now I'm really complimented because two of the three deans in the House are present, the member for St Catharines and the member for Renfrew.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): Flattery will get you everywhere, Margaret.

Mrs Marland: Actually, if anybody understands my comments, it will be the member for St Catharines and the member for Renfrew, because one of the things I really want to say is that I don't understand why we're having this protracted debate on this resolution at this time. It's very —

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Cochrane South. Come to order, member for Cochrane South.

Mrs Marland: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The very fact that I did spend 10 years in opposition, I know very well about being an opposition member in a committee as well as in this place. This resolution that is before us today is dealing with two matters. It's dealing with who sits on a committee and which committee, and also the number of people who will sit on the committee.

Surely the first matter isn't up for debate because the names of those who are appointed to committees are submitted by each caucus. Every caucus decides who they want from their caucus to sit on which legislative committee. I think we can easily set that aside.

The size of the committees is tremendously interesting. When the David Peterson Liberal government was in power — of which the member for Renfrew and the member for St Catharines were members of cabinet — I can recall that in those good old days we had 94 Liberal members in this House.

Mr Conway: It was 95.

Mrs Marland: Yes, I stand corrected. It was 95 and one became the Speaker. Correct?

Interjection.

Mrs Marland: The member for Renfrew is not helping me with this debate.

At that time, even though the government of the day had 94 members plus the Speaker, guess how many members we had on the committees? I don't know if anybody remembers but I certainly do. We actually had nine, and 10 including the Chair. The reason that I remember is that in the first two years I sat — no, actually, when you had 94 members, it was the 1987 election.

Mr Conway: Do you know how many we had before that?

Mrs Marland: Yes. In 1985 you elected 48 and the Conservatives elected 52, but what is really significant — I will try to speak to the Chair, but it's so tempting, of course, always to speak to the member for Renfrew. After the 1987 election we had in our caucus 16 members, and as I fondly like to refer to that caucus, it was myself and the 15 old boys.

Now, with that composition of 94 government members — I don't remember actually the number for the NDP, but I know there were 16 for us; I think the NDP were 19 — the committee structure then was six government members, two official opposition members and one third-party member. I know, because I sat on three committees as a single member. I did not find, of course, that it was difficult to represent the views and the opinions of the third party and I certainly never heard any complaint from the government about the problem of getting public input around this province into the government legislation that was before any of those committees.

1740

So I really fail, I guess, to understand what this debate is about and why we're questioning the current makeup of the committees, because the current makeup will now be five government members, two from the official opposition and again, one from the third party. I think the members of the current third party have just as much ability to represent the views of their party as we did to represent the number of members that we had when we had one member appointed to a committee. Speaking from my own historical perspective, I think this debate that has gone on and on is really becoming quite redundant.

There are actually advantages to the motion that is before us. One of them I think certainly is the advantage for the member for Elgin, who happens to be at the moment the only independent member in the Legislature That member is going to have a membership on a committee. It happens to be the Legislative Assembly committee, which also happens to be the committee which he has chosen. I think enhancing the role of the independent member is being very fair.

The other aspect of this resolution that we're debating of course is the fact that we have an opportunity to save money. I find it difficult to understand, frankly, why any member in this House would want to debate or talk against saving money when we're talking about the makeup and operation of committees in this place. I think that if we have an opportunity to save money in one area, all of us in this chamber, I do believe —

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Cochrane South, could you please keep your voice down? Thank you. Member for Mississauga South, continue.

Mrs Marland: I believe we all have a huge responsibility to the taxpayers in this province to save money wherever we can. We all know that when our committees travel around the province to have input and hear the opinions and concerns from constituents around the entire province, the more people we have travelling on those committees the bigger the bill we have to carry to pay for flights, buses. We don't any longer pay for meals, but we do pay for hotel accommodation. Those are big expenses. You know what's really interesting, of course, it isn't just the 14 members we currently require on committees that we pay for. We're paying for all the staff, all the committee clerk's staff, the translation staff, and we end up with very big bills and a very big expense in terms of making the public process something that's available through our public committee hearings.

I don't know how far we are along with this, but I personally hope we're going to expand on the system of teleconferencing for public hearings in committees.

Interjection.

Mrs Marland: Are you correcting me?

Interjection.

Mrs Marland: I guess it's sometimes called video conferencing, and I guess it is video conferencing that we're talking about.

In any case, it would make sense in a new age where technology is changing almost month by month that we as a Legislature keep up with those opportunities. I look forward to the committees jointly, all of the committees of the House, and all-party input into deciding —

Interjection.

Mrs Marland: Thank you, Mr Whip, it's very hard to hear.

I think if we can expand the opportunity for public input through other operational modes for our committees, then it certainly behooves us to do that.

On this bill itself, it's kind of interesting because I have sat in this House where we have debated the new standing orders and at that time, among some of the debate of the new standing orders, there was quite a lot of debate about the makeup of committees as well. So I think it's a little unfortunate that we are using time to debate something that has already been debated. I also notice that both opposition parties have taken the position that the debate on rule changes has dealt with the issue of committee size. I refer to Hansard for August 20. The member for Algoma, Mr Wildman, argued on page 11391 that the rule changes we had debated for six days did operate to reduce the size of committees.

The member for Beaches-Woodbine, Ms Lankin, speaking for her party also said that she disagreed with the rule changes but, and I am quoting from page 11392, "The intent of the motion is to change that rule to downsize committees; in fact, in the case of the New Democratic Party, to take away representation where we have only two members on committees and limit us to only one."

I go back actually to the example I gave when I was an individual member of a committee, when we had the same number of members in this Legislature as the New Democratic Party has currently, so what we're doing here isn't unfair, it isn't unjust and it isn't something that hasn't been done before. We're not creating new waves. We're not attacking the opposition parties. We're simply saying let's be more efficient and let's try to run this place like a business. I think that's something the public feels is long overdue. When we get into bloated bureaucracies and bloated systems within our own legislative chamber and our own operation of this place, this beautiful Legislature, then we are liable to criticism, and rightly so.

The Liberal spokesman, the member for Kingston and The Islands, Mr Gerretsen, said, and I quote from page 11393: "They want, according to what was just passed, a committee with only nine members immediately. That's what's there. Those are the standing orders that we passed today, not another motion: committees with nine people."

So what is significant? This is why I referred to Hansard. Was it that the opposition parties thought the new rule changes would govern committee size? When they were debating the rule changes — by the way, a debate which lasted six days — the opposition parties thought they were debating the issue of committee size. In fact, during those six days, the opposition parties were debating the issue of committee size. So here we are again, still debating the issue of committee size.

Effectively, including today, we have already spent more than seven days of debate, starting back in June, over the issue of committee size. Remember, today's debate is over an issue that on August 20, which is actually almost a month ago now because today is September 18, the opposition parties said it was already debated and it was already decided. I guess I don't quite understand why this is continuing and why we are wasting time on a debate that has taken place, especially when we have some very vital legislation and some very important issues to the people of this province that need to come to the floor of this House to be debated in order that it can get out to public hearings in the committee process and the people of Ontario have that opportunity for public input.

The other number I came up with which I think is really quite interesting — naturally, I'm going to be defensive of my government's position, but I'd like to use facts to do that and not fiction. When I say that this government is clearly committed to consulting with the public, I'd like to place on the record that in 1996, just last year, we had 720 hours of public hearings on 33 government bills, compared with 681 hours for 40 bills in 1994 with the NDP government and, just to be fair, only 529 hours for 93 bills in 1989 in the Liberal government. I say to my friends the member for St Catharines and the member from Renfrew that you passed 93 bills in 1989, but you only spent 529 hours debating them.

Frankly, I feel we are at a point in the debate of this resolution where I really have a concern that we are just going round and round the clock. I believe this House is entitled to at least vote on whether the House feels we have had sufficient debate on this very simple, very straightforward, very technical question of committee size. Therefore, I move that the question now be put.

The Acting Speaker: Mrs Marland has moved that the question be now put.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour of the motion, please say "aye."

Those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members; a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1757 to 1827.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour of the motion, please rise one at a time.

Ayes

Arnott, Ted	Johns, Helen	Parker, John L.
Baird, John R.	Johnson, Bert	Sampson, Rob
Brown, Jim	Johnson, David	Saunderson, William
Carroll, Jack	Johnson, Ron	Shea, Derwyn
Elliott, Brenda	Kells, Morley	Sheehan, Frank
Fisher, Barbara	Klees, Frank	Snobelen, John
Flaherty, Jim	Marland, Margaret	Stewart, R. Gary
Ford, Douglas B.	Munro, Julia	Tascona, Joseph N.
Galt, Doug	Murdoch, Bill	Tilson, David
Gilchrist, Steve	O'Toole, John	Turnbull, David
Hastings, John	Ouellette, Jerry J.	Wettlaufer, Wayne
Hodgson, Chris	Palladini, Al	Young, Terence H.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, please rise one at a time.

Nays

Boyd, Marion	Conway, Sean G.	Marchese, Rosario
Bradley, James J.	Kwinter, Monte	Silipo, Tony
Caplan, David	Lessard, Wayne	Wood, Len
Colle, Mike

Clerk of the House (Mr Claude L. DesRosiers): The ayes are 36; the nays are 10.

The Acting Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr Johnson has moved a motion for changes to the membership of the standing committees.

All those in favour, please say "aye."

Those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members; a 30-minute bell.

I've just received a letter from David Turnbull, the government whip, which reads:

"Dear Mr Speaker:

"Pursuant to standing order 28(h), I would like to request that the vote on the motion for changes to the membership be deferred until Monday, September 22, 1997."

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): I know that all the members are anxious to hear the weekly business for next week.

On Monday, September 22, we'll deal with Bill 128, Uniform Federal and Provincial Child Support Guidelines Act; on Tuesday, September 23, interim supply, and Bill 102, the Community Safety Act; on Wednesday, September 24, Bill 98, the Development Charges Act; Bill 146, the Farming and Food Production Protection Act; on Thursday, September 25, private members' public business, ballot items 99 and 100, and Bill 149, the Fair Municipal Finance Act, 1997 (No. 2).

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Churley): It now being past 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock on Monday.

The House adjourned at 1832.

continued from overleaf

OTHER BUSINESS

Standing committee on government agencies
The Speaker....12215
Report deemed adopted....12215
Business of the House
Mr David Johnson....12247

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Jeudi 18 septembre 1997

AFFAIRES D'INTÉRÊT PUBLIC ÉMANANT DES DÉPUTÉS

Loi de 1997 modifiant le Code de la route (suspensions de permis)
Projet de loi 154, M. Grimmett
Adoptée....12212
Loi de 1997 sur la Semaine de commémoration des victimes de crimes de violence
Projet de loi 155, M. Baird
Adoptée....12212

DEUXIÈME LECTURE

Loi de 1997 visant à assurer la stabilité au cours de la transition dans le secteur public, projet de loi 136, M^me^ Witmer
Adoptée....12231
Loi de 1997 sur l'amélioration des services, projet de loi 152, M^me^ Ecker
Adoptée....12232

DEUXIÈME ET TROISIÈME LECTURES

Loi de 1997 modifiant des lois en ce qui concerne la municipalité régionale de Sudbury, projet de loi 156, M. Bartolucci
Adoptée....12235

MOTIONS ÉMANANT DU GOUVERNEMENT

Composition des comités, avis de motion numéro 36 émanant du gouvernement, M. David Johnson
M. Bisson....12245
Vote différé....12247

CONTENTS

Thursday 18 September 1997

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Highway Traffic Amendment Act (licence suspensions), 1997, Bill 154, Mr Grimmett
Mr Grimmett 12197, 12204
Ms Castrilli 12198
Mr Kormos 12199
Mr McLean 12201
Mr Gerretsen 12202
Mrs Marland 12202
Mr Bradley 12203
Mr Hastings 12203
Agreed to 12212

Victims of Violent Crime Commemoration Week Act, 1997, Bill 155, Mr Baird
Mr Baird 12204, 12211
Mrs McLeod 12206
Mr Lessard 12206
Mr Flaherty 12207
Mr Cullen 12208
Mr Kormos 12209
Mr Wettlaufer 12210
Mr Bartolucci 12211
Agreed to 12212

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

TVOntario
Mr Gravelle 12212

Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Kormos 12212
Ms Lankin 12213

Royal Canadian Legion
Mrs Ross 12213

Community health services
Mr Cullen 12213

Violence against women
Mr Ouellette 12214

Media reporting
Mr Bradley 12214

Privatization of public services
Mr Laughren 12214

Magnetic resonance imaging
Mrs Munro 12214

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

Standing committee on the Legislative Assembly
Mr Tascona 12215
Report adopted 12215

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Harris 12215
Mrs Witmer 12216
Mr McGuinty 12217
Mr Hampton 12218

ORAL QUESTIONS

Public service and labour relations reform
Mr McGuinty 12218
Mr Harris 12218, 12221
Mr Hampton 12220

Education financing
Mr McGuinty 12220
Mr Snobelen 12220

Fire in Hamilton
Mr Christopherson 12222
Mr Sterling 12222

Special education
Mr McGuinty 12222, 12227
Mr Snobelen 12223, 12227

Hospital restructuring
Mrs Boyd 12223
Mr Wilson 12223

Volunteers
Mr Galt 12224
Ms Mushinski 12224

Magnetic resonance imaging
Mr Kennedy 12225
Mr Wilson 12225

Charitable gaming
Ms Lankin 12226
Mr Tsubouchi 12226

Non-profit housing
Mr Jim Brown 12226
Mr Leach 12226

Fish habitat
Ms Martel 12227
Mr Hodgson 12228

PETITIONS

Municipal restructuring
Mr Conway 12228

Public consultation
Mr Wildman 12228

TVOntario
Mr Gravelle 12228

Hospital restructuring
Mrs Boyd 12228, 12229
Mrs Pupatello 12229

Cruelty to animals
Mr Hudak 12228, 12230

Fire in Hamilton
Mr Christopherson 12229

Court decision
Mr Baird 12229

Municipal elections
Mr Bartolucci 12229

Employment standards
Mr Sergio 12230

Rock music group
Mr Baird 12230

Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Conway 12230

Standing orders reform
Mr Gerretsen 12231

SECOND READINGS

Public Sector Transition Stability Act, 1997, Bill 136, Mrs Witmer
Agreed to 12231

Services Improvement Act, 1997, Bill 152, Mrs Ecker
Agreed to 12232

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS

Regional Municipality of Sudbury Statute Law Amendment Act, 1997, Bill 156, Mr Bartolucci
Mr Bartolucci 12233
Mr Laughren 12234
Ms Martel 12234
Agreed to 12235

GOVERNMENT MOTIONS

Committee membership, government notice of motion number 36, Mr David Johnson
Mr Wildman 12235
Mr Wettlaufer 12238
Mr Bradley 12239
Mr Bisson 12242
Mrs Marland 12245
Vote deferred 12247

continued overleaf

Government Publications

No. 233

Nº 233

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly of Ontario

First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Monday 22 September 1997

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Lundi 22 septembre 1997

SEP 24 1997
University of Toronto

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday 22 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lundi 22 septembre 1997

The House met at 1332.
Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION

Mr Pat Hoy (Essex-Kent): Yesterday in my home town of Merlin, I had the opportunity to join in the annual drumhead service, which is held across the country to celebrate the beginning of Legion Week, which runs through to September 27.

Legions are a focal point in our communities across this country for the spirit of fellowship and goodwill which personifies their membership. As Canadians, it is important for us to give solemn remembrance to past Canadians who fought and died to preserve the freedom of this country. Legion activities help us to remember so that the sacrifices of so many will not be in vain.

The valuable work done by the Legion in local communities, in every hamlet, town and city in Canada, makes it the largest service club in the country, operating in almost 2,000 communities and donating an estimated $30 million to benefit individual communities. Legion members also contribute thousands of hours of volunteer service. Legion members contribute to Scouts Canada, student bursaries and awards, visitations to hospitalized veterans, and community and youth projects too numerous to mention.

The Royal Canadian Legion enjoys an outstanding record of community service, legislative progressiveness and national consciousness-raising. I am sure the entire Legislature will join me in recognizing Legion Week and in offering thanks to Legion members for their sense of commitment and dedication.

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY OFFICE

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): After my nomination in April of this year, I organized a meeting of individuals who were having problems with the family support plan. There were about 30 families in attendance. All of them had accounts that were in arrears.

I've checked on those cases and I can report that almost all of those accounts are still in arrears, their regular payments are late, and these families are experiencing a great deal of financial difficulty. These families depend on this money. The money is owed to them. It helps them provide housing for their children and food and clothing.

They tell us that it's next to impossible for them to speak to anyone at the central office. When they correspond in writing, there's never any response from anyone at the plan office. Up until August 15 of this year, we had a direct line that case workers could call, but since August 18 there has been no response to any of those calls. The line goes directly to voice mail, so there isn't anyone that can be contacted at that office.

The family support plan has been renamed the Family Responsibility Office. The family support plan was put in place to support families in their efforts to receive court-ordered payments, but it appears, with this new name, that families are now being told that no one is responsible.

NIAGARA GRAPE AND WINE FESTIVAL

Mr Tom Froese (St Catharines-Brock): I want to take this opportunity to thank the Premier, Ministers Tsubouchi and Villeneuve and my Niagara caucus colleagues for visiting my riding last Friday, September 19. They took part in the celebrity kickoff breakfast for the Niagara Grape and Wine Festival at Market Square in downtown St Catharines. After the breakfast, they visited Chateau des Charmes Wines in Niagara-on-the-Lake, where they met with Dr Paul M. Bosc, president of Chateau des Charmes, and Ontario Wine Council members.

There, the Premier helped plant a transgenic grapevine, a stress-resistant vinifera vine that will revolutionize the grape and wine industry, as it can withstand up to minus 25 degrees Celsius. This scientific breakthrough is very important to all the wine-producing regions of Ontario because the industry at present accounts for more than $280 million annually in sales, and directly employs about 1,400 people. Just imagine the positive impact this stress-resistant grapevine can have on those wine sales and job creation prospects.

I want to thank everyone involved in the Grape and Wine Festival kickoff and encourage all Ontarians to visit the Niagara region over the next couple of weeks. Again, on behalf of my constituents, my thanks go to the Premier and to Ministers Tsubouchi and Villeneuve for their recognition and support.

EDUCATION IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): It's a sham. I rise today to again appeal to Mike Harris to rein in Dave Cooke and his commissars.

Last summer, Dave Cooke and his accomplices arrogantly dismissed the democratically elected chair of the Sudbury public education commission. The chair, Louis Bourcier, who is also the chair of the Espanola public board, was summarily dismissed, a blatant disregard of local democracy.

Now I have a letter from the North Shore Board of Education, signed by Robert Whitehead, the chair. He says in part:

"I do...feel it necessary to share my concerns with you. I must also point out that I am not the only one with these concerns. Trustees from many small boards have shared this perception with me. The role of the individual trustee in small communities, especially in northern Ontario, has become irrelevant, if not redundant.

"This may be the government's objective," Mr Whitehead says.

"...It would appear that unless the Education Improvement Commission support majority recommendations of local education improvement committees, that the process becomes a sham, especially when applied to restructuring.

"If the process is a sham," he says, "then those communities outside these larger dominant cities should be informed, especially in northern Ontario, where because of distances, meetings and travel are so costly."

EDUCATION REFORM

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): As a former educator, I want to make some comments on matters as they relate to education. I have to tell you, ever since M. Snobelen has perpetrated a crisis in the education system, people like me have been very worried, educators across the province have been very worried, and teachers particularly, and parents, in the area of Peel have been very worried about what M. Snobelen, the Minister of Education and Training, is doing to teachers, children and the parents worried about the educational system.

We know that these folks are Tory mercenaries dedicated to cutting taxes for their rich friends. They're mercenaries. This is all about giving money away to those who don't need it, and as a result of that, they have to take money from the educational system. This is what this agenda on education is all about.

Does anybody think they have spent adequate time reflecting on educational changes that are going to improve the educational system? Absolutely not. These changes all have to do with taking money out of our school systems and that's what this is all about.

He uses reform as an excuse to bleed money from our Ontario system. These are agents of deception, and the public watching should know this. I urge the teachers who are here and watching to fight this government on the changes that are about to be announced.

1340

COURTICE COMMUNITY COMPLEX

Mr John O'Toole (Durham East): It's a real pleasure to see the new pages and their fresh faces here today.

I have some good news to share from my riding of Durham East, which I am very pleased to share with the members of the House today.

An official ceremony was held September 13, 1997, to mark the opening of the new Courtice Community Complex. The $700,000 project was completed under the Canadian-Ontario infrastructure works program, with each partner — federal, provincial and municipal — contributing one third to the total cost. The funds were spent on the provision of a leisure pool, fitness centre, community hall and a brand-new library.

This project is an excellent investment in people, in community and in our future. The Canadian-Ontario infrastructure program is not about bricks and mortar; it's all about improving people's lives.

I wish to thank all the community for their contribution and congratulate Minister Marilyn Mushinski, who opened the official ceremonies; Stephanie Creighton, chair of the library board; Mayor Diane Hamre; Ian Smith, campaign chair of the Courtice Community Complex; Brad Greentree and all the hard-working volunteers; and, more important, the chief librarian of the area, Cynthia Mearns, for her hard work and commitment to bring services to the people in my riding of Durham East.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor-Sandwich): As the House is aware, we have been chasing the Minister of Health and asking him repeatedly to release funding to Windsor-area hospitals. The response to that has been a cut, over two years, of $28 million, this at the same time as our hospitals are forced to spend over $6 million each on restructuring costs over the last two years, none of which has been rebated by the ministry.

What we found out in Windsor is that restructuring is a very costly process. I suggest to all members of this House that you will be finding out this same thing. As they are being forced to close and to merge, it is indeed an expensive process.

Because our hospitals have had to spend over $6 million each without being reimbursed by the ministry, as they should be, and as in only this last budget has money for restructuring costs been added, we unfortunately have lost hospital services before our community was prepared to accept those services in other ways.

Today's newspaper: "Mom Dies After Missed ER Diagnosis." This in a Windsor hospital leads many Windsorites to ask questions: Is this because the Minister of Health has once again failed the Windsor community, when indeed he should have come forward with funding that we identified was requested, namely, $110 million which has yet to arrive at Windsor's doorstep?

Again I ask the Minister of Health to come forward immediately.

NORTH BAY DAYS OF ACTION

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): Today marks the official kickoff of the North Bay Days of Action, and this next week promises to see many activities, many people working hard together to bring home a political point to the Premier of this province.

As I reported last week, Phil White, the owner of a North Bay deli, is honouring the protest with a special sandwich named for North Bay's MPP, Mike Harris, called the Sink Harris Sub. Another speciality on his menu is the Great Golden Banana, a frozen banana dipped in chocolate and nuts, "much like our MPP," says White.

As the activities begin, there are ordinary people bringing forth their points of view of why they are participating. For example, Trevor Knight from North Bay, a support worker at a group home for five developmentally handicapped people which was closed as a result of the Harris government cuts, says: "The Bay Days provide everyday people with an opportunity to stand up and have a voice. I will be joining thousands of people to show the Premier that by not caring or listening, his political days are numbered and we're taking back our Ontario."

Diane Gallupe from Callander says: "I'm participating in the Days of Action because I'm tired of seeing the social network that my parents and grandparents worked very hard for slip away."

People are joining together. The Days of Action are launched today. There will be activities all through this week. We invite people from across Ontario to join with us in making the political statement to Harris: "This is our Ontario. We're going to take it back."

ROBERT "JACK" HARRIS

Mr Jim Brown (Scarborough West): I rise today in this Legislature to honour the memory of a former member of this Legislature who represented Beaches-Woodbine.

Major Robert John Harris was born September 16, 1917, in Toronto. He passed away on June 12 of this year in Toronto East General Hospital. The hospital was founded by his father, Joseph Henry Harris, in 1929.

Jack Harris was an MPP in the Beaches from 1962 to 1967. In that time he served as chief government whip. He made several noteworthy contributions to this country and province and to the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party.

He was a veteran of the Second World War. He entered the war as a lieutenant captain of the 48th Highlanders regiment, and after five years of wartime service in Italy, France, Holland and Germany, Mr Harris returned home wearing the rank of major.

He was elected to the Legislature in a by-election in 1961. After only one year in office, he returned to the polls in 1963 for a general election which he also claimed. He also served as vice-chair of the Ontario Liquor Control Board.

His service to the community was commendable. He was a director on the board of governors of Toronto East General Hospital. He was a member of the board of the Toronto East Young Men's Christian Association. He was a member of Acacia Lodge, the Royal Canadian Legion and the Scarborough Golf and Country Club.

He and his wife of 49 years, Mary, were both active members of St Aidan's and St Saviour's Anglican churches. His funeral was held at St Saviour's Anglican Church on June 14. A capacity crowd filled the church to pay tribute to a beloved member of the community. A piper from the 48th Highlanders played the lament.

Mr Harris is survived by two children, Jodie and David. He was predeceased by his son William.

He will be remembered well in East Toronto for his countless contributions to the community, and I'm honoured to recognize him in the House today.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CITY OF YORK ACT, 1997

Mr Colle moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill Pr90, An Act respecting the City of York.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

EDUCATION QUALITY IMPROVEMENT ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR L'AMÉLIORATION DE LA QUALITÉ DE L'ÉDUCATION

Mr Snobelen moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 160, An Act to reform the education system, protect classroom funding, and enhance accountability, and make other improvements consistent with the Government's education quality agenda, including improved student achievement and regulated class size / Projet de loi 160, Loi visant à réformer le système scolaire, à protéger le financement des classes, à accroître l'obligation de rendre compte et à apporter d'autres améliorations compatibles avec la politique du gouvernement en matière de qualité de l'éducation, y compris l'amélioration du rendement des élèves et la réglementation de l'effectif des classes.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1349 to 1354.

The division bells rang from 1349 to 1354.

The Speaker: All those in favour please rise one at a time to be recognized by the Clerk.

1400

Ayes

Arnott, Ted	Johns, Helen	Sampson, Rob
Baird, John R.	Johnson, Bert	Shea, Derwyn
Beaubien, Marcel	Johnson, David	Sheehan, Frank
Brown, Jim	Jordan, W. Leo	Skarica, Toni
Chudleigh, Ted	Klees, Frank	Snobelen, John
Cunningham, Dianne	Leach, Al	Spina, Joseph
Danford, Harry	Marland, Margaret	Sterling, Norman W.
Elliott, Brenda	Martiniuk, Gerry	Stewart, R. Gary
Ford, Douglas B.	Maves, Bart	Tilson, David
Froese, Tom	Munro, Julia	Tsubouchi, David H.
Galt, Doug	Murdoch, Bill	Turnbull, David
Gilchrist, Steve	Mushinski, Marilyn	Vankoughnet, Bill
Grimmett, Bill	Newman, Dan	Villeneuve, Noble
Hardeman, Ernie	O'Toole, John	Wilson, Jim
Harnick, Charles	Ouellette, Jerry J.	Witmer, Elizabeth
Harris, Michael D.	Parker, John L.	Wood, Bob
Hodgson, Chris	Pettit, Trevor	Young, Terence H.
Hudak, Tim	Ross, Lillian
Jackson, Cameron	Runciman, Robert W.

The Speaker: All those opposed please rise one at a time to be recognized by the Clerk.

Nays

Bartolucci, Rick	Gravelle, Michael	Morin, Gilles E.
Boyd, Marion	Hampton, Howard	North, Peter
Bradley, James J.	Hoy, Pat	Patten, Richard
Brown, Michael A.	Kennedy, Gerard	Phillips, Gerry
Christopherson, David	Kwinter, Monte	Pouliot, Gilles
Churley, Marilyn	Lalonde, Jean-Marc	Pupatello, Sandra
Cleary, John C.	Lankin, Frances	Ramsay, David
Colle, Mike	Laughren, Floyd	Sergio, Mario
Conway, Sean G.	Lessard, Wayne	Silipo, Tony
Cullen, Alex	Marchese, Rosario	Wildman, Bud
Curling, Alvin	Martin, Tony	Wood, Len
Gerretsen, John	McLeod, Lyn
Grandmaître, Bernard	Miclash, Frank

Clerk of the House (Mr Claude L. DesRosiers): The ayes are 55; the nays are 37.

The Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

MOTIONS

HOUSE SITTINGS

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): I move that, pursuant to standing order 9(c), the House shall meet from 6:30 pm to 9:30 pm on Tuesday, September 23, 1997, and Wednesday, September 24, 1997, for the purpose of considering government business.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

I declare the motion carried.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

EDUCATION REFORM

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): This government is committed to the goal of having the highest student achievement in Canada and providing that education in the most cost-effective way.

Ontario has not kept pace with the other provinces or countries. The Globe and Mail recently described Ontario as the caboose at the end of the education train. We're not satisfied with that position. We're working to provide our students with a strong grasp of the skills they'll need to have successful careers in today's competitive economy.

Last year, we announced our intention to move Ontario students to the head of the class. We've been meeting that commitment by introducing a clear, challenging, consistent province-wide curriculum, regular province-wide testing and a standard report card. These initiatives will ensure that students have the skills to move ahead and that parents can clearly understand how their child is progressing. We're building a new four-year secondary school program which is streamed and has a more rigorous curriculum. We have passed legislation that will reduce the number of politicians and bureaucrats and will remove waste and duplication.

Now we're taking the next step in our comprehensive plan for education. A few minutes ago, I introduced the Education Quality Improvement Act. The act is the result of months of hard work. I want to recognize the efforts of the many people who have contributed to this bill. First, the contribution of the Education Improvement Commission. Their recent report, The Road Ahead, provides insight into the importance of limiting class size and raising the level of student achievement.

Currently, school boards and unions often make agreements that increase class sizes. Parents are concerned that large classes affect their child's ability to learn. We share that concern. Under our proposals, boards would no longer be able to increase class sizes.

In their report, the EIC recommended that students would benefit from more instructional time in the school year. It makes no sense to me that Ontario students receive fewer hours of instruction than students in Switzerland, Jordan and Slovenia. We recognize that student achievement goes up when students spend more time with their teachers. The EIC indicated that although elementary teachers spend the same average number of hours in the classroom as teachers in other provinces, high school teachers do not. We believe high school teachers should be able to spend more time with their students. If this bill is passed, it would allow the government to set standards for the amount of time teachers spend in the classroom.

In addition to the EIC, I also want to recognize the fruitful discussions that we've had with parents, teachers and school boards. Their positive suggestions have helped ensure the introduction of good, effective legislation.

This bill would help to ensure a smooth transition to new school boards by improving the governance of schools, increasing parental involvement and simplifying the financing of the education system.

The bill proposes that advisory school councils would be established in every school. This would increase the opportunities for parents in the community to become more involved in the education of their children. School councils would advise principals on student discipline, student safety and on local priorities.

The bill proposes that the province would be responsible for setting all education property tax rates. We promised to cut residential education property taxes in half. Today I'm pleased to announce that we're keeping that promise. This legislation would introduce a province-wide, uniform residential education tax rate beginning in 1998. Residential education tax revenues would be cut from $5 billion to $2.5 billion and the rate would be frozen.

In this act, along with the two fair municipal finance acts, the government would make property taxes fairer and more consistent across the province. With these changes, owners of residential properties with the same assessed value would pay the same education property tax, no matter where that property is.

A uniform rate structure for residential property taxes is fair and is consistent with this government's plan to ensure that students across the province have equal access to high-quality education. It makes sense to pay tax at the same rate for a common service that benefits us all. This approach would solve the problem of spiralling education taxes. School boards would no longer need to be in the taxing business.

As I announced last Friday, the bill would not limit free collective bargaining. During the transition and after, unions and school boards will bargain freely under the provisions of the Labour Relations Act. Negotiations for a first collective agreement would begin on January 1. Existing terms would continue during the new negotiations.

The bill would allow us to set standards for quality. These standards would include the amount of instructional time, length of the school year and enhancing student access to professionals with the special expertise that they need. These are educational standards that should not be used as a bargaining chip.

We know that the best options are those in which teachers, school boards and the government work together. We've listened to their input. We've found flexibility in meeting our objectives without compromising any of them and we will work together to build a new, better, more accountable education system.

This bill is a significant step forward for our children.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): What a hypocritical piece of verbiage. This has nothing to do —

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Order. Order, member for Scarborough East. I ask the member to withdraw.

Mrs McLeod: I withdraw, but I tell you that none of this, none of it, is about educational reform and it certainly has nothing to do with "education quality improvement," to quote the name of the act. This is all about money and control and about nothing else. It is about this government and the Minister of Education wanting to control the purse-strings and make all the rules and then dump all the responsibility on to local school boards to make it work, and all the blame on to teachers and school trustees when it won't work.

It cannot work. It cannot work for students because this government has already squeezed the educational budget and Mike Harris needs even more money, at least another $1 billion for his tax cut. Boards and teachers are going to be forced to do battle to figure out how to make the minister's new rules work, when the minister has no intention of providing enough money to give this a fair chance.

We have just had a new omnibus bill for education tabled today. We cannot know yet all the details of what the minister is doing in this bill. I do know that in his statement, because this bill is at least something about collective bargaining for teachers, there is no mention that he is going to repeal Bill 100, the bill that currently governs teachers' bargaining rights. With the repeal of Bill 100 he removes the Education Relations Commission, the sole body which has ensured that students' jeopardy in the event of a strike is monitored. He's taking away all protection for students in the collective bargaining situation.

It is clear that this government is trying to avoid a province-wide fight, which the government has realized it can't win. I don't know why they wanted to pick that fight in the first place, because Mike Harris didn't need to fight at a provincial level. He can leave all the fighting to the local level and just wash his hands of the responsibility of it. That's what the Minister of Education wants to do with this bill today.

It's going to be a little tougher in education to wash their hands of responsibility, because they are going to control all of the dollars, and now they want to control class size so that they can say, "We've limited class size." The problem is they won't give the boards enough money to reduce class sizes. They're going to expect the boards to find the money by cutting somewhere else. The minister even suggests that boards and teachers have reached "agreements that increase class size" in the past. He could have taken time to get the grammar right, but I'll let that go. I do want to say that the only situations in which I have ever seen agreements reached between boards and teachers that increase class size is when they are forced to do it by government cuts and that's the only way they can save junior kindergarten or keep class sizes in grades 1 and 2 lower.

Now the boards are going to be forced to cut preparation time and see extracurriculars disappear and maybe 6,000 to 10,000 teachers' jobs so that the Minister of Education can cut another half a billion dollars in prep time. They're going to be forced to contract out custodial and secretarial services in the hopes that part-time and temporary help will save dollars. They're going to be forced to replace guidance teachers and technology teachers and teacher-librarians and music and art and phys ed teachers with non-teachers. They'll be forced to do all this and much more because this government will set class sizes but they will not fund them.

The government may be stepping back from provincial fights, but it is creating conditions for bitter, divisive battles at the local level, battles between teachers and trustees and between parents and trustees, battles which cannot achieve anything but to hurt kids, because this province is putting all the responsibility on local boards and it is taking away all the ability to find local solutions that work for students.

The government is indeed taking over taxing property for education. They don't know yet how it's going to be done; that's one of those details for the future, like funding formulas, which we will not see for at least two months, the minister says.

1410

I think Ottawa and Metropolitan Toronto should not take much assurance from the statement that taxes are going to stay in the community, because of course the province is going to tax homes 50% less for education; they've dumped all the other services on the property tax base. But it is very unlikely that the province is going to give Toronto and Ottawa back any more dollars for education, so the students in those areas are still going to lose out by millions and millions of dollars.

This minister continues to give a distorted picture of what happens in schools. He notes that class sizes are larger than the number of teachers would indicate. How naïve can he pretend to be? He knows where those teachers are: They're in kindergarten classes and in grade 1 and 2 classes, where you have fewer students than you do in other classes; they're in technology shops and labs, supervising smaller numbers of students for safety reasons; they're in special education classes. That's where the supposedly missing classroom teachers are, and when John Snobelen takes control, they will undoubtedly disappear.

The commission said one thing that this minister has refused to answer to, and that is, "Put money back into education." Until he does that —

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): It's interesting that this minister cannot ever speak about anything related to education without bad-mouthing the system. To describe Ontario's education system as "the caboose at the end of the education train" indicates the whole attitude of this minister, who has attempted to create a crisis and undermine the confidence the people of Ontario have in the education system ever since he was appointed to this portfolio.

The fact is that this government intends to take $1 billion more, over and above what it has already cut out of classroom education, despite the promise the Tories made in the last provincial election. His euphemism, "the most cost-effective way," is simply a way of the minister saying he intends to take another $1 billion out of education. However he tries to dress it up, he cannot ignore the fact that when he says school boards in this province are going to have the same sort of funding, are going to have the same sort of service and the same system of taxation for that common service across Ontario, what he's talking about is a race to the bottom in terms of quality of education in Ontario for the students of this province.

The minister tries to say he is not limiting free collective bargaining. In other words, he is saying that because he said he was going to withdraw the teachers' right to strike that they've had for over 20 years in this province, and because he was going to take principals and vice-principals out of the bargaining unit and because he was going to end the situation where members of the teaching profession must be members of the federations in order to teach, somehow he has not affected free collective bargaining.

Here's news for you, Minister: Teachers have been bargaining on behalf of the students as well as themselves for 20 years in this province and they intend to continue to do so. You cannot take the right to determine class size, to determine pupil-teacher ratio away from free collective bargaining and argue that you haven't affected free collective bargaining. You're limiting free collective bargaining through this legislation.

The minister tries to ignore the fact that teachers don't just negotiate their working conditions; they negotiate the educational conditions for the students in their classrooms. The teachers are concerned about the quality of education as it relates to the kids in their classrooms. The teachers know that a government that is determined to take $1 billion out of education is not interested in the quality of education for students in the classrooms of Ontario. The fact this government has said it can do that without affecting quality education indicates either the minister doesn't understand how education funding works in Ontario or he doesn't care. I suspect it's the latter of the two.

The minister cannot say he will make regulations with regard to the length of the school year, the length of instructional time and at the same time say he's not affecting free collective bargaining. The fact is that teachers are determined to protect their right to negotiate not only on behalf of themselves, but on behalf of the quality of education and their students in Ontario.

There is another piece of legislation before this House that is going to return the right of cottagers in cottage country to vote for school boards. After seeing this legislation, I don't understand why it makes any difference who gets to vote for school boards in this province, because school boards are completely emasculated by this legislation. On the one hand, the government is taking the money away from the school boards and, on the other hand, they are going to regulate class size. The fact is, the school boards are not going to be able to make that circle square. You can't take the money out and at the same time protect class size. Class sizes have increased in the past when money has been taken out of education. If you take a billion dollars out and at the same time make a regulation on class size, all it is is an attack on the teachers and on the students of this province.

The government can't have it both ways. Either they're interested in protecting the quality of education, they're interested in local autonomy and local decision-making by school boards or they're interested in taking the money out. The bottom line with regard to all the moves by this government is that they are interested in taking as many tax dollars as possible out of education; they are not interested in protecting the quality of education or free collective bargaining in this province.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): I'd like to take the time to introduce in the Speaker's gallery Mr Peter Nagle, member of Parliament for Auburn, Sydney, New South Wales. Welcome.

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): I wish to welcome the 12th group of pages to serve in this 36th Parliament:

Alexandra Ainley from Simcoe West; Cecilia Bastedo from Muskoka-Georgian Bay; Robert Bevilacqua from York Centre; Meghan Brooks from Wentworth North; Mary Jeanette Burch from Bruce; Matthew Chomyn from Etobicoke-Humber; Katherine Colucci from Mississauga South; Biko Franklin, Wilson Heights; Bradley Griffin, Hamilton West; Lee Ann Harris, York South; Christian Kimmerer, Oshawa; Nicole Lamothe, Windsor-Sandwich; Catherine MacDonald, Kingston and The Islands; Philip MacDonald, London North; Michael McLellan, Wellington; Brian Murnaghan, Willowdale; Daniel Olma, Dufferin-Peel; Krista Renaud, Grey-Owen Sound; Sarah Rice-Bredin, Port Arthur; Lisa Ventola, Halton Centre.

DEFERRED VOTES

COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): We have a deferred vote on a motion for changes to the membership of the standing committees; a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1418 to 1423.

The Speaker: For the record, as you are seated, it's Michael McLellan from Wellington. I have a typo here, so I mispronounced it. Thank you. And if you believe there's a typo —

All those in favour, please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

Ayes

Arnott, Ted	Hodgson, Chris	Pettit, Trevor
Baird, John R.	Hudak, Tim	Ross, Lillian
Bassett, Isabel	Johns, Helen	Runciman, Robert W.
Beaubien, Marcel	Johnson, Bert	Sampson, Rob
Brown, Jim	Johnson, David	Shea, Derwyn
Chudleigh, Ted	Jordan, W. Leo	Sheehan, Frank
Cunningham, Dianne	Kells, Morley	Skarica, Toni
Danford, Harry	Klees, Frank	Snobelen, John
Ecker, Janet	Leach, Al	Spina, Joseph
Elliott, Brenda	Marland, Margaret	Sterling, Norman W.
Eves, Ernie L.	Martiniuk, Gerry	Stewart, R. Gary
Ford, Douglas B.	Maves, Bart	Tilson, David
Froese, Tom	McLean, Allan K.	Tsubouchi, David H.
Galt, Doug	Munro, Julia	Turnbull, David
Gilchrist, Steve	Murdoch, Bill	Vankoughnet, Bill
Grimmett, Bill	Mushinski, Marilyn	Villeneuve, Noble
Guzzo, Garry J.	Newman, Dan	Wilson, Jim
Hardeman, Ernie	North, Peter	Witmer, Elizabeth
Hamick, Charles	O'Toole, John	Wood, Bob
Harris, Michael D.	Ouellette, Jerry J.	Young, Terence H.
Hastings, John	Parker, John L.

The Speaker: All those opposed, please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

Nays

Bartolucci, Rick	Gerretsen, John	McLeod, Lyn
Boyd, Marion	Grandmaître, Bernard	Miclash, Frank
Bradley, James J.	Gravelle, Michael	Morin, Gilles E.
Brown, Michael A.	Hampton, Howard	Patten, Richard
Caplan, David	Hoy, Pat	Phillips, Gerry
Castrilli, Annamarie	Kennedy, Gerard	Pouliot, Gilles
Christopherson, David	Kwinter, Monte	Pupatello, Sandra
Churley, Marilyn	Lalonde, Jean-Marc	Ramsay, David
Cleary, John C.	Lankin, Frances	Sergio, Mario
Colle, Mike	Laughren, Floyd	Silipo, Tony
Cullen, Alex	Lessard, Wayne	Wildman, Bud
Curling, Alvin	Marchese, Rosario	Wood, Len
Duncan, Dwight	Martin, Tony

Clerk of the House (Mr Claude L. DesRosiers): The ayes are 62; the nays are 38.

The Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

TIME ALLOCATION

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: You will know with the rule changes that it is required that members file a written note to the Speaker at least one hour prior to when this may be brought up. I have done so. In the interests of time, I would like to read the body of my point of privilege. It's pursuant to standing order 26(c).

I believe that the time allocation motion on Bill 136 is compromising my privileges as a member of this assembly, specifically the provisions related to public hearings. According to the time allocation motion, I have only one hour of the next sessional day between the end of public hearings on Bill 136 at 5 pm, Friday, September 26, and the time required to file amendments to the legislation with the committee clerk at 10 am, Monday, September 29, to fully consider the values of the presentations at the hearings, give weight to possible amendments, have amendments drafted in legal form.

While the standing orders are silent on the specific allocation of preparation time for clause-by-clause, I submit to you that in the case of controversial and complex legislation such as Bill 136, in the absence of all-party agreement, the practice, the precedent, the usage and the custom has been to allow for a reasonable period of preparation time for the filing and consideration of amendments in committee.

I respectfully request that you rule on my point of privilege and find that the time allocation motion on Bill 136 indeed infringes, in practice, in precedent, in usage and in custom, on my privilege as a member of this assembly in being able to carry out my duties.

1430

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): I would like to add the concerns of our caucus in the same matter. Not only is it impractical to expect that amendments can be concluded in such a short period of time, but without having the actual amendments to Bill 136, which the minister has announced are going to cause a major rewriting of the bill, how do we know what amendments we are offering to an amended bill when we haven't seen their amendments? The whole time allocation motion very much denies our rights, as members of this House in opposition, to provide effective, considered, responsible, credible opposition to the government when (a) we don't have the time to do the job and (b) we don't have the information.

If I can, I would also say that today the subcommittee meets. The hearings are supposed to start tomorrow. The advertising has not started. How does anybody even know when they're going to speak this week since there is no preparation time and, again, what is it they speak to when they make a submission when we haven't seen the government's amendments?

This is a very serious matter, Speaker, and I would urge you on behalf of both opposition parties to give it as much consideration as you can.

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): This is just a normal process. The time allocation motion that's been put forward —

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Order.

Hon David Johnson: The motion put forward specifies four days of public hearings.

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): What on?

Mr Christopherson: What on?

Hon David Johnson: On Bill 136.

The Speaker: Order. Members of the opposition, I ask you to come to order. I listened to your points of order. With respect, the government didn't heckle. I ask you to do the same.

Hon David Johnson: Clearly, many members will speak to the bill. They can speak to the amendments they wish to put forward. There is no difference in this particular committee from any other committee. There have been extensive consultations that have taken place over quite a period of time through the Ministry of Labour with various interest groups. These public hearings will be an extension of that.

All parties will be represented on this committee. They have four days, which is four days more than we had during the social contract period, I might add for the benefit of the third party. There is a weekend period between the final day of the public hearings and the clause-by-clause. There is the ability over that weekend period to consider any amendments that are coming out of the process in the clause-by-clause period, two days of clause-by-clause.

There is nothing unusual about this. Indeed, this is the kind of process this House has undertaken with many other bills and I don't think there are any particular grounds to rule this out of order.

Mr Patten: The government House leader knows full well that this is not a normal procedure. I contend that only in cases in which you had all-party agreement would you have such a short period of time in which to consider, draft and submit your amendments. When the House leader says that this is normal, that this is procedure, this is the procedure according to the new day and the new thinking of this government and their rule changes, to try to not allow members to fulfil their duties and responsibilities in the most adequate way possible. In this particular instance it does not provide an opportunity to do such.

Mr Christopherson: I will be very brief. The government House leader speaks to the issue of consultation and the fact that they had consultation. You, Speaker, and the rest of this House and the whole province know that there was absolutely no consultation with the labour movement when they brought in Bill 136 — none whatsoever. The issue for us on privilege — and of course we had the political debate around the time allocation and how we felt about that, but this very much is a matter of privilege, given the fact that these are not normal circumstances, and the government House leader knows that.

His minister, the member sitting right beside him, stood up last week and announced a major gutting and rewriting of Bill 136 but has still not provided the written amendments. What exactly are we expecting people to comment on next week, and how are we supposed to consider input, such as it is, at 4:59 on Friday, when from 5 o'clock until Monday morning at 10 is the only time we have to make the amendments? I would point out that that afternoon we begin debating on those amendments.

Speaker, with regard to the time allocation motion, our privileges as members have definitely been breached and we would ask you and implore you to look at the fact that the announcement last week changed the ball game significantly from any other we've ever experienced in the history of this province.

Hon David Johnson: There's no basis on which announcements of amendments that the government is prepared in a general sense to consider would affect the flow of the committee activity.

The public is invited to come and reflect upon the bill, to give their views on the bill and how the bill would work. There's no difference in this. Because certain amendments were suggested in a general context does not take away from the ability of the deputants to come and speak to the bill and to what they would like to see in the bill.

The Speaker: I want to thank the members who made their positions known, the members for Hamilton Centre, Ottawa Centre and the government House leader. I thank the member for Ottawa Centre for submitting the motion in the proper form before the House today.

Let me just say first off that this time allocation motion is by its nature a time allocation motion, meaning that certain privileges and rights that we expect under normal procedures in fact suffer. There would not be any need for a time allocation or a guillotine motion if the government at the time didn't in fact decide this is what needed to be done to push through whatever piece of legislation they were dealing with.

The argument that you're making, that you are suffering personally because of that time allocation motion, may be a very valid argument, but by its very nature that's what happens when governments introduce time allocation motions. That's what fundamentally is designed to happen. You're dealing with a bill rather more quickly, considerably quicker, than you would in any other normal way. In fact, Erskine May, in the 21st edition, speaks to it very clearly on page 408:

"Allocation of time orders," or guillotine motions

"In many sessions in order to secure the passage of particularly important and controversial legislation, governments have been confronted with the choice, unless special powers are taken, of cutting down their normal program to an undesirable extent, or of prolonging the sittings of Parliament, or else of acknowledging the impotence of the majority of the House in the face of the resistance of the minority. In such circumstances resort is had sooner or later to the most drastic method of curtailing debate known to procedure, namely, the setting of a date by which a committee must report, or the allocation of a specified number of days to the various stages of a bill and of limited amounts of time to particular portions of a bill. Orders made under this procedure are known as 'allocation of time' orders, and colloquially as 'guillotine' motions. They may be regarded as the extreme limit to which procedure goes in affirming the rights of the majority at the expense of the minorities of the House, and it cannot be denied that they are capable of being used in such a way as to upset the balance, generally so carefully preserved, between the claims of business and the rights of debate. But the harshness of this procedure is to some extent mitigated either by consultations between the party leaders or in the business committee in order to establish the greatest possible measure of agreement as to the most satisfactory disposal of the time available."

The bottom line is simply, yes, you're right, but time allocations are designed to do just that. I don't find that there is any privilege that's been usurped here.

ORAL QUESTIONS

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): My question is for the Minister of Education. A parent came into my constituency office on Friday afternoon with his 12-year-old daughter. He wanted her to tell me about her class at McKellar Park school. She's in a split grade 6-grade 7 class with 31 students. It's actually the smallest intermediate class in that school. They have exactly seven mathematics texts for these 31 students. The photocopying budget has been cut by 20% again this year and the teacher is buying pencils for the students out of his own pocket.

Minister, you're about to take control of both the financing of education and the setting of class sizes. Will you provide enough money to lower class sizes and provide textbooks for every student, or will you expect local school boards to cut teachers' salaries and contract out school maintenance and use non-teachers in the classrooms so they can find the money to meet your new rules?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): The references that the member for Fort William makes today to a lack of classroom supplies in some cases, to large class sizes, are exactly the reason why we made a commitment some months ago to take over responsibility for the funding of education, to make sure every student in Ontario, no matter where they are, has the opportunity for a first-quality education. That's the reason we've lifted that burden from school boards and taken it on as a province. The bill I put forward today would allow us to advance on that, would allow us to make sure that we have control of class sizes for the very first time in this province. I think it's a step forward for the students of Ontario.

1440

Mrs McLeod: I'm sure we know — perhaps you don't, Minister — that nothing you have done today is about educational reform or about bettering education for students. It is all about money. So I want to talk to you about money and I want to talk to you about students.

Your cuts have already forced boards to shut down junior kindergarten programs. Your cuts have already devastated adult education. Your cuts have forced cuts to special education and library services and physical education and guidance and music. Your cuts have already meant teacher layoffs and larger class sizes and fewer courses for secondary school students to choose from.

Minister, you cannot fix any of this unless you give school boards the money to fix it with. You are going to make all the rules. You are going to control all the dollars. You are going to dump all the blame for what happens on the local school board. Will you at least give back the money you have stolen from education and guarantee there will be no more cuts?

Hon Mr Snobelen: The member for Fort William will know that there has been a tradition, there has been a problem with spiralling education property taxes across the province. I don't think that's any —

Mr Gilles Pouliot (Lake Nipigon): It's all right to steal, but not to lie.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): The member for Lake Nipigon, you must withdraw that comment. It's out of order.

Mr Pouliot: All I said, Speaker, is that it was all right to steal, but not to lie.

The Speaker: I don't need an explanation.

Mr Pouliot: I will withdraw it.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Minister.

Hon Mr Snobelen: I know it won't be any news to the constituents in the member's riding that there have been spiralling education costs on the property taxes. The bill we've put forward today would allow this government to take responsibility for funding. We've said we're committed to making sure that there are sufficient funds available for every student in the province of Ontario. We intend to be held to account for that promise. We will be. We have experts working with us to make sure that happens.

We just put a bill in the House that will end spiralling property taxes for education, that will end spiralling class sizes, which is the other way that education has been deteriorating in the province. It will end both of those things, and the member for Fort William just voted against its introduction. I don't understand that.

Mrs McLeod: Where education taxes have been raised, they have been raised to make up for this government's cuts and to try to protect their board's ability to meet the needs of students. Minister, you talk about equity, you talk about funding formulas that will meet the needs of students, but you're not going to show us the funding formulas for at least two months. People look at what you have done and nobody believes you when you talk about fairness for students.

The Lakehead Board of Education has looked at what it will cost to extend the school year, one of your promises. It will be an extra $274,000. They don't think you're likely going to pay for that with some new money. They've looked at your funding formula proposals for special education and they fear they are going to lose half of what they now spend to meet the needs of their special needs students. They've looked at your proposals for plant maintenance funding and they come up as much as $3 million short.

Minister, boards are looking at this and they are afraid of what you are about to do to them and to their students; teachers are afraid of what you are going to do to them and to their students; and parents are afraid of what you are going to do to their children. Will you get past meaningless words and arbitrary formulas and show us where the money is, Minister?

Hon Mr Snobelen: I can show you clearly where the money has been going in education over the course of the last decade. I think the member for Fort William should know that. I believe we've had a number of studies done in Ontario that have suggested doing what we are doing in this bill, which is having the province take responsibility for making sure the funds are there for our children in their classrooms. We will do that. In order to do that, we have sent out some expert panels who will be reporting to us very soon, who will help us set the perimeters for a first-quality education and who will help us make sure the funds are there for our students.

Unlike the member opposite and her government, we do not measure our success by how much we spend. We measure our success by how well our students are doing, and that's where the member will see the improvement.

HOME CARE

Mr Gerard Kennedy (York South): My question is for the Premier. I'm here to talk to you about one of the people who doesn't seem to quite fit into Mike Harris's Ontario. Her name is Stella Matthews. She's 81 years old, she lives in the Cambridge area and she is being looked after by her daughter, Gail Jones, and her son-in-law, Alan Jones, who is here in the gallery watching. They provide 24-hour care. But Premier, since May they have been threatened with the loss of the little bit, the four to five hours of nursing care or homemaker care they get. They are being threatened with the loss of that, and it will happen on Thursday unless somebody in your government is accountable.

Premier, we wish for you to be accountable. I'm sending across to you a picture of Ms Matthews to show you the circumstances. She is being cared for at home in an advanced state of multiple sclerosis —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Question, please.

Mr Kennedy: — with machines that clear her throat, that feed her, but the family cannot do this alone. Will you undertake today to guarantee they will get an answer from the Ministry of Health and from your government today —

The Speaker: Thank you. Premier.

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I think the Minister of Health should respond directly to this.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): I thank the honourable member for the question. I know it's a follow-up to the correspondence he sent to me earlier.

My understanding of the case is twofold. One is that the community care access centre is continuing to provide services, and there is an appeal pending before the Health Services Appeal Board. That's all I can say at this point, except that we are encouraging the community care access centre to continue to provide the services to this individual.

Mr Kennedy: Minister, you should be aware that tomorrow lawyers that you've hired for the community care access centre, private sector lawyers for your ministry, are going to go in to argue that Stella Matthews, who's 81 years old and bedridden, can't be heard at that appeal. So your staff have waited until the nth hour and they've made submissions. Mike McDonald, who's a pro bono lawyer for the family — we don't know what would happen if this family had to hire a lawyer — is here today. He has to go in tomorrow and argue against your ministry just for the right to be heard.

You didn't promulgate sections 72 and 73 of the Long-Term Care Act. It's a very good likelihood that this Health Services Appeal Board won't hear Stella Matthews's case tomorrow and she will lose her care on Thursday.

Minister, it is the height of irresponsibility to put a family providing this intense level of care through this kind of anxiety and stress and grief. Will you end it? Will you do something about mediation, about some other solution? Will you promise to do it today?

Hon Mr Wilson: The honourable member knows I can't comment further on this rather complicated case, that it is before the Health Services Appeal Board, which is a quasi-judicial tribunal. We have to respect that process.

Mr Kennedy: It is important for the whole province, because Stella Matthews is one of what will be many people who will no longer stay in hospitals because this government tells them to leave quicker and sicker, who have been told in rosy language that home care, all kinds of advanced care, will be available for them.

What you did was cut their care from 35 hours down to 19 hours and help create conditions that have led to the situation today where their care is going to be lost altogether. Will you at least inquire into the conditions of where home care is being cut, where this family will lose their care once the Health Services Appeal Board tells them they can't hear it tomorrow?

Minister, you're the only person they can go to. If you don't stand up today and say you'll take some responsibility, then on Thursday this family, and this gentleman here, who says he provides 24-hour care, that his wife sleeps beside his mother because they don't get enough help, that she's got sleep deprivation because they don't have enough care from the government —

The Speaker: Question, please.

Mr Kennedy: This gentleman says his mother-in-law is at risk because of the government. Will you tell him he's wrong?

Hon Mr Wilson: The government didn't take any of the decisions in this case to date. We've increased home care. The case is a little more complicated than the honourable member lets on. Let me just tell you that if the appeal isn't dealt with tomorrow, we will look at the case. Of course we'll look at the case and of course the ministry is involved.

Mr Kennedy: Why wait?

Hon Mr Wilson: "Why wait?" the honourable member says. Because I respect the quasi-judicial process. There is nothing I can do — and you know that, Mr Kennedy — while this is before the Health Services Appeal Board.

1450

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a question to the Minister of Education. There is one question bothering everyone in this province who is concerned about education. That question is, how much more money is the Harris Conservative government going to cut from our children's education?

Minister, you've assumed complete control over education funding, and we understand that your ministry officials have been shopping around possible funding models. My question to you is this: Is it true that the funding model you are now working on would cut the education budgets of every board of education in the province except for the poorest 15? Is that the model you're looking at?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): To the leader of the third party, I want to be very clear that we have made a promise, and that promise is to meet the needs of every student in the province of Ontario for a high-quality education. The reason we are addressing the funding of education in this bill that we introduced today is because we know that the funding formula that currently exists, the general legislative grant programs, makes second-class students of some of our young people in Ontario, and that's not all right with this government. That's why we are working very hard to make sure we can do that, to assure every student in Ontario a high quality of education, because every student in the province is important to us.

Mr Hampton: I asked the minister a very specific question, one that I thought it would be easy for him to answer. I didn't get an answer. What I got was a dance, so let me try again.

Minister, you've said over and over again that you intend to cut a further $1 billion from our children's education in this province. You've said it on several occasions; it's been reported on several occasions. The legislation being introduced today will give you the tools to make those cuts. It's clear that's what it's all about.

The question is, when are you going to tell people how much more money you're going to take from their children's education? When are you going to release your funding model? Answer my question. Is it true that you're working on a model that will cut every board except for the poorest 15?

Hon Mr Snobelen: The leader of the third party is wrong. We have made a very clear public promise. I'll say it again: We'll meet the education needs of every student in Ontario. We'll make sure they get a high quality of education. We'll make sure they don't get the mediocre education that your government left them. We'll make sure that changes.

But let me tell you this: On the funding of education, we have got the expert panels which will be reporting to me in the very near future. When the expert panels have reported, we'll go out and make sure that their recommendations work in the real world on a board-by-board, school-by-school basis. We'll make sure it's right. Then the province will assume the responsibility for education so that we can make sure every student in the province has a high quality of education.

Your speculation is just that, sir; it is speculation. We are going to let the experts tell us what it takes to make sure every student in this province has a good education.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Final supplementary.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): The minister's confidence in experts is quite scary.

The minister has said today that he intends to set regulations to limit class size, which many people in the province would welcome, but at the same time he is going to continue the cuts and take another $1 billion out of education, thus removing almost all of the flexibility for school boards, particularly because he, the minister, will be setting the mill rate and determining the taxation. Boards will no longer have any financial flexibility.

Surely the minister understands that limiting class sizes means that many school boards will need more classroom space and many will need more teachers, particularly at the elementary level. Does the minister intend to increase funding for capital construction and to hire more teachers for school boards so that the funding will be adequate to meet the needs of current and future enrolment in Ontario?

Hon Mr Snobelen: The member for Algoma is quite right when he says that the bill I've introduced today would have the effect of limiting flexibility. Flexibility in increasing property taxes, yes, it will certainly limit that; we'll put a cap on that.

It will also limit flexibility in terms of increasing school class sizes so that we can't have what happened under your government, sir, where we had a 7% increase in class sizes across the province in response to your social contract. Yes, we'll take that flexibility out so that we can't have ever-increasing class sizes, so we can't have the results like in Metro separate, where JK went from 18 to 21, grades 1 and 2 went from 23 to 25, grade 3 went from 28 to 31 and grades 4 to 8 went from 32 to 35 as a result of the negotiations.

Yes, we'll reduce that flexibility, but we'll provide lots of flexibility to get our students to the top of the class in terms of their performance.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a question to the Premier. A whole bunch of people across Ontario, both public sector workers and public sector employers, are wondering now what public sector labour law will look like since your Minister of Labour announced that she is gutting Bill 136.

Here is the situation, Premier: You brought in time allocation, which shuts off debate, the hearings start tomorrow, but no one has seen the amendments, so no one now knows what is in Bill 136. This is a very strange way to deal with important legislation, legislation that is critical to our public services.

Premier, don't you think that public sector workers and public sector employers and the people of Ontario deserve to see what is in your public sector labour law before they go to public hearings and try to talk about it?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I know the Minister of Labour can respond.

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Minister of Labour): As you know, we have been engaged in consultations now throughout the course of the summer and we announced changes on Thursday last week which reflected the fact that we had listened and consulted and we were prepared to make the changes and announce them at this time. In the course of the weekend we have continued to meet with all the major stakeholders and we have shared with them the details. In fact, those meetings are continuing now. In some cases we will be meeting with those stakeholders a second time in order that they understand the details. All of it has been prepared and the amendments will be ready next week. We have all this week for the people in Ontario to respond to the changes we've made.

Mr Hampton: This is the most absurd situation I have ever seen in the 10 years I've been around this Legislature. The government brings in time allocation —

Interjections.

Mr Hampton: Premier, if you want to answer the questions, you can, all right?

The government brings in time allocation, shuts off debate, then the minister stands up and says, "We're going to gut the bill." Now hospital executives, hospital boards, don't know what the labour law is going to be for the public sector. Municipalities don't know what the labour law is going to be for the public sector. Workers don't know what it's going to be. Unions don't know what it's going to be. The minister says there are amendments but she won't show them to anyone. It's as if she's got to hide them away.

Minister, this is absurd. If you want people to be able to contribute to Ontario, show them your amendments so people can see what the proposed law is going to be and then hold the public hearings. At least have that much respect for democracy.

Hon Mrs Witmer: I think the member is somewhat in error when he comments about the amendments. We indicated last week that we are prepared to make changes to the legislation. Tomorrow we will publicly share again with the members of the committee the details of those changes, just as we're doing as we meet now with AMO, with the hospital association, with the OFL, with the police. In fact, we have already indicated to you, unlike what you used to do, the direction we're headed and we are giving people an opportunity to respond to the changes we're making. They have all week.

1500

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Final supplementary.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): Minister, you can appreciate how we might feel about what you say in this place and what you do, given what you did to your promise about travelling around the province and listening to everyone who deserved to be heard.

The majority on the subcommittee of the resources development committee are not buying what you're saying either. They know there is a need to hear the amendments before we have any kind of public input. That committee recommendation goes to the full committee today. Since it's your government backbenchers who form the majority on the committee, will you stand today and urge those government backbenchers to support the subcommittee's recommendation that you indeed table those amendments before the hearings to try to save some shred of credibility, of whatever is left of your reputation in this matter?

Hon Mrs Witmer: I would indicate to you that unlike your government, which had not one day of public hearings on the social contract and which passed the social contract in about three weeks, we have been consulting since July on the bill. In fact, we have even moved forward and indicated to you the changes we're prepared to make and you now have an opportunity to respond to the changes we're proposing.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mrs Witmer: I would just conclude by indicating that I know it's a surprise to the NDP that we have done exactly as we said we would do, and that was to listen, to consult and then to bring forward changes.

Interjections.

Mr Christopherson: You broke your promise. You couldn't tell the truth if your life depended on it.

The Speaker: Member for Hamilton Centre, I ask that you withdraw that comment. That's unparliamentary.

Mr Christopherson: Speaker, she did not tell the truth.

The Speaker: I give you one more opportunity to withdraw it, member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr Christopherson: With great respect, I cannot do that.

The Speaker: I name the member for Hamilton Centre, Mr Christopherson.

Mr Christopherson was escorted from the chamber.

The Speaker: Minister?

Hon Mrs Witmer: This week there's an opportunity for public discussion on the changes we introduced last week, and tomorrow afternoon I will be sharing with the committee further detail on those changes.

VIDEO LOTTERY TERMINALS

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a question for the Premier. It has become apparent today that the report from CISO, the Criminal Intelligence Service of Ontario, is becoming increasingly public. Indeed its contents were the subject of the lead story in the Windsor Star today, which of course headlines the criminal element involved.

You have recently announced 44 permanent casinos, the majority of which will operate year-round, 24 hours a day, and which will contain up to 6,600 video lottery terminals in total, electronic slot machines that are the most alluring and most addictive form of gambling.

The criminal intelligence report states: "Legalized gambling has never replaced illegal gambling. In fact it compliments it. Experts indicate that the introduction of new legal games brings in new players, a significant number of which yield to the lure of illegal gambling activities to satisfy their interests."

Premier, in view of the contents of this report, in view of all the problems that are arising, will you agree to place a moratorium on the spread of video slot machines by keeping them out of the 44 permanent charity casinos and bars and restaurants in Ontario?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I know the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations will answer that.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): I have made inquiries and I have been advised that it is not a CISO document. I haven't seen the report, obviously, but I will say this. There are a couple of indications in the news report of what the concern is. Certainly one part of that is the concern about the poor regulation that has taken place in the bingo industry.

This is a follow-up, I believe, on the CISO report of last year in which certain concerns were addressed and indicated. I am pleased to tell you that despite how poorly the bingo industry had been regulated by prior governments, as of October 1, 1996, the commercial bingo halls have now had to comply with stringent standards regarding internal controls, tracking of paper and audit requirements.

I will also indicate to you that the report from last year, because that was a concern, the member for St Catharines certainly raised it, indicated there was a concern at that point in time about bingo halls, break-open tickets and Monte Carlo nights. It was particularly critical of security at Monte Carlo nights. This is the reason why we're moving to permanent charity gaming clubs.

Mr Bradley: I don't recall mentioning bingos or anything else. I recall video lottery terminals or electronic slot machines, which are the most addictive and alluring form of gambling that we have in the province, and the spread of them to 44 permanent casinos around the province and ultimately to bars and restaurants in Ontario.

Minister, will you assure the House on behalf of the Premier, since the Premier would not, despite what he said during the last election campaign, that this government will never allow the placement of video lottery terminals in bars and restaurants in the neighbourhoods of the towns and villages and cities of Ontario, and will you ensure that those illegal machines which may be in existence today are taken out of existence by the policing of members of the police forces across Ontario?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: We have indicated already that we are looking at video lottery terminals with respect to the racing industry and race tracks and also with respect to charity gaming clubs.

The member seems to be concerned about illegal gaming, as we all are, as I am. I certainly applaud his raising this point. We are a government that believes in providing tools to combat illegal gaming in this province. We have indicated already that we're going to be dedicating about $7 million for additional resources to combat illegal video lotteries and other illegal gambling in this province. This is an increase of the OPP's illegal gaming unit from six officers under prior governments up to 35. We're seconding about eight officers from Metro and we have special prosecutors to make sure we carry through. In addition to that, we have increased the complement of enforcement officers on staff to eight.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Answer, please.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Just to give you an indication, quickly, in 1993 only three charges were laid by the NDP government's —

The Speaker: Thank you very much. New question.

HOSPITAL BEDS

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): My question is to the Minister of Health. Last Friday, I issued a press release exposing the critical shortage of intensive care unit beds in the city of London. All of last week and continuing over the weekend, I understand, there were no intensive care unit beds available at either hospital. Of course, we know that means staffed beds, not the actual bed itself but beds that are staffed by the professionals who care for the patients. When this kind of problem occurs it means that major surgeries have to be cancelled, that there is no capacity to deal with accidents, that patients who are too fragile to be transported have to be looked after in emergency rooms or recovery rooms.

The doctors, nurses and hospital officials in London, who are cooperating fully with you on your restructuring plan, are begging you to begin to reinvest some resources into the critical care units in London to enable them to ensure that critical care is not jeopardized while restructuring goes on. Yet your member for London South says bad news is good, that the crunch indicates your plan is working. Minister, do you agree with the member for London South?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): I think my colleague from London South was pointing out that the NDP cut ICU beds during their time in office by 30% in London. We've not cut one ICU bed in our almost two and a half years in office. You should have put out the press release when you were in office and cut 30% of the ICU beds.

Having said that, the good news that my honourable colleague was pointing out is that the commission is ordering that we go from the current low level of beds and bring back some of the beds that the NDP government cut. They're suggesting we go to 75 or, as indicated in a letter today from Mr Dagnone, the CEO of the London Health Sciences Centre, we probably should go from 75 to 80 ICU beds. We'll be encouraging London to do exactly that.

1510

Mrs Boyd: Minister, you encourage all you like. Does that mean you're going to fund those beds? Does that mean you're going to end some of the cuts that you've made to funding? Hundreds of millions of dollars have come out of those hospitals and you say you're going to encourage them? Encourage them with the money.

Let's listen to what these doctors and nurses say. First of all, Janet Robertson, a 30-year operating room nurse: "I am sick and tired of hearing that patient care is not suffering. I'm seeing very sick people suffering because of the funding cutbacks."

The head of surgery at St Joseph's said that unless funds are made available for staffing additional ICU beds, the whole system is in danger.

Mr Dagnone, whom you just quoted, said, "This is the toughest year I have ever seen in health care." He also said:

"We are having serious difficulties in finding that next bed for that next emergency patient.... We do not have the capacity to meet the demand that is out there.... We are putting a lot of volume through and putting it through with fewer resources."

How long is this going to go on? You try and put the blame on other people. You've been the minister for a year and a half. When are you going to take responsibility?

Hon Mr Wilson: I was astounded that the member who cut the beds had the gall over the weekend to put out a press release blaming this government, that has not cut ICU beds. That credit goes to the London Health Sciences Centre.

Yes, there is pressure on ICU beds because they're getting more referrals. When Mr Dagnone is talking about never seeing a year like it, he's getting more referrals from the outlying areas, and because of our $35-million investment in cardiac care, London Health Sciences Centre has been asked to do an extra 200 cardiac surgeries. He points out in his remarks to you, to the media and to me that those 200 surgeries all eventually have to go through ICU and it's putting pressure on the beds.

The commission is recognizing that pressure. It's asking the government to fund more beds, to restore the beds the NDP cut, and we're going to do that.

SELF-MANAGEMENT

Mr Tim Hudak (Niagara South): My question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Minister, I know your ministry is moving towards self-management of a number of business sectors that your ministry currently regulates. I support these measures and encourage you in that. In fact, I sat on the justice committee for Bill 54, the Safety and Consumer Statutes Administration Act, and I know it's part of your ministry business plan.

On behalf of the travel agents in particular from Fort Erie, Port Colborne and Wainfleet, my question today is, what progress has the ministry made towards the smooth transition to self-management and how are you ensuring that consumers are protected in this process?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): The government clearly indicated our intention in Bill 54 to move towards industry self-management in industries that were felt to be mature. This would include certain functions such as administration, licensing and some of the enforcement functions.

We will ensure that the consumer is protected because we're talking about self-management and not about self-regulation. The government still retains our regulatory functions to set standards and monitor the performance of the Travel Industry Council of Ontario. TICO started operations on June 25, 1997, and also manages the travel industry compensation fund.

To ensure a seamless transition to the new self-managed, non-profit organization, MCCR will supply staff and technical support for the first six months. Our ministry will maintain responsibility for consumer protection since the consumer legislation and regulations will still fall under our responsibility. We also have indicated we will have government representation but also consumer representation on these councils.

I would like to take this time to quickly applaud —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): You'll have to do that in the supplementary.

Mr Hudak: I'm pleased to hear there's success emanating from Bill 54. I'm also pleased to hear that you'll still maintain representation on the board.

The other side of the coin is, how can we maintain consumer protection? What steps can the ministry take to make sure that the interests of consumers are satisfied?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: As I indicated earlier on, part of what we're trying to do to ensure that the consumer is protected in Ontario is that we have a government ministry official who has been appointed to the board by the name of Sue Corke. Second, we have a couple of representatives from consumers, one of whom is Lillian Morgenthau, who represents the Canadian Association of Retired Persons.

I'd like to emphasize that what we're doing here is self-management, not self-regulation. We will continue to regulate and monitor the industries. We have the right, of course, to appoint members to sit on these industries. We have the right to require annual reports and reporting back on individual cases. Certainly the important thing to remember here is that we will maintain the regulatory function.

Since June 25, TICO has laid charges under the Travel Industry Act. They have taken some steps such as suspending travel agents' registrations, and they have conducted a number of investigations.

HOME CARE

Mr Gerard Kennedy (York South): I want to go back to the Minister of Health with regard to the situation of Stella Matthews. You said you had to wait for the Health Services Appeal Board. You're aware that the Health Services Appeal Board cannot hear — at least in a number of cases in the past they have actually decided they cannot hear appeals on long-term care.

If the Health Services Appeal Board tomorrow says they can't hear Stella Matthews's case, she will be left without care come Thursday. Why are you sending expensive lawyers in to prepare briefs, to prepare cases — we understand there are two sets of them, for your ministry and for the community access centre — when you know in advance that Ms Matthews will be turned down on a technicality of your government's making? You have not made that board available to hear appeals on home care. Will you stand up today, perhaps with this new information, and perhaps change the way you can respond to this as a result? The Matthews family would much appreciate it.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): The honourable member is making it sound like the family is not receiving care now. My understanding from the community care access centre directly is that they are continuing to provide the home care while this very complex matter is being dealt with before the appeal board. I have never heard, except for the allegation made today during his press conference in his office at 1 o'clock, that the family is going to be cut off come next Thursday or whenever.

Our assurance is the community care access centre will continue to provide care, and they all have a right to appear before the Health Services Appeal Board. We have to respect that process. I don't know what the outcome will be tomorrow. I don't even know whether it will all be solved tomorrow. It's just that we're going to try to keep providing care and see what the appeal board says. That's the best I can tell the honourable member at this point.

Mr Kennedy: I spoke to the people in your ministry. They directed that care would continue only until Thursday — your ministry, not the community care centre. Both your ministry and the community care centre are arguing tomorrow in this quasi-judicial court that Stella Matthews cannot be heard. They've got her running around in a loop that doesn't end — except on Thursday. They have said conclusively they will not provide care beyond September 25.

At least today, if you, like many of us here, disagree that they should be pushed to the precipice like this, to not know whether that care will be there on Thursday, will you agree to ensure that that care is there for the foreseeable future until this family can get the care and the attention it deserves?

Hon Mr Wilson: I cannot comment further on this case.

1520

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY OFFICE

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): I have a question for the Attorney General with respect to his mismanaged family support plan. It has been over a year since the regional office closed in Windsor with respect to the family support plan. Women who are owed support can't get through to the 1-800 line. Their faxes and their letters go unresponded to, and they don't get the cheques because they are either lost or delayed.

I want to tell you about Sharon Stockford. She lives in Windsor. She has been receiving money from the plan since 1990, and she had never had any problems until January of this year, after the regional office was closed. She has been trying to find someone to listen to her since June of this year, to inform them that one of her children is no longer residing at home. She recognizes that the payor is paying too much and that she is not entitled to the money. She is worried that she is going to be penalized later on.

Regular payments have been bungled since January, and she knows that this is going to complicate her payment schedule. When are you going to start listening to women like Sharon? When are you going to clean up this mess? When are you going to take steps to ensure that women can be heard and their problems dealt with?

Hon Charles Harnick (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): I appreciate the question, because I understand that the Family Responsibility Office attempted to contact your constituency office last week to find out if there were any cases that you needed assistance on. Apparently, your phones weren't turned on, and someone from the NDP caucus office said to call back a week later.

If there is a problem, the member has been advised to let us know and we will look at it. But the member knows quite well that there can be a number of reasons that money isn't flowing. It can be as a result of the employer, the payor and sometimes indeed because the court has ordered certain adjustments to be made.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Answer, please.

Hon Mr Harnick: I can tell you that the Family Responsibility Office distributes money within 24 to 48 hours of receiving it. If the money is being received, if there is no court order preventing a —

The Speaker: Thank you. Supplementary?

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): It's really interesting that the minister can always pretend somebody else is to blame. Quite frankly, Minister, if you don't care about the women and children who are suffering because they can't get their money, maybe you care about your friends the employers. We're getting more and more phone calls in our offices from employers who are furious about the way they're being treated by the FSP office.

I'll give you an example. Cathy Plinke, who works with Canadian Custom Countertops Inc in London, called my constituency office on Friday. Cathy had kept on receiving phone call after phone call from the FSP office demanding payment of moneys that had been remitted on the part of an employee, and each time she told them when the cheque had been remitted. On Thursday, FSP called four times, and each time the call was from a different worker and she had to give the same answer. Finally, on Friday, after another rude phone call from FSP when your staff member slammed the phone down in her ear, Cathy learned from her bank that the cheque had already been cashed.

Minister, this is a small business. There are small businesses all over this province that are experiencing great difficulty because you've messed up the program. When are you going to deal with the mess you've caused at the family support plan?

Hon Mr Harnick: We have made great strides in making it easier for employers to deal with the family support plan. We've introduced electronic banking. We've provided software programs so that the employers can much more easily than ever before remit money to the family support plan. The indications are that we are distributing money coming through the family support plan faster than it has ever been distributed before. Not only that, we continue to clean up the mess left by the regional offices. We are now down from 90,000 pieces of backlogged information to 38,000, things that had been neglected in the old family support plan for years, going back to 1993. We are making great strides in making the plan more accessible to the employers who help us distribute the money.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): There has been a tremendous concern in my constituency of Nepean in the last 12 years over the increase in welfare caseloads. There is a real understanding that welfare caseloads go up when unemployment rises, but my constituents have been very concerned that in the 1980s, as the unemployment rate dropped, the welfare caseload actually went up.

The provincial government has adjusted the welfare benefit rate. They have clarified the criteria. They've cracked down on any fraud in the system. Can the minister tell my constituents about not just the success of the welfare reforms in Ontario but specifically tell us how Ottawa-Carlton's performance has been, compared to the rest of the province?

Interjection.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Community and Social Services): If we can do this over the comments of the Windsor-Sandwich member across the way, who seems to be unaware that what we've seen in Ontario is a marked break in the practice of the last 10 years on welfare, where we saw a 113% increase in the number of people on welfare — what we've seen in the last two years in Ontario is 218,000 fewer people, and that is translated in the region of Ottawa-Carleton into 6,600 fewer cases of people trapped on welfare. That's a 12% decrease. That shows that not only is there job growth in this province, but also that our welfare reforms are working.

Mr Baird: Minister, my constituents were concerned because in Ottawa-Carleton we're creating so many jobs that if the welfare rate went up like it did in the 1980s, we couldn't afford to pay it. Considering that the decrease has been a double-digit drop in the welfare caseload in Ottawa-Carleton, could the minister tell us specifically how the hardworking taxpayers, hardworking families, in Nepean will benefit from these reforms?

Hon Mrs Ecker: One of the exciting things about what is happening with the welfare caseload is not only that it is a win for those individuals who are no longer trapped on welfare, and we know that the majority of them have left welfare for employment-related reasons, but the other good news is the savings for taxpayers. In the Ottawa-Carleton area they have saved over $14 million in the last two years because of these reductions.

If you're looking to try to put that into some sort of perspective for the public, this province is helping to fund two new high schools in this area, in the member's riding. Each one of those high schools costs about $10 million. That gives you some sense of what these savings can mean for taxpayers.

SERVICES EN FRANÇAIS

Mr Bernard Grandmaître (Ottawa East): My question is to the minister responsible for francophone affairs. Monsieur le Ministre, le 4 novembre 1996, je vous ai posé une question en Chambre sur le transfert des services du niveau provincial aux municipalités. À ce moment-là vous avez été très vague. Vous avez parlé du rapport Qui Fait Quoi. Maintenant que l'étude Qui Fait Quoi a été déposée, est-ce que aujourd'hui vous pouvez devenir plus précis dans votre réponse et rassurer la communauté franco-ontarienne que tous les services provinciaux qui seront transférés au niveau municipal seront garantis à la communauté francophone de l'Ontario ?

L'hon Noble A. Villeneuve (ministre de l'Agriculture, de l'Alimentation et des Affaires rurales, ministre délégué aux Affaires francophones) : Merci à mon collègue d'Ottawa-Est. Comme vous le savez, le gouvernement de l'Ontario a tous les modes de prestation pour livrer les services en français à mesure que le transfert se fait des responsabilités du niveau provincial au niveau municipal. Maintenant, en vertu de la Loi sur les services en français, nous allons certainement desservir les régions qui sont sujettes à la Loi 8 et désignées.

J'ai eu l'occasion de rencontrer l'Association des municipalités franco-ontariennes. J'ai rencontré mon collègue des affaires municipales avec l'AMFO et nous en avons discuté. Nous allons faire cette étude, ainsi que desservir, programme par programme, et l'AMFO nous appuie fortement de ce côté-là. Je peux rassurer mon collègue d'Ottawa-Est qu'avec le soutien d'AMFO et avec les négociations qui vont se produire, nous allons bel et bien continuer à desservir notre francophonie ontarienne comme elle le connaît.

M. Bernard Grandmaître : Laissez-moi vous rassurer que j'ai rencontré l'Association des municipalités franco-ontariennes la semaine dernière, et c'était un des sujets d'inquiétude non seulement au niveau municipal de la communauté francophone.

Monsieur le Ministre, votre collègue le ministre des Affaires municipales était beaucoup plus précis que vous l'êtes aujourd'hui. La semaine dernière, le ministre des Affaires municipales disait qu'il était pour faire l'évaluation, que chaque programme sera évalué, mais par contre, aucune garantie ne sera donnée que les services seront maintenus. Je vous demande aujourd'hui, comme représentant de la francophonie en Ontario, est-ce que vous allez garantir que tous les services transférés au niveau municipal vont demeurer tels qu'ils sont aujourd'hui ?

L'hon M. Villeneuve : Je peux certainement garantir à mon collègue que les négociations se font programme par programme. Et puis, comme vous l'avez dit, mon collègue des affaires municipales lui a donné l'assurance aussi. Puis l'Office des Affaires francophones en Ontario va certainement travailler conjointement avec le ministère des Affaires municipales pour assurer que les services que nous connaissons en Ontario dans le moment vont continuer.

1530

EDUCATION FINANCING

Ms Marilyn Churley (Riverdale): I have a question for the Minister of Education. Parents in my riding of Riverdale, a downtown east end Toronto riding, are very worried that you don't understand the special needs of inner-city schools. I understand you're going to be meeting with some of the Toronto parents, and I appreciate that, but there are schools in my riding where up to 90% of the students are new Canadians and need ESL, there are children who live in deep poverty, there are kids who need a space at school to do homework and need supplementary instruction after school, and those are just a few of the special needs.

We know that your funding formula is going to remove funding from the Toronto Board of Education. So I want to know today for the parents and kids in my riding, what measures are you going to take to ensure that these very special programs that are so badly needed in the schools in my riding remain intact?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I want to assure the member opposite that we do understand that there are different circumstances around the province of Ontario. In some parts of large urban centres like Toronto, we obviously find different circumstances than we would in smaller towns.

To do that, we have set out in our allocation model a foundation grant, a basic grant which we'll use across the province, and then seven special purpose grants. One of those is a language grant which will help to support, among other things, English-as-a-second-language students. They'll have a special grant which will help to meet their needs. The second is a learning opportunities grant which will support a variety of different programs which are necessary to help students who are at a greater risk of failure because of the social or economic circumstances they're in. We have addressed that very specifically in the allocation model and we'll make sure the funding is there for those programs.

Ms Churley: First of all, Minister, I would appreciate it if you would come to some of the schools in parts of my riding and see for yourself what the teachers have to deal with within some of these schools. It is a very tough job.

When you stand up today and talk about these grants, I guess the important question again is, we do not want to see things reduced to the lowest common denominator.

What I would ask you then in terms of those grants is, can you guarantee that the amount of money that goes to the schools from these grants will at least equal the amount of money that the schools are now getting from the board to ensure that the programs are at least as good as they are now? God knows they could use some improvement, but I can assure you that if they don't get the same funding, because they're already stretched, the kids in my riding who need these special programs are really going to be in trouble.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Question, please.

Ms Churley: Minister, can you assure me of that today?

Hon Mr Snobelen: I can assure the member that our intention is not just to maintain programs in the province but actually to improve them, particularly those programs for students who need our help the most. That includes special needs students, of course, but also students who come from social or economic backgrounds that require them to have special services in schools. We'll protect those services, we'll enhance those services by using the best practices in Ontario, and that's what our intention is.

As far as visiting schools is concerned, it's my privilege, and really my pleasure, to visit a lot of schools over the course of the school year. I have been to schools in your riding, as you know, and I will be again. I think I'm attending a school this very evening in Toronto to listen to parents and the concerns of parents regarding the Education Improvement Commission. That's my intention this evening. I look forward to visiting more schools, and undoubtedly schools in your riding.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. Over the past number of weeks, critics in the opposition have been making unsubstantiated accusations about our government's summer jobs program. Could you please set the record straight and tell this House and my constituents about the impacts our summer jobs program has had.

Hon Noble Villeneuve (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I wish to thank my colleague from Oxford for that question. Yes, I am very pleased with what our government has done on summer job programs, particularly with the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. More than 2,800 students have found employment through the summer jobs program. It's an excellent investment in Ontario's youth.

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor-Sandwich): That's 2,800 fund-raisers.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: I hear the honourable member for Windsor-Sandwich, who about a month ago made this statement: "The Liberal Party has always been supportive of anything you can do for young people." Well, we have, and we're proud of it.

Mrs Pupatello: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I don't think that —

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): The members for London South and Halton Centre.

Mrs Pupatello: I rise on a point of order because my name was brought in by the minister. We don't think we agreed to hiring people for fund-raising out of the minister's office.

The Speaker: Supplementary? Supplementary?

New question, member for Kingston and The Islands.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): My question is to the Premier. Last week, the mayors —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I did call "supplementary," I think three times, so it is in fact too late, but you can seek unanimous consent to get your supplementary.

The member for Oxford is seeking unanimous consent for a supplementary question. Agreed? Agreed.

Mr Hardeman: Thank you, Mr Minister, for the answer. I know the opposition is not fond of hearing good news, and the summer jobs is a good start. Could you tell us how the future looks for the youth thinking of entering the agrifood business?

Hon Mr Villeneuve: To the honourable member and to all of my colleagues, I want to make the statement that the enrolments in the University of Guelph and all of our agricultural colleges are up considerably this year over last year, and those students have jobs when they graduate in the agrifood sector.

Ontario led the nation last year with $5.3 billion in agrifood exports. That is something to be very proud of and a very important economic generator in our province. The agrifood sector has contributed $25 billion to our economy every fiscal year, and this is an increasing number. So let's never, in this House or anywhere else, tell anyone in Ontario that the agrifood sector is not important. It is of utmost importance.

MUNICIPAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): Mr Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I'll be able to put my entire question plus the supplementary.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): The member for Kingston and The Islands is seeking unanimous consent to put his entire question plus the supplementary. Agreed? I heard a no.

Mr Gerretsen: All right. My question is still to the Premier. Premier, last week the mayors of Ontario's 25 largest municipalities representing over six million people met in Markham, as you probably know. They are extremely sceptical about your promises for the plans to push responsibility for social services on to the local municipalities.

As a matter of fact, Al Linwin, the mayor of St Catharines and the chair of this group, said, "We're saying to the Premier it's to the point of not only being unfair but almost dishonest to the electorate of the province." Hazel McCallion says you either know what the impact is and you're afraid to say so or you don't know and you're fumbling. She suspects the first reason, but I'm waiting for you to answer with respect to the downloading, Mr Premier.

Councils need to know exactly what they are going to budget for for next year. You said in the Common Sense Revolution that you would work closely with municipalities to ensure that any actions you took would not result in increases to local property taxes. Premier, the municipalities have now been forced to hire an outside consultant to give them an independent analysis of your downloading plans. Why don't you produce the plans and show that they're revenue-neutral or else do a 180-degree turn, as you did with Bill 136, and take away the downloading of responsibility for health, social services and social housing? Why don't you do that, Premier?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): We of course have done that. We have tabled all the numbers. In fact, we tabled the options. All the upper-tier numbers have been tabled to the penny. We tabled as well options and the numbers that would flow from that based upon how you go from upper tier to lower tier. Representatives of the large municipalities were at the table when all those numbers were tabled. They said: "We don't want to look at them. We don't want to be part of the decision. You make it. It's an election year, don't you know?" So we are making those decisions. They have abdicated, I would say, any decision-making on how you might move that way.

Let me assure the mayors that overall from the province's point of view it is revenue-neutral. We understand that depending on options selected from different municipalities, there will be different impacts. But I can assure them that just as Mel Lastman says, "No need for tax hikes," just as your former colleague, now running for regional chair, says, "No need for tax hikes" —

The Speaker: Thank you.

1540

PETITIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): Despite the government's turnaround on Bill 136, there's a great deal of concern that we have not seen the amendments. Until that's the case, these petitions will be coming forward. This one reads:

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 will effectively suspend all labour relations rights for municipal, health and school board employees affected by provincially forced amalgamations; and

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 will hurt average workers in every community across Ontario including nurses, teachers, firemen and police officers; and

"Whereas the Harris government's bill will decrease the quality of health care as well as the quality of education delivered in Ontario; and

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 was designed to provide the government with sweeping powers to override long-standing labour negotiation rights for workers including the right to negotiate, the right to strike, the right to seek binding arbitration and the right to choose a bargaining unit;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, support our MPP Michael Gravelle in his opposition to this legislation and join him in calling upon the Harris government to repeal Bill 136, which creates a climate of confrontation in Ontario."

I'm pleased to sign my name to that petition.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): I have a petition signed by almost 300 people in support of Women's College Hospital. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas over half the people in Ontario are women;

"Whereas only 5% of the money spent on medical research goes to research in women's health;

"Whereas women have special medical needs since their bodies are not the same as men's;

"Whereas Women's College is the only hospital in Ontario with a primary mandate giving priority to research and treatment dedicated to women's health needs;

"Whereas the World Health Organization has named Women's College Hospital as the sole collaborating centre for women's health for both North and South America;

"Whereas without Women's College Hospital, the women of Ontario and of the world will lose a health resource that will not be duplicated elsewhere;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to ensure the continuance, independence, women-centred focus and accessible downtown location of the one hospital most crucial to the future of women's health, Women's College Hospital."

I agree with that petition and I have affixed my name to it as well.

COURT DECISION

Mr Bob Wood (London South): I have a petition signed by 35 people. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the courts have ruled that women have the lawful right to go topless in public; and

"Whereas the Liberal government of Canada has the power to change the Criminal Code to reinstate such public nudity as an offence;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the government of Ontario to continue to urge the government of Canada to pass legislation to reinstate such partial nudity as an offence."

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR THE DISABLED

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the government of Ontario has introduced Bill 142, An Act to revise the law related to Social Assistance by enacting the Ontario Works Act and the Ontario Disability Support Program Act, by repealing the Family Benefits Act, the Vocational Rehabilitation Services Act and the General Welfare Assistance Act and by amending several other Statutes; and

"Whereas Bill 142 and its regulations will have a direct and substantial impact on the lives of many people with disabilities and their families;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To urge the government of Ontario to release the proposed regulations related to Bill 142 immediately, so there can be meaningful public discussion of the changes that will result from this legislation and to ensure that Bill 142 and its regulations are subject to extensive and public hearings across Ontario so that the people who are affected by this legislation and the related regulations are given adequate opportunity to be heard."

I have signed the petition.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads:

"Whereas over half the people in Ontario are women;

"Only about 5% of the money spent on medical research goes to research in women's health;

"Women have special medical needs since their bodies are not the same as men's;

"Women's College is the only hospital in Ontario with a primary mandate giving priority to teaching, research and care dedicated to women;

"The World Health Organization has named Women's College Hospital as its first collaborating centre for women's health in both North and South America;

"Without a self-governing Women's College Hospital, the women of Ontario and of the world will lose a health resource that is not duplicated elsewhere;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the comprehensive model of women's health pioneered by Women's College Hospital through ensuring self-governance of the one hospital in Ontario dedicated to women's health."

I affix my signature to this petition.

COURT DECISION

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth): I have a petition signed by 52 constituents.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas communities strongly disagree with allowing women to go topless in public;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To enact legislation to require women to wear tops in public places for the protection of our children and for public safety in general."

I will sign this so that it will be presented in the proper mode.

ABORTION

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario health system is overburdened and unnecessary spending must be cut; and

"Whereas pregnancy is not a disease, injury or illness and abortions are not therapeutic procedures; and

"Whereas the vast majority of abortions are done for reasons of convenience or finance; and

"Whereas the province of Ontario has exclusive authority to determine what service will be insured; and

"Whereas the Canada Health Act does not require funding for elective procedures; and

"Whereas there is mounting evidence that abortion is in fact hazardous to women's health; and

"Whereas Ontario taxpayers funded over 45,000 abortions in 1993 at an estimated cost of $25 million;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to cease from providing any taxpayers' dollars for performing of abortions."

This is signed by 20 residents of Brockville, SD&G and the Cornwall riding.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): My petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads:

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 will effectively suspend all labour relations rights for municipal, health and school board employees affected by provincially forced amalgamations; and

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 will hurt average workers in every community across Ontario including nurses, teachers, firemen and police officers; and

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 was designed to provide the government with sweeping powers to override long-standing labour negotiation rights for workers, including the right to negotiate, the right to strike, the right to seek binding arbitration and the right to choose a bargaining unit;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, support our MPP Frank Miclash in his opposition to this legislation and join him in calling upon the Harris government to repeal Bill 136, which creates a climate of confrontation in Ontario."

You can be assured that I have signed this petition as well.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Prescott and Russell): A petition against the fingerprinting plan of Mike Harris.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Premier of Ontario, Mike Harris, has proposed the fingerprinting of all Ontario citizens; and

"Whereas the fingerprinting of Ontarians was never promised in the Common Sense Revolution or in his election campaign; and

"Whereas universal fingerprinting of Ontario citizens is a direct violation of basic civil rights and fundamental rights of privacy; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government is intervening and intruding into all aspects of daily life, from megacities, user fees, rent controls, and market value taxes, which were never promised in the election campaign;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to oppose Mike Harris's plan to fingerprint Ontario citizens and to respect their privacy and to stop creating a mega-government that does not respect the basic freedom and individuality of the citizens of Ontario."

This is signed by over 100 citizens of Ontario.

1550

TVONTARIO

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): The TVO petition campaign calling on the government for consultation in their privatization is sweeping across the province. I have a petition here signed by the residents of Amelia Street West in Thunder Bay, sent in by Claire Cikalik, and I appreciate it. It reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas TVOntario/TFO is owned by the people of Ontario; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has opposed public support for maintaining TVO as a publicly owned and funded educational broadcaster by putting TVO through a privatization review; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has not confirmed that full public participation will be part of this privatization review;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to hold open and honest public consultation with the people of Ontario before making a decision on the future of TVO/TFO."

I am glad to sign my name to this petition.

STANDING ORDERS REFORM

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): This is an extremely important petition that is addressed to the Legislature of Ontario. It deals with the draconian new rules that we have in this House. It states:

"Whereas the people of Ontario want rigorous discussion on legislation dealing with public policy issues like health care, education and care for seniors; and

"Whereas many people in Ontario believe that the Mike Harris government is moving too quickly and recklessly, creating havoc with the provision of quality health care and quality education, and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has passed new legislative rules which have eroded the ability of both the public and the media to closely scrutinize the actions of the Ontario government; and

"Whereas Mike Harris and Ernie Eves, when they were in opposition, defended the rights of the opposition and used the rules to their full advantage when they believed it was necessary to slow down the passage of controversial legislation; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has now reduced the amount of time that MPPs will have to debate the important issues of the day; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government, through its rule changes, has diminished the role of elected members of the Legislative Assembly who are accountable to the people who elect them and instead has chosen to concentrate power in the Premier's office in the hands of people who are not elected officials;

"We, the undersigned, call upon Mike Harris to withdraw his draconian rule changes and restore rules which promote rigorous debate on contentious issues and hold the government accountable to the people of Ontario."

I am in full agreement with that and I have endorsed it.

CREMATORIUM IN VAUGHAN

Mr Mario Sergio (Yorkview): I have a further petition with respect to a crematorium that is being built in the vicinity of my riding in the city of North York. I wish to read it to the Legislative Assembly.

"Whereas an application has been submitted to the Ministry of Environment and Energy for a certificate of approval for the development of a crematorium and a columbarium at the northeast corner of Jane Street and Steeles Avenue West in the city of Vaughan; and

"Whereas the residents who live in close proximity to this proposed crematorium are extremely concerned about the harmful environmental effects resulting from the emissions to the atmosphere, seriously fear the spread of contaminants from this planned six-furnace high-rise crematorium and are alarmed about the long-term effects on their health; and

"Whereas there is a further apprehension in this high-density residential community that due to budget considerations and cutbacks, the Ministry of Environment and Energy will not take the time to effectively, openly and fairly listen to, consider and assess the community's concern on the huge ramifications;

"Therefore we, the undersigned citizens of Ontario, petition the Legislature of Ontario as follows:

"We call upon the Ministry of Environment and Energy, which has the primary responsibility for protecting and enhancing a healthful environment for the present and future wellbeing of the people of Ontario, to:

"(1) recognize that we, the citizens most adversely affected by this proposal, have the right to participate in government decision-making;

"(2) honour its commitment to safeguard our environment and therefore reject this proposal for a crematorium of such a large scale and literally at our doorsteps;

"(3) acknowledge that the health of thousands of residents will be at risk and thereby refuse to grant approval for this project."

I concur, and I affix my signature to it.

TRANSFER OF PROVINCIAL HIGHWAYS

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I'm proud to present a petition signed by hundreds of constituents living in west Renfrew county, which petition reads:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario government to retain Highway 62 from Maynooth to the village of Barry's Bay as a provincial highway, as it is a significant access corridor to and from southern Ontario and is vital to the industrial and tourism sectors of the regional economy here in the Madawaska Valley, and to ensure its prominence as an access corridor on provincial and regional roadmaps. A provincial highway would allow for a consistent level of maintenance and avoid placing an increased financial burden upon local taxpayers."

I'm pleased to affix my signature to this petition which I support wholeheartedly.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ONTARIO HYDRO NUCLEAR AFFAIRS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the appointment of a select committee on Ontario Hydro nuclear affairs.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): When I last intervened in this debate, I pointed out that our party would prefer that the government appoint an independent commission to look into the affairs of Ontario Hydro and to give that commission a longer time frame than is proposed in this motion. The government intends to have a select committee which will be dominated by members of its own party and to give it a very constricted time frame, which we don't think will be adequate to properly deal with the very difficult questions that face us with regard to Ontario Hydro.

The great question that lies before us is the government's white paper. The government has indicated that it intends to bring forward a response to the Macdonald commission. I suspect that that Liberal father of free trade will be quite happy, because he not only proposed open competition but a large dose of privatization, and I suspect that this government is going to do that as well. Our caucus supports competition, but only if the environment and the consumer are protected. The kind of selloffs that I think are being contemplated by this government make even less sense now than they did a year ago, when Macdonald made his report. No one is going to buy the nuclear plants now. No investor in his or her right mind would make that kind of investment.

We call on the government to bring forward its white paper so the people of this province will have a better idea of what the government's agenda really is. We can only really evaluate the Hydro nuclear recovery plan if we know where the province is going in terms of competition and privatization. There are a number of questions that the white paper must answer and that the committee will have to consider:

What is the best way of ensuring that competition brings environmental benefits? How much stranded debt will there be, and how will stranded asset charges work in practice? What measures can be taken to ensure that any benefits of competition in the form of lower prices are shared equally among consumers no matter where in the province they live, whether they're in rural Ontario or urban Ontario, whether they are residential consumers or commercial or industrial consumers? Will competition provide opportunities for Ontario entrepreneurs and communities or will it mainly mean more business for American multinationals?

We know that already a number of large American utilities have set up shop here in Toronto and they are just salivating at the prospect of investing in certain parts of Ontario Hydro. What the effects of the recent report about the nuclear division will have on that I'm not certain, but these are issues that must be considered by the committee, if the government is determined to move forward with a select committee.

1600

As I indicated, we are very concerned about the time frame. To suggest that the government must have an interim report in 17 days from the time the motion was first placed was just completely unrealistic and of course is even more unrealistic today, because the motion has not been passed and we are still debating it. In that regard, I have an amendment to present.

I move that the motion be amended by striking the words "an interim report to the House by October 3, 1997 and" following the words "That the committee present" at the beginning of the second paragraph.

Obviously the reason for the amendment is that the current wording of the motion is impractical, considering the date of September 22. It just would not give the committee, if the select committee is established, time to do the work, to do the evaluation, have the witnesses, have the hearings that would be required in order to get an interim report ready by that date. For that reason, the amendment would remove that requirement on the committee from the motion.

I am sure most members would agree that this is reasonable, and I know the minister supports such an amendment. In the spirit of cooperation that is always demonstrated by myself and my caucus, we are moving forward here to assist the government in moving forward, despite the fact that we don't prefer the select committee route. We would prefer a commission that is independent, has no party loyalties to consider, that would be able to properly investigate, and we would prefer, as I have indicated, a much longer time frame so that we can get to the bottom of some very serious and complex questions.

The government appears to be determined to move forward on the select committee. If that is the case, then obviously the time frame must be adjusted to take into account the fact that the motion has not yet been passed. I hope that all members will support the motion, but I would hope that the government, even in the last few minutes, will reconsider and appoint an independent commission.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Churley): Further debate.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): Just a brief word, since we have an amendment now before the House. I think the member has offered a helpful and timely amendment, and at the insistence of my House leader, my colleagues and I will certainly be supporting it.

The Acting Speaker: First, we'll vote on the amendment by Mr Wildman. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

We vote now on the motion to strike the committee.

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. Carried.

DEVELOPMENT CHARGES ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR LES REDEVANCES D'AMÉNAGEMENT

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for third reading of Bill 98, An Act to promote job creation and increased municipal accountability while providing for the recovery of development costs related to new growth / Projet de loi 98, Loi visant à promouvoir la création d'emplois et à accroître la responsabilité des municipalités tout en prévoyant le recouvrement des coûts d'aménagement liés à la croissance.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): It is always a pleasure to have a few moments to speak to the perfidy of this government. In this particular instance today, we're dealing with Bill 98. I'll read it for the benefit of the public so they will get a good sense of the kind of money that goes into some propaganda office in the government's office. It's called An Act to promote job creation and increased municipal accountability while providing for the recovery of development costs related to new growth.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): How will this impact on the fund-raisers?

Mr Marchese: It will, and I will speak to that, member for St Catharines. I will speak to that because this is part of the bill.

Just to speak to the title for brief second, you will recall that this is something of a favourite subject of mine, because the government, as you have observed, spends a great deal of time on titling the bills. I am sure they know that every cent — and they spend a lot of cents on this — is well-spent, because the spin is important. I'm convinced the Premier's office has an office called the propaganda office to promote the re-election of Tory members. That is probably paid by every taxpayer that these fine Tories know all over the province.

In the end, even their own members are beginning to understand there is something underneath that slippery carpet that they need to unearth, and they are unearthing it as they deal with each and every one of these bills. There is nothing in this bill that promotes job creation, we know that, and there is nothing in this bill that deals with increased municipal accountability. I will speak to that as well.

For the benefit of those who are watching, and I know there are many who are watching —

Mr Bradley: I will be watching.

Mr Marchese: Thank you, member for St Catharines. I know you'll be back for the two-minute rebuttal, and I appreciate that.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Order.

Mr Marchese: I want to give some background; not context in this particular instance, but background.

You will recall when this government introduced the bill originally, municipalities were to pick up 10% of costs for hard services such as water, transit and sewer, and make a 30% contribution for soft services such as libraries, community centres and recreation centres. That originally was what was in the bill.

You will recall that Hazel McCallion, a good friend of this government, when hearing of this, went ballistic.

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): What did she say?

Mr Marchese: I don't have the words in front of me, but everyone knows it because I've used it in other speeches. I don't want to repeat what she said. Hazel McCallion, a good Tory and a good friend of these people over here, when she heard of this, went bananas, and she made it very clear —

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I thought you said she went ballistic.

Mr Marchese: Mr Turnbull, she went bananas, and you know that.

Mr Turnbull: Is that "bananas" or "bananas"?

Mr Marchese: The whip is correcting me on the pronunciation of "bananas" versus "bananas." It's the same thing in the end.

So you had Hazel McCallion on the one side saying, "Government, if you do this you are in trouble," and immediately realized that this would be a cost that municipalities simply could not bear. In fact, she knew that if this went through, many of the things that normally would happen in new developments would no longer happen, because they couldn't afford it.

So what did this fine woman do? She immediately slapped a freeze on new development, and then mon ami M. Leach went crazy at the other end too. He scrambled pretty quickly, trying to figure out a way to deal with this emerging problem.

Hazel and others were a problem for this government. In the 905 region, we find Hazel and other Tory mayors, and they weren't happy with this either. They went ballistic as well. Not only Hazel McCallion of Mississauga but other mayors quickly responded by saying, "We will impose a freeze on new development if this government doesn't back away." So you've got on the one hand people who normally are supportive of this government, and not just politicians; you also have a population in the 905 who are strongly supportive of this government. You have close to 60% to 70% of those people supporting them, or at least in the past. I'm not convinced that number still holds. But if 70% or so of those people voted for these guys, they immediately realized, "We've got a problem." Hazel was symbolic and representative of that view of each and every voter in that region, the 905 region just outside Metropolitan Toronto.

1610

You had politicians on the one side screaming bloody murder — they were worried that such people could infect politically the views of the poor electorate in that area so they had to do something — versus the other side, which is the Urban Development Institute, of which you will recall, and I have mentioned this often in the past, Morley Kells, the Conservative member in the House, was the president, and you had the Ontario home builders and other developers who showed initially their political muscle in getting this particular bill for debate.

You had in this ring of fighters the developers, but quickly my good friend M. Leach and others discovered that you had the other fighters in the other corner. You had Hazel, an admirable foe, a tough foe, and you had the other people who vote for you guys on the other side. They were caught in this fierce battle between developers coming to this government and saying, "Help us, please, Conservative government. We're on your side. You know this. We've been screaming for years for help and nobody has listened and finally we've elected you to be the portavoce of our views. Listen to us," and they did. That's why you have Bill 98.

But they didn't realize that in listening to developers, in listening to the Urban Development Institute, the portavoce of corporate views, somehow they would be embroiled in a political mess, and it was a big mess. It lasted for months. They had a fight on their hands, and I'm not sure who won in the end, but it's quite clear to me that in the changes this government has made, the developers suffered a little loss as a result of having to genuflect in front of the powers of Hazel McCallion and the 905 electorate.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Fort York, please address your remarks to the Chair.

Mr Marchese: As opposed to whom, Mr Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: As opposed to your colleague to your left. Procedures are very clear: Address your remarks to the Chair.

Mr Marchese: Speaker, I appreciate —

The Deputy Speaker: No argument, please.

Mr Marchese: Well, Speaker, I'm going to look at you as I speak but I will remind you that it would be very difficult for any human being to sit here and address you in everything I say. Surely a member has got to move around —

The Deputy Speaker: Please take your chair. You are showing a lack of respect for the Chair. Procedures are very, very clear. Address your remarks to the Chair, and if you can't, then I'll stop you.

Mr Marchese: I will do my best, Speaker.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I don't believe we have a quorum right now.

The Deputy Speaker: Could you please check if there is a quorum?

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Fort York.

Mr Marchese: When the mayor of Mississauga said, "Look, you better make some changes," the government said, and Mr Leach obviously must have had some discussions with her and said, "We are going to consider changes to the bill," and as a result of his initiative to make some changes to the bill, Hazel McCallion relented a little bit. There was a great deal of work. Clearly they had to go back and talk to the developers. I'm sure there must have been a hell of a lot of negotiation going on with the developers, at the same time trying to please Hazel, probably urging the developers to let up a little bit and not criticize them too much as they considered changes to this bill.

She had given a deadline in the past, saying, "If you don't do this by a certain date" — this was last December 6 — "we will continue with this freeze," but relented on the deadline, and the 905 municipalities tried to negotiate that compromise. Obviously they arrived at a compromise and were happy about that. I argued, as many municipal politicians argued, that this was going to be very hurtful to their communities, and it was. Even people like Hazel McCallion realized this was a giveaway to the developers. Even if she is well connected to them, she realized the benefit would go to developers and not to her constituency and constituents.

This is another example of a government that was prepared to go too far, too fast, hurting services that people care about.

Hon Al Leach (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): The benefits will go to the home buyers.

Mr Gerretsen: How do you know that, Al? You don't know that.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Fort York has the floor. Order, please.

Mr Marchese: We've seen it over and over again with every bill. This government is going too far, too fast and usually very wrong in the areas they have entered into. It isn't a matter of speed that is the mistake this government makes; it is a matter that they're going in the wrong direction. Imagine, it's like you're travelling north and you as a government are proceeding to travel against that traffic, and not just fast but in the wrong direction, if you understand the image. That's the problem many of us are facing as a public, because they're beginning to understand the wrongheaded policies of the government, and in addition they're going much too fast.

You will recall, Speaker — and I will touch on this, but I want to get to some aspects of other things the minister has done in the past, to show how they are connected closely to the developers. This act is supposed to promote job creation. This act is supposed to remove some of those development charges, and as a result of removing some of those development charges, they said new homeowners would somehow save money, because whatever costs were saved by not having a development charge, somehow, miraculously, through the alchemy of the 17th century, new homeowners would be able to see a saving. Well, we know that's not true. I'll come back to this theme and I'll touch on a subject I have dealt with in the past as a reminder, to show that what this government does often doesn't lead to those savings.

You will recall the same developers going to M. Leach. This was done not with any public consultation; this was done with no debate, as is customary in that ministry on issues of this sort; this was done with my good friend M. Leach, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, probably over a cup of coffee or dinner. It probably wouldn't be at Dooney's Café; it would be a place like La Fenice, a good restaurant I will admit, or maybe the minister's office. Who knows? It was over a discussion of that sort but, I tell you, there was no public discussion on this issue.

What is the issue I'm talking about? The issue of the removal of the full-height insulation requirement and the relaxation of the basement drainage protection rules.

1620

Hon Mr Leach: We went out there and we had conversations —

Mr Marchese: No, Minister, you did this on your own. We are in good contact with some of the people in your ministry — not good contact. These are things we know about, that are public, really. It's not as if I have dug into the ministry to acquire information that is private. There was, as far as I know and as far as anybody knows in this field, no public discussion whatsoever.

Hon Mr Leach: No, wrong.

Mr Marchese: In your two-minute rebuttal you tell me how I'm wrong. I want to hear from you in this regard.

The full-height insulation requirement is no longer necessary. It is something we did as a New Democratic Party government because we felt this was a good thing for new homeowners to have. Full-height insulation is good. The other, the basement drainage protection, is also good. Remember, drainage protection is something you have around the house. It prevents water from seeping into the house. My view is that it was good.

Hon Mr Leach: You've got the economic impact study.

Mr Marchese: Well, okay. This minister probably believes that flooded basements are better and that not having a full basement insulation requirement is perhaps energy-efficient. I'm not sure. I don't find it consistent with energy-efficient methodologies but he obviously believes that. I tell you this: The other developer said, "Minister, if you do these two things, the new homeowner will save $1,000 to $3,000." That's what they said, that there would be a saving. There was no saving.

I worked very closely with an organization called the Canadian Energy Efficiency Alliance and they have done a survey of their members to inquire about these so-called savings. You know what it reveals? It reveals that there were no savings, that the savings were not passed on. In fact, in many cases prices of housing went up, leaving new homeowners with the new task of having to put insulation in their basement on their own.

We have to speak about common sense from time to time, and this government often likes to speak of common sense as well. You figure that one out: You put in full-height insulation in the beginning, as you build the house, versus you, the homeowner, putting in insulation once the house has been constructed. Which of the two options do you believe would be cheaper for the homeowner? It's not a very complicated thing. I think it's simple even for the MPPs on the other side to solve, I really do. I believe that given that this government is so full of common sense, even Tory backbenchers and ministers could calculate the difference between the two. They should, at least. The answer to that is that it's cheaper if you have full-height insulation done when you build the house rather than requiring the homeowner to do it on his own. That's more costly.

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton): Let me ask about windows. Tell us about that.

Mr Marchese: M. Beaubien, it's more costly. If you do it on your own, it's more costly. Why? Because —

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: It's okay. M. Beaubien is a good man. Every now and then I like his responses. That's all right. We know that if this fellow had to do it on his own, it would take a hell of a long time to do. But because people sometimes don't either have the knowhow or the time, they end up hiring somebody else to do that job. Given that they have to hire somebody else after the fact, after the house has been built, surely the Tory MPPs would calculate that it's more costly to do, and it is. The Canadian Energy Efficiency Alliance has through their study determined that what I am saying is correct.

Why would the minister unilaterally have done that?

Hon Mr Leach: It would take about 300 years —

Mr Marchese: I'm not sure I heard that quite clearly, but perhaps in the rebuttal I'll hear it. Why would you do that unilaterally, I ask you?

Hon Mr Leach: I answered. It was quite clear.

The Deputy Speaker: Minister.

Mr Marchese: No, Minister, you said the answer was quite clear. I put the context to the general public that is listening —

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: Always through you, Speaker, to the minister.

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: The minister says that it's quite clear. I've just given the context to explain to the general public that what he did unilaterally, without the benefit of input from those who have traditionally been involved, was made into a decision that was wrong. It was wrongheaded and everybody in the industry knew it, including developers.

Those developers who were brave enough to admit this to us told us frankly that there were no savings. But because the benefit is to the developer, why would the developer go out in public and tell you what the minister did was wrong? They're not going to do that. They're buddies. Why would they, in public, go and say that somehow the minister was wrong when these are the same people who told him and urged him to do this?

The benefits are quite clear: The developer saves money, he pockets it, and that problem is passed on to the homeowner, and the poor fellow, the new homeowner, who can barely keep up with the costs of ordinary life, has to pick up yet another burden.

We know that new homeowners don't have the means, the money, the time or the knowhow to deal with some of these issues or some of these costs. If the government really wanted to help the new homeowner, he would not have done that unilaterally, removed those two basic protections. Simple stuff, but he did that.

Why do I speak about this issue? I speak about it because it's connected to this Bill 98, because this bill says it is An Act to promote job creation. I raise the other issue to give the context, to show that the verbiage on the other side about savings to the homeowner — because that's what the developers told them. If you remove the full-height insulation plus the drainage on the outside, that wouldn't help the homeowner. If he wanted to do something for them, he should not have done that. Clearly he is taking sides, and he took sides with the developers.

This particular bill has been somewhat improved, I have to say, and improved because of obstinacy and the war that was waged by those in the 905 region. Even the Crombie Who Does What panel strongly opposed the changes to the Development Charges Act. You will remember Grant Hopcroft, one of the members of the Crombie panel, a staunch Tory controller from London, has been vocally critical of the government's decision. It wasn't just an ordinary bunch of people out there who might have disagreed. There are a whole lot of people with political knowledge and expertise who said this was wrong.

With that opposition, the government had to relent and they have made it less harmful. I praise them for that, because at least they listened to the extent that it will not be as harmful as it otherwise would have been. You've got to praise them when they listen. The bill is wrongheaded but the made it palatable by making it less injurious to the constituency.

What they've got now is that the existing municipal tax base will have to pick up 10% of the costs of services such as libraries, community centres and recreation centres. Some costs, such as construction costs for the city administrative buildings, parks, museums and arts centres, will be ineligible for development charge funding. That's completely unacceptable under this bill. Where previously they had the power to charge through development charges for administrative buildings, for parks and museums and arts centres, they now no longer can do that.

1630

I remind you that that flexibility municipalities had to use development charges for the purposes of the public good was a good thing. That flexibility that we as an NDP government provided we argue was good for municipalities. They've taken away that flexibility. Even if they'd made it less injurious; they've taken away the flexibility and are requiring municipalities to pick up 10% of the costs for libraries, community centres and recreation centres.

When you move into a community, as mon ami Gilles Pouliot was reminding me the other day, you are moving into a community. You're not simply buying a home; you are buying a home in a particular community that has services attached to it. You're not going to buy a home if there is no library on that site. You will not buy a home if there are no community centres or recreation centres. You will not buy a home if parks are inadequately provided for in terms of services to maintain them, or museums, for God's sake. These are the cultural elements that provide some humanity to the community in which they live. You don't buy a freestanding home alone; you buy it with all the services and infrastructures that come with it.

This government, with its original mandate, would have destroyed much of that. Now, with municipalities picking up 10% of the tab for libraries and community centres and recreation centres and all the other stuff they cannot fund any more, such as administrative buildings and parks and museums and arts centres, they're going to have a hell of a time. They're going to have a hard time finding the money to provide for these things. Is it far-fetched to say that? Is it an impossibility, these guys will argue, for these municipalities to come up with the money to do these things? I argue that it is. I argue that with the 40% cuts that municipalities have had to endure to their budgets, it is pretty difficult to find the money.

I argue that with Bill 152, the download bill, the bill that dumps responsibility down to the municipalities to provide for themselves, there's going to be a heavy load to bear. I argue, and I blame this government, that as they take education out of the property tax and substitute for that new services the municipalities will have to pick up, such as social assistance, child care, housing, ambulances, police, public health, good God, they're not going to be able to do it. That's why they're worried. That's why Hazel, as Tory as she is, blue inside and out, knows that this is a bill you've got to worry about. She knows because of all the things this government is doing to relieve itself of the responsibility to govern by offloading that responsibility of finance to the municipal government.

It's a funny thing, because in so many other areas this government embraces municipal autonomy, when it suits them. When it suits them, they love to talk about how municipalities in their autonomy are so effective and efficient that they must let them do the dirty deed. When it suits them, they love to give municipalities power. When it doesn't suit them, they take that power away. In this particular instance, it suits them to give this responsibility down to the municipalities. Municipalities are very worried about picking up what appears to be a cost that is not too heavy. But it is a heavy cost.

I wouldn't want to be a municipal politician in the next municipal election. I know there are many candidates who want to show leadership, who feel they have a vision, who feel that somehow, in spite of what this government is doing, they will be able to provide the best political service they can. But this is the worst of times that this responsibility as a politician could befall you. Never in our history have we had to face a government that has cut back so much of its funding to municipalities — all to service that tax cut, I remind you. Because of the income tax cut, because of that tax cut that largely goes to middle-class people, this government is stuck. It has to find billions of dollars every year to fund the tax cut.

Look what they're doing to education. They're putting a ceiling on the classroom size, they say. It sounds great. But these poor people in the boards of education, without money, are faced with tremendous problems to deal with that particular problem.

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): A point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like you to ascertain if there is a quorum. I believe we don't have a quorum.

The Deputy Speaker: Could you please check if there is a quorum.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Fort York.

Mr Marchese: I was telling you how worried I am about the fact that municipalities are burdened with a great responsibility. I was telling you that the Minister of Education has a strong desire — not he; it's Mike Harris, the Premier; it's their agenda. They have an interest in taking $1 billion out of education, and that in the guise of educational reform. They're doing it because they need cash. They need money right away, so they've got a problem.

They've got to take $1 billion out of education. I tell you it will be a tremendous assault on the education system, on teachers and students. Dianne Cunningham, the minister of women's affairs, would know that, as a former teacher. She knows that this will be very destructive to teachers and students as these people rape the education system for the money they need.

To be a municipal politician, a trustee, in these times — I wouldn't want the job. They're going to be faced with a severe reduction of services to deal with a shortfall of provincial money that traditionally has flowed to them. They're going to be in a tough bind, I can tell you that, with their electorate, and not this election but the following election when they have to face the public with two things: increased property taxes and decreased services. It's not going to be a pretty sight for those municipal governments.

1640

The Planning Act allows municipalities to require a parkland dedication of up to 5%. That hasn't been changed, but the bill prohibits them from using development charges to fund parks over and above this, as some of them had apparently been doing.

The Ontario Parks Association is concerned that this will mean fewer and less-well-maintained parks. I'm worried. I know municipal politicians are worried about that too. Whereas they had the flexibility in the past and the discretion as municipal politicians to use their powers as they saw fit to serve their constituencies, now that power is taken away from them. That principle of this government that embraces municipal autonomy is in this particular instance corroded, corrupted, dismissed.

I argue that the power the municipal politicians had in the past was an important flexible power they had to service their constituencies. These people, these Tories, are taking that away. They're saying municipal politicians are not responsible or accountable enough to do the job well. In the one instance, with other bills, they say, "Ha, the opposition members don't trust politicians." On the other hand, in this particular case we do. If in the past it worked to give municipal politicians that autonomy and responsibility to be able to make reasoned, commonsense decisions, why take that away? Why would you take it away while at the same time as you pass other bills you tell them: "We trust you, municipal politicians, to do the right thing. We want to give you the power to do the right thing. We want to give you the power, to trustees to be able to cut as you see fit so taxes don't go up. We want to give you the power not to increase property taxes and to do the right thing as we download a thousand services on you."

On the one hand they say: "You guys are good, responsible. You guys are accountable. You guys are efficient." In this particular case they take that little power — it's a little power — to make their communities more efficient, more human —

Mr Gilles Pouliot (Lake Nipigon): The essence of life, nothing else.

Mr Marchese: M. Pouliot, mon ami, the essence of life, to make a community more human. It is the essence of who we are.

Mr Bradley: Did you mention the fund-raisers yet?

Mr Marchese: No, I haven't been able to talk about fund-raisers but fund-raisers is a good point, because when they have the big fund-raisers they don't do it like the NDP, where you charge $25 for a little fund-raiser with good food.

Mr Pouliot: This is the mother of fund-raisers.

Mr Marchese: Mothers of fund-raisers, I tell you. When these guys have fund-raisers, they invite the big boys for $500 plates, $1,000 plates if they're good patrons.

Mr Pouliot: And the meal?

Mr Marchese: And the meals are well-paid. With $500 or $1,000, you can have a hell of a meal. I've never had a developer come to my fund-raising event, and it's only $25.

Mr Bradley: Good food?

Mr Marchese: Good food.

Mr Bradley: Maybe I'll come.

Mr Marchese: You should, because we have good Latin American dancing at our events and it's a very allegro type of event. It's not lugubrious, as these people would have it, and they pay a hell of a big buck for a lugubrious event, a Tory event.

When they go helping the developers, it comes with fund-raising; of course it does. You think these guys come to fund-raisers and don't lay out the big bucks for the services these people have provided? I tell you, they do.

Me, instead? I don't worry about the big developers because —

Mr Beaubien: I don't have a big appetite.

Mr Marchese: Mr Beaubien, your developer friends, they're okay, they've got the bucks, they create a human life for their own individual life. But do you think they put as much back into humanizing their communities? I don't think they do that and that's why the Ontario Parks Association is very worried. Sure, you dedicate up to 5% of parkland. Sure, that's okay. But this bill prohibits them from using development charges to fund parks over and above that so they're well-maintained. Isn't that part of the humanity of a community?

If you take that away, what have you got? You've got developers in the golf field, you've got developers in the Bahamas enjoying the good life, the human life, with all of its services. They like those recreational services because they can pay for it. But back home on the ranch they're without the essential services that each one of us breathes for. So people are worried. I'm worried. If someone doesn't expose the perfidy of the Tory agenda we have a problem. Someone's got to do it.

Back to the bill. Again, as they say, this is An Act to promote job creation. Do you remember that? These developers said: "This is going to stimulate house construction. We're going to have a boom. Trust me."

M. Leach, a good defender of that ideology, said, "Yes, of course." Hand in hand. "Of course we're going to do it." He believes this agenda; he believes this ideology. All of them do on the other side. They said, "You take development charges out and we're going to see development and a boom you've never seen before." It's got nothing to do with it. Speaker, even you as a Liberal would know this has nothing to do with it.

Everybody knows the housing boom is driven not by development charges but by supply and demand, the marketplace, the altar of Tory ideology. The Tory ideology says let the market do it; the market will take care of itself.

"If you get development charges out," they say, "We're going to get more housing." It's not true. If people can afford a house, they're going to buy it and if people can't afford a house, they will not buy it. Development charges are sucked up by the developer and the poor homeowner who was told he's going to benefit from this because the savings are going to be passed on is out of luck. That young 30-year-old couple — because now you can't afford to buy a house before 30, 33, maybe 35, that's when you start buying a house — these people can't afford it. They go in with this belief that somehow they might believe these guys that they're going to save a few bucks, but they're not saving it. The guy who pockets it is that poor developer who's starving to death.

Mr Bradley: You mean, it's not going to the home buyer?

Mr Marchese: No, it's going to the developer. Those poor developers need the money to be able to travel around, to be able to feed those they lobby, to be able to feed their friends. The cost of living is pretty expensive. You can't be in this big league and not have enough money in your pocket to feed those you lobby. You can't be in the big league as a developer, right, and travel around the world with the big yacht and not have money left in your pocket.

Mr Pouliot: With top-notch polyester.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Lake Nipigon.

Mr Marchese: Without the money in the pocket they can't do that, they can't keep the style of living — Speaker, always through you; you notice I'm speaking through you now to the members opposite — leaving the poor homeowner on his own.

1650

Think of the poor homeowner today. Two people I know, closely connected to my family, one of them making $32,000, the other one was making $27,000 working in one of these clothing industry — I won't name the company because it might not be nice for them to be named. My good friend's name is Mark. The last name will remain anonymous. The other good friend of mine is Lorena, working in a good service industry where the needs are plenty, young women who have lots of problems. She's working in such a place, providing the best that she can for $30,000, $31,000 a year, working every day, including Saturdays, to provide service to people who are sometimes marginalized, often abused, and sometimes unclear about where their life is going because they've got into trouble or because they've had problems in their family, providing a good service for very little money.

These people are trying to buy a house and, as they add up their earnings, realize that it's pretty tough, and they save money. They're saving money. They have a child so they want to make sure that the child is provided for, that basic necessities are provided for: rent, providing for the child, providing for child care, which is expensive. At the end of the day there's not a whole lot of money left to do what you want. This is the couple that would love to be able to benefit from that $2,000 that M. Leach said they were going to save, remember, by eliminating the full-height insulation requirement and the drainage requirement. They would have benefited from that, but there are no savings, so these poor people are going to have to do this on their own or pay somebody else and pay more for that.

This act to promote job creation, this Bill 98, is to require them to take out development charges for soft services, for things such as libraries, recreation centres, community centres, and the money that's supposed to flow to the homeowner ain't flowing. It's not flowing. It's going to flow to the pockets of the big guy. Do you think that's fair? Do you think, mon ami Gilles Pouliot, it's fair?

Mr Pouliot: I would resign, my friend. You and I would resign.

Mr Marchese: Do you think M. Beaubien, mon ami from Lambton, would find it unfair that this would happen with such a bill? Do you believe, Mr Speaker, that somehow M. Beaubien from Lambton would believe this act would promote job creation and the homeowner would save money? Do you believe he believes that? Do you think he read the bill? I often believe the members don't read the bills, because they uncork a bill with champagne every day. How could you read every bill? Did you see the bill that Minister Snobelen presented today? It was this big. As they uncork all these bills, do you think these people keep up to date?

Mr Bradley: Do you think they will be uncorking the champagne in the Albany Club?

Mr Marchese: At the Albany Club, of course. Where else do you think they go? Do you think they go to Dooney's Café at Bloor and Borden? Absolutely not.

Mr Pouliot: Where is the Albany Club? I've never been there. They have.

Mr Marchese: Oh, the Albany Club, they know this place very well.

But I'm worried, because I really want the members opposite to read the bills. There's so much in those bills that affect their constituencies. But do you see how blind they are often when the bills are introduced? They clap like seals and they say, "It's a great bill." I don't think they have a clue what they're reading, if they're reading. I don't think they have a clue, because many do not read. I don't think they have a clue because so many of these bills are passed with such rapidity that their intelligence, as limited as it might be in some cases, can't keep up. They can't keep up.

What is there in this bill that one could say is good? What can I say about this bill, so as not to appear negative, that could be good? I'm desperately searching for notes in this bill that would help me to praise this government. I can't find a thing.

Mr Bradley: I have something for you.

Mr Marchese: Member for St Catharines, I need your help. Please tell me.

Mr Bradley: They will be building new halls to hold their fund-raisers.

The Deputy Speaker: No. Order, member for St Catharines.

Mr Marchese: The member for St Catharines makes a good point to help out, and I appreciate the help. He says they will be able to build bigger halls now so they can have bigger fund-raisers, to have a greater capacity to hold more developers in — is that the case? — so that more and more Tories could benefit from the good work they do for them. That's a good point.

Mr Pouliot: It's a recompense, it's a reward.

Mr Marchese: It is a reward. "I give you something, you give something back." That's a good business practice — the marketplace, eh? Sure. "I help you out and you help me out." That's the way it works in the marketplace. I tell you, the marketplace of the poor doesn't work that way. In the marketplace of the poor there's nothing to exchange except poverty, but in the marketplace of the fat cats there's a whole lot to exchange. Mayor Lastman knows that. N-o-o-o-body is left out of that particular exchange of the marketplace. N-o-o-o-body in the marketplace loses. We all win. The guys that win, however, are the people who've got deep pockets. The poor guy has nothing to share, and why would you share your poverty with others?

This bill, as I see it, had its genesis in a few developers in the Urban Development Institute sitting down together and saying: "Okay, boys, what have we got next? We've got a good friend across the way. Mike Harris is a good buddy. M. Leach is a good buddy of ours. What new idea do we have that we could approach him with, common sense kind of stuff?"

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): A kind of Robin Hood, right?

Mr Marchese: A kind of Robin Hood exchange in the marketplace. They do not hesitate to approach this government, and I tell you, they have no problems accessing this government at all, because in the marketplace money talks. In the marketplace money has power, money gives you access and money achieves results.

This is where I've got to praise Hazel McCallion of Mississauga. She was able to hold back the forces of strength, the forces of capital. You've got to hand it to her, because had she not intervened, we would have had the full weight of this particular bill, where we would have seen municipalities pick up 10% of the hard services and 30% of the soft services. That's what we would have had in the original text of this particular bill. As a result of Hazel McCallion's courageous battle against the mercenaries over there of the ideology of the marketplace — they would have been stuck with a bill that they would have had difficulties with, and they have shared that with us over and over again.

I had quotes from many of the people who had spoken to this. One of them says that even developers are saying that the benefits of this particular bill are not going to trickle down to the homeowners. I have a person called Hopcroft who said: "The new plan is a serious setback to the relationship between municipalities and governments. We were promised more tools to conduct our business, amid serious provincial cutbacks, and this is a serious limit on that." I had other speakers here that I had quoted in the past, but it is difficult to go through the text and find all that they had to say. But they were all municipal politicians, some of them mayors and some of them connected very much to this government.

I want to speak directly to the general public and say to you that there's always time to be involved in the political process. These bills are opportunities for you to learn about how your community is being affected. It is an opportunity for you to meet with your local member and ask him or her, whatever the case might be, to explain to you the benefits of each and every one of these bills. In this particular case, Bill 98, I urge you to sit down with your member and ask your member to tell you what the benefits of this bill are to you, how this will contribute to making sure you have the infrastructure you need in your community to live a decent human life.

1700

Ask them direct questions about how eliminating or forcing municipalities to pick up 10% of the cost for libraries and community centres and recreation centres is helpful to you. Ask these provincial politicians to tell you how construction costs for city-administered buildings, parks, museums and art centres, the prohibition of these things, the use of development charges for these things, is beneficial to you.

You need to ask them these questions, and if you are not approaching them, they will feel that what they are doing with these bills is somehow palatable and/or acceptable to you. Without your talking to them, they have a licence to do what they want. You can't allow politicians to have such a licence. You can't allow that.

You can do several things. You can write a letter directly to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Minister of Finance, and address it "private and confidential" because otherwise it will never get to them. It's true, member for St Catharines. You know; you've been there as a minister. If you don't address it as "private and confidential," it goes to the civil service. Once the civil servants get their hands on that, they've got to read it, they've got to review it and it goes through the various echelons of review, and my God, before you know it, you're out of power and these guys are gone. So don't write a plain letter and address it to the minister, because they're never going to see it. "Private and confidential," this way the political staff of the minister reads your fine words, shares them with the minister and has a good sense of what the public is thinking.

Attend meetings. It's important to attend meetings, at least the meetings that some of these Tories attend, because in my experience not many of them attend meetings. There's a natural fear, quite rightly. These guys are afraid. With all the bills they've been passing, whacking one community and the next, do you think these guys are going to go to the meeting and take a whack from the community? They're not going to do that. They're going to sit home or here at Queen's Park and pretend they're busy. They're going to tell you they couldn't make it to your meeting because they're busy here at Queen's Park.

I tell you, they've got to obligate each and every one of you guys to attend the meetings and be held accountable and explain your bills. If they are not calling meetings and you are calling one and they're not coming, you hold them accountable. They are your public servants and they should be there.

The best approach to these guys is, you've got to see them in their office. They have a duty and an obligation to see you. As elected members they can't tell you, "We're busy and we can't meet with you." Each and every one of us has office hours, including ministers. When we were ministers, we had constituency hours to deal with complaints.

I have heard that some of these guys are not very good at that kind of public accountability, but you've got to hold them accountable. You tell them, "We elected you and you've got to be there." So you've got to have your meeting with them in the constituency office, and I tell you they don't get to see too many people. If they saw 10 or 20 or 30 people either at once or at different times, they would worry. You've got to use your power.

You, as individuals and as a collective, have a tremendous power and you can wield it by using that power you have, by making sure these people explain each and every one of their bills, by making sure that before they come to a meeting, they read their bills.

Some of the people, I must admit, like my good friend from Scarborough East — I tell you he's good. We may not agree with him because he's so extreme in his ideology, but he is good, I will admit to that, my good friend from Scarborough East. He reads, he's up to date, he's profoundly provocative because he believes in the ideology. But at least this man reads.

You've got to force each and every one of these other people, these other Tories to come well prepared to answer your questions. You guys are going to have a hell of a time. You're going to have a hell of time answering some of the questions these people have if they dare to have the courage to hold you guys accountable.

But a politicized society makes for a good human society, and that's what I'm urging the public to do. The politicization of the public is good. A well-informed public is good. It holds all politicians accountable as trustees, as counsellors, as members of provincial Parliament and as federal members of Parliament.

I urge the public who are listening to do that. Bill 98 is not good news and they should be fighting it.

Speaker, I thank you for your attention.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Questions and comments?

Mr Doug Galt (Northumberland): I certainly enjoyed the presentation made by the member for Fort York. It was very high in entertainment but rather low in content and facts and figures.

I was really surprised that he talked quite a bit about people with low incomes trying to buy homes and that this bill didn't fit in with that. That's really what this bill is all about: to ensure that development charges are not excessive and to help the very people the member for Fort York was talking about. He seemed to be just a little confused on that particular topic when he was talking about helping people on low incomes. As I say, that's really what this is about.

He was also talking about and insisting on changing it and being more specific and the 10% on soft services. What it's really about is looking at the misuse that's been occurring in the past by some of the municipalities, looking at reducing the cost of homes and therefore increasing the building, the construction of homes, which is something we're seeing right now, and it's also about wanting to stimulate the economy and creating jobs. That may seem just a little foreign, but that's certainly what we're trying to do.

He talked earlier in his presentation about the tax cut, and I don't know how he got so far off topic with Bill 98 to be talking about the tax cut. But let me tell you, this tax cut has been stimulating the economy, exactly what we wanted it to do. It's creating the kind of consumer confidence in the country that was needed. Look at what's happening even to the federal government, that they're now able to get rid of most of their deficit and they are getting to the point of even thinking about doing something with their debt. It's here in Ontario where our tax cut has stimulated the economy to help that.

We're seeing an increase in housing starts, we're seeing jobs up, we're seeing car sales up and we're seeing housing sales up. That is what the tax cuts in Ontario are doing.

Mr Gerretsen: I am glad the member opposite talked about what the federal government is doing, because the federal government is actually doing it right. It's saying there are not going to be any tax cuts at all until we get the deficit down to zero. You people didn't do that, did you? This province still runs a deficit of over $6 billion and you're giving a tax cut at the same time.

You're also talking about the misuse of development charges by the local municipalities. I challenge you and I challenge the minister and I challenge the ministry to name those municipalities. During the hearings this was brought up many, many times, yet the government didn't have the guts to name any of those municipalities. Do you know why? Because there aren't any.

The other thing this government likes to talk about is the balance of things, how to be fair to everybody. We saw a perfect example about how they're not fair in the House today. You may recall that the Speaker who was in the chair during question period made a mistake. He didn't give the government member, the member opposite, an opportunity to put his supplementary question. What did the whole House do, Liberals and New Democrats together? What did we do? We said: "Yes. The Speaker made a mistake. We'll give him the supplementary question."

I then got up and said, "How about giving me my full question that I was entitled to if we had objected to that member having a supplementary question." What did the government side do? What did the Premier say, as a matter of fact? He said, "No, you won't have it."

If that is a system of fairness, that, "It's only fair if you do it our way," I'll tell you something, Mr Speaker: He's got an awful lot to learn about fairness. It's only a minor, little matter that doesn't mean much in the totality of things, but it shows you where this government is coming from. They are not fair to people of Ontario, and that's the bottom line.

1710

Mr Bisson: I'd like to take this opportunity to comment on the presentation given by my colleague from Fort York. What the member tried to do in his presentation of an hour — I think he was quite successful — was show the links in this particular government decision to remove what we call in our jargon soft services away from development charges.

You can't, as the member pointed out, look at that in isolation of everything else that goes into supporting a community and doing development in a community to sustain what are important services for its residents. I think the member linked that quite well.

The problem I have with what the government is doing is that they really have a shortsighted approach to development. They're saying, "Development at all costs." They're not saying we need to make sure that the development is sound financially and ecologically and also in what it means for citizens. They're saying, "We're going to get rid of development charges and that's going to spur development in communities and that's good for the economy and that's good for Ontario."

It might spur some development. I would question how much, because in a lot of communities it doesn't amount to that much of a deterrent to development. But the problem is that they're offloading the responsibility of the developers on to future taxpayers in that municipality. If, let's say, a development in my community somewhere across the bridge, let's say on Riverside, were to expand by 40 or 50 homes, the soft services aren't going to be picked up initially by the developer. It's going to be all those municipal taxpayers within that particular area in the whole community.

I'm saying the government is shortsighted. They're saying, "Let's give our developer friends a break and let's transfer that responsibility of the developer directly on to the municipal taxpayer." I say that is not only unfair for the taxpayers but in the long run is fairly shortsighted politics, period.

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): I'm pleased to respond to the member for Fort York, although it's a bit troublesome here. We have conflicting rules in this House. We're only supposed to respond to the comments made by the original speaker, not the other respondents. But by the same token, he was supposed to have been speaking to the bill before us here today, Bill 98. He spoke about a lot of other things and, unfortunately, only tangentially dealt with some of the issues arising from development charges. One of those was what the province is doing to help low-income families get into the housing market.

I would remind the member opposite that for the second year in a row we've eliminated the land transfer tax for first-time home buyers. We're doing things that are very substantial. Forget the rhetoric. We are actually making it more affordable.

Let's get back to the bill that's before us here today. The Development Charges Act made it very clear at the outset that this was about making sure there's a fair balance between the costs borne by the developers and the costs that should be borne by the cities. Obviously, if any new development goes in and causes an increase in the extent of the sewers or the sidewalks, the roads that have to be put in, it's appropriate for that developer to pay those costs.

Having said that, currently the municipalities have the ability to assess all sorts of other charges for hockey arenas, for libraries, for art galleries that clearly all the other citizens of the city, the existing residents, also benefit from. We don't believe that's appropriate.

But you know what we did? After hearing from the people of this province on the original draft of the bill that was put out there, we cut from 30% down to 10% the percentage of the soft services that are required to be paid by the municipality. Imagine that. Even though you could have a town of 15,000 people and the new developer comes in with a proposal to add homes for 500 more, he could still be faced with a disproportionate cost of that art gallery or arena. We listen to people and we think it's appropriate the municipality still has some role, but the bottom line is we have got to put in a process that is fair to developers, that stimulates investment and creates jobs in the construction industry in Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Fort York has two minutes to respond.

Mr Marchese: I thank all of the speakers who have spoken and will direct my remarks to my two Tory friends on the other side from Northumberland and Scarborough East.

The member for Northumberland talked about looking for content in what I said and commented on the entertainment value of what I said. I looked for the same in him, and I couldn't for the life of me —and I think I'm perspicacious enough to pick it up — see any entertainment, and I desperately looked for content and didn't pick any of that up either. It's funny how perspicacity works.

Both my good buddies from Northumberland and Scarborough East —

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: "Good buddies" — I take that back. They talk about us in terms of how we criticize, but did you hear the propaganda and the rhetoric on the other side? Their speeches are full of it. Propaganda, perfidy indeed and rhetoric, that's all I see in their speeches. Maybe the public sees something else, but I see propaganda, rhetoric and perfidy — full of it.

They say this is going to stimulate job creation. It's going to stimulate the pocket of the developer, and that's all it's going to do. We know that and the public knows that. It will stimulate the pockets of their buddies. They know that. Even developers know that the housing market, who buys and who doesn't, is determined by the market force, not by your development charge. Thank Hazel McCallion for bringing these guys down, because originally they were going to charge 10% of the hard costs and 30% of the soft services to the municipalities. Hazel, thank you for your work.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Galt: It's certainly a pleasure to be able to rise and speak on Bill 98, the Development Charges Act. I enjoyed going around during the hearings and listening to the various presentations, and as a result of those hearings this government was listening and has certainly responded.

The Development Charges Act is very important in connection with growth. We want to see growth in our respective municipalities, so it is incredibly important. Just getting one house built represents one and a half or two person-years or thereabouts. It represents all kinds of work for people in landscaping, in developing appliances and the construction of those appliances, in furniture. There's a tremendous spinoff as we are able to get more housing starts occurring in our country. With the changes in the development act and the way we're working this through, we will see a stimulation of the economy, one that will generate taxes and the kind of finances needed for government services in general.

As I look at this act and read it through — although the member for Fort York suggests that we don't read these, we just turn them out — as you look through it, you'll find that it's going to make it fairer for homeowners. The way he was spinning it off, it was going to hurt them, and in fact really it's making homes cheaper. He seemed to think all it was going to do was help developers.

It will certainly help finance the infrastructure of new development. It's going to help remove some of the obstacles to growth, and that's something that our party has stood for way back before the election, to get rid of some of the obstacles and barriers to job creation and growth in the province. Development charges, as they have been designed and have been working, were a good idea to start with, but kind of went down the road of getting in the way and costing a horrendous amount, and some municipalities ended up really taking advantage of it and overcharging and hurting the people who were moving into their respective communities.

We see in this bill that we're going to be able to stop some of that misuse of the power that was in the hands of the municipalities and was hurting development. We recognize that there's a certain amount of cost in doing business and that development charges are important to help develop some of those services. Certainly in the past, and now, any capital cost that was related to growth was to help, was to come in to look after that. It was intended to help with some of the hard services, the capital, some of those things such as sewers and water, two very important things that are needed in subdivisions. It was important for roads that would be in the various subdivisions, for transit, for waste management and for homes for the aged. Development charges were intended to help recover some of these costs for these services that were needed for new development.

1720

However, it went way beyond in charging for some of the soft services — 100% and sometimes more — necessary for new libraries, recreation centres, hockey arenas, parks etc, facilities that were not necessarily connected with the new subdivision or the new community or industrial park. Often these facilities might be on the other side of town, not necessarily connected with that particular development that was going on, although they were ending up paying 100% of the cost for it. Development charges were never meant to be a cash cow for any municipality.

Mr Gerretsen: No, they're not.

Mr Galt: Unfortunately in some instances that's how they did end up, even though the member from Kingston is commenting that wasn't the way. You'd think a past mayor of Kingston would understand some of the things that were going on.

Mr Gerretsen: We didn't have any, Doug.

Mr Galt: My compliments to the ex-mayor or retired mayor from Kingston that they didn't have any there. That's just absolutely marvellous. We're concerned about the communities that were making misuse of these.

We recognize the importance of the capital costs that these development charges do recognize and help with. Currently they are imposing charges that directly relate to growth, but presently these services include benefits that help the entire community. We were referring just a few minutes ago to things like hockey arenas, art galleries, tourism facilities, convention centres etc. There's no question that the taxpayer is expected to pay a portion of these costs. However, evidence points out that these new facilities in the past have placed an unfair burden with the new development charges that were in place. That was just simply unfair. It was stifling things such as construction, it was stifling investment and it was really affecting job creation in general. As I pointed out earlier, new development is tremendously important. It creates jobs and it is indeed the driver of our economy.

This new act will promote the home construction industry and it will indeed reduce the cost of some of those homes. The member for Fort York was concerned about affordability of homes. That's really what this bill is all about: making homes more affordable.

We hope it may also stimulate rental accommodation, something that has been missing for a very long time. It really got started back in the mid-1970s when some new rental agreements came in, bills on rental accommodation that limited the increasing of rent at that time. As a result, rents have been held down and we've ended up with a tremendous lack of rental accommodation in this province. We ended up with a Ministry of Housing and we've been spending something like $1 billion a year just because of the direction that it went. We were just not developing new rental accommodation.

This legislation will certainly reduce the scope of services that have in the past been eligible for financing through development charges. We're proposing in this act that, for some of the soft services, the municipalities will be expected to pay 10%. We're talking about things like libraries, community halls, hockey arenas and convention facilities. The other 90% could come from development charges, but it's not required that all 90% would come from that.

By setting it at this level, it does accomplish two things: First, it ensures that newcomers coming to a community and buying a new home would not have to carry the entire financial burden, as they were liable to do in the past. Sometimes, as mentioned, these new and existing facilities may be found on the far side of town, where everyone is enjoying them, not just those in that particular subdivision. We believe that really all residents should be helping. New residents, it should be remembered, will also be paying taxes down the road and will be supporting these new facilities as they go on and costs are required.

This particular bill will make the whole process far more transparent and it will be easier for those who have to foot the bill to see what's going on and examine it and understand it much better. It will also make councils far more accountable.

Mr Gerretsen: How?

Mr Galt: I'm glad the member from Kingston asked how. They'll be required to carry out studies and take a really hard look at these new facilities, and also they'll be paying the 10% that will make them more justified. There will be more municipal financial involvement, especially with the 10%, and that will get them more involved and more concerned to take a very serious look at it. They will be paying partly for these new services.

Bill 98 will require municipalities to look at a cost-benefit analysis and end up calculating the actual benefit to the community and to the residents who will be using these new facilities.

During the hearings we heard from many municipalities concerned about the contribution for soft services. We listened to those concerns when it was at 30% in the original bill and we adjusted that to 10%. At the same time it had been set for hard services at 10% for municipalities, and we moved that to zero. This compromise indicates the way this government listens and responds to the concerns of the public.

We're not the kind of government that may push things through, like the social contract that the previous government pushed through with no hearings, just drove it through, wiped out all the collective agreements of the province, of the municipalities and of school boards. They just drove it through without listening; no hearings. This government is one that has hearings and listens and responds.

Let me give you an example as to Who Does What. We had the Crombie study, went out and listened and invited the public and municipal representatives to participate. We listened and we implemented and brought in almost everything the Crombie report recommended. Then we had the transition team sit down and look at it. What did we end up doing? AMO came to us with a recommendation. We looked at it, we could meet our goals, so we said yes to almost everything AMO recommended except the 5% that trustees might be able to continue taxing resident property owners. We said no to that one item, but otherwise we listened and we responded.

More recently, just last week we listened again and responded with some changes to Bill 136. The union leaders came in and met with the Premier and some of the ministers who were connected with that bill. We listened, we looked at it and we responded. We're working with the unions and our goals have not changed. We will still accomplish our goals. We may arrive there by a slightly different route, but our goals are firm and we will arrive at those goals that we intended to reach in the beginning. Our main goal is to eliminate the deficit and reduce the debt that you people started, that you people created and that has caused all kinds of harm to new construction and jobs and the economy in this country.

Mr Gerretsen: You're the ones doing the harm.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Kingston and The Islands, order.

Mr Galt: Mr Speaker, thank you very much for quietening them down and getting a little order here.

Development charges are a real concern to all residents of Ontario, particularly those who are looking for new homes, and also for communities that are poised for growth. Northumberland just happens to be one of those communities that is benefiting from lower development charges, and many of the municipalities in Northumberland have kept their development charges down. As a matter of fact, five months ago I spoke at an economic development workshop in Hope township. There's no doubt in my mind that excess development charges dampen growth and investment.

1730

Northumberland right now is open and welcomes growth. There are many examples across our riding where growth will be enhanced by looking at these development charges. For example, in Brighton we have a growing retirement community where some 800 units will be developed. In west Northumberland, in the industrial park near the mothballed Wesleyville plant, development is on the move. West of Cobourg, in New Amherst, there is an entire new community-based urbanism model now under way. That's the kind of development that is occurring in the riding right now.

Six months ago, I announced in this House that in my riding, in the town of Cobourg, we had regained over 900 jobs in the manufacturing sector that had been lost during the recession. At that point in time, roughly January 1, we had broken even. This was certainly encouraging news. It also indicated that we were poised to move ahead with greater residential and commercial growth throughout the riding.

In Cobourg, by the beginning of April, building permits were up to $4.2 million. That was up from $1.6 million at that time the year before, almost triple what they were in 1996. In manpower employment surveys carried out, 44% of employers in the construction companies were predicting hiring. In manufacturing companies, some 24% of the employers were predicting that they would be hiring within the year.

Bill 98 will certainly help to encourage new growth and new investment in Ontario. I'm looking forward to that both in my riding and across Ontario. That is why I'm very pleased to support Bill 98.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Bradley: I have found rather amusing the chronology the member has used in talking about the reaction of municipalities. As we know, municipalities in this province are under siege by this government because of the downloading of responsibilities and financial obligations that have been embarked upon by the Premier and members of the cabinet.

At the very time that our municipal representatives require funds to be able to carry out their responsibilities, the Mike Harris government is taking away from them one source of revenue which was quite legitimate to be able to undertake projects which were of benefit and help and necessity to the various municipalities. So they did not hail this bill.

When they got into negotiations with the government, it was the old story of the government starting out with a very hard line. Then, when they get into negotiations and the government backs down on a couple of items, it's in essence similar to saying: "Thank you for kicking me in the shins. You didn't kick me in the face." That's so often what happens when the government is involved in these negotiations.

There is little doubt, despite what the Conservative government member says, that the main beneficiaries of this legislation will be the huge developers in the province. They will be coming in great numbers to the Conservative fund-raisers and saying, "Thank you," with large donations to the Conservative Party. They are a special interest group that is being looked after by this government, and there is no guarantee in this legislation, as the member admitted, that any savings will be passed along to potential homeowners.

Mr Bisson: This was a most interesting speech, I guess you could call it, by the member across the way, who says: "This is a great thing. This government is making changes to the Development Charges Act and it's going to create all this new development in the province."

Let's look at what this government actually did. They started out by saying they were going to remove entirely the ability of municipalities to charge for soft services on developments, so there would be no development charges on soft services.

Because of Hazel McCallion and other mayors who said, "This is utterly preposterous. You are trying to tell us, municipal governments, how to run our businesses," the government finally backed down. The government is now saying, through this revised bill, you can charge everything but 10% back to the contractor, the developer. In other words, if there's a development charge, they can pass on 90% of the development charge right back to the developer, and 10% has to be borne by the municipality.

This is not going to do anything to increase development. Quite frankly, we're standing here debating a bill that, for all practical purposes, who knows what it's really going to do? What they originally wanted to do was make municipalities pay the entire cost of soft services. Now, because of the intervention of mayors and others in this House, they are in a position where they can still pass on up to 90% of soft development charges to municipalities.

So who are you trying to kid? This bill is going to do absolutely nothing to help development happen in this province in any way, shape or form, because in the end it is still the status quo. The only difference is that they can pass on 10%.

The last point: The member across the way says municipalities were misusing this power. What a thing for a government to be saying about municipalities in this province. It's pretty sad.

The Acting Speaker: Time has expired. The Chair recognizes the member for Scarborough East.

Mr Gilchrist: I'm indeed pleased to respond to comments made by my colleague the member for Northumberland, who, unlike the previous speaker, stayed on topic, and unlike the previous speaker decided to more accurately reflect on what exactly is happening in the province of Ontario, both in this chamber and outside, the investment that's being made by the hardworking people of this province.

We have heard far too often opposite that we don't consult, that we don't listen. This bill is a classic example of exactly how much the government does consult and listen to the affected groups, whether municipalities, developers or people who just were looking forward to buying a home. The bottom line is that a number of very specific, concrete suggestions were made, and they're reflected in the final version of the bill that's now going forward for our consideration in third reading.

The bottom line is that, as the member mentioned, whether it's Bill 136 or this bill or Who Does What, in every case this government has set a track record. Contrary to the mythology that the opposition tries to create, the facts support the argument that we have been listening and we have been responding better than either of the two previous governments. Whether it's Bill 136 —

Mr Bradley: Sound the bugles of retreat.

Mr Gilchrist: The member opposite derides the fact that we listened to labour and we've responded now. You go through labour's alternative. We've made those suggestions, appropriate amendments to Bill 136. But even more appropriate, we had 720 hours of hearings last year. The NDP in their record year had 689. The most the Liberals ever sat was 529 hours, 200 fewer hours of public hearings, the same year that they rammed through 93 bills. In all of 1996, we just passed 10; in other words, 72 hours per bill for the Conservatives, five hours per bill for the Liberals.

You talk a good line in here, but the bottom line is that both of those two parties demonstrated they didn't listen to the people. That's why they were judged the way they were June 8, 1995.

Mr Gerretsen: I must say to the last member, in those days that you were talking about, there were no restrictions on debate. So there must have been some pretty good bills to allow them to go through in a much shorter period of time.

What I want to talk about, though, is the total inconsistency. We heard the member just say that municipalities can't be trusted because they may be using some of the developers' money for museums, for rinks and for other projects. They can't be trusted, and therefore they've got to be limited. Now, they're only going to be limited by 10%, which, as the other member has already indicated, is really a very small amount in the total development framework etc.

On the other hand, they're saying municipalities can be trusted, because we're downloading all these other services on them. We want to download social housing on them. We want to download the health unit costs on them. I know of no other health costs that are actually borne by local municipalities. We want to download policing to municipalities; no more policing grants. You may recall, Mr Speaker, I spoke to you last week about a municipality that actually got a bill for $60,000. They haven't seen a policeman in the last year or two, and yet they're being charged with it, one of the smallest municipalities in Ontario. What else are they downloading? They're downloading ambulance services, which have never been dealt with by municipalities.

1740

You can't have it both ways. You can't on the one hand say, "We don't trust you as far as development is concerned, but on the other hand, here, we want you to pay for all of these services now." Why don't you listen to the mayors of this province who are saying, one and all, that the downloading is going to cost more on the property tax base in this province? Rather than stonewalling them and rather than saying it's revenue-neutral, say the right thing, and that is that you are downloading extra costs on the local taxpayers.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. We're in debate. There are comments and questions; there are replies. I want your replies put in that format. If you have the attention of the Chair, then you'll be standing up in your place, and that's the only time you're supposed to be shouting, talking and making noise.

Mr Galt: I'd certainly like to thank my seatmate, the member for Scarborough East, for his very kind comments.

It's interesting he also noticed the criticism from the opposition. First they criticize that we're pushing something through and not listening when in fact we are, and then when we listen and respond, they say we're backing down and chickening out. You just can't have it both ways. We either do one or the other, and I think we're hitting a very comfortable happy medium.

We're listening to the public, we are responding, but we are heading out and going to meet our goals. That's really what it's all about and what's important, the kinds of goals that we established in the Common Sense Revolution, brought out a full year before the election. The election could have been much sooner if they'd gone on the traditional four-year time, but they dragged it out to almost five years.

Mr John L. Parker (York East): What did they do in the fifth year?

Mr Galt: Nothing. I think they sat for three weeks, just a few days, and basically nothing happened legislativewise except they ran up a big debt.

It's interesting how they got sidetracked on to so many different things. I heard the member for St Catharines talking about us kicking somebody in the shins. I think they were kicking people in the face when they were in, because what happened there is they doubled their spending, doubled the budget in the 1980s, when times were pretty good. That's when they should have been paying down some of the debt. Then what did the NDP do in the following government? They doubled the debt. Between the two of them — talk about getting kicked in the face — they increased taxes 65 times in 10 years. That's what you did: increased taxes 65 times.

When you talk about downloading, don't forget that the public has pleaded that we take the education tax off residents. We did, we took it all off, and then we responded to the municipalities. When AMO came to us, we said: "Okay. If you would prefer it this way, we'll go 50%." Don't forget also the $570 million that's been set aside, annualized, for hard-hit municipalities.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. Further debate?

Mr Bradley: I want to begin my remarks by congratulating the member for Welland, St Catharines and Thorold, the Honourable Gilbert Parent, for his re-election to the position of Speaker of the House of Commons. Gib Parent is the Speaker of the House of Commons once again, and I want to compliment him on that because I know all members would want to join me in doing so.

I have found amusing, first of all, the various comments of members of the government. I listened to these bulldogs — I use that very kindly — on the other side who talked about how tough they were going to be, how difficult they were going to be, how they were going to stay the course, how they would never back down. And indeed those of us in the opposition said: "You know, you should start out doing something right in the first place. Don't unnecessarily provoke people. Don't move too quickly. Don't move too drastically. Look at the consequences of your actions." The government continued to bulldoze and bully people around the province until they hit the skids in the polls. Then all of a sudden we see a major change on the part of the government.

I listened last Thursday with absolute astonishment as the Premier got up and denounced the union bosses, as he called them, said this government was tough and standing firm, said his government was in a new era of relations where the public sector employees had to understand certain things. He reminded me of Phineas T. Bluster. That was a character in the Howdy Doody show of years gone by when I was a little wee kid. Mr Bluster was a person who was all bluster. He was all wind. He was all huffing and puffing. I saw Mike Harris, Premier of Ontario, get up at his blustering best and denounce the union bosses.

I thought Mike Harris was going to stay the course, just as the citizens' coalition asked him to. I thought he was going to stand firm, as the taxpayers' coalition were urging him to do. Then, all of a sudden, I heard the Minister of Labour get up and almost totally capitulate, though we haven't seen the details yet, to the demands which were made by, as the Premier would call them, the union bosses, and as we would call them, the elected representatives of working people in this province.

One could hear the bugles of retreat being sounded. One could hear the beeping sound as the truck backs up, as it's in full retreat. I was happy to see that, but I wish it were motivated by something other than a dive in the polls. I wish it were motivated by the fact that the government recognized it was wrong in the first place.

The battering that the government was taking day after day from my Liberal colleagues and members of the third party obviously had some effect. Obviously the government knew that it was making militant people who are not normally militant, people who did not want to go out on strike, people who wanted to concentrate on the jobs that they had, on serving the people of this province, on working with the students of this province. I think at last there was a recognition of that. It was late. It was a conversion on the road to Damascus. It was very late coming, but better late than never. You could add to that, better never late.

So we come to this bill on development charges and I hear the government say, "The real purpose is to help people who want to purchase homes, so we're going to cut the cost for them." Yet I look in the bill and I find no provision that would require the developer to pass along that cost which would have been incurred by the kind of development charges that municipalities have been imposing for very good reasons.

I suspect that any savings will go into the pockets of the developers and a certain portion into the coffers of the Conservative Party. The big developers are going to have to say, "You know, we are a special interest group and we're going to have to thank this government." "How can we best thank the government?" the big developers will say. They'll show up at the big fund-raising dinners all around the province. In St Catharines they were overflowing at the Ramada Parkway Inn. You couldn't get near the place, I'm told, for developers and others for whom the government has done favours: deregulating, reducing environmental requirements and so on. I thought from a straight point of view of fund-raising, this was good; good public policy, however, it wasn't.

But I understood at least why this bill was being brought in and I know when it's finally passed we will be able to hear the tinkling of the glasses at the Albany Club as they gather together to celebrate this victory over regular folks in our province, this victory of the developers. They will be thanking them at the Albany Club with the Conservative members.

What does this bode for the province? I remember the municipal affairs minister in Ottawa making a speech — and I know all of the environmentally concerned supporters of the Conservative government, all 12 of them, will be saying they were shocked at this — where he said, "I want to see fewer whooping cranes in Ontario and more construction cranes." I'm very concerned when I hear this; not surprised, but very concerned when I hear this. I begin to see unfettered development taking place. Good development everybody wants to see, I assure members of the House, but I see it happening all around the province in the way it shouldn't. I see prime agricultural land being converted into development in this province.

1750

There are places for development, places where the agricultural land is not prime, places where the soils are not conducive to growing good food, places where the climatic conditions aren't special to growing certain crops. But the big developers want to get into the prime farm land.

If you look at the Niagara Peninsula, there are members of this government who would like to see everything paved from the edge of Metropolitan Toronto, Etobicoke west to Niagara Falls and Fort Erie, paved completely, taking away farm land which could serve to assist people in the future for the growth of vegetables, for the growth of fruit, for the growth of food for people in our province. Instead, there are people who want to pave that farm land.

We in the Niagara Peninsula have as an attraction a good deal of rural land, something that is good for the peace of mind of people, something that is attractive to tourists in our province. We used to see this throughout the Niagara Peninsula. Now we have development, we have the paving of the farm land, we have asphalt farmers in many places.

Some of the beauty of the Niagara Peninsula has been lost. Some of the attractiveness which brings my friend Bill Saunderson down to the peninsula on many occasions — he's a frequent visitor — is being lost as new developments are proposed. In fact, tonight St Catharines city council is dealing with a development on prime agricultural land. It started out as an autoplex they wanted to build. Now it's a different development.

Is there a place for development? Yes, in the city itself, within the urban boundaries there is still room for development. The land has been allocated for that purpose. Yet we're seeing people who want to pave that farm land. As soon as you allow certain developments to take place, it multiplies.

I feel bad for people in the town of Queenston, where there is a huge proposal for further development to destroy the character of that town. The town of Niagara-on-the-Lake council is opposing this and the regional municipality of Niagara is opposing this, but there are people who want to develop all that and make it look more like it's in the middle of Metropolitan Toronto, where we expect development, rather than on prime agricultural land.

You are taking away from the municipalities, through this bill, an opportunity to gain some funds to carry out their responsibilities. Heaven knows they will need this money, because you have downloaded responsibility, as the mayor of St Catharines has said as the chair of the large municipalities — and he has said it in much more diplomatic terms than the mayor of Mississauga, who is much more direct in indicating what this government was doing. My good friend Don Cousens, former Conservative member for Markham, now the mayor of Markham, has denounced this government for its downloading. They are saying: "Look, you are placing new financial responsibilities and obligations on our municipalities. At the same time, you are taking away our opportunity to levy development charges which legitimately contribute to services that are going to be required in greater numbers because of new development taking place."

We see user fees taking place now as well, being imposed. I was talking to people in the all-star hockey realm just yesterday. I said, "What will it cost somebody to simply step on the ice now?" They said it was $900 simply to register. Why is that? Because the user fees are going up. The children of rich people will be able to participate, will be able to take part, but other people will not. In our Ontario, I suspect in the Ontario of Bill Davis —

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): Mr Grimmett doesn't believe you.

Mr Gilchrist: Neither does Mr Gilchrist.

Mr Bradley: In Mr Grimmett's and perhaps Mr Gilchrist's Ontario, that may well be acceptable. It certainly wasn't in the Ontario of Bill Davis and Bob Welch and Tom Wells and Roy McMurtry and the late Larry Grossman and other icons of the Conservative Party from years gone by.

We are seeing in the Niagara Peninsula a situation where we have unique soil conditions and unique climatic conditions. For instance, the difference between the top of the Niagara Escarpment, which is under assault, by the way, and the bottom of the Niagara Escarpment is on the average 27 more growing days, 27 more frost-free days, so special products, special crops can be grown at the bottom of the escarpment. Yet we see development taking place and money being made hand over fist on these developments by the large developers.

People will be asking, "What about rent control?" A lot of seniors and a lot of others don't know that this government is also removing rent control. That will help to enhance the attendance at the fund-raisers in Ontario as the huge developers are able to up the rents substantially for people out there, well beyond what would be anticipated to be fair, as a result of a bill that is sitting before this Legislature. I wonder how many of those senior citizens who might have voted Conservative because they found some of the Conservative Party attractive will today be in favour of having their rents increased drastically, as the rent control bill will ensure will happen.

I want to share some of the progressive thoughts that are forthcoming from individuals on these development fees. Hazel McCallion said: "We can't afford to let development go ahead. We don't wish to go into debt. We're managing our finances extremely well and we take exception to the interference by the province into the revenue of the municipalities."

There are others who have had certain comments to make that I think are equally relevant. The critics argue the changes to the charges will encourage costly, land-munching urban sprawl and make new development less sensitive to the environment.

"Now we're back to the situation where we're going to have all those cookie-cutter housing developments with no controls on them," said Kathleen Cooper of the Canadian Environmental Law Association. "It's incredibly wasteful," she said, and I agree.

"Developers won't have to pay as much towards additional municipal services when they erect new housing, but the net result will be more subdivisions with large houses and wide lots requiring longer roads, water lines and sewers, making people more dependent on cars," Ms Cooper predicted.

"We're going to see developments in areas that never should see development: in wetlands, in natural areas," warned former Toronto mayor John Sewell.

What they basically said is that anything can happen anywhere. As for making some energy conservation features optional, environmentalists say they'll require furnaces to work harder and pump out more greenhouse gases.

In a report for the government-appointed greater Toronto task force, economist Pamela Blais said, "Sprawl can be costly, forcing taxpayers to subsidize much of the infrastructure for new suburbs." She recommended increasing development charges for building on the outskirts of urban areas.

Here we have what the real purpose is: to make the developers happy and to increase the money coming into the Conservative coffers from the developers. That's the real purpose of this legislation. Otherwise, as you know, Mr Speaker, better than anyone, there would be a clause in this bill which would say, "All reduced charges will go back to the home buyer." If they put that in the bill, at least we could say we knew what the purpose of the bill was. As it is, it is a bill that attacks municipalities, that makes developers happy and that will call for one thing. One thing will happen, I say, because it will be 6 of the clock soon and I'll have to continue my remarks later, but one thing I want to say is that it will start one building boom, and that is, the building of brand-new and bigger halls in which we will hold the Conservative fund-raisers, because there are going to be so many developers wanting to come to the fund-raisers, they'll need bigger halls to be able to accommodate them.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): It now being 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock tomorrow.

The House adjourned at 1800.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO
ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lieutenant Governor / Lieutenante-gouverneure: Hon / L'hon Hilary M. Weston
Speaker / Président: Hon / L'hon Chris Stockwell
Clerk / Greffier: Claude L. DesRosiers
Clerk Assistant / Greffière adjointe: Deborah Deller
Clerks at the Table / Greffiers parlementaires: Todd Decker, Lisa Freedman
Sergeant-at-Arms / Sergent d'armes: Dennis Clark

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Algoma	Wildman, Bud (ND)
Algoma-Manitoulin	Brown, Michael A. (L)
Beaches-Woodbine	Lankin, Frances (ND)
Brampton North / -Nord	Spina, Joseph (PC)
Brampton South / -Sud	Clement, Tony (PC)
Brant-Haldimand	Preston, Peter L. (PC)
Brantford	Johnson, Ron (PC)
Bruce	Fisher, Barbara (PC)
Burlington South / -Sud	Jackson, Hon / L'hon Cameron (PC) Minister without Portfolio (seniors issues) / ministre sans portefeuille (affaires des pernonnes âgées)
Cambridge	Martiniuk, Gerry (PC)
Carleton	Sterling, Hon / L'hon Norman W. (PC) Minister of Environment and Energy / ministre de l'Environnement et de l'Énergie
Carleton East / -Est	Morin, Gilles E. (L)
Chatham-Kent	Carroll, Jack (PC)
Cochrane North / -Nord	Wood, Len (ND)
Cochrane South / -Sud	Bisson, Gilles (ND)
Cornwall	Cleary, John C. (L)
Don Mills	Johnson, Hon / L'hon David (PC) Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, government House leader / président du Conseil de gestion, leader parlementaire du gouvernement
Dovercourt	Silipo, Tony (ND)
Downsview	Castrilli, Annamarie (L)
Dufferin-Peel	Tilson, David (PC)
Durham Centre / -Centre	Flaherty, Jim (PC)
Durham East / -Est	O'Toole, John R. (PC)
Durham West / -Ouest	Ecker, Hon / L'hon Janet (PC) Minister of Community and Social Services / ministre des Services sociaux et communautaires
Durham-York	Munro, Julia (PC)
Eglinton	Saunderson, Hon / L'hon William (PC) Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism / ministre du Développement économique, du Commerce et du Tourisme
Elgin	North, Peter (Ind)
Essex-Kent	Hoy, Pat (L)
Essex South / -Sud	Crozier, Bruce (L)
Etobicoke-Humber	Ford, Douglas B. (PC)
Etobicoke-Lakeshore	Kells, Morley (PC)
Etobicoke-Rexdale	Hastings, John (PC)
Etobicoke West / -Ouest	Stockwell, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Speaker / président
Fort William	McLeod, Lyn (L)
Fort York	Marchese, Rosario (ND)
Frontenac-Addington	Vankoughnet, Bill (PC)
Grey-Owen Sound	Murdoch, Bill (PC)
Guelph	Elliott, Brenda (PC)
Halton Centre / -Centre	Young, Terence H. (PC)
Halton North / -Nord	Chudleigh, Ted (PC)
Hamilton Centre / -Centre	Christopherson, David (ND)
Hamilton East / -Est	Agostino, Dominic (L)
Hamilton Mountain	Pettit, Trevor (PC)
Hamilton West / -Ouest	Ross, Lillian (PC)
Hastings-Peterborough	Danford, Harry (PC)
High Park-Swansea	Shea, Derwyn (PC)
Huron	Johns, Helen (PC)
Kenora	Miclash, Frank (L)
Kingston and The Islands / Kingston et Les Îles	Gerretsen, John (L)
Kitchener	Wettlaufer, Wayne (PC)
Kitchener-Wilmot	Leadston, Gary L. (PC)
Lake Nipigon / Lac-Nipigon	Pouliot, Gilles (ND)
Lambton	Beaubien, Marcel (PC)
Lanark-Renfrew	Jordan, W. Leo (PC)
Lawrence	Cordiano, Joseph (L)
Leeds-Grenville	Runciman, Hon / L'hon Robert W. (PC) Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services / solliciteur général et ministre des Services correctionnels
Lincoln	Sheehan, Frank (PC)
London Centre / -Centre	Boyd, Marion (ND)
London North / -Nord	Cunningham, Hon / L'hon Dianne (PC) Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, minister responsible for women's issues / ministre des Affaires intergouvernementales, ministre déléguée à la Condition féminine
London South / -Sud	Wood, Bob (PC)
Markham	Tsubouchi, Hon / L'hon David H. (PC) Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce
Middlesex	Smith, Bruce (PC)
Mississauga East / -Est	DeFaria, Carl (PC)
Mississauga North / -Nord	Snobelen, Hon / L'hon John (PC) Minister of Education and Training / ministère de l'Éducation et de la Formation
Mississauga South / -Sud	Marland, Margaret (PC)
Mississauga West / -Ouest	Sampson, Hon / L'hon Rob (PC) Minister without Portfolio (privatization) / ministre sans portefeuille (privatisation)
Muskoka-Georgian Bay / Muskoka-Baie-Georgienne	Grimmett, Bill (PC)
Nepean	Baird, John R. (PC)

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Niagara Falls	Maves, Bart (PC)
Niagara South / -Sud	Hudak, Tim (PC)
Nickel Belt	Laughren, Floyd (ND)
Nipissing	Harris, Hon / L'hon Michael D. (PC) Premier and President of the Executive Council / premier ministre et président du Conseil exécutif
Norfolk	Barrett, Toby (PC)
Northumberland	Galt, Doug (PC)
Oakville South / -Sud	Carr, Gary (PC)
Oakwood	Colle, Mike (L)
Oriole	Caplan, David
Oshawa	Ouellette, Jerry J. (PC)
Ottawa Centre / -Centre	Patten, Richard (L)
Ottawa East / -Est	Grandmaître, Bernard (L)
Ottawa-Rideau	Guzzo, Garry J. (PC)
Ottawa South / -Sud	McGuinty, Dalton (L) Leader of the Opposition / chef de l'opposition
Ottawa West / -Ouest	Cullen, Alex
Oxford	Hardeman, Ernie (PC)
Parkdale	Ruprecht, Tony (L)
Parry Sound	Eves, Hon / L'hon Ernie L. (PC) Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance / vice-premier ministre, ministre des Finances
Perth	Johnson, Bert (PC)
Peterborough	Stewart, R. Gary (PC)
Port Arthur	Gravelle, Michael (L)
Prescott and Russell / Prescott et Russell	Lalonde, Jean-Marc (L)
Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings / Prince EdwardLennox-Hastings-Sud	Fox, Gary (PC)
Quinte	Rollins, E.J. Douglas (PC)
Rainy River	Hampton, Howard (ND) Leader of the New Democratic Party / Chef du Nouveau Parti démocratique
Renfrew North / -Nord	Conway, Sean G. (L)
Riverdale	Churley, Marilyn (ND)
S-D-G & East Grenville / S-D-G et Grenville-Est	Villeneuve, Hon / L'hon Noble (PC) Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs / ministre de l'Agriculture, de l'Alimentation et des Affaires rurales, ministre délégué aux Affaires francophones
St Andrew-St Patrick	Bassett, Isabel (PC)
St Catharines	Bradley, James J. (L)
St Catharines-Brock	Froese, Tom (PC)
St George-St David	Leach, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing / ministre des Affaires municipales et du Logement
Sarnia	Boushy, Dave (PC)
Sault Ste Marie / Sault-Sainte-Marie	Martin, Tony (ND)
Scarborough-Agincourt	Phillips, Gerry (L)
Scarborough Centre / -Centre	Newman, Dan (PC)
Scarborough East / -Est	Gilchrist, Steve (PC)
Scarborough-Ellesmere	Mushinski, Hon / L'hon Marilyn (PC) Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation / ministre des Affaires civiques, de la Culture et des Loisirs
Scarborough North / -Nord	Curling, Alvin (L)
Scarborough West / -Ouest	Brown, Jim (PC)
Simcoe Centre / -Centre	Tascona, Joseph N. (PC)
Simcoe East / -Est	McLean, Allan K. (PC)
Simcoe West / -Ouest	Wilson, Hon / L'hon Jim (PC) Minister of Health / ministre de la Santé
Sudbury	Bartolucci, Rick (L)
Sudbury East / -Est	Martel, Shelley (ND)
Timiskaming	Ramsay, David (L)
Victoria-Haliburton	Hodgson, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Minister of Natural Resources, Minister of Northern Development and Mines / ministre des Richesses naturelles, ministre du Développement du Nord et des Mines
Waterloo North / -Nord	Witmer, Hon / L'hon Elizabeth (PC) Minister of Labour / ministre du Travail
Welland-Thorold	Kormos, Peter (ND)
Wellington	Arnott, Ted (PC)
Wentworth East / -Est	Doyle, Ed (PC)
Wentworth North / -Nord	Skarica, Toni (PC)
Willowdale	Harnick, Hon / L'hon Charles (PC) Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs / procureur général, ministre délégué aux Affaires autochtones
Wilson Heights	Kwinter, Monte (L)
Windsor-Riverside	Lessard, Wayne
Windsor-Sandwich	Pupatello, Sandra (L)
Windsor-Walkerville	Duncan, Dwight (L)
York Centre / -Centre	Palladini, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Transportation / ministre des Transports
York East / -Est	Parker, John L. (PC)
York Mills	Turnbull, David (PC)
York-Mackenzie	Klees, Frank (PC)
Yorkview	Sergio, Mario (L)
York South / -Sud	Kennedy, Gerard (L)

A list arranged by members' surnames and including all responsibilities of each member appears in the first and last issues of each session and on the first Monday of each month.

Une liste alphabétique des noms des députés, comprenant toutes les responsabilités de chaque député, figure dans les premier et dernier numéros de chaque session et le premier lundi de chaque mois.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY
COMITÉS PERMANENTS DE L'ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE

Administration of justice / Administration de la justice

Chair / Président: Gerry Martiniuk
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: E.J. Douglas Rollins
Dave Boushy, Bruce Crozier, Jim Flaherty,
Garry J. Guzzo, Peter Kormos, Gerry Martiniuk,
David Ramsay, E.J. Douglas Rollins, Bob Wood
Clerk / Greffier: Douglas Arnott

Estimates / Budgets des dépenses

Chair / Président: Gerard Kennedy
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Rick Bartolucci
Rick Bartolucci, Gilles Bisson, John C. Cleary,
Ed Doyle, Bill Grimmett, Helen Johns,
Gerard Kennedy, Trevor Pettit, Wayne Wettlaufer
Clerk / Greffière: Rosemarie Singh

Finance and economic affairs /
Finances et affaires économiques

Chair / Président: Terence H. Young
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Wayne Wettlaufer
Ted Arnott, Isabel Bassett, Jim Brown, Monte Kwinter,
Gerry Phillips, Gilles Pouliot, E.J. Douglas Rollins,
Wayne Wettlaufer, Terence H. Young
Clerk / Greffière: Rosemarie Singh

General government / Affaires gouvernementales

Chair / Président: David Tilson
Vice-Chair / Vice-Présidente: Julia Munro
Mike Colle, Harry Danford, Barbara Fisher,
Tom Froese, Steve Gilchrist, Rosario Marchese,
Julia Munro, Mario Sergio, David Tilson
Clerk / Greffier: Tom Prins

Government agencies / Organismes gouvernementaux

Chair / Président: Floyd Laughren
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Tony Silipo
John R. Baird, Michael Gravelle, Bert Johnson,
Floyd Laughren, Frank Miclash, Dan Newman,
Tony Silipo, Joseph Spina, R. Gary Stewart,
Clerk / Greffier: Douglas Arnott

Legislative Assembly / Assemblée législative

Chair / Président: Joseph N. Tascona
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Gary Fox
Tony Clement, Alvin Curling, Carl DeFaria, Gary Fox,
Ernie Hardeman, Gilles E. Morin, Peter North,
Lillian Ross, Tony Silipo, Joseph N. Tascona, David Tilson
Clerk / Greffier: Peter Sibenik

Ombudsman

Chair / Président: John R. O'Toole
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Trevor Pettit
Dominic Agostino, Douglas B. Ford, Allan K. McLean,
John R. O'Toole, John L. Parker, Trevor Pettit,
Sandra Pupatello, Bill Vankoughnet, Len Wood
Clerk / Greffière: Tonia Grannum

Public accounts / Comptes publics

Chair / Président: Bernard Grandmaître
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Richard Patten
Marcel Beaubien, Gary Fox, Bernard Grandmaître,
Bill Grimmett, Jean-Marc Lalonde, Shelley Martel,
Richard Patten, Peter L. Preston, Joseph N. Tascona
Clerk / Greffière: Donna Bryce

Regulations and private bills /
Règlements et projets de loi privés

Chair / Président: Toby Barrett
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Marcel Beaubien
Toby Barrett, Marcel Beaubien, Michael A. Brown,
Ernie Hardeman, Gary L. Leadston, Tony Martin,
Tony Ruprecht, Derwyn Shea, Frank Sheehan,
Clerk / Greffier: Tom Prins

Resources development / Développement des ressources

Chair / Présidente: Brenda Elliott
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Jerry J. Ouellette
David Christopherson, Ted Chudleigh, Sean G. Conway,
Brenda Elliott, Doug Galt, John Hastings, Pat Hoy,
Bart Maves, Jerry J. Ouellette
Clerk / Greffière: Donna Bryce

Social development / Affaires sociales

Chair / Présidente: Annamarie Castrilli
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Dwight Duncan
Marion Boyd, Jack Carroll, Annamarie Castrilli,
Dwight Duncan, Tim Hudak, Frank Klees,
Lyn McLeod, John R. O'Toole, Bruce Smith
Clerk / Greffière: Tonia Grannum

CONTENTS

Monday 22 September 1997

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

Royal Canadian Legion
Mr Hoy 12249
Family Responsibility Office
Mr Lessard 12249
Niagara Grape and Wine Festival
Mr Froese 12249
Education Improvement Commission
Mr Michael Brown 12249
Education reform
Mr Marchese 12250
Courtice Community Complex
Mr O'Toole 12250
Hospital restructuring
Mrs Pupatello 12250
North Bay Days of Action
Ms Lankin 12251
Robert "Jack" Harris
Mr Jim Brown 12251

FIRST READINGS

City of York Act, 1997,
Bill Pr90, Mr Colle
Agreed to 12251
Education Quality Improvement Act, 1997, Bill 160, Mr Snobelen
Agreed to 12252

MOTIONS

House sittings
Mr David Johnson 12252
Agreed to 12252

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

Education reform
Mr Snobelen 12252
Mrs McLeod 12253
Mr Wildman 12254

DEFERRED VOTES

Committee membership, government notice of motion number 36, Mr David Johnson
Agreed to 12255

ORAL QUESTIONS

Education financing
Mrs McLeod 12257
Mr Snobelen 12257, 12259, 12265
Mr Hampton 12259
Mr Wildman 12260
Ms Churley 12265
Home care
Mr Kennedy 12258, 12263
Mr Wilson 12258, 12263
Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Hampton 12260
Mrs Witmer 12260
Mr Christopherson 12260
Video lottery terminals
Mr Bradley 12261
Mr Tsubouchi 12261
Hospital beds
Mrs Boyd 12262
Mr Wilson 12262
Self-management
Mr Hudak 12262
Mr Tsubouchi 12263
Family Responsibility Office
Mr Lessard 12263
Mr Harnick 12264
Mrs Boyd 12264
Social assistance
Mr Baird 12264
Mrs Ecker 12264
Youth employment
Mr Hardeman 12266
Mr Villeneuve 12266
Municipal restructuring
Mr Gerretsen 12266
Mr Harris 12267

PETITIONS

Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Gravelle 12267
Mr Miclash 12268
Hospital restructuring
Mr Silipo 12267
Mr Marchese 12268
Court decision
Mr Bob Wood 12267
Mr Bert Johnson 12268
Social assistance for the disabled
Mr Morin 12268
Abortion
Mr Cleary 12268
Protection of privacy
Mr Lalonde 12269
TVOntario
Mr Gravelle 12269
Standing orders reform
Mr Gerretsen 12269
Crematorium in Vaughn
Mr Sergio 12269
Transfer of provincial highways
Mr Conway 12270

GOVERNMENT MOTIONS

Select committee on Ontario Hydro nuclear affairs
Mr Wildman 12270
Mr Conway 12271
Agreed to 12271

THIRD READINGS

Development Charges Act, 1997,
Bill 98, Mr Leach
Mr Marchese 12271
Mr Galt 12279, 12280, 12284
Mr Gerretsen 12279, 12283
Mr Bisson 12279, 12282
Mr Gilchrist 12280, 12283
Mr Marchese 12280
Mr Bradley 12282, 12284
Debate deemed adjourned 12286

OTHER BUSINESS

Visitor
The Speaker 12255
Legislative pages
The Speaker 12255
Time allocation
Mr Patten 12255, 12256
Mr Christopherson 12256
Mr David Johnson 12256
The Speaker 12257

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Lundi 22 septembre 1997

QUESTIONS ORALES

Services en français
M. Grandmaître 12265
M. Villeneuve 12265

PREMIÈRE LECTURE

Loi de 1997 sur l'amélioration de la qualité de l'éducation, projet de loi 160, M. Snobelen
Adoptée 12252

TROISIÈME LECTURE

Loi de 1997 sur les redevances d'aménagement, projet de loi 98, M. Leach
Débat présumé ajourné 12286

A 2 ON
X1
-1223

Governme
Publicatio

No. 234A

Nº 234A

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly of Ontario

First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Tuesday 23 September 1997

Mardi 23 septembre 1997

NOV 24 1997
ersity of Toronto

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday 23 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mardi 23 septembre 1997

The House met at 1329.
Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

HÔPITAL MONTFORT

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde (Prescott et Russell) : J'aimerais porter à l'attention du ministre de la Santé deux incidents qui sont survenus récemment dans ma circonscription.

Tout d'abord le cas de M^me^ Thérèse Martin de Rockland, qui a fait un arrêt cardiaque et qui a dû être réanimée à plusieurs reprises par les ambulanciers. Dès son arrivée à la salle d'urgence de l'hôpital Montfort, tout le personnel médical affirmait que M^me^ Martin n'aurait pas survécu si le transport par ambulance avait été prolongé d'une dizaine de minutes pour se rendre à l'hôpital général d'Ottawa.

Le 17 août dernier, M^me^ Cécile Labrèche de Clarence était impliquée dans un accident sur la route 17. Lors du transport par ambulance vers l'hôpital général d'Ottawa, la condition de M^me^ Labrèche inquiétait parce qu'elle souffre d'angine. L'ambulancier qui se dirigeait vers l'hôpital général d'Ottawa a dû modifier son parcours afin de se rendre à la salle d'urgences la plus près, soit à l'hôpital Montfort.

Dans ces deux cas, Monsieur le Ministre, il est possible que les deux patientes ne seraient plus de ce monde s'il avait fallu prolonger le transport par ambulance d'une dizaine de minutes pour se rendre à l'hôpital général d'Ottawa. À la lueur de ces faits, je demande donc au ministre de la Santé de reconsidérer la recommandation de fermer la salle d'urgences de l'hôpital Montfort.

NORTH BAY DAYS OF ACTION

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): Today is the second day of the North Bay Days of Action and organizers say that we are poised to see the largest demonstration ever in northern Ontario on Saturday.

Lana Mitchell, who is one of the co-chairs and who also heads up Low Income People Involvement of Nipissing, expects a large turnout of people from North Bay. As she says: "Our neighbours know at first hand that the community of North Bay has suffered devastating losses. Already, requests to the Santa Fund are far ahead of what they were last year. Food bank usage is increasing every month. This community knows we have to recognize some unpleasant realities. It will turn out in large numbers."

The organizers have also made a real focus on unemployment and job loss in North Bay. Dawson Pratt, one of the other co-chairs, indicates that over 1,000 jobs have vanished because of this government's policies. The North Bay population is 56,000. If a proportionate number of people lost their jobs in Metro Toronto, almost 43,000 people would be jobless.

Pratt has called on the government to set up a select committee or a provincial inquiry to look into the devastation of jobs and the job loss in the Nipissing area. I think we can agree with him and say that if this same degree of job loss occurred in Metro Toronto, an army of 43,000 unemployed would certainly get the government's attention.

We support them in their call for a provincial inquiry and we'll be there on Saturday to show that support.

GREATER PETERBOROUGH CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): Today I rise to inform all members of this House that the city of Peterborough has declared this week the Greater Peterborough Chamber of Commerce Week. This special designation is a reflection of the important role the local chamber of commerce plays in our community. The chamber and the community have long had a close working relationship, and this week that partnership will develop further through a series of week-long events.

Computer workshops involving participants of the Student Connection program have been scheduled. Students from Trent University and Sir Sandford Fleming College will provide local businesses with training in how to use the Internet to expand their businesses: Good for business, good for students.

Later in the week, the chamber will host a special business awards reception to honour individuals who have experienced successes in one form or another.

The Greater Peterborough Chamber of Commerce is involved in many positive initiatives, everything from charity fund-raisers to working on initiatives to improve working conditions through the Safe Communities project, which is a program designed to reduce workplace accidents and injuries: Good for workers, good for business, good for government.

I invite all members to join me in congratulating our local chamber of commerce and all its members for the positive contributions they have made to the people of Peterborough.

ASSISTANCE TO FLOOD VICTIMS

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): I rise today once again to speak about the plight of the flood victims of Essex and Kent counties. On numerous occasions in past months I've stood in this Legislature and asked the Minister of Municipal Affairs to assist the citizens of Essex county who experienced property damage in the millions of dollars.

Once again, I ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs why he is sitting on his hands when he knows the situation is critical. The threat of fall storms and high lake levels further damaging breakwalls is now a reality. What is the minister waiting for? Is he waiting for the residents of Lake Erie and Lake St Clair to suffer further property damage?

This situation can be rectified right here, right now, if the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing would simply move to reinstate funding to the Shoreline Property Assistance Act. As I've stated on various occasions, we're not talking about a handout. It's not a grant, it's a loan. Why this government has refused to assist the citizens of Essex is difficult to understand. They've offered no explanations for this delay or refusal of responsibility.

Premier Harris, if your minister still refuses to take action, I call on you to personally intervene in this situation in response to the lack of support the shoreline property owners have received to date so that damaged property and breakwalls can be repaired promptly. The citizens of Essex need the help of their government now. Again, I urge the minister to provide assistance that is required immediately.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): Yesterday we saw the Minister of Education unveil his latest attack on our school system. He, of course, put it as he usually does, in a context very different than what the reality out there is going to be. He talked about the need and the wish to increase the school year, the need to give parents more authority through the increase and expansion of the rights that they have through the parent councils. But we know and people out there know that what this is all about is cutting another $1 billion out of our school system.

I want to tell the Minister of Education and I want to tell this government that people out there are not fooled by the antics of this government and certainly not by the approach taken by the Minister of Education. Last week I was at a meeting in my constituency at one of the high schools in the area, Oakwood Collegiate. Two hundred parents and students joined the teachers at a meeting to discuss what was coming up, the impending teachers strikes that we may see across the province and certainly here in Metropolitan Toronto.

Overwhelmingly, people there understood that what this minister and this government are doing is an outright attack on our school system. They see that if teachers are forced into a strike position, it will be because the government will have forced them into such an action and it will be because teachers will be defending not their own pocketbooks but the system of education that we have built up in this province, which certainly can be improved but will not be improved and will be wasted even more so by another $1 billion —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Statements.

ERNIE LAROCQUE

Mr Garry J. Guzzo (Ottawa-Rideau): I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the MPP for Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry and East Grenville to pay tribute to one Ernie Larocque, who is a constituent of Noble Villeneuve. Officer Larocque is here in the members' gallery today. He became the first Canadian ever to win the annual international truck inspection competition held this year in Minneapolis, Minnesota. What this means is that Ontario has the best enforcement officer inspecting trucks and buses in North America and, more importantly, he's working out of the ministry office in Cornwall.

Our government has been a tireless advocate for road safety. In the past two years we've introduced legislation that targets unsafe trucks and drivers. However, it's people like Officer Larocque who have to conduct these inspections, making certain drivers have proper papers, that their tires and brakes are in working order. Knowing that we have someone of Officer Larocque's calibre working on our behalf should be a source of satisfaction to all Ontarians.

Before this 20-year veteran of the ministry could compete internationally, he took top spot in both the eastern region and the provincial championships. In Minneapolis he went head to head against 52 other inspectors who had earned the right to be there representing Mexico, the United States and Canada's other provinces. The rigorous testing included three one-hour written exams on vehicles, drivers and dangerous goods, a personal interview and inspections of a trailer, motor coach, cargo tank and a driver and rig carrying dangerous goods.

Back home, on a typical day Officer Larocque —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you.

Interruption.

The Speaker: Although the public members in the gallery are out of order, I'll presume there's unanimous consent to allow them to stay. Agreed? Agreed.

1340

KIDNEY DIALYSIS

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): It has been over a year and a half since the Minister of Health announced that dialysis treatment would be available in Cornwall.

Since then, there have only been delays, mixups and confusion.

First, it was revealed that the provider selected was involved in legal proceedings in the United States, launching the ministry into its own court battle. Though the court proceedings are now over, and so supposedly the end of a 30-day waiting period, local patients and their health officials are still uncertain if and when the facilities will be set up.

Residents in my area are asking: "Are there any outstanding legal issues? What are the proposals on the table?" — and most importantly — "When exactly will the facility be set up and treating patients?"

The people of the greater Cornwall area, the patients, their families and health care representatives are tired of the minister's standard reply, "as soon as possible," and have requested meetings with the minister or his staff. These answers are needed now. Winter conditions are fast approaching.

ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr Floyd Laughren (Nickel Belt): Most Ontario citizens are aware there are problems at Ontario Hydro. Ontario Hydro itself has said that a recovery plan to make its nuclear division safe and efficient will cost up to $8.8 billion.

This Legislature has created a select committee, under the able chairmanship of Derwyn Shea, to examine Hydro's problems and, more specifically, its recovery plan for its nuclear division. In the middle of this activity there appears in our major daily newspapers this morning full-page ads with a very large picture of a very serious Bill Farlinger, CEO of Ontario Hydro.

So while Ontario Hydro has an $8-billion problem, they still have enough money to run a public relations campaign, for what purpose I can only guess.

As well, Mr Farlinger states in the ad, concerning his recovery plan, "I will be outlining that plan to the government's select committee very soon." Here we have the CEO of Ontario Hydro referring to the government's select committee, not a select committee of the Legislature but a government select committee. And you wonder why we wanted an independent inquiry.

Mr Farlinger has already determined that he will be outlining the recovery plan to the committee. Says who? Who invited him? Not me. I guess things never change. Ontario Hydro still think they run the government.

OPERATION CLEAN SWEEP

Mr Jerry J. Ouellette (Oshawa): I rise to address the House today regarding a recent event that took place in my riding of Oshawa. On Saturday, September 13, over 25 representatives of the Ontario chapter of the Canadian Sanitation Supply Association, or the CSSA, participated in Operation Clean Sweep.

Every year on the same weekend representatives from the chapters in each province or region choose a non-profit location to perform their work. Here in Ontario volunteers came from all over the Golden Horseshoe to assist.

This year Operation Clean Sweep was held at the Oshawa YWCA in downtown Oshawa. The YWCA in Oshawa provides supportive housing and recreational programs for women and children in the region of Durham.

This is the third year Operation Clean Sweep has assisted non-profit organizations by donating supplies, physically cleaning entire buildings and providing free supplies and equipment for use throughout the entire year.

With its 170 members in Ontario and provincial chapters in Quebec, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and Atlantic Canada, CSSA provided volunteers and participated in this year's Operation Clean Sweep.

One of the youngest of the volunteers at the Oshawa YWCA event was little three-year-old Taylor, who worked as hard as she could for this year's project in Oshawa.

I would like to thank the Canadian Sanitation Supply Association and its dedicated volunteers for stepping up in our community and making a valuable contribution, as well as all those who participate in events such as these in all our communities every day.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): I move that Mr Cullen be substituted for Mr Miclash on the standing committee on government agencies; and that Mr Caplan be substituted for Mr Brown on the standing committee on regulations and private bills.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: Under the provision of the new rules which have been imposed on this Legislature by the government, I gave you notice of the fact that I would be raising an issue. I have to give it an hour ahead of time, at least, so that you have some time to contemplate it, and so the opposition won't raise as many of these motions, I'm told. Anyway, it's in regard to government advertising.

The last time that I rose on this I was dealing with a pamphlet that the government had been involved with involving education. This is the million-dollar campaign where the government is spending a million dollars worth of taxpayers' money to convey what I consider to be a blatantly partisan message. But I'm talking today about the tape of the advertising that everybody sees on television now and that all taxpayers are paying for to the tune of over a million dollars.

The wording of the script of the ad tells me that the Minister of Education, I guess it would be in this case, because it's his ministry that is putting out the ad, would be in contempt of the Ontario Legislature with this advertising campaign because it states that the government is implementing a plan and part of that plan issues regulations dealing with class size. The script clearly reveals that. I took advantage of the opportunity to look at the script of this ad.

Interjection: Oh, oh.

Mr Bradley: The member from Wellington Dufferin-Peel says "Oh, oh," and he's right, because it is rather condemning.

Here's what the actual script of the ad says: "The government is implementing a comprehensive plan to ensure that our children can compete with anybody in the world. It includes more emphasis on the basics, limited class sizes...." If we look at the compendium that comes along with this bill, it makes a point here that it empowers the Lieutenant Governor in Council to issue regulations related to class size.

The ad conveys the distinct impression to people who wouldn't know that the legislation is not necessary, that somehow this is a foregone conclusion, the government is going to implement this and the Legislature doesn't seem to have anything to do with it.

Earlier you made a ruling and I'd like to quote from that ruling because I think it applies in this particular case. You said the following on January 22, 1997, Hansard, page 6442:

"However, I am very concerned by the ministry pamphlet, which was worded more definitely than the commercial and the press release. To name but a few examples, the brochure claims that 'new city wards will be created,' that 'work on building the new city will start in 1997,' and that 'the new city of Toronto will reduce the number of municipal politicians.'" So you are familiar with that ruling.

"How is one to interpret such unqualified claims? In my opinion, they convey the impression that the passage of the requisite legislation was not necessary or was a foregone conclusion, or that the assembly and the Legislature had a pro forma, tangential, even inferior role in the legislative and lawmaking process, and in doing so, they appear to diminish the respect that is due to this House." That was specifically dealing with that pamphlet. "I would not have come to this view had these claims or proposals — and that is all they are — been qualified by a statement that they would only become law if and when the Legislature gave its stamp of approval to them."

You went on to say that "the wording and circulation of the pamphlet appear on their face to cross the line. I say in all candour that a reader of that document could be left with an incorrect impression about how parliamentary democracy works in Ontario, an impression that undermines respect for our parliamentary institutions."

1350

You went on to say, "At this point in my ruling, I want to express some personal concerns about the propriety of public funds being used to advocate, through advertising, a particular position on a matter that is before the House. Let me be clear: I am not speaking here about politically paid for advertising, but rather about funds that are contributed to by every Ontarian, regardless of his or her political view. Personally, I would find it offensive if taxpayer dollars were being used to convey a political or partisan message. There is nothing wrong with members debating an issue and influencing public opinion; in fact, it is part of our parliamentary tradition to do so. But I feel that it's wrong for a government to attempt to influence public opinion through advertising that is paid for with public funds."

What I want to zero in on, because I think it applies to this particular case with this particular item that I had in my hand a minute ago, which was a tape — and I have the tape in my hand again — is that the minister is in contempt of the House because he has suggested clearly that no approval of this House is required for him to implement the plan. That is clearly what is stated in this particular piece of advertising, and I contend that the member is in contempt of the House for that reason.

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, clearly the government and the Ministry of Education have a broad objective of improving the education system in the province of Ontario. I think if we continually get into this nitpicking of trying to find some connection —

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Order.

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I am really sorry I showed up today. I never heard the like of it.

The Speaker: The member for Kenora, come to order, please. Government House leader.

Hon David Johnson: They seem to be a little sensitive today. If the idea is to grind everything to a halt so that anything that has a remote connection to any bill that's in front of the Legislature —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon David Johnson: There may be a number of ways the class size could be dealt with. One of the ways may be through the bill that was introduced, but there may be other different ways of dealing with the class size. There is no reference that I'm aware of to any bill. There's no presupposing any bill is passed, any particular legislation is passed. I fail to see what the contempt is.

I think the allegation is that the member for St Catharines is indicating that the minister has assumed that some particular legislation is passed when the House has not yet dealt with it, but I fail to see that in what he has stated today. What he stated today includes a broad message from the government in terms of improving education. I think it's clear that class size is a concern to those who are involved in the education system, and there may be a number of ways of dealing with the class size.

The Liberal government, when it was in power, advertised to the tune of $13 million, the NDP $13 million. There is a requirement —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. If both sides of the House would come to order to get this point of order dealt with, I'd appreciate it. Government House leader.

Hon David Johnson: There is a requirement to communicate to the people of Ontario about a topic as important as education. I'm sure all governments have done this. I'm sure that the previous government did it, that the Liberal government did it. The facts in terms of the advertising communication budget point out that this government does less advertising than any of the previous governments have done over the last 10 years. Nevertheless, there is the requirement to communicate on education, on health care matters, to the people of Ontario. This is just a regular form of that communication, not presupposing any particular legislation is passed, and I would submit certainly not in contempt of this Legislature.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): The government House leader in his intervention has betrayed the very attitude we're concerned about. His attitude seems to be that the processes of the assembly, the introduction and passage of pieces of legislation, is somehow picayune, that by raising concerns we are nitpicking. That's not the case.

The point is, Speaker, that my friend from St Catharines has raised this matter on the basis of a previous ruling by you, as Speaker, with regard to, not the volume of advertising but the content, that is, what does the advertising say? In this particular case, the videotape indicates the government is going to limit class size. The government House leader says there may be other ways of dealing with limiting class size, but —

The Speaker: Order. Can the House come to order. If there are meetings that need to take place, I wish they'd take place outside this chamber — down at the end, there. Thanks very much. I'm sure it's an important meeting. I'd appreciate it if it could take place in the lobby. It's difficult to hear the member for Algoma.

Mr Wildman: The government House leader indicated there may be other ways of dealing with class size limitation. That indicates the government House leader isn't aware of the current situation. Currently, matters of class size, pupil-teacher ratio, are subject to collective bargaining between school boards and teachers' federations. The government of Ontario does not have any way right now of limiting class size. The Minister of Education and Training introduced a bill yesterday that would give him the power to limit class size, but that bill has only gone through first reading. It has not yet come before the House for debate at second reading or for anything further in the process, a process the government House leader seems to think is somehow picayune. We don't believe it to be.

We understand the previous ruling by you, Speaker, that the House is important, that the role of the legislators is important. The fact is the government can't claim to do something that is pending if legislation is passed because the government then assumes the legislation is going to pass and does not take into account the role of the Legislature, which may in fact not pass the legislation or may change it in some way through amendment. So the advertising in our view is indeed a contempt of the process.

The Speaker: I'll take care to review the video now that I've heard the arguments and report back, more likely tomorrow.

1400

ORAL QUESTIONS

EDUCATION REFORM

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Minister of Education and Training. I have a question which goes to your integrity and credibility. Last week you assured parents and students alike that the threat of a strike caused by your attempt to remove or tamper with the right to strike was no longer there, that you had addressed it, and specifically you addressed it through your legislation introduced in this House yesterday. Parents of course hoped that this would mean peace throughout the land, that they wouldn't have to worry about your relationship with teachers because you would have fixed everything up.

I took the opportunity to read some of the fine print in your bill and I noticed on pages 50 and 51 that you have given yourself and cabinet the power to "prevent disruption in the education of pupils." What that means very clearly to me, Minister, is that you have retained for yourself the right to interfere with strikes. You told teachers that wasn't on, but apparently it's back on. Why are you trying to sneak your agenda through?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I believe that if the Leader of the Opposition were to think back for a moment, he'd always find that in the past in this Legislature parties of all three political stripes have had the ability to order teachers back to work when a strike jeopardized the school year of a student. That power remains in this legislation. It remains under a jeopardy ruling currently held by the ERC. This legislation continues the Education Relations Commission in that function. That will be unchanged by this legislation, because I think all three parties have agreed in the past, and I believe most people in Ontario would agree, that there's not an unfettered right to strike, that that ends with the right of a student to get an education and complete their year of studies. That continues just as it has been.

Mr McGuinty: Let's go over this wording, because I think the exact wording is very important. You say in here that you retain for yourself "in such transitional matters as the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable in connection with the school system reforms of 1997-98, including, but not limited to, regulations providing for such matters as the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers advisable to prevent disruption in the education of pupils."

The reason that teachers were on their feet and were prepared to go to the streets was because you were threatening to interfere with their right to strike during the transitional phase. You said that was no longer on, that everything was okay, to go back to the classrooms and settle down and that parents need no longer be concerned. I've discovered a provision in this bill of yours which does precisely what you said you weren't going to do. Once again, Minister, why are you trying to sneak in something through the back door?

Hon Mr Snobelen: That's simply not the case. We made an announcement some six months ago now that we would have a fair funding model, that we would make sure that we had funding for this transitional year that would protect all of the existing programs and services and the contracts between teachers and their boards in this school year which takes us through the transition period. We obviously have protected those contractual agreements that are in place now.

I said last week, and I meant what I said, that we would not with this legislation —and it does not — interfere with the teachers' right to strike. These are the same kind of rights and privileges teachers have enjoyed under previous legislation; however, it has been improved.

If the Leader of the Opposition will read through the legislation, he'll find that we've answered some of the concerns of teachers with regard to bargaining contracts, so they can be done in a more timely manner. We put teachers into the Labour Relations Act, which will help them have their disputes handled in a way that's much more expeditious than the way it has been under Bill 100. I think the Leader of the Opposition will find that we have not only lived up to our commitment of last week, we've actually improved the climate for teachers in the province.

Mr McGuinty: You've got — and this makes it perfectly clear — a serious credibility problem when it comes to improving education in Ontario. You said you weren't going to touch the right to strike. The fact of the matter is that you have done that. You said you weren't going to cut classroom funding; you did that. You cut junior kindergarten, you cut special education, you cut adult education in Ontario.

There have been all kinds of media opportunities for you to address one particular fear and concern. You have said that you are intent on removing another billion dollars from education in Ontario. Here is your chance right now, Minister. I want you to stand up and I want you to tell us that you will not remove any further money from education in Ontario.

Hon Mr Snobelen: In direct response to the matter, if there's a credibility gap here, it's with the Leader of the Opposition.

Interjection.

The Speaker: Member for Kenora, come to order.

Mr Mike Colle (Oakwood): He could have said yes —

The Speaker: Member for Oakwood, come to order.

Hon Mr Snobelen: He brings up a section of the bill that deals with ensuring that students in mixed-language schools don't lose their rights when the boards move to either English- or French-language programs. That's what the intention of that part of the bill is, and he brings it up as if it were some override of strikes. Let me say again very clearly, we have protected that right for teachers in this legislation.

As for the funding model, I can tell the member opposite this. It's our intention to have the funding of our students in the province of Ontario meet their needs for a first-class education. We won't tie it to the broken programs of the past that were tied to the assessment of property. We'll tie it to their needs. That's what we're doing right now so we can guarantee a quality education for every student in the province.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): I'd like to introduce, in the government members' gallery, Lorna Fitzsimons, member of Parliament in Britain for Rochdale and chairman of the PLP Women's Group. Welcome.

New question, leader of the official opposition.

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My next question is for the Minister of Health. I understand that he is on the way.

The Speaker: Okay. Leader of the third party.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a question for the Minister of Education and Training as well. Yesterday the minister said his government was taking another step in their comprehensive plan for education. But there's a large hole in this comprehensive plan. It doesn't have a budget. He refuses to make the funding formula available.

I want to ask the minister this: We already know that your cuts to our children's education are hurting classrooms, and your own Education Improvement Commission said to you that any money that is found through restructuring should be reinvested in our schools, should be reinvested in our children.

I want to ask the minister, will you commit today to reinvesting in our schools, in our children's education, any money that is found through your legislative changes or through your school board restructuring changes? Will you commit to that?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): The leader of the third party may want us to tie our funding of education to an old system of funding that everyone who has examined it has found wanting, that has made second-class students of some of our young people in Ontario by virtue of their being underfunded, a model that was tied to the property value of homes and businesses in a community instead of the needs of students in that community. That's what the leader of the third party would like us to tie our funding to.

We think we should have a blank page. We think you should start with the expert panel reports on what our students need, what it'll cost to meet those needs, benchmark those needs and then make sure that every student in Ontario has enough funding for a quality education. That's the approach we're taking. The leader of the third party would like us to stay in the old broken funding system. We think it's time to change that to meet the needs of the students in the province.

Mr Hampton: This is bizarre. The government claims to have a comprehensive plan for education, but they refuse to make the funding formula public. They refuse to tell the people, and most of all the children of Ontario, what the funding formula is. Minister, this is not about property tax values; this is about whether you're prepared to make a commitment to reinvest any money that is found in the educational system, to reinvest that money in our children, in our schools. That's what it is, pure and simple; nothing more, nothing less.

We believe you want to take $1 billion more out of our children's education. That's why I put to the question to you. Will you commit that any money that is found through your legislative changes, through your school board restructuring changes, will be reinvested in our children, will be reinvested in our schools?

Hon Mr Snobelen: Let me make it clear to the leader of the third party what we are doing. It's called "consulting"; it's called "asking the experts in education what it will take to make sure every student in this province has a first-quality education." That's what we're doing. It's a process we have been engaged in for some months now. There are a lot of people working very hard at doing just that. We intend to listen to their advice and we intend to build the right funding formula. In the interim, we're guaranteeing the quality of education for our students. We're guaranteeing that during the transition there'll be no withdrawal of funding. We've already made that promise.

But let me be clear to the leader of the third party: We do intend to cut. We intend to cut administration duplication; we intend to cut politicians; we intend to cut waste and duplication. We intend to increase teaching time; we intend to increase our students' performance. That's the whole purpose of our reforms.

1410

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Final supplementary.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): The minister, despite his rhetoric, is not prepared to tell us in dollars what he is going to invest in education. He won't tell us what his budget is. He doesn't have a fiscal plan apparently.

Parents don't want you to take more money out of education than you have already taken. You have already taken too much. Kids are doing without classroom supplies, textbooks. They're having to pay fees to provide the basic supplies for certain courses.

Is the minister prepared to make a basic commitment, without any rhetoric, that whatever moneys are found, if any moneys are saved through the various things he said he intended to do, all the dollars will be reinvested in the classrooms for the students of Ontario?

Hon Mr Snobelen: I want to tell the member for Algoma that I had a chance as late as last night to listen to the concerns of parents. I went to a parents' meeting to listen to what they had to say last night. I think they had the same —

Interjections.

Hon Mr Snobelen: Thank you.

Mr Gilles Pouliot (Lake Nipigon): You stole the money, Minister.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Well, you know, I've heard a few people tell me you can't say that, but it has been said in the past by your Premier, accusing Mr Laughren from Nickel Belt of stealing the northern development moneys.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Member for Nickel Belt, I was not suggesting that; I was just pointing out that there were accusations made in the past.

Mr Floyd Laughren (Nickel Belt): Thank you, Mr Speaker, and I appreciate that half-hearted apology, but I really must insist that you withdraw that.

The Speaker: Let me qualify the withdrawal.

Interjections.

The Speaker: I certainly withdraw.

Hon Mr Snobelen: To the member for Algoma: Parents are concerned that we meet the needs of their students. That's their primary concern. They are very pleased we have curriculum now in place that sets out standards year by year. They are very pleased we have a common report card across the province. They are very pleased we have measures for their student performance so they can find out what is going on.

I made those parents last night the same promise I have made parents across this province, the one I intend to be held to account for, and that is at the end of the day, our funding won't be tied to property value, it will be tied to their students' needs, and we'll have enough funding in this allocation model to meet the needs of their students, not tied to the past but tied to their needs in the future, a system designed for their future and for the future of the province. That's our commitment.

PAY EQUITY

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): My question is for the minister responsible for women's issues, and I noted she was here. Is she returning?

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): She is scheduled to be here. Go ahead.

Mr Hampton: Minister, two weeks ago the Ontario Court of Justice ruled that your government's attempt to take away $400 million in pay equity payments from the lowest-paid women in Ontario violated the Charter of Rights and the Constitution of Canada. Last week the Premier said something very alarming about this, and I think I can quote him here. He said that the government was moving ahead with implementation of the court order but that Ontario will not be providing funding to the broader public sector employers involved. In other words, he said the associations for community living and nursing homes and so on that are out there should make the pay equity payments, but the government isn't going to pay them.

I want to read a section of the judge's ruling for you. He said: "To continue the proxy method of paying pay equity without government funding would send large numbers of the employers of these women into bankruptcy. These employers depend on government funding." Will you commit today that the government is going —

The Speaker: Thank you. Minister.

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, minister responsible for women's issues): In response to the leader of the third party, I think he knows this is an extremely serious issue and that we have taken time to consider our alternatives, because all the alternatives are extremely serious with regard to the fact that we have a challenge with the Minister of Labour and the Attorney General and the Premier. We will seriously consider a fair solution.

Mr Hampton: This is about the so-called fair solution that the Premier was talking about in the press. I want to quote the judge again. This is what the judge said:

"To continue the proxy method of paying pay equity without government funding would send large numbers of the employers of these women into bankruptcy. These employers depend on government funding for their very existence. Any increase in pay for these employees must be paid for by the government."

Your Premier is out there saying these community organizations who look after the poor, who look after the vulnerable, who look after people who are developmentally delayed, these people who do good work, who look after the elderly, should just pay the bill, and he refuses to commit that your government will pay. The judge said in his judgement, if that's the route your government follows, literally thousands of these women will lose their jobs and our communities will lose valuable services.

I put it to you, are you going to pay or are you going to force some of these valuable community employers into bankruptcy and force these women —

The Speaker: Thank you. Minister.

Hon Mrs Cunningham: In response to the question once again, I think it would be very unfair to send the message out that anybody is going to force our community agencies into bankruptcy. That is an extremely irresponsible statement, number one.

Number two, I would like to respond in this way. I've already stated that the Attorney General, the Minister of Labour, myself for women's issues, the Premier and others are seriously considering a fair solution.

The Speaker: Final supplementary.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Riverdale): Minister, I can tell you right now you should read the press clipping. It was your Premier who put that message out there, not a member of the opposition. We're responding to what your very own Premier said. He's scaring people out there. He wouldn't commit to the government funding this.

Let's go back to the judge's ruling and let's be very clear. It says, "It should be emphasized that without government funding, pay equity in the broader public sector could not be achieved or maintained." That's pretty clear. He says that to implement his decision without full government funding for pay equity, "would send large numbers of the employers of these women into bankruptcy."

Minister, let me remind you again we're talking about some of the poorest-paid women in Ontario. We're talking about child care centres, nursing homes, women's shelters and many other community organizations. I want to give you an opportunity again. Stand up and say that at the very least you will fight in your own cabinet to make sure the government stands up for these women and puts the money in towards pay equity.

Hon Mrs Cunningham: The government has to make a decision in this regard. We want to make a fair decision. I think the member knows that we are looking for that decision and I think I've answered the question today. I'm not going to answer on behalf of all of my colleagues in the House at this moment, but you will get a response.

1420

SPEECH PATHOLOGY

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor-Sandwich): My question is for the Minister of Education. Last year almost 20 speech pathologists were eliminated from Ontario schools and school boards. Today parents of children with autism are here in the gallery. You'll see them here in yellow T-shirts. They're cycling across Ontario to raise awareness for their children with autism.

Their children are some of the children we know are falling through the cracks with your cuts to schools. This week, speech pathologists are releasing a report that shows that this year there will be even fewer speech pathologists. These parents are at their wits' end and some, like last week, take their children to Thistletown and say, "We need your help."

Minister, autism is a communications disorder and communication is critical to learning. What will you say to these parents in the gallery today?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I'll refer this to the minister responsible for community and social services.

Mr Joseph Cordiano (Lawrence): Don't you know about special ed in school? That is pretty disgraceful.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Member for Lawrence, come to order, please.

Mr Cordiano: That is pretty disgraceful.

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): These kids don't belong in a classroom. That's what he's saying.

The Speaker: Member for Lawrence, member for Sudbury, come to order, please.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Community and Social Services): I had the privilege of helping the local chapter of the Autism Society kick off its fund-raising campaign this weekend. I would like to congratulate them on the work they are doing to raise the profile of this particular disability that some children suffer with.

It's one of the reasons this government was very pleased to announce earlier this year that we will be doubling the number of children who will benefit from speech and language support in the education system. We know and recognize that this is a very important support for those children, especially in those early ages. I'm also pleased to know that the Minister of Education has recognized the need to ensure, in future funding of schools, that special education is included.

Mrs Pupatello: These are more examples of announcements where money does not actually flow into the programs to help these children. You, Minister, who went to help them at a fund-raising campaign, are missing the point. You're the very government that is taking these services away.

In the gallery today we have Claudio Del Duca, a father of two sons with autism. One of his children, Gabriel, is losing his speech pathology in his school this year. It started this September, your Minister of Education cutting speech pathologists from school boards, your ministry announcing money that never flows to actually help the children.

What we need to tell you is that we're talking about real people. We're talking about Gabriel. We believe Gabriel has every right to reach his full potential. Your own government is making these cuts that affect these children. Minister, please, when you respond, talk to Claudio Del Duca. What can you tell him now that your government has taken his speech therapy away?

Hon Mrs Ecker: The first thing I would tell this individual in the gallery is that he might wish to be careful who he listens to in terms what is actually happening out there. This government has not reduced those services.

Interjections.

Hon Mrs Ecker: I would like to reiterate that we have not slashed special education funding; we have not slashed those services. In effect, we are increasing the spending for speech and language. We are putting that money in the community based on the recommendations of district health councils and other community-based groups. I'm sure the honourable member would like us to continue to consult and listen to them. We know that resource must be directed, as much as we can, for intervention and prevention.

One of the reasons this government is taking the authority in school and education that we are is because when school boards sat there and had a choice of what they were going to hit, isn't it interesting that one of the most sensitive services, one of the services that those children need so much —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Member for Windsor-Sandwich, member for Hamilton East and member for Oriole, come to order.

Mrs Pupatello: The minister doesn't have it as a mandated service.

The Speaker: Member for Windsor-Sandwich, I'm not going to warn you again. Come to order.

Hon Mrs Ecker: We know that service is very important for those children. We have encouraged those school boards to continue to fund that. We are allocating, as I understand it, that special education is something that needs to be included in funding for education and we are continuing to support that service.

The Speaker: The leader's question, the leader of the official opposition.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Minister of Health. Minister, if there's one thing that people are saying about this government, of course, it is that you're moving too far, too fast. This applies particularly when we're talking about hospital closures in Ontario.

You've closed three in Ottawa — the Riverside, the Grace and the Montfort — and you have decided that those are going to close in 1998. Every year 23,000 surgical operations are performed in those three hospitals. Those 23,000 operations are going to have to be performed at the Ottawa General Hospital. The problem is, we're closing those three in 1998 and the Ottawa General Hospital won't have the new facilities built to accommodate those 23,000 patients until the year 2000.

My question of you, Minister, is quite simply: Where should these 23,000 patients go? To those operating rooms which will have been locked or to those which have yet to be built?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): It should be obvious to the honourable member and everyone else that if the construction isn't completed within the time lines as directed by the commission, then the patients obviously will stay where they are.

There's one rule in all this: Overall services are being enhanced, not cut, in the Ottawa restructuring report, as in all the restructuring reports. Common sense dictates that the honourable member should be able to answer his own question, and that is that if the physical space isn't available, then nobody will move anywhere. The commission has set time lines because they want people to aim for those targets, but they are experts, including friends of many of the health care providers in Ottawa, and they realize and will know, as we move forward, what's feasible and what isn't feasible.

The fact of the matter is, to say that people will go into limbo might be the way the Liberals were planning to run the health care system on a $17-billion budget, versus our $18 billion, but that's not the way we're planning it.

1430

Mr McGuinty: This comes as news to the Riverside, the Grace and the Montfort because they've been issued very clear orders. As of June 30, 1998, they are to be shut down, no ifs, ands or buts. They are over, there is no more business and all their patients are to go elsewhere.

You should have seen this coming, Minister. The Ottawa General Hospital in its very own report submitted to your commission said, and I quote: "Even more critical than the capital investment required is the timetable for all this work. We submit that critical care areas such as an expanded emergency department, surgical suite and intensive care unit could not be made available prior to the end of the year 2000."

They told you up front. Why are you putting patient care at risk? You have said very clearly that three hospitals have to be shut down in 1998. The new accommodation will not be available until the year 2000. Once again, where do these 23,000 surgical patients go? Should they go to those operating rooms which have been locked up or go to those which have yet to be built?

Hon Mr Wilson: The honourable member is taking a very strange position on restructuring when it is of net benefit to his community. I guess he wants to deny the people of Ottawa the new technologies, the nursing home beds, the long-term-care services. Where exactly are you on restructuring, Mr McGuinty, today? Are you in favour or are you against it? That's what I want to know.

Mr McGuinty: If the minister wants to know whose side we are on, he should understand very clearly that we are on the side of patients. We are on the side of quality health care in Ontario.

Tragically, this is all part of a pattern that has been emerging for some time as a result of this minister's breakneck —

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Member for Kitchener, can you come to order, please? And Ottawa-Rideau, can you come to order as well? I can see you there, yes. No matter how far you slouch down, I can still see you. I appreciate everybody is seeking help all the time. Thank you.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Let's come to order, please. Leader of the official opposition.

Mr McGuinty: Minister, you're going too far, too fast. Everybody outside of this place recognizes that and understands that and you're putting patient care at risk. It's as simple as that. We've heard stories like this in London, Toronto, Windsor and now in Ottawa. By moving too quickly, you're putting patient care at risk. We're not talking about a corporate reorganization here or shutting down a plant in order to retool. You're talking about patients who are going to need surgery; 23,000 will be without surgical units for two years in Ottawa. What are you going to do about it?

Hon Mr Wilson: That is simply ridiculous. The honourable member is making up something hypothetical that I'm sure doesn't come from his community. His community is very much working on restructuring. We're still waiting. We're on the time lines.

I don't know where the question comes from that he made up. First he says we're going too slow and we won't have the operating rooms, the six more operating rooms that Ottawa will get in addition to what they have today. He says we're moving too slow. Now in the final supplementary he says we're moving too fast. He totally makes up the question. It doesn't come from any facts. I'm doing my very best to answer a ridiculous question.

I remind the honourable member that we're still waiting. In all of these restructurings with Metro, London and Ottawa, everyone has till October 9 to answer the 45-day response period the commission put out for community reinvestment, so we don't know what the final tab is yet.

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY OFFICE

Ms Shelley Martel (Sudbury East): I have a question for the Attorney General regarding his continued mismanagement of the family support plan. On May 9, fully five months after this Legislature passed Bill 82, you finally proclaimed part of the bill. You announced that you would begin testing the suspension of driver's licences and that this enforcement tool would be fully in place by September 1997. You said, "The testing of the suspension of driver's licences will begin immediately to ensure a smooth and full implementation in September of 1997."

We have learned that your driver's licence suspension project is not up and running, and when you finally begin testing, you are only going to test 100 drivers who are in arrears. Minister, you broke your promise to women and children. Once again, why can't you do anything right with respect to the family support plan?

Hon Charles Harnick (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): I'm very pleased to hear by the tone of the member's question that she is now in favour of driver's licence suspension. I note that when it was proposed to her government some five or six years ago, it was rejected out of hand, otherwise it would be up and running today and maybe we wouldn't have a billion dollars' worth of arrears in the family support plan.

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): Totally false.

Hon Mr Harnick: The leader of the third party says, "Totally false." I'd invite the leader of the third party —

Interjections.

Hon Mr Harnick: Mr Speaker, I note that the leader of the third party says that's not true. I invite the leader of the third party to speak to Mothers Against Fathers in Arrears and Families Against Deadbeats and find out from them that they were turned away when they made that suggestion, that it was dismissed out of hand. As a result of that, they ran a family support plan that had no ability to collect money. They didn't even have a plan that considered self-employed people as part of it. They couldn't even get the definition of who had to make payment in the plan correct. Their plan was —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Supplementary.

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): Back in December the parliamentary assistant, speaking on behalf of the Attorney General, promised the people of this province that implementation of the key enforcement tools will begin by the end of January. This Attorney General soon afterwards promised that the suspension of driver's licences will become effective in September 1997.

The only thing the people of this province can rely on from you is your continued incompetence. The fact is, not a penny has been collected in over nine months as a result of the passage in this House of Bill 82 — not a single penny of moneys in arrears. Just what is it about your incompetence that has prevented you from getting a single enforcement tool, any one of the 10, operative in the course of almost 10 months?

Hon Mr Harnick: I can tell this House that we will be years ahead of that party in terms of implementing real enforcement techniques to the family support plan.

Interjections.

Mr Kormos: If you tell the truth, people won't have to say that, Charlie.

The Speaker: I warn the members for Sudbury East and Welland-Thorold to come to order. I'm not warning you again. The member for Cochrane North.

Hon Mr Harnick: They left a legacy of a billion dollars owing to women and children.

Quite simply, we are developing a plan that will have real enforcement techniques. I appreciate they'd like us to be able to go faster. If they really wanted to go faster, these are the kinds of things they had an opportunity to implement when they were the government. Unfortunately, they rejected it out of hand. They were happy to rack up deficits of $100 million —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Member for Fort York, would you come to order. I ask the third party members to come to order, please. I can't hear the minister's answer. I've warned the member for Sudbury. I've warned the member for Welland-Thorold. Member for Fort York, come to order.

Hon Mr Harnick: As I was saying, they did not want to implement any enforcement measures that would successfully collect arrears owing to women and children. They were quite content to run a plan that had $100 million of debt going into it every year. They were familiar with —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Members, I'm trying my best to maintain control.

Interjection: It's not very good.

The Speaker: Who said that?

Interjections.

The Speaker: Minister.

Hon Mr Harnick: As I was saying, this was a party that, when they were in government, rejected these things out of hand and were quite content and comfortable to rack up $100 million a year in debt owing to women and children. They were quite pleased to do that and to reject suggestions to really collect money out of hand.

1440

MUNICIPAL ENUMERATION

Mr John L. Parker (York East): My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Interjections.

Mr Parker: I know the opposition is going to be very interested in hearing this question and the answer to it, so I invite them to pay close attention.

Minister, with the municipal election approaching soon —

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Order. Would the opposition please come to order. Thank you.

Mr Parker: There are many subjects I would like to address, but on this particular occasion, I want to discuss an item that was in the paper yesterday. It suggested that enumeration by the mail-in-ballot system was low. That's a concern to me, with the election coming up soon, and I know it's a concern to my friends opposite. Minister, could you explain to the House just what the method is for the mail-in enumeration and what steps this government has taken to improve that system?

Hon Al Leach (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I'd like to thank the member for York East for his very, very good question. As this House is aware, before every election a mail-in enumeration is done by the Ministry of Finance to update and create a new voters' list. These forms were mailed to 5.2 million households in Ontario between April 28 and May 9 and a very extensive advertising campaign was done at that time to encourage the people in all the municipalities to return their forms and register as soon as possible. The information is then checked by all the municipal clerks. It's provided by July 31 for the clerks to check for errors.

On September 2, the voters' list was made public so people could check to see if their names were on the list. The accuracy of the list is always a concern in an election year and we're encouraging every individual to make sure their name is on that list.

Mr Parker: I've received a few calls from people who are concerned they may not get their material in the mail in time and they might miss the deadline for getting their enumeration on the record. What process is in place to ensure that these people can in fact become enumerated and exercise their democratic right on election day?

Hon Mr Leach: Again I thank the member for his very good question. Any citizen can check to see if their name is on the list by calling, phoning or going to the office of the clerk of their municipality. If they're not on the list and they are there, they can have their name put on the list immediately they're there. They have to take with them a couple of pieces of identification showing their address, where they live, and also a piece of photo ID so the clerks can have that information and make sure they are on the list. Even if they don't do that, and we encourage them to do that, any citizen who shows up to vote and their name does not appear on the list can have their name put on that list right up to 8 o'clock on election day by showing, at the polling booth, proper identification. That's a photo ID and something that shows their address.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): My question is to the Minister of Labour. Last Thursday in your statement to the House you told this House you were backing down on major components of your legislation, Bill 136. Although you haven't released the actual amendments you'll be making, you have suggested what amounts to a major rewrite of the bill; in effect, you've gutted the bill. In my opinion the bill will be out of order, because if you are true to your word the heart of the bill has been changed. It will not be the same bill at all and it won't be the same bill this House passed at second reading.

Minister, the right thing to do would be to withdraw Bill 136 and bring forward some new legislation for everyone to see. Will you do so?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Minister of Labour): I would tell you that the bill with the changes will still enable the government to meet its objective, and that objective is to ensure a very smooth restructuring as we go through the changes that are being anticipated for the municipalities and the school boards and the hospitals. We will at the end of the day still be able to provide better service at less cost to the taxpayers. The legislation, Bill 136, will still enable us to move forward because certainly the changes we have made will still retain the essential elements of Bill 136.

Mr Patten: Minister, you are reported in the Toronto Sun, "The hearings will provide people with the opportunity to respond to the amendments we have proposed." Those are your words, that people will have a chance to respond to the amendments. How can they do that if you won't release the amendments before the end of the hearings? No one will know for sure what the wording of your amendments will be.

Based on your statement last week, the two commissions which form the backbone of the bill are gone. The restrictive measures of the right to strike are gone. Fair and impartial arbitration is gone. What's left?

Minister, what are you afraid of? Why won't you table those amendments? You know that if you don't table those amendments before, it makes a mockery of the hearings. What are they going to respond to? They'll have nothing to respond to other than the verbal commitments you've made, with no specifics in terms of legislation. Why won't you table those amendments?

Hon Mrs Witmer: Last week I very carefully indicated the major changes the government was making that would still enable us to reach our objectives. We responded to all the concerns that had been put on the table, not only by the OFL but by some of our other stakeholders. We made it abundantly clear that there was no restriction on the right to strike. We also indicated that the Labour Relations Transition Commission would no longer exist and that its responsibilities, the provisions that commission had, were going to be transferred to the Ontario Labour Relations Board. We also indicated that the provisions of the Dispute Resolution Commission were going to revert back to the private sector interest arbitration.

I'm not sure what it is the member doesn't understand. However, it had been clearly enunciated last week and we are continuing to provide information.

1450

CHARITABLE GAMING

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Last night, North Bay city council passed a bylaw, and that bylaw said no to charity casinos and video lottery terminals for the next year until an impact study is done, a study they say your government should have done before you started forcing these casinos on communities. This is the Premier's home town that has said no to your casinos and your video lottery terminals. We can put that together with communities like Belleville and Barrie and Brantford and many others which have said no.

Your colleague is telling the operators that within 45 days of the announcement of the short list they've got to have their sites in place and it has to be up and operating next year. Community after community is saying no. Shouldn't you back off, ask communities who wants to host these, match proponents with communities, do the proper impact study? Minister, would you approach this in a rational way and stop jamming these things down the throats of unwilling communities?

Hon Al Leach (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I thank the member for her question. It's probably more appropriate to go to my colleague; however, in his absence I will advise the member that we have a list of willing-host communities. All of the charity gaming casinos are going to go to willing-host communities, which only makes sense; those that want them will get them.

As the minister has stated before, the province doesn't intend to force a charity gambling parlour on anyone. If a municipality chooses not to have them, they don't have to have them. If they have them now, the roving, uncontrolled casinos that are creating quite a problem with control, they must be cognizant that they are going out of operation on March 31. So if charities in their communities get money from the roving ones now, they might want to consider very carefully saying no to a permanent one that would have full controls.

Ms Lankin: I heard that threat, and I hope everyone in this province heard that threat. This minister just said that if those communities don't go ahead with these casinos, their charities are not going to get any money. I'm glad it's on the record, because we said that's the threat you're holding over communities.

Minister, community after community after community is saying no to your charitable gaming casinos and video lottery terminals. Why don't you back off this plan you're rushing ahead? You've got proponents lined up whom you've told they have 45 days to get the site, that the site has to be in one of the designated communities. The designated communities are saying no. It's a shambles. You've rushed ahead. You don't understand the consequences of the way you've approached this. Minister, please, rethink this, ask what communities want it, match them up with the proponents, take a rational approach.

Hon Mr Leach: I thank the member for the question. She just repeated everything I said. I said we have a list of willing municipalities that want to have the permanent charity casinos, that have asked for them, and they're the communities that are going to have them. It will be the local council in those communities that votes to say, "Yes, we want a controlled casino." Any community, any municipality, as the minister has publicly stated, that states they do not want one will not have to have one.

In my earlier remarks I was trying to ensure that the communities recognize that the existing roaming casinos, which are totally uncontrolled, will be going out of business as of March 31 next year. I think they should all be aware of that.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mrs Julia Munro (Durham-York): My question is for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Minister, you recently announced that 218,908 people have stopped depending on welfare since this government was elected in 1995 and over 9,000 people left Ontario's welfare system in August alone. Would the minister indicate how York region's and Durham region's welfare figures compare to the rest of the province?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Community and Social Services): I'm very pleased that both York and Durham have followed the provincial trend. As you know, we've had a 16% reduction in the number of people trapped on welfare across the province. What we've seen in York is that there's been a reduction of some 25%. That's 3,473 cases of individuals who no longer have to rely on welfare. In Durham region, it's a 21% reduction. That's 4,700 cases who no longer have to rely on welfare.

The honourable member for Windsor-Riverside was objecting to this question yesterday. I looked up the figures for Windsor and I am pleased to tell her that there is a 26%, almost 27% reduction in the general welfare caseloads in the community of Windsor. We are seeing very good reductions across the province and we know those individuals are getting off welfare and into jobs, the majority of them. That's where they want to be and that is certainly what we are doing to ensure that it happens.

Mrs Munro: Considering that both regions have experienced such a dramatic drop in the welfare rolls, can the minister tell us how taxpayers in my riding of Durham-York will benefit and how local businesses can get involved to ensure welfare numbers continue to decline?

Hon Mrs Ecker: While we've seen savings across the province, I am pleased to report that in the community of York they have seen a saving of $4 million in the last two years and in Durham it has been a saving of $10 million. Those municipalities are putting those savings to good use, ensuring that services are there.

We also know that many private sector organizations have been willing to support and want to get involved in our work-for-welfare program. Of course one of the rules is that we do not displace paid jobs; that would be defeating the purpose of this. But they can, and many are, supporting programs that community agencies are doing. My parliamentary assistant, my colleague the member for York-Mackenzie, has been out in the communities meeting not only with the business community to explain to them how they can support it, but also with the community agencies, and we're very pleased with the response.

LAKEVIEW NURSING HOME

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): My question is to the Minister of Health. Last Thursday afternoon you told the House that we had an obligation in government to pay particular attention to the care of mental health patients in Ontario. With that appropriate observation in mind, I want to ask you a question about the future of the Lakeview Nursing Home in the village of Cobden in the county of Renfrew.

This home was built nearly 30 years ago to provide for a number of adult psychiatric patients who were or had been discharged from Kingston and Brockville. Ten weeks ago you were specifically requested by the current owner of the Lakeview Nursing Home in Cobden to accede to a transfer of that licence from Cobden, Renfrew county, to the Oakville-Burlington area of Halton region.

Minister, can you tell the residents of Lakeview and their families that you will deny that request for the transfer of the nursing home licence from Cobden to Oakville-Burlington?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): I thank the honourable member for Renfrew North for bringing this issue to my attention on several occasions, both personally and in the Legislature and through correspondence. He has also, because he is a very good member of the Legislature — there's a good reason why he's been here for so many years — met with ministry staff.

I think he knows or should know very well that it's not the intention of the ministry to see that home closed. Through the good work of the local reeve, Dave Stewart, I think we perhaps have some interested new owners of the home or purchasers who will take over the licences from the current owner. I can assure the honourable member that if arrangements can be made at the local level to keep those licences in Cobden, the ministry will give its concurrence.

Mr Conway: The families and the residents of that home will very much appreciate what the minister has had to say. One of the problems we've had in Renfrew county is a dearth of mental health services. Lakeview is really the only facility we've got in the county that provides for the special needs of these very special needs people, who came to us from Kingston and Brockville.

Minister, can you indicate when you expect to make a decision on the Lakeview matter?

Hon Mr Wilson: We will make the decision, I can assure the honourable member, as quickly as possible after we've seen a proposal. Our hope, his hope I think, and certainly that of the community, is that someone will come forward and purchase those licences, take over the operation of the home. We'll see a new operator. The honourable member is right that many of those residents have special needs. I think seven of the residents have actually lived in the home for about 15 years.

They are long-term residents who do have special needs, and my understanding from the honourable member is that the needs are being met very well in those homes. If all goes well, we hope that someone will buy the home and that the residents won't see any change. I don't think they deserve to be upset after so many years of calling the Lakeview Nursing Home their home.

1500

SPEECH PATHOLOGY

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. I listened intently a little bit earlier to your response to a question that you got with regard to speech pathology programs, and you stated in this House that your government was not cutting one dime, not one sou, from speech pathology programs in Ontario. Minister, you're wrong. In our community of northeastern Ontario, in Timmins and across the north, we're losing the entire budget for the dollars utilized to pay for speech pathology programs for healthy kids under the age of six.

Your doing that means that none of the kids in northern Ontario under the age of six is going to have access to any government-funded speech pathology program, and what's worse is that the moneys that you announce for new additions to speech pathology are predicated on our having existing programs. If we lose our program, we're not able to build up on top of it.

Will you please talk to the Minister of Health and fix this problem so we don't lose speech pathology programs for people in northern Ontario?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Community and Social Services): I'd be quite pleased to convey to the Minister of Health whatever message the honourable member would like.

One of the things we have certainly acknowledged is that speech and language support is extremely important, especially for those children aged zero to six. That's one of the reasons we have increased funding for it. We announced that in the budget. That's one of the reasons that money is flowing through a community-based planning process to those communities. It's my understanding in the joint cooperation on this between health and community and social services that we're actually going to be able to double the number of children who will receive the service. I'd be quite pleased to look into this for the honourable member.

PETITIONS

VIDEO LOTTERY TERMINALS

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): The issue is arising again. I have a petition to the government of Ontario which reads as follows:

"Since video lottery terminals will contribute to gambling addiction in Ontario and the resulting breakup of families, spousal and child abuse and crimes such as embezzlement and robbery;

"Since the introduction of video lottery terminals across Ontario will provide those addicted to gambling with widespread temptation and will attract young people to a vice which will adversely affect their lives for many years to come;

"Since the introduction of these gambling machines across our province is designed to gain revenue for the government at the expense of the poor, the vulnerable and the desperate in order that the government can cut income taxes to the greatest benefit of those with the highest income;

"Since the placement of video lottery terminals in bars in Ontario and in permanent casinos in various locations across the province represents an escalation of gambling opportunities;

"Since Premier Harris and Finance Minister Eves were so critical of the provincial government becoming involved in further gambling ventures and making the government more dependent on gambling revenues to maintain government operations,

"We, the undersigned, call upon Premier Harris and the government of Ontario to reconsider its announced decision to introduce the most insidious form of gambling, video lottery terminals, to restaurants and bars in the province."

I affix my signature, as I am in complete agreement with the sentiments contained in this petition.

MUNICIPAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I feel the number of petitions coming from northern Ontario with regard to speech pathology programs as the response I just got from the minister. None the less, we have other petitions, and these are from a number of people in northern Ontario. I have some couple of hundred signatures here, and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the government of Ontario is proposing to restructure completely the provincial-municipal relationship without having consulted the people of Ontario; and

"This restructuring proposes to download to municipalities the cost of transportation and such critical social services as welfare, long-term care and language-speech pathology for under-six-year-olds;

"Removes school boards' ability to tax, eliminating any effective local control of schools and school programs;

"The government's actions fail to guarantee existing levels of funding and failure to recognize the unequal ability of local communities to bear the cost of these new burdens, thus producing inequalities of access to the people of northern Ontario;

"Whereas the government's lack of meaningful public consultation and disregard for public response pose a serious threat to democracy;

"We, the undersigned residents of Ontario, because we care about the quality of life in our province and the wellbeing of our children, neighbours and communities, register a vote of non-confidence to the government in the province of Ontario."

I affix my signature to that petition.

COURT DECISION

Mr Bob Wood (London South): I have a petition signed by 24 people. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the courts have ruled that women have the lawful right to go topless in public; and

"Whereas the Liberal government of Canada has the power to change the Criminal Code to reinstate such public nudity as an offence;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the government of Ontario to pass a bill empowering municipalities to enact bylaws governing dress code and to continue to urge the government of Canada to pass legislation to reinstate such partial nudity as an offence."

TUITION FEES

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-Walkerville): I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Conservative government has cut funding to St Clair College; and

"Whereas these funding cuts have caused hardship on senior citizens by increasing the costs for their programs by more than 400%;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To ensure that all college programs, be they education or recreation, remain affordable and accessible to senior citizens."

I join with the hundreds of constituents of mine who have signed this petition and affix my signature to this petition.

AMBULANCE SERVICE

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It says:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Fort Frances ambulance dispatch not be moved to Kenora."

This has been signed by close to 100 residents of Fort Frances and the area. I affix my signature to it as well.

COURT DECISION

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth): I have a petition signed by about 71 of my constituents. It reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas communities strongly disagree with allowing women to go topless in public;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To enact legislation to require women to wear tops in public places for the protection of our children and for public safety in general."

I'll sign it so that it becomes a permanent record of this House.

TFO

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde (Prescott et Russell) : J'ai une pétition adressée à l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario :

«Attendu que TFO appartient aux Ontariens et Ontariennes ;

«Attendu que le gouvernement de Mike Harris a fait fi des sentiments de la population qui veut le maintien de la propriété et du financement public de TFO en tant que diffuseur éducationnel en soumettant TFO à un examen concernant sa privatisation ;

«Attendu que le gouvernement de Mike Harris n'a pas indiqué que la population participerait à part entière à l'examen concernant la privatisation ;

«Nous, soussignataires de cette pétition présentée à l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario, demandons la tenue d'une consultation publique ouverte et honnête auprès des Ontariens et Ontariennes avant qu'une décision sur l'avenir de TFO soit prise.»

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): I have a petition from my home town of Hamilton to the honourable Minister of Environment and Energy and the Premier of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas a fire at a PVC plastic vinyl plant located in the middle of one of Hamilton's residential areas burned for three days; and

"Whereas the city of Hamilton declared a state of emergency and called for a limited voluntary evacuation of several blocks around the site; and

"Whereas the burning of PVC results in the formation and release of toxic substances such as dioxins, as well as large quantities of heavy metals and other dangerous chemicals;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to hold a full public inquiry on the Hamilton Plastimet fire."

I proudly add my name to those of these citizens.

ROCK MUSIC GROUP

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): I'm pleased to present two petitions, one from Marie McClurg and the other from Gail Laflamme. They read as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the rock band Marilyn Manson was permitted to play a concert at the Ottawa Congress Centre on Friday, August 1, 1997; and

"Whereas Marilyn Manson's wilful promotion of hatred, violence, immorality and obscenity has been linked to teen suicides and adolescent crimes across North America; and

"Whereas by allowing Marilyn Manson to perform, the Ottawa Congress Centre, a crown agency with a public mandate, helps to legitimize the band and its unethical messages; and

"Whereas the Ontario Court (General Division) has ruled that Marilyn Manson's music does not meet the definitions of 'obscenity' or 'hate literature' in the Criminal Code;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to call on the Liberal government of Canada to amend the Criminal Code in order to ensure that Marilyn Manson and other people directing messages of hate and derision towards vulnerable children and youth are not permitted to perform in Canada, and to ensure that messages which offend the moral and ethical sensibilities of Ontarians are not given a voice at venues financed by the taxpayers of Ontario, including the Ottawa Congress Centre."

I've affixed my own signature thereto.

1510

BEAR HUNTING

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have a petition signed by 166 people in Ontario which has been forwarded to me by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. It says:

"Whereas black bear populations in Ontario are healthy, with between 75,000 and 100,000 animals, and their numbers are stable or increasing in many areas of the province; and

"Whereas black bear hunting is enjoyed by over 20,000 hunters annually in Ontario and black bears are a well-managed renewable resource; and

"Whereas hunting regulations are based on sustained yield principles and all forms of hunting are needed to optimize the socioeconomic benefits associated with hunting; and

"Whereas the value of the spring bear hunt to tourist operators in northern Ontario is $30 million annually, generating about 500 person-years of employment; and

"Whereas animal rights activists have launched a campaign of misinformation and emotional rhetoric to ban bear hunting and to end our hunting heritage in Ontario, ignoring the enormous impact this would have on the people of Ontario;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ontario government protect our hunting heritage and continue to support all forms of black bear hunting."

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas workers' health and safety must be protected in the province of Ontario, especially the right to refuse work which is likely to endanger a worker, the right to know about workplace hazards and the right to participate in joint health and safety committees; and

"Whereas the Occupational Health and Safety Act and its regulations help protect workers' health and safety and workers' rights in this area; and

"Whereas the government's discussion paper, Review of the Occupational Health and Safety Act, threatens workers' health and safety by proposing to deregulate the existing act and regulations, to reduce or eliminate workers' health and safety rights and to reduce enforcement of health and safety laws by the Ministry of Labour; and

"Whereas workers must have a full opportunity to be heard about this proposed drastic erosion in their present protections from injuries and occupational diseases;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to oppose any attempt to erode the present provisions of the Occupational Health and Safety Act and its regulations. Further we, the undersigned, demand that public hearings on the discussion paper be held in at least 20 communities throughout Ontario," not like the disgrace of Bills 99 and 136.

I add my name to theirs.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Dave Boushy (Sarnia): I have a petition from my riding signed by about 20 people.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Progressive Conservative government has failed to address the root causes of waste, duplication and unnecessary administration in our health care system; and

"Whereas the provincial government has introduced Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, that makes it easier for employers to reduce the number of front-line staff and to lower their salaries and benefits and thus causing further deterioration in quality patient care; and

"Whereas Bill 136 also erodes the democratic process by tampering with collective agreements and potentially interfering with workers' choice of bargaining agents;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to withdraw Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, and restructure the health care system in a safe, coordinated and rational way."

TFO

M. David Ramsay (Timiskaming) : «À l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario :

«Attendu que TFO appartient aux Ontariens et Ontariennes ;

«Attendu que le gouvernement de Mike Harris a fait fi des sentiments de la population qui veut le maintien de la propriété et du financement public de TFO en tant que diffuseur éducationnel en soumettant TFO à un examen concernant sa privatisation ;

«Attendu que le gouvernement de Mike Harris n'a pas indiqué que la population participerait à part entière à l'examen concernant la privatisation ;

«Nous, soussignataires de cette pétition présentée à l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario, demandons la tenue d'une consultation publique, ouverte et honnête auprès des Ontariens et Ontariennes avant qu'une décision sur l'avenir de TFO soit prise.»

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): I have a petition sent to me by Carolyn High from the Lakehead Women Teachers' Association, very concerned about Bill 136. I will read the petition.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 will effectively suspend all labour relation rights for municipal, health and school board employees affected by provincially forced amalgamations; and

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 will hurt average workers in every community across Ontario, including nurses, teachers, firemen and police officers; and

"Whereas the Harris government's bill will decrease the quality of health care as well as the quality of education delivered in Ontario; and

"Whereas the Harris government's Bill 136 was designed to provide the government with sweeping powers to override long-standing labour negotiation rights for workers, including the right to negotiate, the right to strike, the right to seek binding arbitration and the right to choose a bargaining unit;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, support our MPP Michael Gravelle in his opposition to this legislation and join him in calling upon the Harris government to repeal Bill 136 which creates a climate of confrontation in Ontario."

Until we see the amendments, we will continue to not believe this government, and I am proud to sign my name to this petition.

COURT DECISION

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): "To the Parliament of Ontario:

"Whereas at this time in the province of Ontario it is not illegal for a woman to appear topless in public, and due to the fact that this lack of restriction offends a large percentage of Ontarians;

"We, the undersigned, petition the government of Ontario to introduce legislation that would make it illegal for a woman to appear topless in any public place except in clearly marked designated beach areas."

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon Ernie L. Eves (Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance): I move government notice of motion number 38:

That the Minister of Finance be authorized to pay the salaries of civil servants and other necessary payments pending the voting of supply for the period commencing November 1, 1997, and ending on April 30, 1998, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriation following the voting of supply.

I am pleased to put forward this motion for interim supply, and I would note that I will be sharing my speaking time this afternoon with the member for Scarborough West, the member for Kitchener and the member for Northumberland.

As most members are aware, the motion for interim supply provides the government with the authority to make payments to hospitals, physicians, boards of education, municipalities, suppliers, civil servants and others. These payments are currently being made under the authority of a motion for interim supply which came into effect on May 1, 1997.

The motion for interim supply is required now as the authority under the existing motion expires on October 31st, 1997, and payments cannot be made after that date. Scheduled payments in earlier November include, among others, payments for general welfare, transfers to hospitals, school boards and children's aid societies.

1520

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I am pleased to begin debate on interim supply. Just to inform you, I will be splitting my time with the member for Oriole and the member for Ottawa West.

I want to begin by saying that my leader today used the term "too far, too fast" in describing this government. I would say that what we've seen over the last week or so is perhaps a dramatic illustration of a government that I think is beginning to spin slightly out of control.

I would say that on the basis that we have now seen, with their plan to dump or download on to municipalities — the government has finally acknowledged that they are dumping about $660 million of new costs on to the property taxpayer. That is the first thing I'd say to the people of Ontario: Recognize that this government has decided to dump about $660 million of costs that the province used to carry on to the municipalities, on to the property tax.

The second thing I would say is that not only have they dumped that on to the property taxpayer, but they've dumped many social programs that shouldn't be on the property tax. Nobody believes social housing should be on the property tax. The government has made a huge mistake here. They have dumped social housing on to the property tax. I think, frankly, it was purely a mistake. Al Leach said, "We're going to get education off the property tax," and didn't add up the numbers. When they found out what the cost was, they said, "If we want to do that, we're going to have to put social housing on to the property tax."

I would say to the public, when you hear us angry about putting social housing on, why is that? David Crombie and the government's own Who Does What panel — Mike Harris went out and picked 15 people to give the government advice on what should be on the property tax and what should be on the province. What happened? David Crombie said, "Don't put social housing on property tax." But lo and behold, the government's doing that. It's a huge mistake.

I listened carefully to the Minister of Municipal Affairs one day on a radio interview and they said to him, "Should you be putting what's called income redistribution programs on property tax?" Al Leach said, "No, you shouldn't be doing that." Then the interviewer said, "Well, why are you putting social housing on?" He said, "We eventually would like things like that to be part of the provincial responsibility, but for the time being they're going to be on the property tax." That's the second thing where in our opinion the government is spinning slightly out of control.

The third area I want to talk a little bit about is the whole area of health. What we're finding now is that the government is closing an enormous number of hospitals across the province. My leader today had an illustration where in his own area of Ottawa the government has ordered three hospitals to close, and they're going to have to close in 1998, before the remaining hospitals will have constructed the necessary services to absorb the patients from those three closed hospitals. So even if one accepts the government's hypothesis of closing hospitals, the government has a plan that is going to cause chaos across the province, and there is no question of that.

Here in Metro I represent a Metro riding and one of the hospitals is closing November 1, I believe, certainly in November 1997, but there's been no planning of how the patients who are currently in that facility are going to be accommodated. That's the third area of chaos. It's in the health sector, where the government has created a chaotic situation.

I might add that personally I am terribly afraid the government has underestimated the future health needs for our hospital sector. We are heading one way, closing facilities, at the same time as Ontario's population is growing and aging. I can almost guarantee that in two or three years from now we're all going to be saying, "How in the world did we let that happen where we closed all those facilities without looking at the needs?"

The fourth area of chaos is property tax reform. All of us here I think should recognize that the government has embarked on the most massive change in the property tax system in the history of the province, and it has never given us, never given its back bench, never given the opposition, never given the public any indication of what the impact will be.

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Zero impact.

Mr Phillips: The member for Scarborough East is, as usual, yapping, as he's wont to do. He loves to talk, he's the world's greatest talker, but no answers, because the government refuses to give any impact studies.

The amazing thing to me is this: We are going to be dealing with a property tax bill called Bill 149. It gives the Minister of Finance unprecedented powers to set tax rates. I always thought the Conservative back bench was opposed to giving that sort of tax power to a cabinet. I always thought the Conservative Party, certainly the Reform element in the Conservative Party, would have been completely, totally against that. But the bill we're going to deal with, I think this Thursday afternoon is the current schedule, calls for unprecedented power in the hands of the Minister of Finance.

We are also going to be asked to approve a bill where over half of the business property tax will be for education. We still haven't found out from the government whether it will be a uniform mill rate across the province or how that mill rate will be set, but the thing we do know is that it is going to cause chaos in our business sector. That's the fourth area.

I'm going through these massive changes. We frequently find, once the government starts on these massive changes, that it hasn't thought them through. I'll give you a couple of small examples. Al Palladini had a smiling face opening the great private sector toll road, 407. I must say it has been an artistic success. It is one of the busiest toll roads in North America. The only problem is there has never been a toll put on it. They have never opened the tolls, and the costs are adding up.

Hon Noble Villeneuve (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs): October 14.

Mr Phillips: One of the ministers says October 14. That's only nine months late.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): Look at all the money you've lost.

Mr Phillips: Yes, all the money we've lost. The amazing thing was that the Minister of Transportation said: "We've got a problem. It's so successful we're going to have to keep it free." It's like opening a grocery store and saying, "We've got more customers than we can handle so we're going to have to give the food away until we get a new cash register." It is an embarrassment. It's like the famous boot camp opening. The day Bob Runciman was going to snip the ribbon the prisoners walked out of the boot camp. I just use these examples.

Do you remember Bill 26, the omnibus bill? We call it the bully bill. The government introduced it and said: "We want it passed right away. It's a perfect bill." Then they had to propose 150 amendments to the bill. One of the most amazing sights in all my time here in the Legislature was that the amendments had to be in at 4 o'clock.

Interjection.

Mr Phillips: I hear the Minister of Agriculture yip-yapping over here. He was talking earlier about a summer program for students in his office. What did we find? He hired a summer student, and what was he doing? He was out raising money for Mike Harris, with the taxpayers paying the bill. He had him on his staff. As a matter of fact, you had to dial the minister's office to say, "I'm prepared to give Mike Harris 200 bucks."

I just say that because perhaps I can understand these mistakes being made, but it is everywhere. It is a government that says it wants to run government like a business and it's embarrassing the business community, because everything they touch seems to fall apart.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: Don't you wish.

Mr Phillips: Don't I wish, he's saying. Unfortunately that is the case. It's a bit like last week where the government said: "We've thought through what we're going to do on this labour bill. We've been talking about this for months." So they introduced the labour bill, and before we have even had a chance to get it to committee, the government says, "We are going to make massive changes in it." And then you know something, Mr Speaker? They say, "We won't tell you what they are, though, until after the public hearings, because we certainly wouldn't want people coming to those public hearings debating what we're going to do with the bill." It is absurd.

I hope the public understands the frustration. The government gives us a bill and says, "Go to a public hearing so people can come and debate and give input into the bill, but I will tell you," the government said just last week, "we're going to make sweeping changes in the bill, but we won't tell you what they are until after you've had the public hearings." It's a sham, it's an embarrassment. What are we doing here? We're going to waste the taxpayers' money. They are going to pay to have those committees staffed, to have the Hansards done, to have all of that expense going on, having people come from around the province to present, thinking that they are having some input into a bill when they haven't even been told what the major content of the bill is.

1530

Yesterday we had the Minister of Education put out a huge bill on education, and a great public relations exercise, I must say. A lot of money spent on the graphics, and he had his hair combed, always has a good-looking suit on, slick as can be, great speech, believe me, and the signs in behind well-rehearsed. Al Palladini would hire John Snobelen in a minute. He could put him on the used car lot and the car lot would be empty, because this guy can sell anything. But I just say to the public, why are we so sceptical? It is because the minister says, "This is about improving the quality of education, but I'm going to take $1 billion out of education."

I come from a Metropolitan Toronto constituency and I can tell you that one of the reasons Metropolitan Toronto has worked, and there's no question of this, is that there has been a quality of schools in our neighbourhoods. We are blessed in Metropolitan Toronto. We do not have downtown neighbourhoods where people have a concern about their education system.

People do not mind. They like to live in the core of the urban area, and one of the reasons is you can be sure of a quality education in your local schools. That doesn't come cheap. It requires resources, and it requires resources that may not be needed in other neighbourhoods that don't have the same demands put on them. I can guarantee that the future of our major urban centres depends heavily on a quality education system, where people can feel that "Regardless of what neighbourhood I'm in, I can send my child to the local school and be assured of a quality education system."

I know what the government's all about. They want to cut education spending. They've got to do it. The Common Sense Revolution —

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): That pays for the tax cut.

Mr Phillips: My friend says they have to pay for the tax cut, and that's exactly the case. They said, "We are going to cut a billion and a half dollars out of public education and that's what we need to pay for our tax cut." When the public see us concerned about the rhetoric around the education bill, it is because we know in behind it the real motive.

I was duped. I went to one of John Snobelen's press conferences just before Christmas where he said: "We're going to maintain education spending for 1997. We're not going to make any further cuts." I went away feeling fairly good. It was only a couple of days later I got looking at all the numbers and I realized they weren't going to make any further cuts because they had several weeks before announced a $500-million cut for 1997. The reason I raise that is, Mr Speaker, you can imagine the scepticism that we in the opposition and I think many in education have when we listen to Mr Snobelen talking about education. I have a saying: Don't listen to what Mike Harris says, watch what he does.

I go through all of those things. I go through also on the job front. I can remember Mike Harris saying, "Don't worry about youth unemployment." Here we have a document that came out last Friday from the Ministry of Finance. You probably can't see it, Mr Speaker, because it's fairly small print, but it shows the youth unemployment rate for the first eight months of 1997. We're two thirds of the way through 1997.

The youth unemployment rate, 18%; the same period a year ago, the first eight months of 1996, the youth unemployment rate, 15.6%: up dramatically from 15.6% to 18%. By the way, I've looked at unemployment rates for the last 20 years. The only other time it was close to that was in 1992, the heart of the recession. This is like a record level and dramatically higher than the rest of Canada.

As we are being asked here to approve the government's spending, I would just say to the people of Ontario, we have a government that is close to out of control and it is shaking every single major institution in this province. Our hospitals are being shaken to their core. Our entire school system has been taken over by Mike Harris. Make no mistake, Mike Harris now runs the Ontario school system. The trustees are frankly close to irrelevant. They've dumped on to our property taxes the most sensitive social services and nobody — Dave Crombie particularly said, "The panel strongly opposes such a move." They were unanimous in the view that they shouldn't do it. The property tax changes are coming without having thought through their implications, and they are going to hit, mark my words, next April in a way that is unimaginable right now.

As I wind up my comments and turn it over to my colleagues, I just say that it was two years and a few months ago that people gave Mike Harris a majority government, and we in the Liberal caucus understand that he has the right to govern. But he doesn't have the right to destroy the very fabric that has been built by parties, including the Conservative Party, over these many years, and we believe that's exactly what's happening.

Mr David Caplan (Oriole): I would like to thank the people of Oriole for their support, for the privilege of serving them in this assembly. It is an awesome responsibility and I very humbly stand as their representative here.

On September 4 voters in Oriole sent an overwhelming message to this government and to this House. By a two-to-one margin, unheard of in Oriole, nearly 60% of the people in Oriole said, "You are going too far, too fast." They want someone to start to listen to their concerns. They want someone to start to act for their interests.

As I went door to door — and I know that the Premier was afraid to meet one voter in Oriole, because had he, he would have heard the same messages that I did. There is considerable anger, there is fear, and perhaps the most disappointing thing is there's a great deal of cynicism directed at the actions and inactions of this provincial government.

The issues that the people of Oriole had on a provincial basis but which struck very close to home — and I will tell you, Mr Speaker, and I will tell this House, that I did not find one family, not one household which has not been affected very strongly by the actions of this government. They told me that they're afraid. They're afraid that the health care they need will not be there when they need it after closing 11 hospitals in Metropolitan Toronto and the resulting increase in capacity at our local hospital, North York General, without the kind of support and the funding that is required.

In North York we're very lucky to have an internationally recognized education system. They see that being threatened. People of Oriole are saying: "Why is this government taking dollars away from our children? Why are they getting rid of a board of education which provides a quality service as recognized by this Minister of Education?"

1540

The third issue that came through very strongly was in relation to Bill 103 and the megacity. The people of Oriole were telling me that this government did not listen to their voices. I had a woman on Hawleaf Crescent literally shout at the top of her lungs that she no longer lives in a democracy, that she doesn't know why she should go and vote when she goes in a referendum, the same referendum that Mike Harris votes in, and it's totally ignored by a government which does not care.

It goes even further because of the proposals, as my colleague had spoken of earlier, to download services which were previously paid for by the province on to the backs of homeowners, of residents. The resulting property tax increases are just enormous and unfair, and it's a burden which the people of Oriole are rejecting. They're saying, "No more."

Finally, an issue which came through so very loud and clear: tenants in Oriole, 50% of the people of Oriole, saying that the only tenant protection afforded in the proposed Bill 96 is that which is in the title, that there is no tenant protection, that this government's actions belie their words. Unfortunately, that is a sentiment that came through. One tenant said to me that they don't know what they're going to do, because she and her three children don't want to become prisoners in their own home. That's effectively what's going to happen with this legislation. I did request, and I renew my call, that the minister withdraw that piece of legislation.

The people of Oriole were saying that they don't believe this government can be trusted to protect their interests, because they've been shunted away. They've been told: "We don't have to listen to you, because you're a special interest. If you're a parent, if you or a family member requires hospital care, if you're a renter, if you're a senior, you are a special interest and we no longer need to listen to you." Time and time again people have said that is offensive. Quite clearly, the people of Oriole are not buying what Mike Harris is selling. You can package it any way you like, but we're not buying it.

We had significant local issues, and I would like to highlight a few if I may. The first issue is Song Meadoway. If you recall, in August 1996 there was a tragic accident. A gravel truck went off a ramp into a townhome, and a young woman, Kim Wong, was killed and her two children injured. Then 364 days later, the Minister of Transportation drops a letter committing to the erection of the barrier. I want to say that the people of Song Meadoway will not sleep until that barrier is completed. In fact, there was a meeting last night, which I attended, where the plans were unveiled. There is potentially a significant problem, and I hope the government is listening and that they are committed to ensuring that this community is protected and afforded the kind of respect and protection we all enjoy for ourselves and our children.

The Oriole community centre is another local issue for us. It is right in the very heart of our community on Don Mills Road. I can't tell you the number of different programs that are run out of that centre and the fears and concerns because of the downloading this government is proposing, because they don't know if they'll be able to operate this kind of support. They need expanded services, not less. I would very much ask that the government commit to ensuring that we have proper community facilities, that they are staffed, that people can go there and access them. Unfortunately, that is sorely lacking.

Our community in Oriole is incredibly diverse. Certainly men and women, young and old, but I'm told that over 50 languages and dialects are spoken in Oriole. The Minister of Education has spoken about the need to meet student needs and the need to focus spending on students. People in Oriole just cannot understand, after $533 million has been stolen from children, with a further $1 billion to come, just how the needs of their children are going to be met, particularly those in the heritage or, as it's now called, the international language program. I implore this government to affirm and to commit today to full and adequate funding for a very competitive and very important school program.

Seniors are also a very large component of Oriole. The ripoff for drug payment, Bill 96, the municipal downloading forcing either higher property taxes or long-term care on to municipalities, hospital closures: Seniors are saying, "Enough is enough." It's time to start respecting the people who built our community.

It's important that we all reflect on why we are in this place. It is our local needs. It is the people who have built our community, all of the communities across Ontario. Unfortunately, we've had a government which seeks to minimize people, which, as Oscar Wilde once put it, knows the cost of everything and the value of nothing.

Our communities are beyond price. We can in fact have pride in them. We can in fact want to build something and build on top of what we have: not tear it apart, not remove it, but build.

When I have a mother in Oriole say to me, "Will my child not be able to go to junior kindergarten?" because 24 boards of education dropped junior kindergarten in Ontario last year because of the direct decision of this government to make it non-mandatory and to also remove the funding, that's a real concern. I hope the government is listening, and I hope they're going to act, and I hope they're going to give some assurance to the people of my community, who say that we need these programs, that these are important, that they are our future.

My commitment to my constituents, to the members of my community in Oriole, is that I will work, as I have in the past, to bring public openness and public accountability to what happens in this place and what happens across Ontario. If I can relate a very brief example of that, as a former school trustee for our local neighbourhood I ensured public participation in our budgeting process. I said: "Let's take it away from this building. Let's go out and meet people. More importantly, let's listen; let's engage in a dialogue."

We've seen that this government does not want to engage in such a dialogue. It introduces time allocation motions. It says, "We're going to go to four communities." It says: "We're going to pick and choose who we're going to listen to. We don't want you to see the contents of what we're going to be debating." That is a total sham, it is a total embarrassment and it is a disgrace.

The absolute success that we enjoyed as a board of education, because we brought people in, because we opened our doors, because we went outside to seek opinion, because we listened, is a testament to what can happen when people work together. You see, the people of Oriole, indeed the people of Ontario, are resources that we need to tap; they are not obstacles to be overcome.

1550

As I've said, listening is perhaps the key in a dialogue, any dialogue. One party speaks but the other party listens. What I heard at the doors was that people felt that nobody is listening, that nobody cares, that they have something to sell but they don't know if they want to buy. They're receptive. They want to work together.

The people of Oriole have built something very special, and they're saying: "Why is nobody listening when we take the time to get involved in our community on a local level, on a provincial level? Why is the province not prepared to listen to our concerns? Why are they not prepared to act on our concerns?" That's a very sad commentary on the direction this government has chosen.

As I said earlier, the cynicism is perhaps the most disheartening aspect of what I heard at the doors. This is a time in our history when we should be engaging people. Right now, we seem more intent on shutting them out. I must say to all the members of this House, but particularly members of the government, that people will vote with their feet.

To build the kind of province and the kind of communities we have right now, we have brought people together, we have looked for new ideas. No one has said, "I have the source of all ideas and knowledge." Together we can work, but there must be a willingness, there must be an openness, there must be an honest attempt to solicit opinion, to listen and to act. That's not happening.

To the people of Oriole I say very clearly, I will always be there when you need me. Should the need arise, I want to assure my bosses that I will work my hardest, I will try to solve problems, I will always, always respond.

Finally, what is this place all about and what is the purpose of this assembly? It's to build something. It is to build a brighter future not only for our young people but for all of us. When I go to a household and they tell me that their kids, who are college- or university-trained, cannot find work — when they are told there are all these jobs being created, they ask me where they are. There are résumés that young, bright, energetic, hardworking people have. They want to give them to employers but they can't find them. "Where are these jobs?" they ask me. I have to answer that, unfortunately, no one is willing to tell us.

There's a lot of bravado but very little action and very little result.

We have a problem in the province with 18% unemployed youth, but even worse, I'm told that the percentage of underemployed young people is close to reaching those proportions. This is a significant problem and nobody seems to want to tackle it, nobody seems to want to address it. It is at all of our peril if we do not make the investment in our young people. This is our future. These are our future leaders. These are our future taxpayers. Why won't the government do something? Why the foot-dragging? Why the silence? The people of Oriole want to know.

As I said earlier, we've seen slickness, we've seen packaging, we've seen promises, but they've been broken. Behind the façade there's just a bunch of guys with slicked-back hair pulling the strings. We're not buying it. We are not buying what this government is selling us. You can package it any way you like, but the people of Oriole know the real thing when they see it, and it has not been presented. There has been no attempt to meet the needs of the people of my community.

It is incumbent upon this government and this assembly to say: "Yes, we will make the necessary investment. Yes, we will listen. Yes, we will act on your behalf." I urge the government to say yes to parents, say yes to seniors, especially say yes to tenants. Tell them. Show them. Actions speak louder than words. Make sure that our communities remain vibrant and that we have the ability to grow.

I will shortly turn the floor over to my colleague from Ottawa West. I would just like to reiterate and thank the people of Oriole for the privilege they have granted me. My energy and my dedication are theirs, and I hope I can represent them well in this House.

Mr Alex Cullen (Ottawa West): As I stand in my place today, I welcome this, my first opportunity to speak to the Legislature, on the matter of interim supply. Interim supply is the motion that permits taxpayers' money to be spent by the government of the day, as approved by the taxpayers and elected representatives in this Legislature.

I was recently elected as the representative for the people in Ottawa West to this Legislature, indeed by a majority of the voters in Ottawa West, to speak here on their behalf. This is an honour and a responsibility that I take very seriously. I can tell this assembly that I have been humbled by the confidence given to me by the electors in my community in Ottawa West.

Ottawa West has been in its present form for over 30 years. It will change significantly in the next provincial election when the new boundaries take effect. It's an older suburban riding in the city of Ottawa, built primarily after the Second World War. In fact, as I discovered after 15 years of knocking on doors in that community, there are many seniors who originally built their homes in Ottawa West some 40 years ago, raised families there, built the community facilities, paid their taxes and are now retiring in place. In fact, Ottawa West, while having its fair share of singles and families and young people, has more seniors per capita than any other community in Canada except for Victoria, British Columbia.

In general, Ottawa West is fairly representative of urban Ontario, still largely anglophone, with a small but growing ethnic diversity. It has a residential home ownership character. Nearly half of my riding is populated by relatively well-off, older and well-educated residents as a reflection, in part, of being in a government town. However, more than half of my riding lives in rental accommodation, where the population tends to be younger and less well off. In fact, over a quarter of my riding, some 10,000 people, live in social housing, a combination of both Ontario public housing and City Living and other social housing providers, encompassing seniors on fixed incomes, the disabled and families, including new Canadians and single parents.

1600

I can tell you, as a former school board trustee in the community of Ottawa West for six years and as a former city and regional councillor, also for six years, that the residents of Ottawa West value greatly their quality of life. They live in a clean, safe community with excellent public and private services, ready access to green space, good schools, good hospitals, good transit, good water, roads and sewers, and good community facilities. They expect their tax dollars to be spent wisely. They do not begrudge providing these tax dollars to pay for the services in the community to support their quality of life. They may not all agree on the specific details on what or how their money should be spent — and believe you me, I am quite aware of it — but they do expect their elected representatives at all levels not only to preserve their quality of life but also to take advantage of the opportunities to improve their quality of life at reasonable cost.

This brings me to the by-election in Ottawa West. It would be too easy to trivialize my comments regarding this by-election as simply partisan. When 21,000 people vote in a summer by-election and two thirds of them reject the government's candidate, I believe we must respect their democratic decision and seek to understand it.

The number one issue that dominated the discussion at every doorstep I encountered in that by-election was health care. People are concerned about our current health care system, the level of care today, access to treatment and the growing waiting lists, the amount of time spent in hospital, the availability and adequacy of home care, the growing need for palliative care and long-term care. With the cuts this government has made to health care to date, even before considering the issue of hospital closures, people in Ottawa West were concerned and remain concerned about the viability of our current health care system. This was clearly evident by the voters' reaction to hospital closures in Ottawa-Carleton. The Health Services Restructuring Commission's proposed closures of the Grace and Riverside hospitals will affect residents in Ottawa West. Not only is our community growing but it is aging as well, therefore increasing our need for adequate and accessible health care. While all can agree that we must make better use of our resources and facilities, the public in Ottawa West has not accepted this government's imposed solution of closing community health care facilities as an improvement. They see longer waiting lists, not shorter, as the result, and they are not willing to accept reductions in the quality of care.

There are other problems that result from this government's approach to health care. Not all the money from the over $100 million in savings from closing the Grace and Riverside hospitals, from shutting down the Elisabeth Bruyère Health Centre, from downsizing the Montfort Hospital, are being reinvested by this government back into the community. Indeed only $41.5 million of that $100 million has been designated by the Minister of Health for reinvestment, and it still falls far short of the community's needs for long-term care, palliative care and home care. This is simply not acceptable.

Of the $128 million in hospital renovations that this government has announced are necessary — covering, mind you, only acute care, not our needs in terms of palliative care or home care or long-term care — this government expects the local community to cover at least 25% of these costs, another burden for the local property taxpayer. And the time lines — hospitals to stop admitting in May of next year, a mere eight months away — are completely unrealistic given that the necessary renovations have not even started. The Health Services Restructuring Commission made it abundantly clear that the replacement programs had to be in place before any closures were to proceed, and this is simply not happening in Ottawa-Carleton. It is no wonder that the voters in Ottawa West lack confidence in this government.

Then there is the issue of education, an issue near and dear to my heart, given my experience as a parent, as a volunteer in our school system and as a former trustee with the Ottawa Board of Education. In this area, parents are painfully aware that this government has cut funding so deeply that despite Mike Harris's election promise not to affect classroom spending, we see school boards in Ottawa-Carleton and elsewhere in this province being forced to cut junior kindergarten, cut class size, cut teachers' aides, cut special education for children with learning disabilities, cut busing and children's safety, cut libraries and cut school supplies. It is all too painfully clear to parents that this government is far more interested in finding money for an ill-conceived income tax cut than in improving the quality of education for our children. The parents told me they are not willing to accept the government's price of school closures and program cuts in exchange for a provincial income tax cut. Parents in Ottawa West too have lost confidence in this government's ability to manage this important responsibility.

Another issue that is important to the voters in Ottawa West is the cost of provincial downloading on to local property taxpayers. Due to my previous position as a member of council for the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, this is a topic with which I have some familiarity. We know that the Harris government is having some difficulty in making this initiative work. They are now working on plan D. Plan A, announced back in January, had to be abandoned as simply unworkable; plan B, announced in May, couldn't fly; plan C, released this August, still didn't add up; and now plan D is being worked on as we speak. It involves a massive shift of funding responsibilities from the provincial level to the municipal level, from provincial income taxpayers to local property taxpayers, in a manner that is supposed to be revenue-neutral; as we all know in this assembly, in its current form it simply is not, certainly for the taxpayers in Ottawa-Carleton.

According to the numbers released by the government following a meeting with the large cities mayors' caucus this past August, local property taxpayers in Ottawa-Carleton are to assume some $277 million in additional funding responsibilities for social housing, public transit, property assessment, provincial highway transfers, community health programs, social assistance, the drug benefit program, community ambulances, child care and community libraries, while absorbing losses in provincial funding. At the same time, some $185 million is to be removed from the local property tax base through the provincial assumption of half the residential education property tax. The net additional cost to Ottawa-Carleton property taxpayers has been estimated by the region, and confirmed by the numbers issued by the government, to be about $92 million having to be funded by the local property tax base. Their property tax burden in Ottawa-Carleton is not being reduced, as was promised by this government; in this shell game it actually increases at a rate of over $250 per household in Ottawa-Carleton.

This government has a credibility problem. It has yet to come up with figures showing that its proposals are indeed revenue-neutral, despite announcing this initiative some nine months ago. It is competing with another level of responsible government, recognized as closer to the people, which also has the expertise to provide responsible estimates of the impacts of this government's proposals on their communities. Taxpayers know, transition fund or no transition fund, that if this government insists on pursuing its ill-conceived plan, taxes will increase or services will be cut. One thing I can tell you, after 12 years in local government —

Interjections.

Mr Cullen: Madam Speaker, I seem to have provoked a response from the other side. I can tell you, after 12 years in local government, that people don't like to see their services cut, and they will remember why they were cut.

This leads me to an issue that is important to a significant portion of my riding, and that is the future of social housing. As I mentioned earlier, Ottawa West has over 10,000 residents living in social housing.

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs Margaret Marland): The member for Kingston and The Islands.

1610

Mr Cullen: Madam Speaker, I need all the help I can get from my colleagues. They are here to help me.

Social housing is an important part of Canada's social safety net. It is affordable housing to seniors on a fixed income, to the disabled and to low-income families, particularly those headed by single mothers. It is being placed at risk by this government's plan to download its responsibility to local property taxpayers. The municipalities, all of them, have made it abundantly clear they do not have the ability to fund, from their property tax base, the subsidies needed to render this housing affordable to the people who need it most: the elderly, the disabled, families with low incomes, children from low-income families.

Further, they don't have the funds to finance the necessary capital renovations and upgrades this housing requires. What the government has announced in terms of transitional funding for capital upgrades is a mere pittance compared to the needs out there in the community. I believe it works out to less than $1,000 per unit of social housing, barely enough for a paint job.

It is therefore absolutely understandable that the federal government, which itself is engaged in negotiations with the provinces to devolve the management, not the funding but the management, of its responsibility in social housing to the provincial governments, has suspended its negotiations with this government because of these very concerns.

As well, social housing providers and tenants fear the downloading of social housing to municipalities will lead to unaffordable rent increases and restrictions to access to this needed housing by the very clientele it is meant to serve as the over 300 municipalities in Ontario that have social housing in this province struggle to control their costs, combined with the other costs of downloading, leading ultimately to a checkerboard Ontario in terms of accessibility and affordability.

Residents in my riding, those who live in social housing and those who understand its importance, believe this government's ill-advised proposals to download social housing to municipalities is, to paraphrase David Crombie, chair of the province's own Who Does What commission, both wrong in theory and devastating in practice.

There are of course other issues that people in Ottawa West spoke to me about during the by-election. I certainly heard about rent control, about the fact that the government's proposals for rent control in effect abolish rent control over time, as we all know in this House. We also heard about the environment, that the government's proposals dealing with land planning and land use planning don't serve to protect our precious resource known as green space and the environment — and child care, and youth employment. These were issues I heard at the door.

But consistently and overwhelmingly, people said to me that this government, the Mike Harris government, was going too far, too fast. Over and over again at the door — senior, young parent, middle-aged parents seeking to put their children through university, young person looking for work — all said to me, "Too far, too fast." They all recognized that the Harris government was indeed elected in the summer of 1995 to deal with the debt and the deficit, that some cuts had to be made, but overwhelmingly they rejected hospital closures, education cuts and provincial downloading as the price to pay for that vaunted provincial income tax cut. They would rather the government spend its time ensuring that health care services were available for all who needed them, young and old, for today and tomorrow.

I have to tell you of the elderly lady in her eighties I met on Melbourne Avenue during the campaign who told me at the door how she was sent home after being treated for a stroke and arrived at home requiring home care and finding none available to her. She had to wait. She had to rely on friends and family who weren't living in her community to provide that service until that could come, and when it came it was inadequate to her needs.

I must tell you of the gentleman in his 50s living on a disability pension who was trying to look after his daughter, dying of a brain tumour, brain cancer, in his home. This is an adult female, living in his home, he on disability because of a back problem, not getting sufficient home care to look after his daughter who needed constant medical attention while suffering from the ravages of this cancer. Again, inadequate service, inadequate health care.

Here we're dealing with a government that is not putting back enough of the savings it is taking away from the health care system in Ottawa-Carleton, not reinvesting all that money, not even coming close to meeting the needs of the community in Ottawa West.

The residents in Ottawa West would much rather that funding for education was better spent in the classroom, not simply cut for ulterior purposes. They do not accept that spending for special education for children with special needs must be sacrificed for an income tax cut that even the government opposite's friends on Bay Street tell them is unaffordable at this time. That is why this government continues to have the same credit rating as the previous government, and the previous government, after having its credit rating lowered four times.

The residents in Ottawa West would much rather see this government seek change through consensus rather than confrontation. How many times have we seen confrontation, the byword of this government, as opposed to working with the population it's elected to serve? Too many times they've sought to divide and conquer, to treat people living in the community as special interest groups.

They showed very clearly their opinion of this government, their lack of confidence in this government through their vote on September 4.

I believe politics is indeed the art of the possible. I believe we can look at politics in terms of not only the art — we have many practitioners around here — but as the science because we are here to determine how to appropriately meet the needs of our community with the resources we have. I mention that phrase with some familiarity, given my background in economics. Of course it has been said many times: You get two economists, you get three opinions, and I'm sure we're going to hear many of them in this assembly.

But I do believe, as a member of this provincial Parliament, that we have many roles to play in shaping public policy and in serving our constituents. We have not only a role to speak out for our constituents on matters of public policy; we have a role to provide a human face to the process of politics in our community, to go and consult with our community, to go and give them the avenue to participate in the shaping of public policy here in this assembly and with the government.

As a former bureaucrat, I know what kind of challenge that is, not only for the community but for ourselves in this assembly. I also know, and this may come as a shock to some, that wisdom can be found in all parties, although in my view more of it is found in some parties than in others.

I look forward to participating in future debates in this assembly and I can only hope, as I am sure has been the hope of all those who have entered here, that my words will have a positive influence in shaping the policies that are to serve the people we represent in Ontario.

In closing, I consider this to be an honour, to be able to stand here in this place and address my views and the views of my constituents to the members assembled here. I can only hope, to reiterate, that I will play some small part in advancing the future of this great province.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): On a point of order, Madam Speaker —

The Acting Speaker: Before you do the point of order, I was just going to congratulate both our new members on their maiden speeches.

The member for Cochrane South has a point of order.

Mr Bisson: Madam Speaker, I join you in congratulating the new members on these their maiden speeches.

We have I believe an all-party agreement that the New Democratic caucus will split its time between, first of all, Mr Pouliot from Lake Nipigon, and second of all, myself. We're going to start with Mr Pouliot, we're then going to go to the government for its 20-minute rotation and rotate back to us yet again 20 minutes after the Tories.

Mr Gerretsen: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I don't believe we've had questions and comments yet, as is provided for in the rules.

The Acting Speaker: Absolutely, but I was taking a point of order, which has precedence over my starting the rotation of questions and comments. So we will now proceed, with your help, to questions and comments.

1620

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I'd like to take the opportunity to congratulate the two members on their maiden speeches. I remember some 16½ years ago when I was new to this Legislature and I had the opportunity to do the same thing. It was quite an exciting day and it's a day that you never forget. To see the new members make their first speech here in the Legislature is something they and their families will not forget because it's a pretty proud day.

To relate to some of the issues they raised with regard to the future of this province, I think we've got to be fairly positive in the first speeches about what we really feel this province is and the direction this province is heading. I know there were several years of neglect, and this government of the day is trying to rectify some of those problems. So I say to the new members, you want to read your history, figure out what happened in the past and look forward to a prosperous future.

They made some comments with regard to the changes in administration in municipalities, how they are going to affect the municipalities, who is going to be responsible for what services and how the shift of responsibility is going to take place. I think what we've seen here in the last several months with regard to the shift of responsibilities will be positive and will put the province in a positive position for the future. When we look at the many aspects of the shift of responsibilities, for many years as a municipal politician I was hoping that one day we'd get the total cost of education off the property tax. I thought we were finally doing that until AMO came along and came back with their recommendations that they only wanted half taken off.

I commend the members today for their maiden speeches and look forward to hearing from them in the future.

The Acting Speaker: The Chair made an error originally in going to the member for Simcoe East. I apologize to the member for Cochrane South because I did not see you standing. We will go back to you now and then go to the Liberals.

Mr Bisson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to take this opportunity, as you did earlier, to congratulate the newly elected members of the assembly from the Liberal caucus, who had the opportunity on this, their maiden speech. I think the tradition in this House is, and should always remain, that when members come in, we have an opportunity to congratulate them on their speeches.

Truly in this case it was quite interesting. This is not something you would think opposition parties would say about each other, but I thought they were on topic and they gave a fairly well reasoned response to the motion here before us today in regard to interim supply. They brought it back to what they saw on the doorstep. I think what these two members saw on the doorstep is the same thing that Mr Wayne Lessard saw in Windsor, that there is a lot of anxiety and a lot of fear, I guess would also be a good word, on the part of constituents in regard to what this government is doing. However, I would not argue that it's a question that this government is going too far and too fast; I would argue they're going in the wrong direction.

There are a lot of people who worry: "What is going to happen in Mike Harris's Ontario two or three years from now when it comes to my children's education? Will I be able to afford, as a middle-class parent, to send my kid off to college or university in this new Ontario that Mike Harris is reshaping?"

Mr Bill Grimmett (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): Sell your cat.

Mr Bisson: The member across the way in the government says, "Sell your cat." I will not sell my cat. Fluffy the cat has been around for a long time and is going to stay at my house.

The fear people have is that in Mike Harris's Ontario they are not going to have the ability to participate in our economy as full citizens, because many of the measures they are undertaking are turning our province into a situation where those with money will do quite fine and those who, like most of us, are average, middle-income earners are going to find it increasingly difficult to find our place within this economy. So I think they're going in the wrong direction.

Mr Gerretsen: I too want to congratulate the new members for Oriole and Ottawa West on their excellent maiden speeches. It gives those of us who have been here now for over two years an idea as to how the people on the doorsteps are still reacting to what this government is doing. I completely concur. From canvassing with one of the candidates, I heard the same concerns at the doorstep.

I also agree with my colleague from the NDP. I think this government is heading in a completely wrong direction. When you think about it, the United Nations has voted Canada the number one country in the world from a quality-of-life viewpoint over the last two or three years. I always believe that quality of life talks about a lot of things, but certainly good government programs have an awful lot to do with that. So here we're voted number one in the world on an annual basis, yet this government is trying to take a lot of those good government programs and either tear them apart completely or do away with them completely. That is certainly the assessment a lot of people have had at the door and that a lot of Ontarians have had as well.

I also found it very interesting to listen to the member for Ottawa West about health care in general. He has given us an example where $100 million has been taken out of health care in that community, and according to his research, only $41 million has been reinvested. We've heard the Minister of Health say here on a day-to-day basis, "All the money we're saving as a result of restructuring we're putting back in." So far, in Ottawa anyway, they are $59 million short. If you don't believe me, ask the people who need health care services on a day-to-day basis and they will certainly tell you, from the kinds of services they're getting in the hospitals and in the health care field, that it just isn't there any more with all the cutbacks your government has been involved in.

I congratulate both members on excellent opening speeches.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions and comments? The New Democratic Party. If we had been in rotation correctly, you would have had the second question and comments.

Mr Bisson: I would like to accommodate the parliamentary assistant.

The Acting Speaker: That's fine, as long as you understand we're doing that.

Ms Isabel Bassett (St Andrew-St Patrick): I would like to extend my congratulations to the two new members for Oriole and Ottawa West. I know there's a tradition in this Legislature to be courteous and welcoming, which we are very much to your arrival here. That said, however, I would like to point out a few inaccuracies in what you have said.

We believe that Ontario is headed on the right track. Since this government took office, the economy has improved in Ontario, and Ontarians are believing it. For example, an Angus Reid poll in July of this year showed that Ontarians, more than any other people in provinces elsewhere in Canada, believe that Ontario is doing well and that their quality of life is improving.

Second, in terms of other surveys, we see that more Ontarians say they believe that the forecasts for Ontario are improving. All private forecasters say that Ontario's economy is going to outstrip that of other provinces and most private forecasters expect Ontario and Alberta to have the fastest-growing economies in 1997. Over the first seven months of 1997, Ontario's merchandise exports rose 6.8% from the same period a year ago.

All in all, what has happened is that Ontarians are sensing that our fiscal programs and plans are working. The fact that we have cut the deficit from 11.2% when we came in to 6.6% today is sending out a message that we know how to control and manage our money.

Mr Caplan: Madam Speaker, on a point of order: I seek leave from the House for unanimous consent to split the two-minute response between one minute for myself and one minute for the member for Ottawa West.

The Acting Speaker: Agreed? Agreed. The member for Oriole first, then?

Mr Caplan: No, the member for Ottawa West first.

Mr Cullen: I am very pleased that my comments have provoked a response from the other side. That's precisely the purpose of the by-election in Ottawa West. For a summer by-election, we had a 48% turnout of the residents in Ottawa West, and I think the message is very clear.

If the government continues to cling to its line that all is well and that it's on the right track, then obviously there is something wrong in the water we drink in Ottawa West, and having been a member of regional council I can tell you we drink excellent water in Ottawa West.

I would like to simply offer to my colleagues, those of you who were mentioning in your remarks the position of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario — of course I have participated in the deliberations of that body and I can tell you it is very, very clear: Property tax was never meant to cover the costs of income transfer programs such as social assistance and social housing, never.

1630

Mr Caplan: I would offer my colleagues opposite the actual results of the by-election, because that is the most accurate temperature of what the public feels about this or any other government. I can assure you that when 60% of the people of Oriole reject what this government has done and what it has not done, no set of projections, no set of temperature-taking by anonymous pollsters replaces the actual votes of real, live people. As individuals who have gone to the polls, who have stood as representatives, you should understand that better than anyone. I hope this government continues to rely on that kind of flawed information, because when people speak, that is when things really happen in this province. They spoke very clearly in Oriole.

The Acting Speaker: Just before the member for Lake Nipigon rises, earlier the member for Cochrane South asked that the time for the New Democratic caucus be split between the member for Cochrane South and the member for Lake Nipigon, but you wanted to rotate the government party in between your equal split. I should have asked if there was unanimous consent of the House to do that. I'm now asking that. Is it agreed, therefore, and the member for Lake Nipigon is going first? Agreed.

Mr Gilles Pouliot (Lake Nipigon): I thank the members of the House.

First and foremost, I too would wish to commend the two new members. They've done an outstanding job in articulating what they heard on the doorsteps when they interfaced, when they met with their constituents. I want to wish them well and I want to wish them a long and active tenure at Queen's Park, representing in the most honourable fashion their respective constituents and ridings.

Interim supply allows members a latitude which is not afforded on other matters. Some may wish to deviate from time to time, address the people who got them elected, their supporters, the people of their ridings.

Every day, the Harris government takes credit for all the good economic deeds across Ontario. There isn't a day where you don't have a press release where the government says, "We and we alone are responsible for the economic recovery." The Harris government believes the mantra that the manifesto, the Common Sense Revolution, is the sole message that Ontarians must hear. The Harris government believes that the two previous administrations, those of the Liberals and of the NDP, resulted in 10 lost years, that they alone have a right, a monopoly on the welfare of Ontarians.

You have witnessed over the past two years an arrogance, a toughness never before displayed by any government in the annals of Ontario, to the point where if you are marginalized, if you are vulnerable, if you are a small-wage earner, if you are mentally and/or physically challenged, if you are poor, if you are a young person looking for employment, if you are an elder, you don't quite fit the agenda. Your lot will be less, so that the lot of the one-, two- and three-percenters will improve. Their wealth is galloping. They now control a larger percentage of wealth, command higher wages than ever before, at the expense of all of us.

The erosion of the middle class is palpable; it is concrete; you can feel it. The anxiety has led to fear. People do not have the same faith in the future they once had. Welcome to Mike Harris's Ontario.

Let me share with you a letter that was handed to me yesterday in my office from a resident of Kitche-Nuhmay-Koosib, Big Trout Lake, in the riding of Lake Nipigon.

"Hello and welcome to Big Trout Lake. My name is Reverend Alan Hartley. I am 72 years old. I have been a reverend since 1974 with St Peter's Anglican Church in Trout. I lived in my father's 27-year-old structure building for a few years, which gets colder in winter months."

You see, Reverend Hartley, 72 years of age, a resident of Big Trout Lake, one of our first Canadians, lives with his daughter and his granddaughter. The unit is 672 square feet.

"I survive from the source of income I receive every month for old-age assistance from the government of Canada, Gains from the province of Ontario and a retirement pension from the Anglican Church of Canada." Keep in mind, Canada, Ontario, 1997.

"My heating costs are quite high every year, buying wood three times a week from the local people, which costs $35 per load, totalling $105 per week. My electricity bill is between $200 and $400 per month during winter."

Suffice it to say anyone who is familiar with the geography of our vast and magnificent land here in Ontario knows it is very cold for very long in the community of Big Trout Lake.

Total expenses for wood and electricity were $820 per month. The telephone bill was around $70 per month and the sewage bill, because they do have sewer and water — our government installed the sewer and water when we had the opportunity to serve the province, so it's less of a problem, but nevertheless there are charges associated with that essential service, $40 per month. Other expenses — groceries and clothing — are approximately $500 a month.

Every commodity has to be flown in. A litre of gas, unleaded, is 90 cents, but if you pay at the end of the month because you don't have the cash, it's $1.10 per litre. The majority of residents in Big Trout Lake pay at the end of the month because they simply don't have the cash during the month. So it's $1.10 per litre.

Total estimated expenses are $1,430 a month; total sources of income, $892 a month. You need not be a rocket scientist, you need not emanate from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, to understand that there is a significant shortcoming.

1640

A first Canadian right here in Ontario, right now in 1997, while the government pats itself on the back and says, "Yes, we're doing very well; this is a recovery of unprecedented proportions," Father Hartley, the spiritual leader of the community, does not think so, not at all. Father Hartley was getting $900 a month in pension, but he gets $262.39 per month from the Anglican Church of Canada, so the government has cut his pension by $262.39. Father Hartley, 72 years of age, a first Canadian, must try to survive in a very difficult, challenging and harsh environment on a little more than $10,000.

Do you know that if you make $247,000 a year, the Mike Harris tax cut will put $15,000 more in your pocket? Two citizens: one in downtown Toronto, a chief executive officer or a vice-president of a company, a person earning $247,000, on taxes will save $15,000; at the other end of the province, Father Hartley, 72 years of age, $10,000 annual income.

Ask yourself, is this justified? Does it make any sense to you? They both only need one set of clothes at a time, they both can only digest one meal at a time, and yet you have the disparity where the people who have an opportunity to run the fastest, to make more and more money, are galloping away from the middle class and are leaving the poor and the destitute, the marginalized, so far behind.

Is this the kind of society that Mike Harris will tolerate? If it were any other government, I would think not. We have a responsibility to give people all opportunities, all latitude in our market environment to progress, to prosper. It should be encouraged relatively without limitation. But we have a more important responsibility, that of giving everyone a chance to dream. We don't have this in our society at present.

This government has embarked in a downloading experiment the like of which has never been enacted in our province. The people of Lake Nipigon, the largest geographical riding in the province, with 26% of the overall land mass — you know where the riding is, Madame. It extends to Hudson Bay, nestled in the Canadian Shield, between the vastness of Lake Superior and the pristine waters of Lake Nipigon, the largest body of water beyond the Great Lakes, so Superior, Nipigon and Hudson Bay. We have the northernmost community in the province of Ontario, that of Fort Severn. We have 400 miles where we have no road. I want to take you on a small journey before we develop the theme and try to respond while we still can, if we're not under a state of siege, to the daily attacks of Mike Harris against the people of Lake Nipigon.

You leave Manitouwadge, where I reside and have been residing as a proud citizen for the past 32 years. We're at the extreme part of the riding, if you wish. Then you drive one way 600 miles to get to Pickle Lake. Once you reach Pickle Lake, this is where the road system ends in the province of Ontario. Then you must, by way of charter, hop on a small plane and go another 400 miles to the bay, to Fort Severn. You know that Fort Severn, the northernmost community on the shores of Hudson Bay, has some beluga whales. It's the only place where there's a tide in Ontario. You know that, Madame. Hudson Bay is the eighth-largest body of water in the world, and yes, we do have polar bears. They don't abound, but there are some sightings.

That's the riding of Lake Nipigon. It costs an arm and a leg to live there. Everything is weighed by the pound. In our special part of Ontario, we're more impacted by what this government has done and more impacted by what it's about to do. Let me share some examples.

Our riding is made up of some 20 reserves, 10 northern reserves and 10 southern reserves. We also have upwards of 25 other small communities. The largest community is only 6,000 people. The reason I say this is that on January 1 we will be asked to pay for OPP services, Ontario Provincial Police. Only two communities in our riding presently pay for the OPP, for police service. Where I reside, in Manitouwadge, we have a complement of OPP officers, but at 2 o'clock in the morning the service, the protection, if you wish, ceases until resumption at 8 o'clock in the morning. We are asked to call the 1-800 number which will connect you to Thunder Bay. Thunder Bay is 400 kilometres away from Manitouwadge.

But so far we're a peaceful lot. We're inland. Yes, we're isolated, quite resourceful. The crime rate in our community, I must say, and we're very proud of it, is insignificant, in fact almost non-existent. More than 50% of the people do not lock their doors. No one I know would lock her or his car. In Manitouwadge we don't do that; there's no need to do it. But we still need police protection, and since we're fewer than 5,000 people we will begin to pay for it, because Mike Harris and the gang have said, "You will all pay." Well, we cannot afford to pay a lot. But Mike Harris and the gang have also said, "You will get a saving of 50% in your taxes for the school" — I see the page here — to send our young people to school.

1650

On the one hand we will begin to save because we're only paying 50%, but on the other hand we will pay big time because we will be responsible for policing, libraries at the municipal level. We will be responsible for social housing. We'll pay now; the municipality will pay. We will be responsible for a range of services for which we are not accustomed to paying. Oh, we pay; we pay dearly. We pay through our taxes. We've had shared arrangements, a partnership between the provincial government and the municipalities. It worked quite well, thank you. But the government has decided to break it, to breach the partnership. "Out the door," they said to municipalities. "You pay now because we must give a 30% provincial tax break," with no limit, no cap. The more you make, the more you take.

The middle class will have to pay for all that. If you work for a small salary, you pay for the rich. It doesn't make a lot of sense to me, but when you're sitting where they're sitting, it makes all the sense to them. We don't court the same circles, I guess. We don't associate with the same people, I know. But those privileged, winner-take-all — and Mike Harris loves them all. People at the club, at Upper Canada College, I want to wish them well. I don't wish to take anything away from anyone, but they're taking a lot away from everyone except the anyone, that select few, those people who win the lottery, more often than not. This is where we see the injustice.

If you're a school teacher in Lake Nipigon — many of my good friends are school teachers, those women, those men who put the welfare and the learning of young people ahead of their own year after year. They're anxious today. They don't fully believe Mike Harris's agenda. They certainly don't believe that it will result in good education order.

Those are the frontliners, those are real people teaching real students. They are not in the ministry's office. Those are the people with real names and real faces. They're pleading with the Premier:

"Mike Harris, please, put the brakes on. You are scaring people. You're not providing us with the answers. Some things you mustn't change all at once. You are overestimating the capacity of people to digest, to assimilate, all of your agenda."

But no, all aboard. This agenda is about the trains running on time. They possess an unprecedented zeal. Examples abound. They have the determination and the zeal of some of the sects, some of the cults that one reads about now and then. This is a revolution, nothing short of that. They're very much aware of it. They know that revolutionaries hurt people, that during a revolution people will get hurt.

Keep in mind, a 30% tax break equals $5 billion. Keep in mind also that the provincial income tax, the PIT, is one third of provincial revenues and 30% of that one third equals $5 billion. Big-time money. It's not a secret. Things are going better and we should all benefit, but you must find the $5 billion someplace and you must find it quickly. In order to pay for the $5 billion, you must cut someplace else.

The audacity. You see the kind of snake oil that those conjurers of illusions, the kind of opiate they display. They say: "We're going to break even. This is a wash. This is revenue-neutral." If you ask them, "Does it mean that my property taxes in Marathon, in Schreiber, in Geraldton, Nakina, Nipigon will go up?" they say, "It's revenue-neutral."

Answer the question. "Will my property taxes go up?" You know they will go up, but they can't tell you, because it might go down someplace else. If I live in Nipigon, all that matters, really, is that my taxes are going up. They said, "Your taxes won't go up." I said, "What about assessment?" "Oh, well, your property will be reassessed."

The bottom line is, am I forking over at the end of the month the same money, more money or less money? Get it? It's not that complex. We'll do it again.

I get my property tax bill, municipal taxes. So far, so good. I see the Premier is acquiescing. With respect, Premier, can you guarantee that the people — yes, you can look at me, sir. Can you guarantee, Premier, that the people in Nipigon, anyone in our riding, will not pay more taxes? No, you can't. You can shuffle papers all you want and pretend that you're not listening, but you are the one telling people that the taxes will not go up, Premier. Yet we know, when we add all the services that are coming on stream on January 1, three months and a week from now, that we're going to pay big time.

The few dollars that we save on school taxes, where is it going to come from? Do they have a fund, do they have a contingency? How much will it cost? We can't get the figures. The mayors, the reeves, the council people are up in arms. They don't know and they don't believe that the government cares a great deal because the government is on the hook to transfer $5 billion. That's $5,000 million. You know, some of them are millionaires. Imagine if you were 5,000 times — that's a lot of money. They've got to find the money. There's no secret here, because they've got to pay.

The government keeps on saying: "We will balance the books. This is what we do best. We balance the books. We're fiscally responsible."

The way these people are going, they'll have all of us in the poorhouse. The debt keeps going up. Does it make sense to you? You have a credit card and you're a little overextended. In fact, you're big-time overextended, so you throw in another party. You ask them to raise the limit. That's what they're doing. Why don't they take the $5 billion and put it against the debt? Any good accountant, any economist will tell you, "Pay your debt first." You've mortgaged the province. Reduce the mortgage. Don't take a 30% tax cut and give it to the people we read about, you know, with those long, long cars — I don't know the brand name, but they're very expensive cars — stockbrokers, people who deal in stocks and so on. No, you pay the debt. You just take the money and pay the debt because it makes a lot more sense.

1700

Then you have Ontario Hydro, the society of high priests if there ever was one. They owe $29 billion. Oh, there's another $2.7 billion or $2.8 billion they've borrowed from our Canada pension plan, and pretty soon they will need another $10 billion, all supported by the taxpayers of Ontario.

I say to you, sir, this is no way to run a boutique. You don't run a shop in this fashion. You're inviting bankruptcy. But there they are in their best doublebreasted pinstripe, conveying, with arrogance indeed, that yes, this is sound; the economy is well managed. They are the last people to whom I would trust the few dollars that I have available, because for sure I can guarantee you I would lose that, because they're mismanagers. It's about time that someone takes them to task, because their ideology is a treadmill to failure.

Five billion dollars. The economy is starting to pick up. It's visible. You take the $5 billion and you pay your debt, and then you talk about tax cuts. It makes a lot more sense than the other way around.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Questions or comments?

Mr Jim Brown (Scarborough West): No, debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Jim Brown: I'd like to split my time with the member for Kitchener and the member for Northumberland.

The Deputy Speaker: Could you hold on for a minute? Just hold on for a minute. Something happened when I wasn't here. I just want to be informed.

Mr Jim Brown: Will you stop the clock?

The Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the honourable member has the floor? There is unanimous consent.

Mr Jim Brown: Can we have unanimous consent to restore the clock to 20 minutes?

The Deputy Speaker: Give or take 30 seconds, I think it's okay.

Mr Jim Brown: My colleague the member for Lake Nipigon tends to plead a little bit of poverty, but I think the first 100 numbers on his speed dial are stockbrokers. Of anybody in the House, my colleague would probably be the one who enjoys the tax cut the most.

In any case, I'm delighted to speak today, to remind this House that our management of the affairs of this great province is producing results.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm sorry to interrupt you again. Stop the clock. You need unanimous consent to ask somebody else to split the time with you. Agreed? Agreed. We'll give you another 20 seconds.

Interjection: You're going to have more than you started out with.

Mr Jim Brown: Up to half an hour.

I'm delighted to speak today to reiterate and remind the House that our management of the affairs of this great province is producing results. We promised jobs. We promised a better economy like Ontario used to be. We're only two years into our mandate and we're doing what we said we'd do. Since June 1995 when we took office, net new jobs have increased by 224,000; consumer confidence is up 18.2%; business confidence for that same period is up 16.8%; business investment is up 12.8%. In the last eight months, housing starts are up 33.1%, and over the first six months of 1997, exports are up 6%. Since June 1995, 220,000 people have come off welfare. The deficit of $11.3 billion has been reduced to $6.6 billion. We're on target to a balanced budget by the year 2000-01.

Because Ontario is prospering and because Ontario comprises 40% of Canada's economy, interest rates are down to 4.75% prime, allowing people to borrow, to spend, and allowing business to borrow, start up, expand and hire people. In spite of all this, taxes have been cut by 22.4%. We're well on target for our 30% tax cut. Yet in spite of all this, tax revenues have still gone up.

In my Scarborough riding, development is skyrocketing, neglected for 32 years of NDP representation. There is an economic rebirth focused on the Golden Mile. I remember when Scarborough's Golden Mile was the largest shopping centre and commercial area in Ontario. That was back in the 1950s. It looked like it was a mile long, and it was a golden age of retailing. It acquired the name Golden Mile. But the area went downhill. During the NDP regime, the GM plant closed, the Sears building was demolished, and vacant land dominated the scene. Crime, drugs and unemployment ran rampant.

Now we have hope, promises and prosperity. Today this vacant land at Warden, Pharmacy and both sides of Eglinton East is being redeveloped. Plans have been approved for the development of nearly 1.6 million square feet of retail, commercial and office space. It will be the largest redevelopment in all of Metro Toronto. The 1.6 million square feet of redevelopment will provide thousands of new construction jobs and thousands of permanent jobs. I'm speaking of thousands of jobs in my riding of Scarborough West, $300 million of capital investment.

The people in my riding don't want handouts; they want an opportunity. They don't want to be dependent. They're people who just want a chance, a chance of getting a job, nice, decent people who want to look after their families. They want to look after their parents, their kids, seniors.

I believe Scarborough is on the brink of a tremendous change for the better. We're returning to the days when a young person could show up in a suit at an office or with workboots at a factory or construction site and start work the same day. Isn't it nice to hear the words, "I've got a job."

My 16-year-old daughter just got her first job, by herself, without my help. She was so proud. She's learning a new set of life skills. It's a part-time job and it's a wonderful teacher. She got the job up the street in Scarborough.

To give you an idea of Scarborough's turnaround, there were $200 million in building permits issued in 1992 in the middle of the NDP regime. In 1997, there will be at least $450 million in permits issued. At Warden and Eglinton, the Golden Mile, there is vacant land from demolished buildings, and that's where the massive redevelopment is occurring. The first phase of a new Canadian Tire store has been approved, with a size of 100,000 square feet.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Nepean. The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr Jim Brown: Knob Hill Farms on the north side of Eglinton has applied for retail rezoning. That's tens of thousands of square feet. The first phase of redevelopment on the Sears warehouse building on Warden is 200,000 square feet, and there will be a large retail establishment employing hundreds. The second phase will double that size. The Volkswagen building at Eglinton and Warden is the new home of the community care access centre. In addition to that, planned around it, is an additional 340,000 square feet of new stores and commercial places. This area is the largest development project in Toronto. Total construction costs will exceed $150 million. There will be 3,000 man-years of construction work created and thousands of full-time and part-time jobs.

1710

There is more good news, lots of good news in my riding. Eli Lilly pharmaceuticals has just completed a $60-million research and development centre and hired dozens of PhDs and scientists at its Birchmount and Danforth location. Canadian Thermos has undergone an expansion in hiring. They make lunch boxes, the ultimate test of, "Are there more jobs?" People need lunch boxes, and their sales are booming.

Brenda Librecz, the executive director of economic development for Scarborough, has informed me that Scarborough is such a boom that she can't find an industrial building for rent over 50,000 square feet. She further stated that in 1992 there was a 17% vacancy rate in industrial buildings, and now it's only 6% and it's tougher to find industrial space to lease.

Right now Scarborough has 85% of the available green space in Metro Toronto. Green space is space suitable to build on. Developers want the space for job-creating industries, but home builders want it for residential. They're bidding for land that nobody wanted three years ago.

The Eglinton Square mall is undergoing a massive renovation. The mall is getting an exterior facelift and the interior is being reconfigured: 300,000 square feet of retail space is involved and spending is at least $25 million.

We're building a new firehall, replacing the original Scarborough firehall number one. We've spent money on Scarborough Arena Gardens and the retrofit makes it look like a brand new arena. The Birchmount pool is a great addition to the Birchmount community centre. The pool celebrated its first anniversary this past summer.

The Sisters of St Joseph operate Providence Centre. I call Providence Centre the compassion centre of the universe. Providence has a $40-million expansion plan that will allow them to further help seniors, Alzheimers and the disabled. The Sisters are also building second-storey, single-family homes on the south side of St Clair opposite Providence Centre. This $20-million construction program will provide lots of jobs. On the north side, the Sisters plan to build more single-family units and seniors' apartments. More investment.

Economic growth, vision and the future have replaced the depression. My old school, W.A. Porter, has become a high-tech school with fibre optic linkages and a vast array of computers and software. The private sector donated the computer hardware and high-tech facilities, which make Porter one of the best high-technology schools in North America.

Near the northern border of my riding, a $60-million, first-phase retail centre is being built at Kennedy and 401. There are 500 construction jobs and more permanent jobs that are going to come on line.

At Birchmount and Ellesmere, the old Honeywell site that sat vacant for years will now have 1,000 homes on its 30-acre site. This means more construction jobs and more consumers for the planned retail expansion.

We promised to turn the economy around. We promised to cut taxes. We promised to eliminate the deficit. We promised jobs, jobs and more jobs. In Scarborough West, we're delivering. We're delivering jobs and more jobs.

We are back building Ontario. We are building Ontario the way it used to be, only better. The Golden Mile of the 1950s is coming back with a vengeance. It's coming back bigger, better, stronger and grander.

I can remember three years ago when power of sale signs were all over my riding. Empty stores and factories were interspersed with buildings being torn down, graffiti and refuse, and that's been replaced by positive economic activity and jobs. The new Golden Mile project will rejuvenate Scarborough and produce thousands of jobs. I think we've only just begun.

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener): I was very amused when I was listening this afternoon to the speeches from the two new members, as well as a question from the Leader of the Opposition, Mr McGuinty. I hear daily and in reading Hansard I refer to different individual speeches in debate, and I see that the opposition members commonly lead off their debate or their questions with, "This government is moving too fast," or "This government is moving too far, too fast" or "with reckless abandon," or that "this government doesn't care." Nothing could be further from the truth. We do care. We care very, very deeply for the generation that is coming along. If we are moving too fast, maybe the opposition members would like to explain how they planned to eliminate the deficit, to balance the budget in four years compared to our government doing it in five years.

There is something else that the members of the opposition party never explained. They never explained that they were going to keep health care spending at $17 billion a year. I have sat on finance and estimates committees now for two and a half years, and I have asked continually in those committees how the opposition party, if it had formed the government, would have maintained health care spending at $17 billion. They never explain that to us. They never explain that we are spending $17.8 billion a year on program spending alone and they would have kept it at $17 billion, and they never explain how they would have done it. They say we're closing hospitals. What would they have done?

Let's talk about health care spending. We know that some of the things we've done are painful; short-term, they have to be. However, we have done some reinvestment. For instance, we have established a rural and northern health care framework which ensures 24-hour access to emergency services, a $70-per-hour sessional fee for physicians who cover emergency rooms in rural and northern Ontario, $14 million for growth funding in northern hospitals, $6.7 million for northern community contracts for physicians, $4.4 million to equip ambulances with defibrillators and symptom relief for patients, and an additional $45.5 million to recruit physicians to underserviced areas.

The Ontario drug benefit program has been significantly improved recently. We have added 465 new drugs to the drug formulary. The Ontario drug benefit program now covers over 2,700 quality-assured prescription drug products for those over 65 years of age. The Trillium drug plan has been expanded to include 140,000 low-wage earners who were previously excluded from the plan — excluded by the former government, a government that claimed to care so much about the poor.

The Minister of Health and the Honourable Cam Jackson, the minister responsible for seniors, have both worked hard and have established a $100-million reinvestment in long-term care facilities, which will have the side-effect, by the way, of creating 2,250 jobs, with 1,750 in the nursing and personal care fields.

We have also expanded our in-home nursing care program; 80,000 seniors and disabled will be able to continue to live in their homes. I recently had a seniors seminar, and that is the one thing that the seniors said, loud and clear. They don't want to spend time in health care facilities; they want to spend their time in their homes.

1720

The minister has increased spending in other major areas. We've expanded cardiac care to reduce waiting time. Some 325,000 women will have access to breast cancer screening. A cancer care agency has been established to coordinate cancer treatment throughout the province. Additional investments have been made in areas such as transplantation and the neurosciences. The number of kidney dialysis machines has been increased. Immunization programs for seniors and school children have been expanded. With our new healthy babies program, healthy children will receive annual funding of $10 million.

We have made all kinds of good changes to health care. That was necessary, but we couldn't just increase spending. The Liberal Party knew that, because during the campaign they said they were going to keep health care spending at $17 billion, and in spite of repeated questioning, they haven't explained how.

I want to emphasize that the Liberals never, ever admit that they would have had to take some tough measures to balance the budget in four years. They say, "Oh, we wouldn't have reduced taxes." All right, let's look at what has happened in Japan just recently. There have been three factors which have contributed to a sharp fall in GDP in Japan. One of the three factors was an increase in personal taxes. Isn't that amazing? In Japan they increased taxes and they saw a reduction in personal consumption.

We're not surprised at that. When we came into power, we decided that one of the key things we had to do was to reduce personal income taxes in order to increase consumption. We did so, and what has happened? We see retail sales up in every category: automobiles, housing, retail sales in large consumer items and in small consumer items. The housing market has rebounded from a period of stagnation to a period of boom. Not too long ago, in the last couple of weeks, I was talking to a contractor in my Kitchener riding who told me that this boom we are now going through is the biggest boom in 40 years, outside of the one in the 1980s. Well, that's not too bad.

Why is that happening? It's happening because there has been a tremendous increase in jobs. The member for Scarborough West, my colleague, just said a few moments ago that we have had an increase of over 225,000 jobs. That is a net increase of 225,000 jobs. That is good news, but of course the opposition parties never want to focus on that. They want to focus on those small items that don't mean too much.

We know that one of the areas in which we have to do better — and of course this is also recognized by the federal government — is youth unemployment. That will follow along. We are interested in the youth. We are interested in the young generation. It used to be called generation X, the lost generation. That is one of the reasons we are revamping the education system. One of the areas of education that must be addressed is technical training.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-Walkerville): I always enjoy listening to my colleague from Scarborough and by colleague from Kitchener, who present thoughtfully the government's position on a range of issues and a range of current topics, and we are dealing with supply today. Let me say to the members of the government that there is no question that the North American, the Canadian, indeed the western industrial economies have been expanding. We have been expanding in a non-inflationary environment and there is no question that those expansions have benefited average people.

Where we draw the line, where we say that we disagree with you, is on what is the cause and what is the effect. Government members would have you believe that the tax cut is responsible for the growth in demand, the growth in consumption for a variety of products, which have in turn increased employment.

We say that's nuts. We say you're wrong. We say you should have focused on deficit reduction, taken the $5 billion in tax cuts. You know what? You could balance the budget next year. You could be in a balanced budget next year. What does that mean? That means that one of the largest borrowers in this country, one of the largest non-state borrowers in the world, would be out of the debt market. What does that mean? That means reduced demand for money. What does that mean? It means lower interest rates, still lower interest rates.

Interjection: Economics 101.

Mr Duncan: That's Economics 101, exactly right.

Let's talk about tax cuts. Let's get to a balanced budget, and let's deal with meaningful tax cuts. Let's look at property taxes. You have raised them in every community in this province. Let's look at our hospitals. Maybe instead of $5 billion in income tax cuts we could have invested $1 billion or $2 billion into meaningful health care reform. Your plan hasn't worked. A year and a half from now you'll find out it hasn't worked and we'll restore a sense of prosperity and dignity to our provincial economy.

Mr Cullen: Dealing with the comments that have been raised about the income tax cut is very germane because we are dealing with a motion of interim supply and it is dealing with the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars. One has to simply remind the government of the most previous Ontario-wide election, which happened this past June. This past June we had two parties that presented to the people in Ontario the exact, same policy this government has put forward, and that is an income tax cut. What did the people in Ontario do? They very wisely said no. To the parties that ran they expressed their views through their ballot and they chose a government that promised to reinvest the fiscal dividend into providing services and reducing debt.

If this government across the way would do the same thing, then I could tell you —

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): Come on.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Nepean.

Mr Cullen: At the door I found people saying: "Why don't they put their fiscal house in order and make sure we have adequate health care, adequate schools, adequate education? With the money we have, these are the priorities we have. Don't give me back the $16 or $20. I'll just" — I'll try to find a polite word for it. It would just evaporate.

In other words, there is a message to be made here: Put your fiscal house in order, then think in terms of income tax cuts, but don't do that beforehand, because the people in Ontario are not silly. They can see through all these cuts, all this downloading. They do not accept closing hospitals, closing schools, paying more in property tax and paying more in user fees to accommodate an income tax cut they don't want. June 25, when they had the federal election here, across Canada and in Ontario the message was very explicit: "Don't cut income taxes."

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions or comments? Further debate?

Mr Bisson: I have to acknowledge it took a little bit of —

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): Is this your maiden speech?

Mr Bisson: It's not my maiden speech and it won't be my last one. Let me guarantee you that.

Interjections.

Mr Bisson: "Aw," they said. That's so touching.

I want first of all to thank the government members for cooperating with us today to make sure we all have equal access to being able to respond to this interim supply motion. Normally there might be a number of questions and comments, but we tried to split up the time so that all parties get the same amount of time to respond to this particular motion.

When it comes to interim supply, the government is basically asking for, by way of this motion, the money to be able to pay the bills of Ontario for the next three months, I believe it is. Is it three or six months? Three; yes. If we were not to pass this motion, the government in effect would not be able to pay the bill. I can tell you, as a member of a former government, that we passed regular motions like this, as they are the regular business this House does. It's the process under our British parliamentary system that makes sure there is some public accountability when it comes to when and how governments are able to spend their money.

1730

What is particularly the point right now is that this government is undertaking a lot of initiatives that I guess we could say a lot of people in this province are having a certain amount of difficulty agreeing with or even comprehending. We know that the Mike Harris government was elected on the basis of what they call the Common Sense Revolution. People were clear that when this government got elected they were going to do a number of things; they were going to slash spending, they were going to balance the budget, and they were going to do a whole bunch of things to get there, but people really didn't know what those things were. As this government moves forward in the time it has here in the Legislature, we're starting to find out more and more exactly how the government is going about trying to balance the budget over a period of four or five years.

The first thing I want to say is that I believe that at the end of this government's term they will not have balanced the budget. I want to put that on the record. I believe, because of what I see in the numbers and because of the approach the government is taking, that they're making it appear that they're going to be able to meet their fiscal targets, but I think in the longer run they are going to have extreme difficulty in getting there. If the economy were to turn in the opposite direction from where it has been going since 1993 — since 1993 there has been an upturn not only in the Ontario economy but the Canadian and American economies — this government will go to the polls with a huge deficit which they're going to have a hard time explaining to the people of Ontario.

Let me explain where I'm coming from. This goes against the holy of holies, because I think most people in Ontario believe this government is going to be able to meet its target. I'm not talking about people who understand the numbers, I'm not talking about the people at finance or the people in banking or in the business community or the union community; I'm talking about the average person at home. Because of the rhetoric they listen to from this government, they say, "Oh, yes, they're going to balance the budget," but I really don't think they're going to get there.

Let me tell you why. Many of the decisions this government is taking when it comes to saving dollars I believe have very little to do with saving dollars. I think a lot of the policies and initiatives this government is undertaking have more to do with how you reshape government to make it fit more closely the government's ideology. That ideology, quite simply, is that government is bad, that we should get rid of government because that would be a good thing, and that public services to a large degree should be paid for by individuals on an on-need basis, in other words, having user fees or going to the private sector to get your services.

This government can talk a good line that it's protecting health care, protecting education and some of those key programs that we rely on in this province, but I believe very deeply that in reality the change this government is undertaking in the end is going to undermine the whole principle those systems have been based on; that is, that they are public programs paid for by the taxpayers of the province — that's you and me, Speaker — and that they be publicly funded and that public policy be driven by the government.

I believe this government, in health care and education, is opening very large doors to the private sector. The government will stand and say: "That's not a bad thing. We think the private sector has a role." Maybe in some very small circumstances they do, but by and large, our health care and education systems should be almost exclusively delivered by the public sector. The moment you open the door and allow the private sector to compete in the area of medicine or education, it is a slippery slope to the lowest common denominator, and that will be in the long run, once fully implemented, that those who have the bucks will get those services and those who don't have the bucks will get something less. What you'll end up with in education and health care are two-tier systems. If you've got the dollars, you can go out to the private sector and purchase the Cadillac of services, but if you're like most of us, middle-income Canadians, people who work for a living and make $40,000, $50,000, $60,000 a year, it's going to be very much more difficult.

I think we're seeing signs of this today. I know, as most members of the assembly know, because sometimes they're in the same circumstance, that families in Ontario — and not only under the term of this government — as do families across the country, have been finding it more and more difficult to make ends meet. Over the past years it has become almost a necessity that both the man and the wife work at full-time jobs to be able to try to live in our society and have the extra dollars to go out and get a half-decent lifestyle for their family.

That in itself is not bad, but the troubling part is it's becoming more and more expensive and more and more difficult for them to keep up with the Joneses. It's becoming more difficult to be able to say: "I want to buy my own house. I want to buy a car. We would like to take a holiday once every 10 years. We would like to buy new clothes for our kids. We would like to one day pay for an education for our children."

All of those things are becoming more and more difficult, and one of the reasons that is so is partly that there has been a large amount of unemployment that I say has been directly created in our economy in order to create a downward pressure on inflation. Large corporations and others don't like having no surplus labour in the marketplace, because that drives inflation. If there are few workers out there competing for jobs and there's very low unemployment, it means workers can go to their employers and demand a higher wage and thus increase the pressure on inflation.

I believe that governments, especially the multinational sector of companies — I'm not talking mom and pop's corner store — have put a huge amount of pressure in order to be able to downsize and create unemployment, so there are a lot of people unemployed. If you have a lot of people unemployed, it creates unemployment, which in turn takes away the demand on wage increases, which reduces inflation. I believe that's by design.

The other thing I want to say on that is that this government by its policies is helping to make that happen and helping to make the kinds of changes that will support that kind of economy, an economy where if you've got dollars, you'll do very well, and if you don't have dollars, you don't do very well.

Let's just look, for example, at the health care sector, what's happened over the past months to a year. The Minister of Health almost weekly stands in this House in answer to questions and says, "We have not cut a single cent out of health care." The Minister of Health and the Premier say they haven't cut a cent out of health care and there's been no reduction in services anywhere else across the province.

Interjection: That's not true.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. This is not true. We are seeing hospitals, not beds, close down across this province, we are seeing hospital programs gutted, we are seeing health units and district health councils lose funding at increasingly alarming rates, and we're seeing the individual programs supported by all of those organizations go by the wayside.

Let's take a look at what's happening in northeastern Ontario. It used to be in the good old days, a couple of years ago, quite frankly, up until about 1995, that if you needed bypass surgery in northeastern Ontario, depending on your severity — because it was a weighted waiting list; the more severe your condition, the quicker you got in — for the average person who had a blockage of somewhere around 85% to 90%, they would be able to get into Sudbury Memorial Hospital through the cardiac care system at probably a waiting list of around 30 to 60 days. There were extreme cases where it went longer because there has always been an upwards and downwards need for cardiac care and at times it might have gone as long as three months. But under previous Conservative governments, under previous Liberal and NDP governments, the government of the day made sure the cardiac care system was properly funded so that people did not have to wait longer than they should.

I can tell you that in my constituency office — and I'm not making this stuff up — I have, more and more so every day, people coming in requesting my assistance to get them cardiac surgery. They're having to wait upwards of nine and 10 months to get in for cardiac bypass surgery in the event that they're blocked at 85% to 90%. And this government stands and says there's nothing wrong: "We haven't cut health care; there's no problem."

The same could be said about a number of other services delivered in the health care sector. We're seeing, for example, in our communities across northern Ontario — now, the government announced a few months ago that they were going to cut the provincial funding to the northern regional genetics program. Because myself and the health units and others worked together to raise the profile of this issue, the government figured, "Small potatoes in the big scheme of things," and they saved that particular program, probably about $500,000.

But in the case of other programs, like the speech pathology program for under-six-year-olds in northern Ontario for healthy kids, there no longer is going to be any public funding come January 1, 1998, depending if we can take the minister's word today when she said she would talk to the Minister of Health and put that funding in place and make sure it stays in place. What it means for us in the north is that if you're the parent of a child who needs speech pathology services and that child is under the age of six and is healthy, you will have to pay out of your pocket if the government doesn't come through on the commitment they gave me today.

1740

The same could be said about the northern dental clinics, where the dental clinic provides services to communities that don't have dental clinics and don't have dentists residing in them. For example, my good friend Len Wood from Cochrane North would know well that Moosonee has no dentist. The only way kids who are of school age can get into a dentist's office is by way of the northern dental program, the clinics that are sponsored by the Porcupine health unit. They travel up there six or seven times a year, they book appointments ahead of time, and the kids living in that community have an opportunity to see a dentist to get their cavities filled, to get their teeth cleaned, as we do, for checkups, or to have an extraction.

Come January 1, 1998, if the government doesn't reverse its position, those kids are going to go without any dental services, because the local market is not such as to be able to support a dentist in that community, and attracting a dentist to Moosonee is very difficult. It's a small community; it's fairly isolated. It's a wonderful place, but it's not the place that's foremost on people's minds to get there.

The point I'm getting at is that government has a responsibility to say, "We will ensure that access to services for Ontarians across this province is somewhat similar." Government puts in place programs to make that happen. But this government is taking those away. What they're doing over the longer term is creating a situation where, more and more so, individuals will have to pay out of their pockets to get the services we used to take for granted.

I know the Conservative members, on being elected to this place — not all of them, but some of them — believed that would not be so. They thought the government would be able to trim fat and do all kinds of deep, mystical things when it came to the provincial budget and they would be able to balance it without hurting people. But the reality is, you cannot take $10 billion of spending out of the Ontario budget without people getting hurt and cutting out entire services. That's what this government is doing.

The point I'm making here is that the government says it's going in the right direction and doing all this stuff because it will be better. My argument is that it would be much better if the government really thought about what it needed to do and did the kinds of changes that have to be done to reduce expenditures over the longer period of time, but with the basic understanding that the bottom line is that the taxpayers of Ontario and the citizens of this province have access to services in a somewhat equal way and we can ensure those particular services are in place.

I also listened with some interest a little while ago when the Liberal caucus had their opportunity to debate this motion. They talked about how the government is going in the right direction, but they are going a little bit too fast and too far. I've got to tell you, I disagree with that wholeheartedly. I do not believe this government is going a little bit too far and a little bit too fast; I believe this government and about 80% of what it's doing is going totally in the wrong direction.

The Liberals would have us believe, "Elect us and we'll do the same things as Mike Harris, but we won't go as fast and we won't go as far; we're going to be somehow better." I'm sorry. I have a philosophical difference with the position the Liberal caucus takes. I believe — and I'll get to the Liberals in a second — that this government is going in the wrong direction when it comes to health care, when it comes to education, when it comes to the municipal downloading.

The Liberals are trying to make us believe in some way that: "Elect us and we're going to do this kind of stuff. It's kind of good, but we're not going to go too far, too fast." I'm sorry, but it is in the wrong direction entirely. What we need to ask ourselves is, what is the Ontario in the future that we want to —

Mr Cullen: Shoot at the Tories.

Mr Bisson: The Liberal member is saying, "Shoot at the Tories." Shoot at the Tories, yes, but you guys agree with a lot of what the Tories are doing. I know that's not the position of your entire caucus. I know in the Liberal caucus there are some right-wingers and some left-wingers, and sometimes they clash, but the reality is that there are people in your caucus, including your leader, who think this government is going in the right direction. As I listened to Dalton McGuinty's speeches as he ran for the Liberal leadership, there were an awful lot of speeches that you could have plunked into the hands of Mike Harris and had him read, and you wouldn't have known the difference, because on the major issues that the Harris government is moving on, Dalton McGuinty agrees.

Mr Peter L. Preston (Brant-Haldimand): The red book is from their party.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. You could almost have taken the red book —

Mr Preston: The red book was a carbon paper.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. I was a candidate in the last election, as everybody else here was. I remember quite specifically that the Tories ran on the platform of the Common Sense Revolution. The Liberals had a red book that had a whole bunch more promises in it, but the bottom line is that it was the same thing that you guys want to do. When it came to welfare, what did they call it? Mandatory work opportunities was what they called it. It's the same stuff. They wanted to cut welfare recipients' benefits by 21%.

When it came to a host of situations around the Workers' Compensation Board, the Liberals of the day wanted to cut the workers' compensation benefits, wanted to reduce a whole bunch of things that this government is now doing.

I'm saying, voter beware. There are differences of opinion about how we should proceed in this province. I think that's fair. In the end, the people make that determination when they go to the polls.

I see that the Speaker would like to have the floor, so —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): The force? I don't know about the force.

Pursuant to standing order 65, I am now required to put the question.

Mr Eves has moved government notice of motion number 38. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

I declare the motion carried.

DEVELOPMENT CHARGES ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR LES REDEVANCES D'AMÉNAGEMENT

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for third reading of Bill 98, An Act to promote job creation and increased municipal accountability while providing for the recovery of development costs related to new growth / Projet de loi 98, Loi visant à promouvoir la création d'emplois et à accroître la responsabilité des municipalités tout en prévoyant le recouvrement des coûts d'aménagement liés à la croissance.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): The member for St Catharines had the floor.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Yes, you're right. They just called Bill 98, I hear, and I'm quite willing to continue my speech on Bill 98.

As I was saying when I was interrupted, the one thing that will happen is that they will have to build more halls in Ontario, and larger halls — so there will be a building boom as a result — to hold all those Conservative fund-raisers, because the people who are most pleased with this particular piece of legislation are the developers who are giving money hand over fist to the Conservative Party. I am told, and my friend from Carleton will confirm this, I'm sure, that the last fund-raiser they held in Ottawa brought in the largest amount of money ever for any fund-raiser in Ottawa.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: The member for Etobicoke-Humber says it was even higher than that. It's all the people who are good friends of the government: the developers, the people who want to end rent control. That's not the senior citizens I talk to. That's not the people of modest income who are struggling to make ends meet. What we're talking about there, I assure you, are people of modest income, and they don't want to see an end to rent controls.

But this Bill 98 is a package that goes along with the end of rent controls. I think there are a lot of people out there today who still don't know that this government is trying to end rent controls in this province, that the legislation will in fact end rent control. I am concerned that they don't know that and I'm going to help them know that.

To all who are watching today, all those seniors who have said, "We thought Mike Harris had perhaps a good plan for Ontario but we're a bit worried, so tell us more about rent control," I have to say, let me tell you what Mike's doing for you. He's going to make you stay in your present abode, and the way he's going to make you do that is that if you move out, way up goes the rent, and when you go into a new building, you're facing new rent and higher rent. That's most unfortunate, but it fits right into the pattern of this government.

If you are rich, if you are privileged, if you don't have a social conscience, you should vote for Mike Harris and this government. But if you are not, if you are none of those categories, I certainly recommend that you don't vote for Mike Harris, that you look for a more moderate and reasonable and progressive party, such as the Liberal Party.

1750

The Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I was here the other day, and I listened to the speech by the member for St Catharines but I want to comment on what you said late last week, and that is, this government quite frankly, on this particular bill, is taking a most interesting position. They started off with this bill by saying that no municipality in Ontario should pass any development charges back on to the developer. In other words, if you were a developer and you wanted to go out and build a subdivision project, the municipality would not have the ability to pass on what are called soft services by way of development charges.

Mr Bradley: They probably heard from Hazel.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. I'm getting to this point. We at the time, the NDP caucus and the Liberal caucus, said no, that's wrong. The developer has, to a certain extent, to be responsible for the cost of soft services, because if a developer builds, let's say, 50 or 500 new houses in a subdivision, it's logical to assume that the people living in those houses will use those soft services, such as libraries, recreational centres, day care centres or whatever it might be. To just try to slough that on to all the other taxpayers really is a disservice to the taxpayer and is basically a gift to the developer where the developer ends up pocketing more money.

We put that argument to you last fall and this spring, and the mayors of the communities across Ontario put that to you as well. Hazel McCallion, as the member for St Catharines pointed out, lobbied your government and said: "You can't do that. You can't intrude on municipal government in the way you are when it comes to our ability to determine how we're going to pay for services, especially in light of your download." The government said, "Okay, Hazel, that's fine, we hear you." Now the government is saying, "We're not going to eliminate the ability to do it altogether, but the developer has to pay at least 10%."

Why are we debating this bill? You were wrong in the first place. You should have withdrawn the bill and just left things the way they were. I think, quite frankly, this bill is a waste of —

The Speaker: Thank you. Questions or comments?

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): I am pleased to respond to the member for St Catharines, the one and only voice for the Liberal Party in this chamber. It's always a pleasure to hear from Mr Bradley, and on the assumption he speaks for his party, we're more than happy to comment.

Let's get back to the nub of what this bill is all about. This bill is about ensuring that when a developer wants to create new housing or a new office building or school, the improvement in that community, any costs of the hard services, are borne by that new user. What is not appropriate, though, would be the creation of an art gallery, an ice skating rink or a new city hall, suggesting that the occupants of the new development should be the sole contributors to the funding of that other common community facility. Therefore, this bill makes sure that the municipality still has a 10% role in funding those other common elements such as an art gallery.

The bottom line is nobody disagrees with the thought that if there is an increase in costs to the community because the sewer line has to be extended, the road extended, the sidewalks, those costs should be borne by the developer, but for all those other things, it is totally inappropriate to put them on the backs of the people who are trying to create investments, trying to create jobs for the construction industry, trying to help us rebuild the great province of Ontario.

The member opposite also typified this bill and suggested that the government wasn't listening and somehow the process was flawed. I suggest to him exactly the opposite. We listened to the various stakeholders, including the municipalities and the development industry. As a result of that, we brought forward a myriad of amendments to the bill, and the bill that's now before us represents an amalgam of all those ideas, walking the best path we can down the middle, and this bill genuinely will serve its goal of greater investment.

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I want to commend the member for St Catharines on his thoughtful and sensible approach to this bill. I want to say, though, with regard to development charges, this is just one more attack on local government. Local government used to be able to make those decisions about what was appropriate for a developer to pay and what might not be appropriate in their own community. It didn't need Big Brother to make those decisions. This is another example of the Harris Tories in the face of people of Ontario, in the face of local government.

I represent a constituency in northern Ontario that would love to be able to impose development charges. You would need development to do that. In our part of the world this is not a big issue; we wish it were. But this particular bill is symptomatic of the bullying and the harassment of local councils, local mayors, local reeves, where you tell them how things are going to be.

I was in Killarney on Saturday, and they're concerned that you're going to close the local school. St Joe's may be closed. There's a good group of people — the acronym is KEEP — who are trying to get together an environmental and ecological study group of the outdoors, and this school, almost adjacent to Killarney Provincial Park, would make it work.

I don't think the people of Killarney are terribly interested in development charges, but they are interested in the downloading of services that's happening in that community. In the little town of Killarney they pay $80,000 to the separate school board in Sudbury — $80,000. Part of that they won't have to pay any more under the government's downloading. Do you know what they are going to have to pay in Killarney for police services alone, just for police services? Forget all that other stuff, just for police service: $80,000. So it is a net loss.

On top of that, you're now proposing district boards, a second tier of government, because the local people, according to Mike Harris, don't know what they're doing.

Mr Floyd Laughren (Nickel Belt): I'm trying to follow the government's intentions on development charges. I've tried to follow it right from the beginning, and I appreciate the fact that the member for St Catharines has helped me through this process. May I say as well that when I saw the member for St Catharines walk in the chamber here about 10 minutes ago — he was doing other work, of course — I thought: "Thank God. The member for St Catharines is going to get an opportunity to speak today."

Mr Gilchrist: Such a rare occurrence. We were truly blessed.

Mr Laughren: It's a rare occurrence; however, it's a treat when the member for St Catharines speaks. I notice that now that I'm in opposition too. He was no treat when we were in government when he spoke. It means, really, that Mr Bradley from St Catharines has done a flip-flop himself. He used to be really nasty and now he's very good and very effective in criticizing this government, but he wasn't always like that, I want to assure you.

I want to commend the member for St Catharines for his remarkable speech here this afternoon on development charges. I can tell you, the Liberal Party has a reputation for flip-flopping, but — and I hasten to add but — I want to know what this government did on development charges. Tell me if I'm wrong. Didn't they start out by saying that development charges would be allowed but not on any soft services? Isn't that what they said?

Ms Marilyn Churley (Riverdale): Yes, that's what they said.

Mr Laughren: Isn't that what they said?

Interjection: We used common sense.

Mr Laughren: No, you didn't use common sense. You used Hazel McCallion intimidation. That's what made you change your mind. You were scared out of your wits of Hazel McCallion. She terrified you, didn't she? She never terrified the member for St Catharines, though. The member for St Catharines knew how to deal with Hazel McCallion, I know that. I'm very pleased that the member for St Catharines made his points.

The Speaker: Response, member for St Catharines.

Mr Bradley: I want to thank all members for their kind contribution. Some I agree with more than others. I think we have to understand that when there is new development taking place, there are cultural services required in a community. There are libraries. There are recreation centres for senior citizens that we wouldn't want to deny them. There are skating rinks. There are soccer fields. There are new pressures for these kinds of services when there's new development taking place. If we could be convinced, for instance, that all the money that would be saved by not charging this development charge went back into the pocket of the purchaser, some people might say that would be acceptable, but we all know it's going back in the pocket of the developer. Some of it will make its way into the Tory coffers, because they're going to have the fund-raisers, but most of it is going to go into the developer's pocket.

I'm glad the member for Algoma-Manitoulin brought up the situation at St Joe's in Killarney. I didn't get a chance in my remarks to do so. I understand the other concerns they have about the police services, for instance, and those costs that are associated with that.

My friend from Nickel Belt was very kind. He and I have certainly been more in sync since we've been in opposition than we were when he was sitting on the other side of the House, and that is certainly natural.

The member for Cochrane South was saying a while ago, inadvertently I'm sure, that he thought the Liberal Party agreed with the Conservatives. What Liberal members have been saying is that even those people who agree with the Conservative Party — not us, not those in the Liberal Party, but the people out there we talk to — believe they're moving too quickly, too drastically and not looking at the consequences of their actions. The consequences of these actions will be dire for communities across the province.

The Speaker: It now being 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 6:30 of the clock this evening.

The House adjourned at 1801.

Evening sitting reported in volume B.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO
ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lieutenant Governor / Lieutenante-gouverneure: Hon / L'hon Hilary M. Weston
Speaker / Président: Hon / L'hon Chris Stockwell
Clerk / Greffier: Claude L. DesRosiers
Clerk Assistant / Greffière adjointe: Deborah Deller
Clerks at the Table / Greffiers parlementaires: Todd Decker, Lisa Freedman
Sergeant-at-Arms / Sergent d'armes: Dennis Clark

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Algoma	Wildman, Bud (ND)
Algoma-Manitoulin	Brown, Michael A. (L)
Beaches-Woodbine	Lankin, Frances (ND)
Brampton North / -Nord	Spina, Joseph (PC)
Brampton South / -Sud	Clement, Tony (PC)
Brant-Haldimand	Preston, Peter L. (PC)
Brantford	Johnson, Ron (PC)
Bruce	Fisher, Barbara (PC)
Burlington South / -Sud	Jackson, Hon / L'hon Cameron (PC) Minister without Portfolio (seniors issues) / ministre sans portefeuille (affaires des pernonnes âgées)
Cambridge	Martiniuk, Gerry (PC)
Carleton	Sterling, Hon / L'hon Norman W. (PC) Minister of Environment and Energy / ministre de l'Environnement et de l'Énergie
Carleton East / -Est	Morin, Gilles E. (L)
Chatham-Kent	Carroll, Jack (PC)
Cochrane North / -Nord	Wood, Len (ND)
Cochrane South / -Sud	Bisson, Gilles (ND)
Cornwall	Cleary, John C. (L)
Don Mills	Johnson, Hon / L'hon David (PC) Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, government House leader / président du Conseil de gestion, leader parlementaire du gouvernement
Dovercourt	Silipo, Tony (ND)
Downsview	Castrilli, Annamarie (L)
Dufferin-Peel	Tilson, David (PC)
Durham Centre / -Centre	Flaherty, Jim (PC)
Durham East / -Est	O'Toole, John R. (PC)
Durham West / -Ouest	Ecker, Hon / L'hon Janet (PC) Minister of Community and Social Services / ministre des Services sociaux et communautaires
Durham-York	Munro, Julia (PC)
Eglinton	Saunderson, Hon / L'hon William (PC) Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism / ministre du Développement économique, du Commerce et du Tourisme
Elgin	North, Peter (Ind)
Essex-Kent	Hoy, Pat (L)
Essex South / -Sud	Crozier, Bruce (L)
Etobicoke-Humber	Ford, Douglas B. (PC)
Etobicoke-Lakeshore	Kells, Morley (PC)
Etobicoke-Rexdale	Hastings, John (PC)
Etobicoke West / -Ouest	Stockwell, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Speaker / président
Fort William	McLeod, Lyn (L)
Fort York	Marchese, Rosario (ND)
Frontenac-Addington	Vankoughnet, Bill (PC)
Grey-Owen Sound	Murdoch, Bill (PC)
Guelph	Elliott, Brenda (PC)
Halton Centre / -Centre	Young, Terence H. (PC)
Halton North / -Nord	Chudleigh, Ted (PC)
Hamilton Centre / -Centre	Christopherson, David (ND)
Hamilton East / -Est	Agostino, Dominic (L)
Hamilton Mountain	Pettit, Trevor (PC)
Hamilton West / -Ouest	Ross, Lillian (PC)
Hastings-Peterborough	Danford, Harry (PC)
High Park-Swansea	Shea, Derwyn (PC)
Huron	Johns, Helen (PC)
Kenora	Miclash, Frank (L)
Kingston and The Islands / Kingston et Les Îles	Gerretsen, John (L)
Kitchener	Wettlaufer, Wayne (PC)
Kitchener-Wilmot	Leadston, Gary L. (PC)
Lake Nipigon / Lac-Nipigon	Pouliot, Gilles (ND)
Lambton	Beaubien, Marcel (PC)
Lanark-Renfrew	Jordan, W. Leo (PC)
Lawrence	Cordiano, Joseph (L)
Leeds-Grenville	Runciman, Hon / L'hon Robert W. (PC) Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services / solliciteur général et ministre des Services correctionnels
Lincoln	Sheehan, Frank (PC)
London Centre / -Centre	Boyd, Marion (ND)
London North / -Nord	Cunningham, Hon / L'hon Dianne (PC) Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, minister responsible for women's issues / ministre des Affaires intergouvernementales, ministre déléguée à la Condition féminine
London South / -Sud	Wood, Bob (PC)
Markham	Tsubouchi, Hon / L'hon David H. (PC) Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce
Middlesex	Smith, Bruce (PC)
Mississauga East / -Est	DeFaria, Carl (PC)
Mississauga North / -Nord	Snobelen, Hon / L'hon John (PC) Minister of Education and Training / ministère de l'Éducation et de la Formation
Mississauga South / -Sud	Marland, Margaret (PC)
Mississauga West / -Ouest	Sampson, Hon / L'hon Rob (PC) Minister without Portfolio (privatization) / ministre sans portefeuille (privatisation)
Muskoka-Georgian Bay / Muskoka-Baie-Georgienne	Grimmett, Bill (PC)
Nepean	Baird, John R. (PC)

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Niagara Falls	Maves, Bart (PC)
Niagara South / -Sud	Hudak, Tim (PC)
Nickel Belt	Laughren, Floyd (ND)
Nipissing	Harris, Hon / L'hon Michael D. (PC) Premier and President of the Executive Council / premier ministre et président du Conseil exécutif
Norfolk	Barrett, Toby (PC)
Northumberland	Galt, Doug (PC)
Oakville South / -Sud	Carr, Gary (PC)
Oakwood	Colle, Mike (L)
Oriole	Caplan, David
Oshawa	Ouellette, Jerry J. (PC)
Ottawa Centre / -Centre	Patten, Richard (L)
Ottawa East / -Est	Grandmaître, Bernard (L)
Ottawa-Rideau	Guzzo, Garry J. (PC)
Ottawa South / -Sud	McGuinty, Dalton (L) Leader of the Opposition / chef de l'opposition
Ottawa West / -Ouest	Cullen, Alex
Oxford	Hardeman, Ernie (PC)
Parkdale	Ruprecht, Tony (L)
Parry Sound	Eves, Hon / L'hon Ernie L. (PC) Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance / vice-premier ministre, ministre des Finances
Perth	Johnson, Bert (PC)
Peterborough	Stewart, R. Gary (PC)
Port Arthur	Gravelle, Michael (L)
Prescott and Russell / Prescott et Russell	Lalonde, Jean-Marc (L)
Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings / Prince EdwardLennox-Hastings-Sud	Fox, Gary (PC)
Quinte	Rollins, E.J. Douglas (PC)
Rainy River	Hampton, Howard (ND) Leader of the New Democratic Party / Chef du Nouveau Parti démocratique
Renfrew North / -Nord	Conway, Sean G. (L)
Riverdale	Churley, Marilyn (ND)
S-D-G & East Grenville / S-D-G et Grenville-Est	Villeneuve, Hon / L'hon Noble (PC) Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs / ministre de l'Agriculture, de l'Alimentation et des Affaires rurales, ministre délégué aux Affaires francophones
St Andrew-St Patrick	Bassett, Isabel (PC)
St Catharines	Bradley, James J. (L)
St Catharines-Brock	Froese, Tom (PC)
St George-St David	Leach, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing / ministre des Affaires municipales et du Logement
Sarnia	Boushy, Dave (PC)
Sault Ste Marie / Sault-Sainte-Marie	Martin, Tony (ND)
Scarborough-Agincourt	Phillips, Gerry (L)
Scarborough Centre / -Centre	Newman, Dan (PC)
Scarborough East / -Est	Gilchrist, Steve (PC)
Scarborough-Ellesmere	Mushinski, Hon / L'hon Marilyn (PC) Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation / ministre des Affaires civiques, de la Culture et des Loisirs
Scarborough North / -Nord	Curling, Alvin (L)
Scarborough West / -Ouest	Brown, Jim (PC)
Simcoe Centre / -Centre	Tascona, Joseph N. (PC)
Simcoe East / -Est	McLean, Allan K. (PC)
Simcoe West / -Ouest	Wilson, Hon / L'hon Jim (PC) Minister of Health / ministre de la Santé
Sudbury	Bartolucci, Rick (L)
Sudbury East / -Est	Martel, Shelley (ND)
Timiskaming	Ramsay, David (L)
Victoria-Haliburton	Hodgson, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Minister of Natural Resources, Minister of Northern Development and Mines / ministre des Richesses naturelles, ministre du Développement du Nord et des Mines
Waterloo North / -Nord	Witmer, Hon / L'hon Elizabeth (PC) Minister of Labour / ministre du Travail
Welland-Thorold	Kormos, Peter (ND)
Wellington	Arnott, Ted (PC)
Wentworth East / -Est	Doyle, Ed (PC)
Wentworth North / -Nord	Skarica, Toni (PC)
Willowdale	Harnick, Hon / L'hon Charles (PC) Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs / procureur général, ministre délégué aux Affaires autochtones
Wilson Heights	Kwinter, Monte (L)
Windsor-Riverside	Lessard, Wayne
Windsor-Sandwich	Pupatello, Sandra (L)
Windsor-Walkerville	Duncan, Dwight (L)
York Centre / -Centre	Palladini, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Transportation / ministre des Transports
York East / -Est	Parker, John L. (PC)
York Mills	Turnbull, David (PC)
York-Mackenzie	Klees, Frank (PC)
Yorkview	Sergio, Mario (L)
York South / -Sud	Kennedy, Gerard (L)

A list arranged by members' surnames and including all responsibilities of each member appears in the first and last issues of each session and on the first Monday of each month.

Une liste alphabétique des noms des députés, comprenant toutes les responsabilités de chaque député, figure dans les premier et dernier numéros de chaque session et le premier lundi de chaque mois.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY
COMITÉS PERMANENTS DE L'ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE

Administration of justice / Administration de la justice

Chair / Président: Gerry Martiniuk
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: E.J. Douglas Rollins
Dave Boushy, Bruce Crozier, Jim Flaherty,
Garry J. Guzzo, Peter Kormos, Gerry Martiniuk,
David Ramsay, E.J. Douglas Rollins, Bob Wood
Clerk / Greffier: Douglas Arnott

Estimates / Budgets des dépenses

Chair / Président: Gerard Kennedy
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Rick Bartolucci
Rick Bartolucci, Gilles Bisson, John C. Cleary,
Ed Doyle, Bill Grimmett, Helen Johns,
Gerard Kennedy, Trevor Pettit, Wayne Wettlaufer
Clerk / Greffière: Rosemarie Singh

Finance and economic affairs /
Finances et affaires économiques

Chair / Président: Terence H. Young
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Wayne Wettlaufer
Ted Arnott, Isabel Bassett, Jim Brown, Monte Kwinter,
Gerry Phillips, Gilles Pouliot, E.J. Douglas Rollins,
Wayne Wettlaufer, Terence H. Young
Clerk / Greffière: Rosemarie Singh

General government / Affaires gouvernementales

Chair / Président: David Tilson
Vice-Chair / Vice-Présidente: Julia Munro
Mike Colle, Harry Danford, Barbara Fisher,
Tom Froese, Steve Gilchrist, Rosario Marchese,
Julia Munro, Mario Sergio, David Tilson
Clerk / Greffier: Tom Prins

Government agencies / Organismes gouvernementaux

Chair / Président: Floyd Laughren
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Tony Silipo
John R. Baird, Alex Cullen, Michael Gravelle,
Bert Johnson, Floyd Laughren, Dan Newman,
Tony Silipo, Joseph Spina, R. Gary Stewart,
Clerk / Greffier: Douglas Arnott

Legislative Assembly / Assemblée législative

Chair / Président: Joseph N. Tascona
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Gary Fox
Tony Clement, Alvin Curling, Carl DeFaria, Gary Fox,
Ernie Hardeman, Gilles E. Morin, Peter North,
Lillian Ross, Tony Silipo, Joseph N. Tascona, David Tilson
Clerk / Greffier: Peter Sibenik

Ombudsman

Chair / Président: John R. O'Toole
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Trevor Pettit
Dominic Agostino, Douglas B. Ford, Allan K. McLean,
John R. O'Toole, John L. Parker, Trevor Pettit,
Sandra Pupatello, Bill Vankoughnet, Len Wood
Clerk / Greffière: Tonia Grannum

Public accounts / Comptes publics

Chair / Président: Bernard Grandmaître
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Richard Patten
Marcel Beaubien, Gary Fox, Bernard Grandmaître,
Bill Grimmett, Jean-Marc Lalonde, Shelley Martel,
Richard Patten, Peter L. Preston, Joseph N. Tascona
Clerk / Greffière: Donna Bryce

Regulations and private bills /
Règlements et projets de loi privés

Chair / Président: Toby Barrett
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Marcel Beaubien
Toby Barrett, Marcel Beaubien, David Caplan,
Ernie Hardeman, Gary L. Leadston, Tony Martin,
Tony Ruprecht, Derwyn Shea, Frank Sheehan,
Clerk / Greffier: Tom Prins

Resources development / Développement des ressources

Chair / Présidente: Brenda Elliott
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Jerry J. Ouellette
David Christopherson, Ted Chudleigh, Sean G. Conway,
Brenda Elliott, Doug Galt, John Hastings, Pat Hoy,
Bart Maves, Jerry J. Ouellette
Clerk / Greffière: Donna Bryce

Social development / Affaires sociales

Chair / Présidente: Annamarie Castrilli
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Dwight Duncan
Marion Boyd, Jack Carroll, Annamarie Castrilli,
Dwight Duncan, Tim Hudak, Frank Klees,
Lyn McLeod, John R. O'Toole, Bruce Smith
Clerk / Greffière: Tonia Grannum

CONTENTS

Tuesday 23 September 1997

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

North Bay Days of Action
Ms Lankin 12287
Greater Peterborough Chamber of Commerce
Mr Stewart 12287
Assistance to flood victims
Mr Crozier 12288
Education financing
Mr Silipo 12288
Ernie Larocque
Mr Guzzo 12288
Kidney dialysis
Mr Cleary 12288
Ontario Hydro
Mr Laughren 12289
Operation Clean Sweep
Mr Ouellette 12289

MOTIONS

Committee substitutions
Mr David Johnson 12289
Motion agreed to 12289

ORAL QUESTIONS

Education reform
Mr McGuinty 12291
Mr Snobelen 12291
Education financing
Mr Hampton 12292
Mr Snobelen 12292, 12293
Mr Wildman 12293
Pay equity
Mr Hampton 12293
Mrs Cunningham 12294
Ms Churley 12294
Speech pathology
Mrs Pupatello 12294
Mrs Ecker 12294, 12300
Mr Bisson 12300
Hospital restructuring
Mr McGuinty 12295
Mr Wilson 12295
Family Responsibility Office
Ms Martel 12296
Mr Harnick 12296, 12297
Mr Kormos 12296
Municipal enumeration
Mr Parker 12297
Mr Leach 12297
Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Patten 12298
Mrs Witmer 12298
Charitable gaming
Ms Lankin 12298
Mr Leach 12298
Social assistance
Mrs Munro 12299
Mrs Ecker 12299
Lakeview Nursing Home
Mr Conway 12299
Mr Wilson 12299

PETITIONS

Video lottery terminals
Mr Bradley 12300
Municipal restructuring
Mr Bisson 12300
Court decision
Mr Bob Wood 12301
Mr Bert Johnson 12301
Mr Baird 12303
Tuition fees
Mr Duncan 12301
Ambulance service
Mr Hampton 12301
Fire in Hamilton
Mr Christopherson 12301
Rock music group
Mr Baird 12302
Bear hunting
Mr Michael Brown 12302
Occupational health and safety
Mr Christopherson 12302
Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Boushy 12302
Mr Gravelle 12303

GOVERNMENT MOTIONS

Interim supply, government notice of motion number 38,
Mr David Johnson
Mr Eves 12303
Mr Phillips 12303
Interim supply (continued)
Mr Caplan 12306, 12312
Mr Cullen 12308, 12312, 12318
Mr McLean 12311
Mr Bisson 12311, 12319, 12322
Mr Gerretsen 12312
Ms Bassett 12312
Mr Pouliot 12313
Mr Jim Brown 12315
Mr Wettlaufer 12317
Mr Duncan 12318
Mr Bradley 12322, 12323
Mr Gilchrist 12322
Mr Michael Brown 12323
Mr Laughren 12323
Debate deemed adjourned 12324

BUSINESS OTHER

Government advertising
Mr Bradley 12289
Mr David Johnson 12290
Mr Wildman 12291
Visitor
The Speaker 12292

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Mardi 23 septembre 1997

DÉCLARATIONS DES DÉPUTÉS

Hôpital Montfort
M. Lalonde 12287

PÉTITIONS

TFO
M. Lalonde 12301
M. Ramsay 12303

A Z CN
XI
-D23

Government
tions

No. 234B

Nº 234B

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly
of Ontario

First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative
de l'Ontario

Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Tuesday 23 September 1997

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Mardi 23 septembre 1997

SEP 30 1997
University of Toronto

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday 23 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mardi 23 septembre 1997

The House met at 1830.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

COMMUNITY SAFETY ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR LA SÉCURITÉ DE LA COLLECTIVITÉ

Mr Runciman moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 102, An Act to improve community safety by amending the Change of Name Act, the Ministry of Correctional Services Act and the Police Services Act / Projet de loi 102, Loi visant à accroître la sécurité de la collectivité en modifiant la Loi sur le changement de nom, la Loi sur le ministère des Services correctionnels et la Loi sur les services policiers.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services): I want to inform members of the House that I will be dividing my time with the member for Scarborough West, Mr Brown, and the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay, Mr Grimmett.

I rise this evening to speak to Bill 102. The bill is entitled An Act to improve community safety by amending the Change of Name Act, the Ministry of Correctional Services Act and the Police Services Act, but we prefer to call it the Community Safety Act because it reflects this government's commitment to the safety of our communities and the security of the public.

There are two parts to this legislation. The first section will enhance the safety of our families and our homes by helping to identify dangerous predators among us, and the second part will make it more difficult for criminals to evade justice by simply changing their names.

Bill 102 amends the Police Services Act and the Ministry of Correctional Services Act to give clear legislative authority to the police and to corrections authorities so they can inform the public in accordance with the regulations when dangerous offenders are released from custody.

The bill also provides the legislative authority for regulations which will specify, first, the information that can be disclosed; second, who that information can be disclosed to; and third, the circumstances under which information can be revealed.

The second part of Bill 102 amends the Change of Name Act to establish a process that will update criminal records to reflect a legal name change. Currently, any individual can escape the consequences of a criminal record through a relatively simple and informal process, simply by legally changing their name. Bill 102 will close that loophole.

The amendments will also allow the police to get information about previous name changes and use that data to update their records. This will make sure that accurate information is provided when police record checks are required for screening purposes.

The benefits of this legislation are so obvious that it scarcely merits debate, but I want to take a moment to explain the background to this legislation and our actions to improve public safety.

This House is well aware that the government is committed to improving our criminal justice system. We have taken many steps to protect our communities, to safeguard the rights of victims of crime, to promote crime prevention as well as crime deterrence and to increase public confidence in our criminal justice system. This legislation is in keeping with those initiatives. It is based on extensive consultations with police and correctional officers, and I have examined the experience in other jurisdictions.

Ontario needs a strong and effective criminal justice system, one that enjoys the confidence of law-abiding people everywhere, and this initiative will help to achieve those goals. It will give the police the tools they need to protect our communities and it will give our communities the information they need to protect themselves.

I should add that the purpose of the disclosure of this information is to protect vulnerable members of our society. I want to make it perfectly clear, however, that vigilante action will not be tolerated. This government does not condone people taking the law into their own hands.

Under current legislation, police and correctional officers are limited in the information they can release to the public when a dangerous offender has completed their prison term and is about to be released into the community. The only legislated authority for the release of information is the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation. These laws prohibit the release of information unless there is a grave health and safety hazard to the public. Those sections were never designed to deal with the release of high-risk offenders, especially in cases involving sexual predators, child abusers and other violent criminals.

We are all familiar with and share the public's outrage at the inability of our laws to protect ourselves and our children from, or even to warn us about, these dangerous criminals. Law enforcement agencies are uncertain about their authority to release information in these circumstances and have asked for legislation to make their situation clear. Obviously public warnings are not required every time an offender is released from jail, but in some cases they are essential. Bill 102 will provide officers and prison officials with the guidance they need to make that distinction and the legislative authority to share essential information with their community.

This is also a balanced bill. The members of the justice committee listened to several groups who shared their concerns with respect to civil liberties and personal privacy issues. As a result, the committee passed a number of amendments to Bill 102 which safeguard privacy by spelling out the purposes for which information may be shared.

The bill, as amended, allows the disclosure of information to the public for one or more of the following purposes: protection of the public; protection of victims of crime; keeping victims of crime informed; law enforcement; correctional purposes; enforcement and compliance with another act; and keeping the public informed. The effect will be to warn our communities, when appropriate, resulting in improved public safety.

Mr Floyd Laughren (Nickel Belt): Especially if there has been a breakout.

Hon Mr Runciman: That was more of a problem in your tenure, former Mr Treasurer.

The second part of Bill 102 deals with the Change of Name Act. About 10,000 people legally change their name in Ontario each year. Of course, the vast majority of those are honest, law-abiding citizens who use the legislation for very legitimate purposes, but a small minority are criminals who have discovered that for all practical purposes a legal change of name wipes out their criminal record. Criminal records are filed by name. New name, no record; it's as simple as that. The result is a loophole in the law that allows offenders to avoid detection, evade arrest on outstanding warrants, hide driving offences, fraudulently acquire firearms and slip past programs that screen applicants for positions of trust.

For example, in a recent case in British Columbia, a school counsellor hired to teach children life skills was convicted of procuring children for prostitution, despite a criminal record for fraud and drug offences. Press reports said that he "slipped through the cracks because his criminal record was under another name."

1840

Screening programs designed to ensure that paedophiles aren't hired to work with our Boy Scouts organizations, our day care centres or our children's aid societies will be unsuccessful if a check of police records fails to reveal their previous convictions. Bill 102 will close that loophole. It will ensure that these types of predators don't slip through the net.

Representatives of the policing community tell us that this is a very serious matter. According to Windsor detective Neal Jessop, who is also president of the Canadian Police Association, dangerous criminals who use pseudonyms can cause a lot of problems for law enforcement, and he says, "It should not even be tolerated, not for convicted murderers and other dangerous offenders."

A person has only to have read the newspapers over the past few years to see how name changes have been abused by the criminal element in our society. For example, in the December 18, 1996, edition of the Toronto Sun, we read about a former biker serving life in prison for stabbing a mother of five to death who has legally changed his name; a convicted abuser of 13 boys who has changed his name and now police can find no criminal record under his new name; a convicted cop killer whose whereabouts are not known to the authorities due to a name change; a serial rapist who threw off concerned citizens who were trying to track his location by changing his name; and another man convicted of killing a police officer who changed his name and left Canada.

We also know that, when arrested, Paul Bernardo was in the process of changing his name to Teale in order to avoid detection due to his earlier classification as a suspect in the Scarborough rape investigation. The list goes on and on. These are the types of cases we want to avoid by passing Bill 102.

Some other jurisdictions have changed their legislation to avoid the possibility of criminals using change-of-name legislation to escape their records, but Ontario has gone further and will allow police to update their records by examining previous name changes to ensure that our criminal record database remains a useful and effective tool of law enforcement. Ontario is leading the nation in this respect, and I fully expect other jurisdictions to follow our lead in this important area.

Bill 102 is an excellent demonstration of ways government can work smarter. It will have no effect on the vast majority of people who use that legislation, honest individuals who have changed their names for legitimate reasons. But it will help restore public confidence and public trust in our criminal justice system. It will have a very real effect in enhancing the safety of our communities and in frustrating the efforts of criminals who attempt to use a legal loophole to evade the scrutiny of the police and the community.

I should add that we're hearing favourable reaction to this bill. The Hamilton Spectator said, "The Ontario government is taking an overdue and necessary step by introducing legislation giving police the right to publicize the names of offenders released from prison." The Guelph Mercury called Bill 102 "a welcome change," and there have been a number of supportive articles and editorials, including the Ottawa Sun and the major Toronto newspapers.

Bill 102 is consistent with a whole range of initiatives our government has undertaken to rebalance the justice system in favour of the rights of law-abiding citizens and victims of crime, rather than criminals, such as passing the Victims' Bill of Rights, creating the victims' justice fund, expanding the victims' crisis assistance referral service to 20 sites across Ontario and creating the victims' support line, which allows victims of crime to speak with a real person for referral to local services.

The bill also dovetails with the actions the government is taking in response to the report on the Bernardo investigation by Justice Archie Campbell which recommended improved information flow and cooperation between the various components of the justice system in the ongoing efforts of the integrated justice project.

Perhaps most importantly, however, the bill responds to the recommendations of the 1993 coroner's inquest into the murder of an 11-year-old Brampton boy, Christopher Stephenson. I'm sure all members of this House will never forget the abduction and gruesome murder of this innocent child in 1988 at the hands of repeat child rapist Joseph Fredericks. The murderer was a convicted paedophile who was quietly released back into the community, where he was able to become a baseball coach. No security check was done on him.

In the wake of that terrible tragedy, the Stephenson inquest recommended greater public disclosure of information on offenders being released from custody and encouraged public cooperation with police background checks. Christopher's father, Jim Stephenson, has pointed to Bill 102 as a valuable step towards protecting children from dangerous sexual predators like Joseph Fredericks.

I would ask all members of the Legislature to remember young Christopher Stephenson as we consider Bill 102, the Community Safety Act. It is our desire as members of this Legislature to try to prevent the terrible suffering of another child, of another family or of another community from such a terrible event. That motivates us to consider Bill 102, and I would sincerely ask all members to support the passage of this bill.

Mr Jim Brown (Scarborough West): Bill 102 is another step in our fight to make Ontario safe and to respect the rights of victims and the public. This legislation will allow police the ability to pierce the anonymity of a name change. Criminals will be tracked through name changes.

Organizations like Big Brothers and Big Sisters have a program in place where anyone applying goes through a police check. This procedure will accomplish little, however, if the applicant has undergone a name change to hide from a criminal past. My Protection Against Pedophiles Act, Bill 145, requires any organization, including the teaching profession, that uses adults supervising or caring for children to obtain police clearance.

Bill 102 closes the name change loophole. It's intolerable to think that a sexual predator could get access to our children simply because he took on a new identity and slipped a police screening process. These kinds of risks are completely unacceptable and we need to make certain that we close these loopholes.

Criminals ought not to be able to hide behind name changes like young offenders hide behind the anonymity guaranteed by the Young Offenders Act. One of Ontario's most notorious killers was in the process of changing his name when he was arrested. Paul Bernardo was changing his name to Paul Teale.

The man convicted of second-degree murder in the slaying of Metro Constable Sweet changed his name upon release. The man in question drank and did drugs while he watched Constable Sweet bleed to death. It simply isn't right that people can hide from heinous crimes and go on to live their lives like nothing ever happened. I met Constable Sweet. He was a good, solid citizen. His life was taken far too early.

We are committed to keeping a watchful eye on anyone who is considered a high-risk offender following their release. We are putting the balance back in the scales of justice and showing concern for the rights of victims and the public to be safe. We are ensuring that these rights come before the rights of dangerous offenders.

The faint hope clause, clause 745, conditional sentencing or house arrest and an attitude that favours the prisoner make Bill 102 necessary. While my colleague John Baird brought in a bill for Victims' Rights Week, our federal Liberal counterparts have a Prisoners' Rights Week instead. Recently they changed the name to Restorative Justice Week.

1850

The name change legislation in Bill 102 will be helpful in other areas of law enforcement. Our police have a powerful information tool in the Canadian Police Information Centre or CPIC. The police can run a name through a computer in their police car and get a record of criminal activity. Outstanding warrants or court orders that have been imposed also show up. By linking individuals to their files, in spite of a name change, police will be better able to apprehend people who are driving while their licence is under suspension, violating a court order, abusing a spouse, stalking or a whole host of criminal activity.

The other important part of Bill 102 is the release of information on dangerous offenders who are returned into the community. This bill establishes clear guidelines for releasing information on dangerous offenders.

Terence Austin Matthews was released from Kingston Penitentiary for only six hours before invading a woman's home and beating her with a hammer. While in prison, he refused all rehabilitative treatment and the community was not warned of his release. Ten years earlier, he had been released on mandatory supervision. On that occasion, he was out two weeks before attacking two Ottawa women and raping another in a five-hour period.

Again and again, police have asked for clear standards on the release of information. The softer the federal government is on crime, the more our provincial government has to help to offset the balance.

Ontario police association administrator Dave Griffin supports this bill and urges the Ontario Legislature to pass it. He stated, "If you have people who are a threat to the community, the public has a right to be informed."

He said he has heard arguments against releasing information on offenders following their release as they claim it interferes with their transition back into society and they deserve a second chance. To this Griffin counters, "People who are on parole are people who have had their fair share of second chances." He added that people who are granted parole generally have a history within the correctional system.

Bill 102 sets out solid guidelines concerning the release of information. We're giving law enforcement officers the tools they need to protect the communities they patrol. Dr Jim Cairns, the deputy chief coroner of Ontario, has stated that "Chiefs of police have said: 'We now have a dangerous offender in our community. What do we do?'" Now we're empowering the police.

It must be a haunting feeling for the police to know there is a repeat violent or sex offender in their community and not be able to warn the residents. We need to be proactive with repeat offenders and warn people of the danger, not sit back and wait for the offender to reoffend. We should do something before the damage is done.

Last week it was my privilege to speak on a private member's bill put forth by my colleague from Nepean, John Baird. The bill would declare a commemorative week for victims of violent crime. There was a breakfast meeting prior to the bill's first reading and at the meeting I met with Debbie Mahaffy, Sharon Rosenfeldt, who lost her son to child killer Clifford Olson, and Tracey Christie from my own riding, whose daughter Christie Christie was murdered after opening the door of her home to let in a 12-year-old neighbourhood boy.

Speaking with victims like these, one becomes acutely aware of an obligation that this government has to do more for them. We have a duty to ensure that we do everything we can to uphold victims' rights in Ontario. Bill 102 is one more step in that direction. We must put victims and the public first. I ask all members of this Legislature to support this important bill. It is part of this government's initiatives to make our streets safe again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Questions and comments?

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming): I understand there are still to be some speakers from the government side and probably we'll be next, but since we have this opportunity to comment, as I am going to at more length probably being the next speaker, I will say that the Liberal caucus will be supporting this bill.

We accept the points that the government has made that community safety is of paramount importance throughout this province and that this bill goes somewhat to cure some of the ills that are out there. As the minister mentions, our law enforcement officers have been in sort of a legal limbo as to what rights they have in alerting the community as to the release or possibly the movement of a dangerous offender into that community. It's an important matter and we've had too many occurrences of dangerous offenders reoffending not to be able to have a law such as this that would allow the community to be informed that a dangerous person is coming to their community.

There's a real balance to this. Of course, all citizens' rights should be respected. With the amendments that have been brought forward on this bill — and all three parties worked towards bringing these amendments forward — I think we have that balance and I think it's a good piece of legislation.

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): This is one of those evening sittings where it's 7 o'clock on a Tuesday. I mention that because people watching this may think it's the rerun already from this afternoon, but it's not. We're here till 9:30, and I encourage people to watch. They might also think it's a rerun because it's the same old theme being recycled over and over again by this government in terms of them being tough when it comes down to law and order.

A couple of interesting things. I heard both the Solicitor General and his colleague talk about "giving the police the tools they need to protect our community." I'm going to have a chance to speak later too, after Mr Ramsay speaks for the Liberal caucus. Mr Ramsay will be speaking in a couple of minutes. He'll be speaking for an hour or so, and I'll be speaking for at least an hour on this bill and all the related bills that it's part and parcel of in terms of a theme. I'm going to be talking about what it means to give police the tools that they need to protect our society.

We supported this bill from day one. Our caucus of course participated in the committee hearings. They were brief, but there was no objection to that. I think the committee heard from some outstanding members of the community, Alan Borovoy among them, who addressed some concerns about the bill. But the committee also heard that the bill's a fine bill and of course it should be supported, but at the end of day it has about that much to do with protecting the community against crime, that it's really not as dramatic a law-and-order step as the Solicitor General would want us to believe.

We're going to supporting the bill, not uncritically of course. I'm looking forward to speaking to it in a short while.

Mr Doug Galt (Northumberland): Thank you very much for the chance to respond to this presentation by the minister, the Solicitor General, and also the parliamentary assistant, the member for Scarborough West.

Community Safety Act, Bill 102: It's certainly refreshing to see a bill come before this House that's so well supported, both by the opposition party and the third party, not to mention so many people in the community. It has certainly been well worked through. My compliments to the minister on this particular bill.

I was a little surprised as the minister was speaking to find that the change of name is a loophole that was being closed. I found it rather hard to believe that in the past by simply changing your name you could escape the consequences of a criminal record. I just took it for granted that would follow through on a name change, that you couldn't just disappear from it that easily, but obviously that loophole was out there for criminals in the past. I find that most unfortunate and certainly not right at all.

I think as we move along, we're finding that victims have had a pretty rough time in the past and here we're giving a safeguard, some rights to victims that are long overdue. Victims have been terribly misused in the past and this is about disclosure. When we came in with the bill back a while ago, many years ago on freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation, it was never the intent that that kind of legislation would be there to protect the criminal. It's unfortunate when that happens.

Again, it's very, very refreshing to see the member from Timiskaming commenting in support of this bill, and the member of the third party. I look forward to the passage of this bill.

1900

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): I too will be supporting Bill 102, as it is an excellent first step, and certainly the Solicitor General and his parliamentary assistant touched on many, many important points. As the members from Timiskaming and Thorold said, it is but a first step. It is an important step but only a first step. It may be a small step, but any step in the right direction is a good step, so obviously support of this bill must take place by all members of the House.

But you know, in expanding on the bill a little, and I hope to get to speak to it later on, I would suggest that another very, very positive way of ensuring that the Community Safety Act takes place is to ensure that we have an adequate and a happy police force in every town, in every municipality, across Ontario, because if you are a police force that is proud of the job that you are doing and know that people respect and appreciate the very, very dangerous type of work a police officer does, then certainly they will be even more proactive. When we have bills introduced such as Bill 126 and Bill 136, what we see happening is a police force mentality being developed in a negative way, because they feel the government of the day doesn't appreciate the very, very important work they do.

I would take all the steps possible to ensure that police officers across Ontario understand that community safety is extremely important and that this government, as the opposition parties are, is committed to ensuring that we appreciate their fine efforts.

The Acting Speaker: The minister from Leeds-Grenville has two minutes to respond.

Hon Mr Runciman: I appreciate the comments and the input of all of my colleagues on both sides of the House. It is somewhat less than heart-warming but certainly encouraging, I think would be an appropriate word to use, with respect to the support from all parties and representatives of all three parties in this House. It's unfortunate we don't see that level of cooperation on the majority of pieces of legislation that we have to deal with, but so be it.

I do want to thank the members and I want to thank my colleagues and the members opposite for their input as this bill went through the hearing stage. I only want to comment on the remark made by the member from Welland-Thorold with respect to the "getting tough" message he indicated.

I certainly don't want to leave anyone with the impression that the intent of this is simply getting tough. I think the intent of this piece of legislation is to close loopholes and, as the member opposite said, to improve and extend community safety in all communities in this province and to extend that safety especially to vulnerable children, whom we know have been the innocent victims of some very horrific incidents in this province in the past number of years. Because of those terrible crimes, we have moved to do what we can to try and reduce the likelihood of similar occurrences in the future.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate? The Chair recognizes the member for Timiskaming.

Mr Ramsay: I'm pleased to be able to speak tonight on the third reading of Bill 102. I think, from some of the information that has been imparted through the speeches so far this evening, some of the people watching might wonder why we are at a point today where we're authorizing officials in both corrections and policing to be able to notify communities when a dangerous offender is coming into a certain community, because I think most people would have the experience already that this has been happening.

The reason we're doing this through Bill 102 here in Ontario is that the federal criminal law has been amended to allow federal officials to notify local police forces when a criminal or an offender has been released from a federal institution who satisfies certain criteria, that being a very dangerous offender. That has already taken place. What this bill does is to bring provincial law into line with federal law, so that if and when there is a dangerous offender being released from a provincial institution our corrections ministry officials can notify the local police that that offender is coming to the community. So we're catching up and putting our law in line with federal law.

The pressures obviously came much more quickly to the federal government, as offenders who are the most dangerous are sentenced to incarceration rates of more than two years and therefore offenders who are accused of crimes of extreme violence are sentenced to the federal penitentiary system and therefore fall under their jurisdiction.

What happens is that unfortunately in the history of an offender with what we call recidivism, and that is the repetition of offenders committing crimes, you can find yourself in the provincial system with somebody who maybe has been sentenced for a lesser crime and in this case maybe a non-violent crime, because this person who had been previously convicted and served their time for a violent act finds themselves in the provincial system and our authorities still consider this person a danger, but it just so happens that in this particular offence they were picked up by the police and convicted for something less serious. That does not lessen the fact that this person has an extremely violent record of offences, and therefore it would still be important that the community be notified that this person is dangerous to the community.

Therefore, Bill 102 really brings the provincial law and regulation into line so that our police officials in this province, both the OPP and the municipal police forces, and our correctional services employees are allowed to basically do the same, so that our local police forces or the OPP, if they're the force that is providing security for a certain municipality, are allowed to, in the way they see fit, inform the citizens of the community that a certain offender is coming into that community.

When we had our clause-by-clause study, examination, in our committee, the justice committee, there were several groups that came forward that were concerned about this bill and felt that we were erring on the side of safety versus the rights of the offender. I think all of us in the committee appreciated some of the points that were being made, and in fact, from that discussion in committee, I would say it was quite refreshing to see that really all three parties were kind of working together on this, trying to find the best balance here, and that the government was open to some of these suggestions and some amendments were made to this bill.

It was rather like a prototype of how things should work in this place. Because, I guess, the topic in itself was non-controversial, all members of this House believed in the goals of this and really in the means of this bill also. So we found a way, through amendments, to make sure that the powers given to correctional and police officials in this bill would not be abused; that instead of just being written in regulation that would come after the fact of the passage of this bill, we have specified through amendment in this bill when it is appropriate for an official from the Ministry of Correctional Services and the same for a member of the Solicitor General's office to offer up any disclosure, and those conditions are that it's of paramount protection for the public, it's the protection of victims of crime.

1910

In many cases, a victim of crime finds himself or herself having, as they should as a good citizen, to testify in a trial that leads to a conviction of an offender, and sometimes that offender vows to come back after that good citizen who has done their civic duty in coming through to the criminal justice system and testifying as to what happened so that justice can be brought forward. Sometimes that victim has to be protected. That is one of the other protections that is offered here, so that a victim in this case would be notified that a dangerous offender was being released from custody, keeping victims of crime informed of law enforcement, judicial or correctional processes relevant to the crime that affected them.

Up until now, it has really not been the right of the victim to be informed of the progress of the criminal justice system in dealing with the perpetrator of the crime that they were a victim of. This bill now specifies that that's okay, that in order to support that person, the victim of crime should be kept informed of the progress of the disposition of the charged offender. That lays that out so that disclosure of the criminal justice process can be brought forward to the victim.

Another reason is just for law enforcement. If, for instance, a dangerous offender was going to be released into a community, maybe a community that is not usually prepared for this type of offender, that usually doesn't have the type of offence that this offender perpetrated in the past, it would be very prudent to notify that small village force that may be made up of a couple of constables, "By the way, offender X has decided to come to your village, and you should be prepared for that move."

Also for correctional purposes, they would be notified so that the receiving institution in the Ontario penal system would understand how dangerous this offender is. For the total administration of justice, this disclosure can also be made, enforcement of and compliance with any federal or provincial act, regulation or government program, and lastly, keeping the public informed of the law enforcement, judicial or correctional process respecting any individual.

As I said earlier, we are going to be supporting this bill. This one aspect of the bill is very, very important. The second aspect of the bill that the minister alluded to in his opening remarks is also very important because it closes a loophole that offenders found many years ago, whereby if they applied under the Change of Name Act, there was no CPIC search done at the time to see if the person had a criminal record.

Even if it was known, there was no authority for the people at the registrar general's office who are authorized to conclude a change of name to notify people in the criminal justice system, whether it be correctional officials, police or other government agencies, so the criminal record would be amended to show that there is now a new name for this criminal offender. That loophole will be closed with this bill, and we agree that's very important for community safety.

But as my colleague from Sudbury had mentioned, this is but one small step for community safety. We in the Liberal caucus feel there is much more we can do to protect our communities. This is a small step and a good step, and therefore we support it, but we would like to be proactive and bring forward some ideas that we would hope this government would pursue.

What we have seen from this government is really more a punitive reaction to criminality, an approach that most of the academic papers in the criminal justice system would show is not an effective deterrent to criminal offending. From what I've seen so far in the term of this government and also from the Common Sense Revolution and campaign that happened two years ago when the Conservative government won, I think the approach this government is taking is more politically motivated than it is to really get to the heart of the problem.

I think this sort of hard-nosed punitive approach is something that can be very appealing to the general public. It's what we would call in politics a hot-button issue. People are very afraid for their safety, which I guess across the board is kind of a sad situation when most violent crime is actually down in the past few years from what it had been because of better police techniques and other improvements in society. But because we are better informed of all the criminal offences that go on, and I suppose because of the unfortunate spectacular nature of some of the crimes that we hear of, we are better informed of criminal offences in society, and this generates increased fear for our safety.

Unfortunately, it does happen in this business of politics that people take advantage of that and play to the public's fears in order to get support, and taking the hard-nosed punitive approach is one way of approaching that. I would hope that the Solicitor General might really want to take an opportunity to sit down with the two critics and say that if we're really serious about trying to reduce the amount of criminal behaviour on this province, why don't we take a longer look at this, take a look at what some of the expert literature says today and really try to work together in bringing forward some of the programs that have proven to be effective.

The trouble with this approach is that it doesn't come in short little sound bites. It doesn't sound all that effective and politically strong on television, and it doesn't get accomplished in the two years left of this government, or the term of any government. All the academic research shows that to really get to the heart of criminal behaviour, you have to start to tip the balance between the advantaged and disadvantaged in society.

I don't mean by that that one has to somehow drastically redistribute income in society to try to bring up some of the people who are disadvantaged, but that it's very important to initiate some early childhood intervention programs, some as simple and as universal as a program that has been cut by this government, and that is junior kindergarten. A simple program such as junior kindergarten, an even earlier JK or even nursery school, has a profound effect on the outcome of people's lives.

There have been countless studies, the most famous being the Head Start study in the United States, which for over 30 years tracked the lives of people who had been involved in this study. Basically what they did in this study was have a nursery school and a junior kindergarten class, and they made sure that all of the children in these various communities that were chosen had also regular kindergarten, that there were two and three years of intervention before starting grade 1, regardless of the conditions of the home, the social situation in the home.

They went into some of the poorest neighbourhoods to make sure that those children had at the very beginning, maybe for only two or three hours a day before they got to grade 1, some sort of outside intervention in their lives that would, as society sees it, show them how to behave, how to interact with their fellow children, how to play, starting some academics, starting some simple skills, but basically learning at a very young age those social skills that they don't get from the inattention of a mother who may be absent in the home.

1920

That sort of program, which was started over 30 years ago, has now shown that people being tracked over that time have less involvement in the social justice system, ie, they are not on welfare as much as other people. They have less involvement in the criminal justice system. They are more successful. They are not, on a percentage basis, into criminality as are people in the same neighbourhoods who were not part of the program. They have higher employment rates. They have better health and are therefore less a burden on the state and/or private insurance plans in the United States.

Just from those two to three years of early childhood intervention, you have a group of people, unfortunately a vast majority of whom were bound to go into those various systems, to slip through the cracks, if you will, who were given the tools to get themselves through school, through the difficult family situation, whatever it was, and get themselves on their feet and self-sufficient and self-reliant.

That's the type of thing I think we should be talking about, rather than just, "All we need to do to take care of these young offenders is give them a swift kick," ie, boot camps. That's sort of the gut reaction we've seen from this government, that if we just take these young offenders and exhaust them all day running them around a track, strict discipline, that's going to somehow cure their criminal behaviour and they will no longer reoffend and all will be well.

That is a very appealing notion, that somehow these kids just didn't get the discipline when they were being brought up in their families, and if we as the state could get hold of them and run them through a 15-week to six-month to nine-month regime of strict discipline, all would be well with the world and these kids would be straightened around and wouldn't reoffend and the world would be a safer place to live in. I wish it was that simple, because if it was that simple, I'd go for it. If the literature showed that it worked, I'd support it.

Mr Peter L. Preston (Brant-Haldimand): I'll guarantee it.

Mr Ramsay: One of the members says he guarantees it. I have here just about the latest issue of the Journal of Contemporary Criminal Justice, which compiles every few months the very best of the literature that's available in any particular area of the criminal justice system. What this May edition does is put together the efficacy of boot camps, that is, how efficient are prisons and jail boot camps for changing criminal behaviour?

I must say that the vast body of literature says this is not effective. If it was effective, I wouldn't be making this speech tonight, because I, like every other member in this House, would like to see a great diminishment of criminal behaviour, especially with young offenders. It is frightening to see young offenders enter the criminal justice system, to see young people start to act out and to offend and to wreak havoc in society, to injure, to maim and to kill people, to destroy property and to steal property. We don't want to see young people doing this, but we are seeing that.

What the literature says — and I know some of the government members don't even want to hear this — and in my experience in dealing with young offenders, the vast majority of them are victims in their own right. When you look at the records of young offenders in our institutions, be they young women or young men, many of them have been physically abused as children. Many of them have been sexually abused as children. Many of them, because of this, are acting out in a very inappropriate and dangerous way, and we need to grab hold of them and make sure we can try to work with them in correcting this. Many of them have substance abuse problems that add to their complications and to their offending in society. It's the way they are trying to cope with the problems they have.

What is required from the very beginning is the type of programming I've talked about that Head Start offers. That's as simple as the Minister of Education standing up and saying, unlike what he does say when he stands up, that there shall be junior kindergarten in every primary school in this province. That would be a very good, positive start that wouldn't come out of the budget of the Ministry of the Solicitor General, but I'm sure he would have great support in this House for that sort of program. That is extremely important.

Looking through the literature, it is interesting to note that all of the anecdotal evidence that people have that just the application of a lot of exercise is somehow going to modify criminal behaviour is wrong. I wish it was so, and if it was so, I would say, "Let's have a heavy exercise regime in every institution in this province." If that worked, that would be great; let's go for it. But unfortunately, it's just not that simple and it just doesn't work that way.

In one paper by Mark Correia of the University of Nevada, Reno, "Boot Camps, Exercise and Delinquency," he does an analytical critique of the use of physical exercise to facilitate decreases in delinquent behaviour. The précis of his paper says:

"This article examined those disciplines most relevant to the use of shock incarceration," which is the sort of technical name for boot camps, "criminology, social psychology, psychology and physiology, and drew upon their theoretical frameworks in an effort to apply them to juvenile boot camps. It is argued that available research in these disciplines does not provide a strong rationale supporting the use of exercise to decrease criminality in juvenile offenders."

I'd certainly have to wonder, with papers such as this that have been out for quite a while — in fact this paper, which is fairly recent, cites some very old studies to show that this type of application of exercise is just not the simple solution to reducing the offending frequency of a young offender. In this paper, another paper from 1981 is cited in which exercise has been found to increase the beta endorphins. Anybody who jogs knows that this is correct and that there is a very nice sense of wellbeing when one exercises from the beta endorphins that are released into the brain. "Research suggests that this increase may create a physiological exercise high experienced by physically active individuals, which has been credited with reductions of anxiety, tension, anger, and at times possibly confusion." But the paper goes on to say that the literature does not support any long-term behaviour modifications, especially those behaviours associated with criminality, these being based on low self-esteem, low self-control and low self-concepts.

These are the areas that need to be targeted. You will find, especially with young offenders but probably with adult offenders also, that it is characteristics of low self-esteem, low self-control and low self-concepts that are the problems in a criminal offender, and just giving a strict-discipline, high-exercise regime is not going to cure that. I wish it would. If you would show me the proof for this, I would support it tomorrow, but it doesn't show that it does.

This is really a problem, that we're going down this road thinking this is going to be a panacea and sort of trying to persuade the general electorate — and in our case as politicians, the voters — that somehow the Harris government has the magic bullet to solve juvenile delinquency. It's just not so.

The paper goes on to say that it's shown throughout this analysis that apparent failure of boot camp prisons can be attributed to the lack of any theoretical explanations for why exercise should decrease criminality. Juvenile boot camps have not been shown to be a magic cure-all in reducing criminality. These programs need to be thoroughly re-evaluated, especially with respect to the use of exercise and physical labour to facilitate reduction of delinquent behaviour.

1930

I'll say to the members over there that I'd like to be a little positive and get some suggestions of what you need.

Interjection.

Mr Ramsay: Wait for it, because I think this is important. In order to fill the boot camp, you've taken some young offenders away from their schooling. People should know that unlike the popular notion that young offenders in provincial institutions are lying around all day watching TV, they go to school. If they are 16 and under they have to go to school, and many up to 18 go to school, because the school board provides that schooling there and they get that training. You disrupt that when you bring them into the boot camp.

What you need in a juvenile camp is some sort of practical skills training. Whether it's automobile mechanics, computer training, let's get some modern skills training so you raise the low self-esteem of those people so they're capable of providing for themselves and don't feel they're vulnerable because they didn't get the attention as children, didn't stay in school, don't have the skills and don't feel they can compete, that the only way they can compete is offending: mugging people and breaking in and destroying property. That's what we have to do, work on low self-esteem and make sure these people have the skills and, maybe for the first time in some of their lives, to show that somebody cares about these people.

I know this isn't a popular approach right now, that a caring approach is the answer. I'm just saying that the literature is showing that is the answer, that early childhood intervention is the way to prevent a lot of criminal behaviour. Even with the very young offenders, to get in there and show that you understand that many of them are victims and get to the root of those problems and then get them on the road to recovery with those problems and get them some skills so they can be self-reliant is very important in their lives.

I hope the minister doesn't start establishing boot camps throughout the province and try to convince people that all is going to be well by doing that, that that's going to be the answer, because that's just not the only answer to this.

While I have my opportunity to talk about the criminal justice system in Ontario, I would like to talk about some other matters that I think would be very important to the criminal justice system in this province.

Before I leave boot camps, I would like to say to the minister that part of the problem with his very rapid introduction of boot camps in Ontario is that he was in such a rush to fulfil this political promise that I think maybe went a fair way to getting this government elected, that somehow they had this magic bullet, in the boot camps, of getting tough with young offenders, that the government made a lot of mistakes on the way of establishing this boot camp. As we all know, it has had a very rough birth. In fact, it probably needs to be reborn, maybe rethought before it gets reborn.

In the minister's haste to bring this about, he decided to shortchange the training that correctional officers usually have running young offender facilities. In the criminal justice and corrections system in Ontario, correctional officers who are going to be working with young offenders go through quite a rigorous staff training at the Bell Cairn centre in Burlington and then they go in for three weeks of practical training with experienced, veteran correctional officers who are used to working with young offenders.

The people who were hired by Camp Turnaround to come to the boot camp went to Bell Cairn for about half the time that correctional officers usually spend there and did not get the practical, hands-on training in one of the Ontario correctional centres for young offenders. So they got up to Camp Turnaround, or Camp Breakout or whatever you want to call it, and probably for many of them the first time they saw a young offender was when he came through the door to be incarcerated in this camp, and they just had some theoretical knowledge about how to handle young offenders.

It wasn't more than a few weeks — in fact, the day before the official opening of the boot camp — that we had a breakout. Two young offenders busted out during the night, escaped and were free until the next day.

Even up till now, in a 32-bed facility being managed by a private company at a cost to taxpayers of $2.4 million a year, with about 33 staff people there, a one-on-one staffing arrangement to young offenders, we now also have six government correctional officers up there guarding the guards, to make sure that young offenders don't escape. We are talking about maybe only 15 inmates at the time of the breakout; they may not even have 15 in there today. There are 33 people inside and six correctional officers outside guarding all this, at an additional cost of $2,400 a day to taxpayers.

This is a monumental failure. Part of the reason is this rush to judgement by the Solicitor General that the boot camp was the answer to all the ills with young offenders, and therefore they'd better get this open fast because in the first two years they wanted to get all their promises in the Common Sense Revolution fulfilled.

I also want to bring up another issue that I brought up in question period last week, what I think is the beginning of a very disturbing trend, that I think is going to be a trend in Ontario, for two-tier policing.

I brought up the case of the town of Dundas, which is served by the Hamilton-Wentworth Regional Police Force. All the municipalities in the Hamilton-Wentworth region pay a levy to the region to supply policing to the whole region. But the good business people in downtown Dundas, in the business improvement association, had noticed over the last couple of years a 50% increase in break-ins in the downtown area. Not only that, they were beginning to notice the lack of response to those break-ins when they were called in from the Hamilton-Wentworth Regional Police Force. They were very concerned about this, not only about the great increase in the break-ins, the loss of property, the cost to their buildings and to their insurance, the inconvenience of that, but also the lack of police response to that; and not only to that particular crime but, because of that, the lack of any follow-up that might go towards preventing this increase and future break-ins.

So the business improvement association of Dundas went to the town council to say, "We're not satisfied with the police protection we're getting from the region and we want you to do something about that." The town of Dundas decided, since they couldn't get any more enforcement from the region, that they would hire their own private security guard to give extra policing to the town of Dundas. They had made many calls to the regional police, and the regional police said, "With the amount of money we have in the region, this is all the coverage we can give you." The town of Dundas decided to hire their own.

So now they've got two levels of policing. What is disturbing about this is that not every municipality could afford to do this. Especially with the downloading of police costs now, I think we're going to see many municipalities starting to realize they might not even be able to afford the very basic cost of policing. I'll touch on that in a minute, because that really affects many of the communities I represent and that many of my colleagues represent in northern Ontario, and maybe parts of rural Ontario also.

1940

What's disturbing about this is that I as a Liberal would say and I hope everybody in this House would say that while we restructure government, there are at least a few core functions for government in society today. Probably on a par with education and health has got to be community safety. The public has to demand that the government retain full responsibility for community safety.

This government has cut $3 million over the last two years from the community safety grants that go to our municipal police forces. If we start to see that ratcheting-down of the resources to our communities for policing, we're going to start to see actions such as that of the town of Dundas in hiring private policing. You might say, "What's wrong with that, if that is a municipal responsibility anyway?"

What's wrong is that in the case of this short-term, $10,000 contract to try to alleviate this particular problem, the town of Dundas has the resources to do this, but not every municipality does. They depend on either OPP policing or maybe in other cases, where they're in regions, on the regional police force to provide policing. If they can't get the increased policing, they're just out of luck and break-ins such as this are going to be increasing. Small business people and homeowners are not going to be able to get the police to respond to calls when this happens, and this is happening throughout the province now. Police are so overworked that they're having to prioritize the types of calls they can only go to. There are calls that in the old days they always used to respond to that they no longer respond to.

One of the examples I gave in a question was an 84-year-old woman in St Catharines. In question period you can't give all the details, but I have the time now, and I was really struck by this. This 84-year-old woman — good for her; she still has her driver's licence — was out driving and went to get her groceries. While coming back from grocery shopping she was in a car accident. My mother's a senior too; she's 83 years old. I know she buys a lot of frozen food because that's convenient and easy. Isn't it wonderful that you can be 83 or 84 and can be self-sufficient and be in your home and provide for yourself? So you take advantage of convenience foods such as that. This woman had a lot of frozen food, and this happened in the summer in St Catharines. She was waiting for the police to respond to the accident she was involved in, which is very understandable because you want to have a police report of your accident to make sure that all the procedures are correct with your insurance. You want to make sure the police respond. Heavens to Betsy, when you're 84 years old, you're not even sure what to do next and all that, you're very upset by this situation and you would like to have the certainty of a police officer coming to render assistance. That's what the police are for.

It was three hours before, in this case, the Niagara Regional Police arrived at the scene in St Catharines. This story was reported in the St Catharines newspaper; there were letters to the editor that followed it. People were really shocked and disgusted that here was this 84-year-old citizen of St Catharines basically stuck in her car, her frozen food thawing and being ruined on a hot August afternoon, waiting for this assistance from the police.

This is the type of concern people in Ontario have, just like our health critic brings forward with people waiting for health services. Sometimes you can't wait for police services. It's very important that the government be front and centre and say that community safety, public safety, the criminal justice system, is one of the prime areas of government and that we're no longer going to be cutting here, that we're going to provide some sort of guarantee to the citizens of Ontario that the police will be there when you need them. I'd like to see that. I'd like the government to make some sort of guarantee, some sort of bill of rights for community safety, that thou shalt be entitled to the response of a police officer if thou hast been offended upon. Excuse the biblical language, but it upsets me that citizens such as this 84-year-old woman now have to wait three hours on a hot afternoon in August when she's involved in an auto accident. That's just not right, and it shouldn't happen in the Ontario we have here, as well-off as we are.

Something's wrong there. If this lack of service continues, we're going to start to see, for more affluent citizens and communities, what we fear in the health care system coming into the criminal justice system, and that is two-tier policing. You'll have the well-off, affluent neighbourhood in a town or community with its own private security service running around, like Westech provides in West LA for the well-off people there. We've already seen this from the American examples. This is the type of thing that's on its way here.

In that question last week I brought forward the other Americanism we're starting to see imported into this country already: the walled and gated community. When people start to fear for their security and their safety, when they don't believe there's adequate policing, they start to search for — and quite frankly, who can blame them, for a senior — a safe community. They start to go to these communities where the ads say, "We provide this extra security and safety." The code words are "peace of mind."

I don't blame those people. When you're older you're not as strong as you used to be. You get more concerned about people breaking in and your own safety. You want to be as safe as you can be. I don't blame people for looking at communities such as that, but not all of us can afford to be in such a community, and quite frankly, I don't want to see Ontario become a series of walled and gated communities, that we all lock each other up from ourselves, afraid of our neighbour, afraid of the person on the street, that we may be invaded at any moment, and afraid that if such happens the police are not going to be there when you need them. That's not the Ontario I believe in, that's not the Ontario I want to see, but I think it is the Ontario we're starting to see develop under the Mike Harris government, and I'm very concerned about that.

I would hope that the Solicitor General would be concerned about that, because I know he's a law-and-order type of guy. We always used to admire him in opposition because he used to go after all the governments, ours included, and the last government, as the tough cop, the law-and-order guy who wasn't going to stand for any disorder in Ontario. I always thought he packed his own piece and wanted to go out there and do it himself. I'm sure he's capable of it, but I know that as a law-abiding citizen he wouldn't do it. Sometimes he scares me in question period. It's a good thing he's law-abiding and staying in here and just passing laws rather than going out and trying to correct it on his own, because that would not be the way to do it.

We're all concerned. I don't want anybody out there to think that any one political party seems to have the one-up on community safety, because all of us here care about that. Maybe we have a different approach about it, but what we're looking at are the approaches that the vast majority of the literature on these problems today says is the direction we should be going in.

I'd like to get into one other area before I allow one of my colleagues also to speak, and that is police funding. This is a major problem throughout Ontario. When Bill 105, the Police Services Act, brought in the notion that all municipalities should pay for policing, I understood the principle of that and I accept that. I know that historically a vast majority of municipalities in Ontario, through the income tax their citizens pay, have been receiving OPP policing. Over time, those municipalities with a population of over 5,000 have either had to contract with the OPP at local taxpayers' expense or provide their own municipal police force. Certainly there has been an inequity in that system, so I don't blame the government for trying to bring some equality in how Ontarians pay for their policing. We all should be paying our fair share. If I was writing this out, I would be underlining "fair share," because the system the Solicitor General has brought in is the most unfair system I have ever, ever seen. What he has decided to do with those communities that up till now have been relying on OPP service is to assess those municipalities, on a per household basis, a flat fee for policing.

1950

The trouble with that is that we have now a range in Ontario from Parry Sound district, which depending on your focus is either in southern or northern Ontario — it's kind of in the middle of Ontario. In Parry Sound district, the households there will be required to pay $169 for OPP policing. That's probably pretty good. We had heard that possibly an average price might be around $200. I suppose that's a pretty good price to pay for the superior quality of policing that Ontarians enjoy from the OPP. They're one of the finest police forces in the world, nobody is going to dispute that, and we are well served by them. We should be paying for that service and that's a pretty good price.

But when you start to look and, ironically and unfortunately, go north of Parry Sound, the discrepancy in that per household charge is absolutely alarming. It goes from $169 in Parry Sound to, just 150 miles up the road in through the area I represent, $480 per household in Timiskaming, all the way to, in my colleague's riding of Kenora, $711 per household for OPP policing. I've got to wonder why the grave discrepancy in that household charge. Mr Speaker, I'm sure that if you put yourself in my shoes and represented people who would be paying three or four times as much as the people of Parry Sound, you'd be exercised about this also.

What's doubly galling about this is that during the war years the breweries came to the government of Ontario and said: "We need some sort of efficient system to market beer throughout the province. If we could get this sort of agency developed without any competition, we could guarantee a few things. One of the things we could guarantee would be the same price for the cost of beer in Toronto, Parry Sound and right to the Manitoba border, in Kenora." I'm using this kind of facetious example just to show how the thinking has been in the past by a Conservative government, that somehow it was right and proper and fair that Ontarians pay the same price for a case of beer. I find it absolutely stunning that the Mike Harris government believes that while it's okay, and maybe right and proper, for Ontarians to pay the same price for a case of beer throughout this province, it's not okay for households, regardless of income and how expensive that house is, to pay at least the same average price for policing. Why do we have such discrimination? That's what it is.

Ironically enough, we would find for sure that we would have people of much greater affluence, by and large, and the vast majority of them, living in southern Ontario, in the rich suburbs of many of our major centres, compared to places like Kenora district where the average incomes are much lower, all the statistics are lower when it comes to earning power, unemployment etc. So why are the people of northern Ontario paying $400, $500 and $600 more per household for the same policing than you're going to have in Parry Sound and other rural centres of southern Ontario that receive OPP policing? That's just not right. That's just not fair. I just don't understand why this government feels this is the way to go about bringing forward the cost of policing.

Do we charge people a different rate for other government services in northern or rural Ontario? We do not discriminate or charge people different rates for access to the health care system or the social service system in this province, the education system being another one, but yet for something as vitally important as all these other core government services we deliver to the people of Ontario, this Solicitor General in the Mike Harris government has decided that we are going to have discriminatory rates levied per household, specifically on households in northern Ontario, for policing. That is just not right and that is not fair. Coupled with that, at the same time the government is downloading a lot of charges to municipalities that are going to be transferred through to local tax levies that have never been there before for municipalities.

So while a rural municipality, say, in my district of Timiskaming is now going to be charged an extra $480 per household for policing, those households in many of those rural municipalities are going to find themselves caught up in the downloading of the farm tax rebate to the municipalities. That means the municipalities are going to have to make up for that loss of revenue.

I know, Mr Speaker, you live in a rural municipality and I'm sure you must be concerned about this, because you understand how this system works, that where before the municipality was able to assess the farm land at 100% of the assessment against the mill rate, knowing that the farmer received a grant directly from the provincial government, that no longer is going to take place. Therefore, the township can only assess their mill rate against 25% of the value of that farm land. But where is the township going to make up the rest of that money? They're going to have to raise the mill rate across all other classes of property within that township.

What's happening with that program, with the policing that's coming in, is that in the very township I live in,

Casey township, right above Lake Timiskaming — I was speaking to the municipal clerk the other day — our taxes next year, in four months' time, are going to rise 159%. That's absolutely incredible, but that's the type of tax increase we are facing.

It's because the Minister of Municipal Affairs has not spoken to the Minister of Agriculture or the Solicitor General about all the other downloaded services that are going to our municipalities. In essence what they're doing is reconstructing a building without a blueprint. We agree with some reconstruction. We can always do things better. There's nobody in this House who would stand in their place here tonight and say: "We're absolutely doing everything perfectly here. It's okay, we don't have to change." We know we can do better, and in some areas we can do much better. We're not against restructuring. What we are against is restructuring this municipal building without the blueprint. You don't even know where you're getting it to, because you don't have the plan in place.

Supposedly now in another week finally the Minister of Municipal Affairs is going to give the final costs to the municipalities. This is too late for some municipalities, but better late than never. But why these figures haven't come on is because I think you're going to find that in many cases you're going to have to bail out many of these municipalities. I cannot see the township council of Casey that will be newly elected next year actually passing that bylaw, as we used to around the council table, for a 159% increase. I can't see that happening.

What is going to happen is that many municipalities are not going to contract with the OPP to get the proper standards of policing they require, because they have an option. What they could do is just have the OPP charge them on an on-call basis. In the township I live in I must tell you we have model citizens. We have very few offences going on. Occasionally, we've got somebody going through on the highway; we get a break-in from somewhere else and it happens here. The OPP respond sometimes — not always, but they respond. They're busy and they're underresourced. But our township council has the choice of not paying the $480 per household charge.

2000

That means we wouldn't get the OPP driving through, but they don't come through our township anyway. We don't have a built-up downtown area or a highly densely populated suburban area with them cruising through the streets. We don't get that anyway. But if ever we should have a major crime in our township, we're in big trouble. If we ever had a murder in our township and the hundreds and thousands of dollars of investigative work that would be entailed from that, we would be in real trouble and our ratepayers would be in real trouble. But many townships are now being faced with this decision and gambling on, if you will, their treasury and maybe even the safety of their citizens, because they don't know how many of our citizens are going to be able to pay the $300, $400, $500, up to $711 per household for safety.

Quite frankly, I don't think safety should be for sale. I don't think that safety protection should only be available to those who can afford it and that our poor neighbourhoods are going to be let go, like the inner-city cores of many major American cities have been let go over the last 30 years. That's just not the Ontario I believe in and that's not the Ontario I grew up in. I never expected that we would be getting to this time and this place where we might get to the point where communities could not afford proper basic policing but might have to gamble with the safety of their citizens and not contract to get the proper policing that is required. That's not the type of world we want to live in here. We pride ourselves, as Ontarians and Canadians, on having relatively safe communities.

I'd say to the viewing public out there that by and large this is a very safe country to live in. While yes, every day the newspaper is full of in some cases very spectacular offences that happen from time to time, by and large the vast majority of our citizens are safe and we are well served by our police departments. But our police departments have to be well-resourced. You can't keep cutting and cutting and cutting.

The secret of policing is having a lot of people in the community, on the ground, like it used to be, some people would say, in the old days when you had the presence of police, not necessarily even in their cars but on the beat, as they used to say, in the streets, in the stores, in the coffee shops. They joke about the police being in coffee shops. That's exactly where they should be. They should be in our stores, in the streets, in all the shops, talking to you and me, getting to know what's happening in the neighbourhood. Get them out of the isolation of their cars. Get more of them and get them into our communities. That's how you create safe communities.

That does cost money and I don't apologize for that. I think that's a core function of government, that public safety has to be up there with education and health care. There's no doubt about it, it's all part of community safety, just as health care is. It is as vitally important. It does cost money. There's no magic bullet. It just takes some effort and it does take resources.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Churley): Questions or comments?

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): On the comments made by my colleague from Timiskaming, I think two points are really important here. The government tends to forget that when we talk about security of our communities, the important point is that we need to put reliance on community policing. The police need to be tied into our communities in a very real way so they've got their ear to the ground and they understand what's happening in the community and with that information are first of all better able to have citizens partake and participate in making our community safer, but also for them to better understand what's going on.

One of the fears I have is that part of the effect of this government's downloading exercise and the cuts the government has made to various programs at Ministry of Community and Social services, at the Ministry of Health and whatever, is really adding and fuelling a stronger presence of criminal elements in our community. All members are here in Toronto during the week and on the weekend are back home in our ridings. You notice that in Toronto there are a lot more people on the streets. I'm not saying they're out celebrating and going shopping; we're talking about people who are out on the streets we never used to see there, making us feel a little more insecure about what happens in the community of Toronto.

The point I would make is that the government needs to understand that if you're serious about dealing with crime and you're serious about making our communities safer, you can bring all the bills you want to this House; in the end it comes down to economics. If people have jobs and people have hope and people have somewhere to go during the day, it's a lot easier to make our communities safe. That would be the first point, that the government needs to understand that community policing is really making sure that everybody in the community is plugged in.

On the issue of the OPP, downloaded costs to municipalities, in the six seconds I have left, that is yet to come home to roost to the Tory government. They don't understand what this means politically.

Mr Bill Grimmett (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): I'm pleased to make some comments on the remarks by the member for Timiskaming. I want to say, at the risk of hearing from my own colleagues later, I'm sure, that he is one of my favourite members, because he has a habit of sticking to the topic and he's very earnest in his remarks. Tonight he gave a very in-depth analysis of a lot of issues, some of them more on topic on Bill 102 and some of them not, but they certainly were in the general area of community crime issues and particularly community safety.

Of particular interest, his comments in regard to the issue of publicizing offenders' names were very well made. It was obvious that this member had read the bill in depth. He served on the committee and was involved in the discussions clause by clause and some of the changes that were brought about. As usual, his approach was not partisan; it was more a matter of trying to be practical and trying to assist the government in looking at some of the issues in community safety. I'm sure the minister will want to consider some of his recommendations in regard to community policing.

I know some of the issues he has raised in respect to township-by-township and municipality-by-municipality policing are also present in my riding, but I did think in his comments he may have sold the bill short a little bit in that this is a bill that is designed to bring into effect recommendations made by a coroner's jury. In that regard, it is one that's very much needed and one that's long overdue. It's one that focuses on public safety. It's not designed to be a huge get-tough bill; it is one that, as the minister said, is very practical in nature. But they were very good remarks.

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Prescott and Russell): I want to congratulate my colleague from Timiskaming. No wonder he's the critic for the Solicitor General. He talked about security or increasing the safety of our citizens in our communities; it is very important at this time. He has touched some points that should affect all the people in this province.

When we're saying that we are going to have some second-class citizens, when we look at what it is going to cost to get OPP service purchased by the municipalities — it varies from $106 to $711.84 per household — it's unbelievable. I'm sure the member just across the way mentioned that the Solicitor General will take a hard look at it. Let's hope he will, because I have all the figures here, how much it is going to cost for different ridings or different counties in our province. It varies too much. If I look at the district of Manitoulin, it's going to cost $360. If I look at the district of Muskoka, $203. It varies too much when I say the highest is $711. At the present time, the town of Smiths Falls has its own police force. The OPP submitted a quote after reviewing the services the municipality or the town will require and there's no way the OPP will be able to provide this service.

At the present time in my own riding I've seen people who have had break-ins being visited by the OPP three days after. I don't blame the OPP. It's because there are no resources available at the present time. When they say Prescott and Russell, the cost for Clarence and Rockland is $1.3 million. There's no way they're going to be —

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Further questions and comments.

2010

Mr Kormos: I too appreciated the contribution to this debate by the member for Timiskaming. I agree that he was quite focused in his comments, so much so that when I have the opportunity to speak in a few minutes, I'm going to paint perhaps a broader picture than my colleague from Timiskaming did. While he addressed the specifics of Bill 102 with a narrow focus, I quite frankly intend to put it into the larger picture.

One of the problems we've got here is that this bill is being touted as part of this whole law-and-order campaign on the part of this government. I think one should find that whole campaign a little questionable; in fact, one should regard it with some cynicism, and that is to say, is this government interested merely in exploiting some of the very real fears that are out there in a whole lot of communities among a whole lot of people at the expense of any real and direct attack on crime and criminal behaviour?

I think that's a question many Ontarians are asking increasingly as they see this government defunding police forces, as they see, as the member for Timiskaming pointed out, communities resorting to privatized policing, be it a particular neighbourhood or a particular business district, knowing full well that the inadequacy of police funding has left public police forces, municipal or regional police forces, incapable of responding appropriately to calls for their assistance.

This government has a lot of answers to give to a lot of valid questions about whether it has a real commitment to dealing with the serious problem of crime in our communities and the impact it has on families —

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Ramsay: I wish I could change the procedure of this House and surrender my time, but I know I can't, to a fellow member because I really would owe it the member for Sudbury, who I know had an important contribution to make to this particular bill that he wanted to put on the record. I just got so involved and interested in this bill that I didn't allow him some time. So I owe him that time another time because I know he's very concerned with community safety and is on top of those issues in Sudbury.

I appreciate the comments from the other members, commenting on my speech. It's nice when we can come together in this House and actually all agree on a bill. That doesn't happen all that often, but obviously in this case it's a concern we all share and the bill presents a remedy we all basically share also. While it's not perfect, I think it's what we need at this time and so therefore unreservedly we support it.

I think of many of the core functions that we are responsible for at the provincial level. Nothing can be as important as community safety. How our criminal justice system works, how our police interact with citizens in our community is a very important function of government, and in a society the way we're developing it becomes a more and more important function of government. We, as our responsibility, must ensure that we always endeavour to make sure that the men and women who risk their lives on a daily basis to protect all of us are properly supported, properly financed, so they can do the jobs to protect Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Kormos: As I indicated earlier this evening, the Solicitor General can expect support for this bill from every member of this caucus, the New Democrats, and I'm confident, as has been indicated by Liberal critic Mr Ramsay, the member for Timiskaming, he can expect their support for the bill as well.

I want to express my gratitude to Frances Lankin from Beaches-Woodbine and to Marion Boyd because they sat in on the committee for the two days the committee heard submissions and then dealt with clause-by-clause. I of course was in estimates with the Attorney General, putting questions to the Attorney General about the family support plan and Bill 82.

I suppose I'm especially grateful that it is the Solicitor General who's the sponsor of this bill. If it were, for instance, the Attorney General who was the sponsor of this bill, this bill would receive third reading and would still be sitting around for nine, 10 and 11 months without ever being utilized or applied, without any of its sections being given effect, as the Attorney General has of course, as you know, done with Bill 82 where the Attorney General talks a big game but simply can't deliver.

I'm grateful that it's the Solicitor General because I'm confident that the Solicitor General, with a far higher level of competence than the Attorney General, is going to ensure that once this bill receives third-reading passage, it's put into effect in relatively short order, very promptly.

Of course the Solicitor General and his colleague from Scarborough West, Jim Brown, paired up, teamed up on the introduction, the preliminary comments about the bill. It seems that the member for Scarborough West got sidetracked a little bit. The Solicitor General's interpretation of the impact of the bill I don't think anybody takes quarrel with.

There are a couple of things that should be noted: one in so far as this permits the Ministry of Correctional Services to release information about persons whose sentences perhaps are not over but who are being released on parole. Let's understand and point out, as did many of the commentators during the course of the one day of hearings, that we're dealing here with provincial institutions, so the persons about whom information is going to be given to the community are persons who have received custodial sentences of two years less a day. You're not going to find a large number of the serious and dangerous types of offenders who have been talked about in that category of people. You're going to find that will be the rarer occasions rather than the more common occasions.

The Change of Name Act: Not wanting people to avoid the burden of a criminal record by changing their name, who can quarrel with that? One also has to understand, however, that people can use any name they want. People don't have to undergo a formal change of name to adopt a nom de plume as such. Obviously, what this will do is cause people who are disinclined to use their real names to simply pursue other avenues or other ways of obtaining identification or drivers' licences under an assumed name. The fact is that changes of name have always been published in the Ontario Gazette in any event, so were always capable of being reviewed and being public matters.

Similarly with the power that's given to police. I suppose the one concern there is: There were some questions raised about this, in particular by Alan Borovoy, who made submissions to the committee. As you know, Alan Borovoy, highly regarded general counsel for the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, had some concerns about exactly what it is that's going to be released by way of information and on what basis, what criteria.

There had been the suggestion, a very good one, and for the life of me I don't know why the Solicitor General's ministry would not have adopted the proposition that Mr Borovoy made and that the New Democratic Party moved by way of amendment, because all this does is relieve the authorities from the sanctions or controls of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. That's all it does. It creates an exception to that particular piece of legislation, and not unimportantly, I understand. Example after example has been cited of a dangerous offender released into an unsuspecting or unaware community such that people can be victimized again.

2020

I ask at the same time — this where I think the Solicitor General may be playing the law-and-order card a little too strongly — how does the mere release of the information about that person protect the woman asleep in her bedroom, accessible through a balcony sliding door, from the rapist who is intent on committing another rape? I don't think that in itself carries with it a whole lot of protection. It's a little troublesome.

You should know that Mr Runciman was the beneficiary of some remarkable press recently. It was in the Toronto Star, of all places. Considering the things that hackers can do with the Internet and so on, it could have been some bright young minion in his bureaucracy who slipped this into the Star's computer on a late Sunday night, because he was the beneficiary of what I perceived as very complimentary press in the Toronto Star, with some shortcomings. Unlike his colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing — remember the story about him and the dog? What was it, Tory or Puffy? It was a Lhasa apso, I think. Here is the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who can't even bring himself to own a Canadian dog; he has to get a Lhasa apso. I suppose that would be like the Minister of Trade driving a Mazda or a Datsun. The article about the Solicitor General didn't have some of the warm, comfy things his colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing had. There was no Bob Runciman sleeping with his dog; maybe it was edited out. But it was an incredibly flattering article, especially in the context of the Toronto Star, which isn't exactly a pro-Tory newspaper by any stretch of the imagination.

Interjection: Who wrote it?

Mr Kormos: I looked, and it wasn't Christina Blizzard who wrote it; it was Jane Armstrong. As I say, I was quite impressed by it.

What it did dwell on was the Solicitor General as a law-and-order person, tough on crime, and no two ways about it. I suppose it was welcome press after the fracas at Camp Getaway, Camp Runaway, or the various other names that have been applied to it, where the staff were oh so kind as to leave a van at the exit door for these young offenders to drive away in.

I'm also told that the van contained a whole lot of the paraphernalia that was to be used for the opening ceremonies the next day: folding chairs and disposable glasses for the champagne. I'm told that the van was filled with all this paraphernalia to celebrate the grand opening the next day.

In the aftermath of that sorry affair, the Solicitor General at one point, with great frustration, publicly said: "You don't understand. These kids are hard to handle. They're an unruly bunch." Well, of course they are. They're young offenders. What are you going to do? Go raid some of our high schools and take all the Ontario scholars and put them in boot camp so you get kids who won't be unruly, won't be hard to handle, won't be unmanageable? These are kids who need supervision and need some direction.

The government, with its boot camp philosophy, its boot camp mentality, its exploitation of a belief, mythical, mind you, that there is an increase in crime — it was interesting with the Attorney General the other day in estimates. The Attorney General opened his comments by talking about the belief that crime is rising. He was very careful. It was a prepared speech. Of course I noted that: The Attorney General was very careful to talk about the belief that crime is rising. I said, "Attorney General, what's the reality?" The Attorney General conceded in the estimates committee that crime in fact, although not a dramatic decline, has been on a decline. I was concerned and troubled by a government that would want to exploit and perpetuate the myth rather than understand where the decline comes from and the wherefore and the why.

I suppose if you're really going to talk about crime in the community, you do things like — I remember that when they were Toronto city councillors, Barbara Hall and Marilyn Churley did community audits. They used community members, people in respective neighbourhoods. I'm told that Marilyn Churley and Barbara Hall — of course Barbara Hall is the mayor of Toronto now and Marilyn Churley is the member for Riverdale — took people on tours of their neighbourhoods, on tours of their communities, identifying areas that were perceived as being dangerous, where somebody might be more capable of being victimized, addressing some very basic things like the absence or presence of, let's say, street lighting.

So simple, so fundamental, yet at the same time what a wonderfully refreshing way to address the issue of crime. You're not talking about it after the fact then, are you? You're not talking about locking them up for however long after the deed is done, after the victim has been victimized, after the injury has been imposed, and sometimes very seriously. You're talking about a truly preventive approach to crime, one which is far more productive at the end of the day than any number of boot camps, than any number of tough methods.

A comment was made earlier — and I know it has great spin — by the speaker who succeeded the Solicitor General, who said, "By God, if the feds are going to be soft on crime, it's up to the province to make up for their deficiencies." We've heard that before from these guys. Once again, in those same estimates a couple of weeks ago, the Attorney General came in talking a big line about the Young Offenders Act. I very specifically recall the Attorney General saying, "We need changes to the sections of the Young Offenders Act which concern the taking of statements from young offenders," because the hurdles there, the incredible barriers that exist to the police were such that too many young offenders were beating their raps and were walking away because the statements ended up being not admissible and the young offender ended up never getting tried on the merits of the case.

I thought, "That's an interesting proposition," because I remember back to the beginnings of the Young Offenders Act, when the police and all sorts of people had problems understanding how far one could go as an interrogator, as an interviewer, as a police officer, and yes, there were occasions were statements were ruled inadmissible because the rules hadn't been followed by the interrogating police officer, and you had courts of appeal interpreting and analysing particular pieces of legislation, especially as they applied to statement-taking, but it seemed to me that in relatively short order the problems were resolved. The police learned what was expected of them. A whole lot of people were resistant to the legislated rules for statement-taking, not that they were all that different from the traditional procedures, but everybody adapted.

So I said to the Solicitor General — no, the Attorney General. Sorry, Solicitor General, because to even mention you in the same sentence as the Attorney General would do you a great injustice. I said to the Attorney General, who was on his law-and-order campaign, "Tell me what it is about the Young Offenders Act and the sections that govern the taking of statements" — a confession; that's what we're talking about — "that need changing." I asked, "Is it the requirement that a young offender be advised of his or her right to retain and instruct counsel without delay?" and the Attorney General said no. I said: "Okay. Is it the requirement that a young offender be advised of their right to have a parent or some other adult present?" The Attorney General said no. I wasn't going to embarrass anybody by suggesting that maybe the Attorney General advocated beating the daylights out of young kids to lure confessions out of them, but that in its own right would make a confession or admission inadmissible.

So I said, "Attorney General, please, exactly what part of the Young Offenders Act is it that you would want to see changed?" The poor Attorney General, with some — it wasn't quite resignation, but with some frustration, said, "I'm not really sure of exactly what sections."

2030

It left me with the distinct impression that the Attorney General really doesn't have any specific — he talked a big game about going to the feds and leaning on them and getting the Young Offenders Act amended so statements could be more readily taken. The Attorney General doesn't know what he's talking about. He's playing the YOA card; he's playing the fear-of-crime card.

None of us should ever tolerate crime or the prospect of crime. I don't think there's anybody in this Legislature, anybody in this province, who doesn't think we should be tough on crime. But the real question is, how do you go about doing it? Do you deal with it after the fact? Do you seek out longer and longer and longer sentences? One of the considerations in sentencing for many people — it seems to me that some judges, if not all judges, take it into consideration — is the preponderance of a particular type of criminal activity. Heck, then shoplifting should draw the longest sentences, because it's probably the single most frequently committed crime. If you're going to use imprisonment as deterrence, well, by God, let's really sock it to shoplifters.

Of course, that's an absurd proposition. Everybody knows there are far more serious offences, although not with the same frequency as shoplifting, but which carry with them far more cost to the community, to individuals, to the victims and, sadly, to the families of those victims.

You were here last Thursday, Speaker, so you recall that we dealt with a Tory private member's bill, the issue of a week —

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: No, that was the boating. We dealt with that bill too, that you lose your driver's licence upon impaired driving of a boat.

We talked about a victims of crime week. It was acknowledged that it was an entirely symbolic gesture, but it served — I recall listening to the other comments. One of my own very short comments was to the effect that upon having this victims of crime week, let's use it as an opportunity to reflect on, yes, the tragedy of violent crime and the tragedy it imposes upon the victims, their families and upon even the communities those people are from. But let's also start talking about ways we address crime in our community.

Once again, I go back to boot camps, privatized boot camps, of course. I'm told, and I don't know whether it's still going on, that the Ontario taxpayer is investing a whole lot of money in the new Tory boot camp up Barrie way, because they've had to call in correctional officers from the Ministry of Correctional Services to sort of guard the private sector guards to make sure that the private sector guards don't get lured into permitting getaways, like was done the night before the scheduled grand opening of Mr Runciman's boot camp up Barrie way.

The government says the way to go is tougher jail sentences, longer jail sentences, more of them probably, and privatize; let the private sector do it. I tell you, I disagree with the Solicitor General when it comes to the prospect of privately run jails. I think it's far too important a program and institution in our community to have them run on a for-profit basis. I think the experiences at Camp Getaway a couple of weeks ago illustrate that oh so clearly.

I think we had also better be concerned and understand that the boot camp, the jail, the tough punishment comes only after the crime has already been committed. It comes only after the hurt and the pain and the injury have already been imposed.

Let me tell you this: I think an investment in junior kindergarten, knowing the benefits it brings, would probably go a lot further in preventing crime at the end of the day than two or three or four times that investment in get-tough boot camps, which occur after the fact. Yet this government had no qualms in abolishing junior kindergarten here in the province of Ontario: another attack on kids. What's new? We've witnessed two-years-plus of it. This government had no qualms about abolishing junior kindergarten, with the incredible benefits that are attached to it.

This government had no qualms about abandoning your sons and daughters who aspire to post-secondary education, because it has done that with its new tuition increases and the cost it's handed down. That doesn't mean kids won't be going to university. Rich kids are going to be going to university, but not the children of some of those people I was with last Thursday night, some of those 600-plus CUPE workers down at the plumbers' hall who gathered to prepare some strategy around Bill 136. The people who are cleaning staff, the people who are nursing aides in seniors' homes and people who are custodian staff in schools, their kids are the ones who are going to be denied the right to go to university. I think some investment in ensuring universal access to post-secondary education may well go a lot further to preventing crime in this province of ours than any number of high-priced private boot camps, which have some popular appeal.

People don't like the proposition of criminals who are sentenced to jail being coddled, if you will. The Solicitor General showed those inmates. He took away the $10 and then the $5 allowance they received each week to buy things like toiletries and cigarettes and so on. Mind you, he didn't care about the fact that this would make it all that much more difficult for correctional officers to police those facilities because of the new underground markets, the black markets, and the potential for thievery and extortion that this would generate in a jail, where modest things become valuable commodities, where a package of cigarettes can acquire a significant value.

Quite frankly, I much prefer the attitude of people like Marilyn Churley and Barbara Hall when they said it isn't enough simply to deal with crime after the fact. They weren't alone in this endeavour. They relied on and involved the members of their community. That's the kind of people they are. That's the kind of person Barbara Hall is. She doesn't dictate from on top. Rather, she seeks out from among the grass roots people in neighbourhoods and people in her community to become involved in that type of partnership.

I suppose it's a partnership that she was involved with back when the now member for Riverdale and Barbara Hall were out doing these community audits that I read about at the time and that I've been told about since by a number of people who remember them. This evening alone, I spoke with a woman who had been involved in these, who understood that this was a community response, a grass-roots response to the problem of prospective crime and who understood that this is the kind of leadership that Barbara Hall gave and continues to give and that from time to time the member for Riverdale gives. I quite like that approach.

I mentioned early on about how grateful I was that this was the Solicitor General's bill and not the Attorney General's bill. You've got to talk about the ability of this government — any government at any given point in time, but in this case, this government — to administer the responsibilities that are given to it. Although Bill 102 — I was thinking of Bill 82, which is why I almost said 182. I think I might mention Bill 82 in just a second.

Bill 102 is a modest piece of legislation. People earlier today said: "Here you've got eight, nine pages of legislation. How are you going to talk about that for an hour?" I was worried that perhaps I might find myself without further comment. But then I understood that Bill 102, although a narrow issue in itself, is really part of this broader approach, and a failed approach, I tell you, by this government in its dramatic but ineffective handling of the issue of so-called law and order.

2040

The member for Timiskaming spoke about policing. Let me speak about policing for a little while myself. Down in Niagara region we've got one of the largest police forces in all of Ontario, and I know the Solicitor General is familiar with that police force. He has been down there at events that I've been at. I've got to tell you, I have the highest regard for the Niagara Regional Police Force, the highest regard for the women and men who serve in it, who protect their community and the people in that community.

I also have a whole lot of concern, though, and the Solicitor General should too. All the amendments in the world to the Change of Name Act aren't going to resolve the problem that policing has had foisted upon it, the crisis that has been imposed upon police forces across this province by this government. This is what bothers me. This government talks a big game about law and order, but when it comes time to deliver, we get oh so very little. We've witnessed, and continue to witness, declines in resourcing of police forces, the Niagara Regional Police Force among them.

The member for Timiskaming made but one reference to a scenario down in St Catharines. He was very careful not to blame the Niagara Regional Police, and I'll join him in that 100%. You can't fault the cops down in Niagara for what have become increasingly longer response times.

The fact is that policing is a labour-intensive activity. That's the big-ticket item, and I don't begrudge police officers their salaries. I'm concerned and I hope the Solicitor General soon will address — I'm told, Solicitor General, that the Ontario Provincial Police have been waiting some months now for their contract negotiations to bear some fruit, for them to see some results of the negotiations with this government. They've dropped considerably, they tell me, in where they rank in the province in terms of salaried police officers. One mentioned down to around 27th in the ranking.

Solicitor General, surely — like the Jane Armstrong article in the Star says, you're a law-and-order guy. Gosh, was it one of the Liberal members who said — let me see what it says right here. "He's a passionate member who stands up for what he believes." That's what Chris Stockwell said about him. I'm not sure that Chris Stockwell would say that about all the members of the Conservative caucus. I'm not sure that he would say that about all the members of the Conservative cabinet. Don't forget, "He's a passionate person." I'm not sure he'd even say that about the Premier, but he says it about Bob Runciman, the Solicitor General.

They speak of him in glowing terms. They speak of him as being most committed to policing, and I'm inclined to believe it. I've known the Solicitor General from when he was a critic over here, when he was a member of the third party. I've known him for a long time and I have no doubt that he is no more pleased about the failure for there to be a contract with the Ontario Provincial Police in this province than I am or than OPP officers are.

But the sad reality is that at the end of the day it's Mike Harris and the backroom boys — I suppose an occasional woman but, by and large, boys — who are calling the shots. Because of an attitude of a Premier, you've got in some respects a lame duck Sol Gen here, one who means well and would like to do his very best, but a Solicitor General who gets his marching orders very much from the Premier's office.

You've got Niagara Regional Police officers increasingly being reduced in numbers rather than increased as they ought to be because of the growing population, because of the fact that it's a border community which has all the problems that border communities have: incidents of illicit drug trafficking which again are related to being in a border community. There's the casino in Niagara Falls, and although there are some police officers dedicated to the casino, probably the biggest single spinoff from the casino has not been the trickle-down by way of business but has been the crime that flows. It's the type of criminal activity that's attracted by casinos and as well by the big crowds that casinos like that one attract.

The Niagara Regional Police are becoming increasingly concerned about lengthier and lengthier response times. In many instances now they have pared away the level of services they provide so there are certain things to which the police simply won't respond. If it's a matter, like you heard about, of the octogenarian woman whose groceries melted after being involved in a fender-bender — and it took the police three hours to respond — in many of those types of cases you don't even expect police to respond. In fact the Niagara Regional Police will tell you, "Go home and call it into the office so you can get an incident number you can use with your insurance claim." Basically, the police are merely accommodating you. They have no intention of pursuing an investigation, simply because there are not enough police officers to go around.

Let me tell you what one senior police officer told Niagara region approximately a year ago, that is, that police forces like Niagara region have been forced into outright mistruths with the public. For months and months at a time, for instance, break-and-enters simply aren't investigated. If the victim calls up and says, "What's happening?" they'll be assured by somebody in CIB that the file is in the course of being investigated or examined, but all that is is a little bit of fluff designed to put the people off, designed to let them think that somehow something is happening with their break-and-enter file, but in fact nothing is.

Do you think the criminals don't know that? You bet your boots they know it. Criminals down in Niagara know that a break-and-enter is unlikely to ever undergo a thorough police investigation. Attendance at the scene of a break-and-enter is becoming more and more difficult, and that's an initial attendance. Police know that you blow on some fingerprint powder, and as often as not, they do it just for public relations with the homeowner, so the homeowner feels good about thinking there's a television-style investigation taking place.

Again, I tell you, the criminals know it. As often as not, if there's a resolution to a series of break-and-enters, it's because a confession was lured out of one of the parties, who then, for better or worse, turned in all of his cohorts in crime. The police have acknowledged publicly that they are so stretched in terms of their time that investigative work is becoming scarcer and scarcer. That's in addition to these protracted response times. That's not what the public had in mind when they voted for this government. I think they were sold a bill of goods. This government, once again, talks a big game about law and order, but at the end of the day simply doesn't deliver.

In this case, it's not bad legislation, it's fine legislation. It's fine to good, but how much it's going to do to prevent crime in Ontario is very, very questionable. What good does it do to publish the name of a paedophile if you don't have police officers in a position to respond to a telephone call identifying that particular paedophile in the area of, let's say, a school yard or a playground? What good does it do to have the public know who that person is if the police don't have the resources?

The peculiar thing is that both the Solicitor General and his colleague from Scarborough somewhere, Jim Brown, talked about giving the police the tools they need to protect our society, to protect our community. The fact is, this government has been either breaking the tools or taking away the tools the police need to protect our communities. Cops know it, members and citizens of communities across this province know it and, worst of all, the criminals know it.

2050

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Well, they do. They know increasingly that there are days during the week when you have so few police officers out on the road, you've got huge areas of the Niagara region with literally a couple or a few police officers available to be dispatched to an incident. Again, it's not a big secret. The police know it; they know it's a problem. The public know it; they know it's a problem. And yes, the criminals know it, and for them it's like a holiday.

This is not an environment that discourages crime. This government is creating an environment that I am convinced will encourage crime, will facilitate crime, where with all the patch-up in the world Bill 102 is not going to undo the serious damage they have done.

Let's talk about the real crimes. I indicated my pleasure that it was the Solicitor General who had carriage of this bill and not the Attorney General. Here's our Attorney General, the chief law officer of the province, and what kind of message does this government give out? On the one hand, it wants to talk law and order. What's it saying to the scofflaws who don't support their kids, the defaulters? What is the government saying to them by its abandonment of the family support plan and by its failure to implement Bill 82 — you know, more tools?

This language is consistent; it pops up over and over again. You had the Minister of Education and the Minister of Municipal Affairs talking about toolboxes and giving the municipalities tools. We're starting to get an idea of what they're talking about as we witness Bill 136, notwithstanding what so far appears to be some major capitulation by the Minister of Labour to the point where, my God, I read in the Toronto Sun, in Linda Leatherdale's column, that there are some right-wing groups calling for Witmer's head, that's she has abandoned some of these major corporate cartels with her capitulation on Bill 136.

This government has found itself in a very peculiar position. You know the groups I'm talking about, the little groups — I won't use any adjectives, but what are some of the groups?

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): Ontarians for Responsible Government.

Mr Kormos: Ontarians for Responsible Government, the billboard people.

Mr Martin: The Canadian national coalition —

Mr Kormos: Those things, yeah. They're calling for her head. They feel they've been betrayed, that Elizabeth Witmer has capitulated in the face of the promise by organized labour. I found that more than a little interesting.

But in any event, we found out that the toolbox, the tools for municipalities, are still very much going to be in Bill 136. If you listened to the Minister of Labour today addressing the committee, her wealthy Bay Street friends are going to be okay at the end of the day; no two ways about it. I mention that because of the language being used by the Solicitor General and by his colleague the member for Scarborough West. They talk about this Bill 102 being the tools the police need to protect our community, to protect our society.

The tools that cops need are adequate resources so they can properly staff their shifts and the platoons working those shifts, Solicitor General. Those are the tools that police officers need. The tools that police officers need mean having adequate staffing so that police can respond promptly to a request for assistance or to the report of a crime or to a crisis wherein life and limb could well be imperilled, so that they can respond promptly and can respond in sufficient numbers that their safety is being protected, that they are not being drawn into situations where they are vulnerable and become at risk of attack on themselves. Those are the tools they need.

Bill 102, while it's a bill that warrants — we don't want criminals changing their names under the Change of Name Act and then carrying on the rest of their lives without carrying the burden of their criminal record. Of course not. We don't want what are truly dangerous offenders being released into the community without those communities being aware.

Hearken back, though. I got a call from out of province last week about the Victims' Bill of Rights. Again, this is your colleague the Attorney General's Victims' Bill of Rights. I cited it as a laudable piece of legislation. I think you'll agree with me, Speaker. But I said it was mentioned far more frequently in the House in the context of the violation of it than in the context of adherence to it.

Again, it was so slick. It was all part of the law-and-order stuff. Yet there have been more occasions, and specifically the member for St Catharines, Jim Bradley, and I have occasion after occasion to bring to the Attorney General's attention violations of the Victims' Bill of Rights, which includes a requirement that in the course of prosecution and/or resolving charges with an accused, the victim have an inherent role.

The prospect of advising a victim that their assaulter, their assailant, is going to be released back into the community isn't in itself repugnant. What is noteworthy is that, just as with the Victims' Bill of Rights, there is no recourse for the victim who wasn't appropriately advised even when it's a right without a remedy. What we have here with Bill 102 vis-à-vis the permission given to police services and to the Ministry of Correctional Services to release information about a perpetrator, an assailant, would appear, just as the Victims' Bill of Rights does, to create some rights for the victim, but they are rights that are accorded a victim without any remedy. That is to say, how does the victim ensure enforcement of that obligation to him or her by the police authorities or by the corrections authorities?

I suspect we are liable to find Bill 102 — I shouldn't say "suspect." I fear that we may find it referred to, just as with the Victims' Bill of Rights, as often in the context of it not being adhered to or being misused or abused as not.

One of the other questions that came up was the criteria that will be used. One of the things that bothered me was that Alan Borovoy made some very sound suggestions to the committee, which were then reflected in a motion presented by way of an amendment by the New Democrats. That is that there be the utilization of a judge's order before information is contemplated being released by the police services boards or by correctional services, that there be a judicial review. This was at the suggestion of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. It was presented by way of an amendment and turned down flat by the parliamentary assistant who represented the minister at the hearings.

This, I should tell you, Speaker, is the new parliamentary assistant. The parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General used to be Gary Carr, the member for Oakville South, but you'll recall that back during the Bill 84 hearings, when this government was putting it to firefighters here in the province, Gary Carr, who I've known for almost as long as I've known the Solicitor General — Gary Carr is one of the bright lights among a pretty dim group over in those Tory back benches, yet what happens to Gary Carr? Again, he had been the Solicitor General's parliamentary assistant. Gary Carr found himself being a little too concerned about the nature and the direction of Tory government policy. I'm not going to repeat to you the things Gary Carr had to say about the Premier and the government. They've been said often enough. In fact, they've been published often enough. Gary Carr didn't say them before he got ousted as the Solicitor General's parliamentary assistant; he said them afterwards. Gary Carr, who unlike some of his fellow ousted-out people kept his comments entirely within caucus but, I should tell you, during the Bill 84 hearings was showing some attention to the firefighters who were coming, found himself out, replaced by Bob Wood.

2100

I suppose I have nothing personal against Mr Wood, but read the transcript of the committee hearings. It's two days: one day of submissions, one day of clause-by-clause. I have nothing personal against Mr Wood but, I tell you, as the parliamentary assistant he wasn't quite as responsive as he could have been to some of the questions and certainly I don't think was anywhere near as effective as Gary Carr would have been had Gary Carr still been the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General.

I mentioned Linda Leatherdale in the Toronto Sun and her reporting that some of these groups, the billboard people of one ilk or another, are looking for Liz Witmer's head. You should have heard what some of the Tory backbenchers were saying last Thursday afternoon. They clearly hadn't been briefed about the announcement, or at least the specifics of the announcement, that the Minister of Labour and her Premier, Mike Harris, were going to be making in the House. Some of the Tory backbenchers were just hopping. I heard them. By God, they figured they had really been sold out. They were worried: "What are we going to tell our small gaggle of supporters back home now? We promised them we were going to take Sid Ryan out behind the barn and give him a darned good thrashing." Some of them have been saying that to their constituents back home, and all of a sudden their Minister of Labour capitulates, says: "No way. I ain't taking on public sector unions. There are just too many people, and those people are too committed."

They are like the people I talked to at the plumbers' hall last Thursday night, wonderful people: custodians from schools, people working in health care, people working in transfer-payment agencies, a lot of them new Canadians, immigrant people who have taken it for a whole lifetime and have decided they aren't going to take it any more, least of all from these guys. And Liz Witmer, it appears, had to back down. I'm not sure yet. It remains to be seen. We'd still like to see the amendments.

Again, it's unfortunate. There was one amendment put to the committee on Bill 102 which I think would have provided the penultimate safeguard. What they've done now is they have left it up to local police services boards to determine the standards or the guidelines by which police departments will gauge themselves when it comes to deciding what information to release, and about whom. One of the concerns I had initially and that my colleagues certainly had and that a whole lot of people out in the community had was that the power as it was in the bill before amended was a pretty blanket power that could have included the power to release information about victims. Think about it, the prospect of a victim's location, whereabouts, personal data being released. Again, that wasn't the spirit of the bill; I understand that. But the door was wide open.

Now they've delineated and set a schedule for disclosure by both correctional services and police. They have set out an eight-point requirement that will control somewhat the reasons for the release of a particular bit of information. But they turned down the prospect of using a member of the judiciary as a protection of, I suppose, individual and public rights. The process as suggested was as simple as this: It was a matter of going to a judge, the way one would go to a judge for a search warrant — a search warrant is as good an example as any — and saying, "This is the information we want to release, and this is why," and having a judge weigh that against the act to determine whether or not that is what the act was intended to do.

I was looking at that Toronto Star article again about the Solicitor General.

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: No, we're okay. I hadn't highlighted any of it.

There was a malcontent out in the Brockville area. That's where the Solicitor General comes from. I've been to his community and I like the waterfront especially, some of the old stone buildings there. But there's one fellow who looks like he — he's trying to trash Runciman; he really is, a fellow called McKenna. No wonder he lost the election, if that's as good as he can come up with in terms of vitriol. I'll wait till after, but if that's the level of energy McKenna used in attacking Runciman during the last provincial election, so much for the Liberal candidate's prospects out in Brockville. Heck, I could have said nastier things about the Solicitor General without even having known him. But here you've got a fellow, McKenna, who is still fighting the election.

Again, I suppose every time a new government gets elected, one hopes that things can be done differently. This government has demonstrated very quickly that it isn't intent on moving forward, but is prepared to turn the hands of time back to what it sees as the good old days of maybe the 1940s or 1950s, and you know what I mean, when only the rich got to university, when only the rich got health care, when women knew their place. The government sees those as the good old days, the 1940s and 1950s, when the sick could get medical treatment only if they had money.

I was hoping, I suppose, however naïvely — and I can see that with this government it would be naïve to hope — that maybe finally there would be a government that would embark on some true tripartite, if you will, committee activities where they didn't weight up the committee like they have, committee after committee. They did it on Bill 102 — mind you, at the end of the day not with some of the same incredibly serious consequences that have attached to so many other pieces of legislation for the general public and general good.

We, and quite frankly OPSEU did too, Leah Casselman and correctional officers here in Ontario, had offered from day one to work with this government, any government, to talk about corrections and to do it in a very public way and perhaps to bring in some expertise and talk about places where changes can and should be made. The real issue is, one, hoping that as few people as possible have to be sent to jail. The second one, and the Solicitor General knows this and has articulated it himself, is hoping you reduce the recidivism rate; in other words, hoping that jail has had a meaningful impact, should an offender commit a serious enough crime to warrant going there. I would have welcomed and this party would have welcomed and would have participated in a very non-partisan way in a very public and candid discussion about corrections in the province of Ontario: where changes had to be made, if any, and how.

The government doesn't do things that way. Oh, it sent its three musketeers on a little trip to New York City to examine — please. We've got to go to New York City to get lessons on policing? It really boggles the mind a little bit. Or, quite frankly, lessons on crime control: That was a weird one. I have my own views about that and the wherefore and the why of that little junket. I'll not share them here. I may never share them with the public, because — just because.

2110

The other issue, though, is that this government actually exploits the mythology of increasing crime when in fact they're forced to agree that crime rates have dropped, albeit by small percentages, by small numbers. Why won't they have an open and honest discussion about crime and the causes of crime and maybe some innovative or creative ways of reducing the rate of crime before the fact, not after the fact, not with mega-jails where offenders are warehoused and where they become yet more skilled criminals upon their release, but examining the whole issue of real rehabilitation or conducting the type of exercise Barbara Hall and Marilyn Churley, both as councillors for Toronto city council, did — it must have been a heck of a long time ago, but when they were both city councillors — when they did community audits, taking a look at what helps to make safer communities? To me, those seem like much sounder investments.

One wonders what role the Solicitor General took in cabinet on the issue of the abandonment of junior kindergarten, because we know there is all sorts of strong data — the data's there; argue with it if you want — talking about youngsters that had JK and how they were more inclined to complete their high school years. Come on, Solicitor General. Youngsters who are more inclined to complete high school, to go to high school even, are less inclined to find themselves in conflict with the criminal justice system, less inclined to find themselves involved in some of the rather serious crimes that I acknowledge young people are involved in. You've got to be from Mars not to know that's happening.

But there's nothing about this government's approach that can give any of us any assurance that the rate of crime is going to be reduced. Will it get tougher with offenders? It may well; I don't know. Will that have an effect on recidivism? I think not, because the American experience says very specifically that merely getting tough doesn't address the issue. When we've got escalating youth unemployment that continues, in a whole lot of this province, to be well into the double-digit figures; when we've got young people for whom the door is being slammed because of the tuition rate increases by this government, this government's desire that only the kids of rich families go to university and college; when we've got a government that won't look at crime and criminality and talk about ways of addressing it I suppose at the community level; when we've got families under attack because we've got a government here that doesn't care enough about kids and their moms to have an Attorney General with sufficient competence to get an FSP up and running or, even more so, to implement his 10 tough tools for enforcement of family support plan orders, I think you've got a government that's merely talking a big game, putting as much spin as it can and wanting to talk tough, but delivering zero.

We're going to support Bill 102, because in its own small way it will catch the occasional person. We've heard examples cited about people who are dropping through the cracks, and we're going to stop that. But Bill 102 does not address the reality of crime; it doesn't address the reality of victims of crime. Bill 102, while it may play well to the law-and-order theme, is but a scratch on the surface. I think this government had better be prepared to start talking honestly and —

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member's time has expired. Questions and comments?

Mr Galt: That was certainly entertaining. I listened very carefully to the member for Welland-Thorold speaking on, I thought, Bill 102, but it was rarely that he was on topic in making reference to it. I followed his talk quite a bit, about surprise announcements on Bill 136 and where some of the Conservatives were at that time. He then talked about Brockville and the Liberal candidate that Mr Runciman was running against. I don't care whether it was a good Liberal or a poor Liberal; Mr Runciman is going to win hands down every time. And then he talked about the good old days. The good old days you were describing didn't sound so good; they sounded like kind of nasty old days, the way you were putting it forward. You talked about trips to New York City. You talked about JK quite a bit; that had nothing to do with Bill 102. But you did lead that into serious crime, and I thought that was kind of close to being on topic. Then you talked about kids from rich families. Then you even wound up with the family support plan.

You notice how much I was following your speech. It had nothing to do with Bill 102 except on rare occasions. It's interesting that in Bill 102, when dangerous offenders are being released, it's very important that notification is being made to the community. I don't think our friend from Welland-Thorold ever even touched on that part, the disclosure of information, and I think this is pretty important, that police services boards can develop policies, come up with regulations as to the nature of information that will be disclosed and to whom that information will be disclosed and under what circumstances.

I think it is high time we had that in place. It has been far too long that various criminals — maybe we think or they think their time has been fairly served. However, I think it is only reasonable that people in the community know when they return to the community so they can at least be forewarned.

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): I want to compliment the member for Welland-Thorold for his, as always, diverse remarks, a member who, no one can dispute, cares very much about what goes on in the Legislature and about a lot of the issues and manages to get them into any speech.

I want to let the members know that I support Bill 102 as well, as does our caucus. This is a good first step. There are some concerns about the actual execution of this bill in terms of the registrar general and the Solicitor General sharing information. I think the system is not yet set up in terms of the name change realities, and we have some concerns based on previous experience with programs that the government has tried to set up and hasn't put in place. But we are supportive of this bill.

I also want to use this opportunity to make reference to a letter relating to this issue that was recently sent by the Northwestern Ontario Women's Decade Council to the Solicitor General. The women's decade council is a non-partisan, volunteer-based organization composed of members of district women's groups in our area who are very concerned about a number of issues and present priorities, including violence against women and women's economic issues.

They wrote that they're very concerned about many of the aspects of the victims' crisis assistance and referral services, including issues around training, confidentiality and accountability. A general concern they expressed related to the generic design of the program to be applied to all victims of crime. Specific concerns included, among others, the use of volunteers in the area of physical and sexual assault cases. Many of these situations, they point out, are extremely dangerous and potentially life-threatening to the victims and the individuals intervening at the time of the incidents and they continue to remain dangerous for lengthy periods of time. The use of volunteers for this perilous front-line work concerns them, and I wanted to express concern on behalf of the decade council and hope the minister will be replying to them in the near future.

2120

Mr Martin: I want to congratulate the member for Welland-Thorold for a very thoughtful and reasoned presentation here this evening. It's not his typical presentation; usually he's very impassioned and speaks with some authority and you can feel the force of his argument in the way he presents. Tonight it was a different approach, but it speaks to the depth he brings to issues of this nature in this House.

I just want to comment on a couple of things. I think we need to focus sometimes on the people making the presentations. The member for Welland-Thorold is not known as a politician who falls in line lock, stock and barrel behind any ideology or leadership group. I think he showed that when he was a member of the government I was part of from 1990 to 1995. So I would suggest that people listen to what he has to say because there's an air of authority and integrity that comes with his very person.

The other point I want to comment on is the point he made about this piece of legislation not going, in any significant way, to reduce the amount of crime that's out there in our communities. This piece of legislation, even though it has some things we can support and folks around the House will support, is in fact another wallpapering of a larger agenda this government is imposing on the people of Ontario that is at the end of the day going to cause us more problems than it solves.

For example, when you push people into poverty in the way this government is pushing people into poverty, as a result you get a rise in the level of crime as people try to find the means to sustain themselves. In the September 8 copy of the Catholic Register, a newspaper some of you across the way will read because I know you've written letters to the editor, it says, "Welfare reform ghettoizes the poor." That creates more violence.

Mr Jack Carroll (Chatham-Kent): It's always a pleasure to comment on a speech made by the member for Welland-Thorold, former key cabinet member in the Bob Rae government, who regales us with his insights. He didn't say much about Bill 102 other than that he and his caucus endorse it completely, so I can't comment on his comments on Bill 102.

However, I would like to set the record straight on a couple of other things he did say. He made a comment that this government exploits the mythology of increasing crime. To the OPP officer in Chatham who was recently beaten up by two thugs on his way home from work there's no mythology about the increase in crime. The women and children who are victimized brutally by crime don't like to hear us speak about the mythology of increasing crime. I think that was a poor choice of words on his part.

He also went on and said that our government has no qualms about abolishing junior kindergarten. What an absurd comment to make. We have not abolished junior kindergarten. All we have done, and he knows full well what we have done, is that we have said that junior kindergarten will be funded exactly the same way as any other grade. I don't believe that is abolishing junior kindergarten.

He also said this government was only interested in the kids of rich families going to university and college, another totally absurd comment. I'm sure he knows full well that in 1997-98, $1.7 billion will be paid out in student loans to students in Ontario, about the same as was paid out in 1996-97. That's $1.7 billion. Student loans are not given to children of rich families

I just wanted to make sure the member for Welland-Thorold had the record straightened out on those issues.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr Kormos: I'm pleased, and I suspect the Tory caucus should be pleased, that the member for Northumberland is a veterinarian, because when I hear this porcine squealing going on over there, they may well need his services. It could be a matter not of, "Is there a doctor in the House," but, "Is there a veterinarian in the House?"

The member for Northumberland is over there ready to accommodate.

Let's talk about these attempts to distract attention. I understand that my speaking style isn't one that endears me to the Tories. The minute it does, I'm going to readjust my speaking style. The fact is that I'm here to say to them things that people in Welland-Thorold and Niagara, and quite frankly in a whole lot of other parts of the province, would like to be able to say to them if they were blessed with the opportunity I have. I am telling you the things I have been able to say to them tonight about Bill 102 are the sorts of things a whole lot of folks out there would want to say, and that is that it's fine to talk a big game about law and order, but you've got to deliver.

All the talk in the world about law and order, all the Bill 102s — relax, we're supporting it — mean diddly squat when you call the cops at 2 in the morning and the dispatcher says, "We'll try to have somebody there in an hour or an hour and a half because we're so short-staffed tonight that we've got one or two police officers out dealing with a serious traffic accident where there's been bodily injury and there's only one other police officer left," and he or she is way the heck over on the other side of the region and is expecting a call now. All the law and order —

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Maybe we should declare a week. Let's declare a week.

Mr Kormos: Yes, you can have all the police weeks you want; it ain't going to solve the problem of this government's attack on communities, its defunding of policing and imperilling police officers and citizenry in the process.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Grimmett: In the time remaining I'd like to make a few brief comments on Bill 102, and I think perhaps I'll be able to stay on topic. Maybe the people at home who have been watching this evening will see that, like the member for Timiskaming, I have read the bill and I will keep my comments to Bill 102. It's too bad the member for Timiskaming isn't here because the story I want to tell on Bill 102 has to do with the time I spent in Timiskaming riding. That's where I started my legal career as an articling student and it actually ties in with Bill 102.

What is surprising is that back in 1981, when I was in Kirkland Lake, I had a case as an articling law student on the Change of Name Act. I went before a judge. In those days you had to prepare an affidavit on behalf of the applicant and go before a judge and you had to give the reasons in the affidavit for why you needed your name changed. The client I had at that time was a nice young lady who had a reason — I can't even remember why she needed her name changed. In those days, the Change of Name Act was about a one-page act.

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): Because she became your wife?

Mr Grimmett: No, she didn't become my wife. But the affidavit I put in indicated she had a criminal record. When I went before the judge — and if the member for Timiskaming were here he would know Judge Bernstein because I believe he's still a sitting judge in Haileybury — he said: "Counsel, your client has a criminal record. Does the Solicitor General's office approve of this application for a change of name?"

Being the bold young counsel I was and having read the act, I said: "Your Honour, that's not covered in the act. It's not necessary for me to answer the question."

Well, I got about a 10-minute tirade from Judge Bernstein, who insisted that I go down the hall. He held court up while I went down the hall. The Haileybury courthouse is a huge courthouse that had about one room that was actually being used, kind of like this building at times.

So I went down to the library, got the Change of Name Act, brought it back, read the entire act to the judge, and of course he couldn't believe the act did not require that a person with a criminal record would have to get the change of name approved by some government authority. He took it upon himself, over my objections, to require that I contact the Solicitor General's office, find out if they had any objection to the application for a change of name, and that I submit an affidavit in my own name indicating they had no objection. As it turned out, I contacted someone in the ministry and they did some kind of check on the person. It was a very minor offence, I think it was shoplifting, that the person had committed —

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): From a Canadian Tire store?

Mr Grimmett: Who knows? Maybe with a shoplifting record there were victims out there who objected to the application. In any event, I returned to the courtroom a week or two later with my client in tow, produced the affidavit, and the judge, who I think had done the proper thing even though it was not covered in the act, indicated he felt more secure granting the order and giving the change of name.

I wonder how many times that has occurred in courtrooms in other jurisdictions in Ontario, where a judge has believed it's necessary for the public to have some comment on a person changing their name when they have a criminal record.

I want in particular to support the bill and to congratulate the Solicitor General and the other two parties, which are supporting the bill, for this step which is long overdue and which from my own experience is one the public will definitely support and is very necessary to ensure continued public safety. I think it will lead to greater public safety for those communities we all care about.

It being in the vicinity of 9:30, Madam Speaker, that's where I'll end my remarks.

The Acting Speaker: It being almost 9:30 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock tomorrow.

The House adjourned at 2130.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO
ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lieutenant Governor / Lieutenante-gouverneure: Hon / L'hon Hilary M. Weston
Speaker / Président: Hon / L'hon Chris Stockwell
Clerk / Greffier: Claude L. DesRosiers
Clerk Assistant / Greffière adjointe: Deborah Deller
Clerks at the Table / Greffiers parlementaires: Todd Decker, Lisa Freedman
Sergeant-at-Arms / Sergent d'armes: Dennis Clark

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Algoma	Wildman, Bud (ND)
Algoma-Manitoulin	Brown, Michael A. (L)
Beaches-Woodbine	Lankin, Frances (ND)
Brampton North / -Nord	Spina, Joseph (PC)
Brampton South / -Sud	Clement, Tony (PC)
Brant-Haldimand	Preston, Peter L. (PC)
Brantford	Johnson, Ron (PC)
Bruce	Fisher, Barbara (PC)
Burlington South / -Sud	Jackson, Hon / L'hon Cameron (PC) Minister without Portfolio (seniors issues) / ministre sans portefeuille (affaires des pernonnes âgées)
Cambridge	Martiniuk, Gerry (PC)
Carleton	Sterling, Hon / L'hon Norman W. (PC) Minister of Environment and Energy / ministre de l'Environnement et de l'Énergie
Carleton East / -Est	Morin, Gilles E. (L)
Chatham-Kent	Carroll, Jack (PC)
Cochrane North / -Nord	Wood, Len (ND)
Cochrane South / -Sud	Bisson, Gilles (ND)
Cornwall	Cleary, John C. (L)
Don Mills	Johnson, Hon / L'hon David (PC) Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, government House leader / président du Conseil de gestion, leader parlementaire du gouvernement
Dovercourt	Silipo, Tony (ND)
Downsview	Castrilli, Annamarie (L)
Dufferin-Peel	Tilson, David (PC)
Durham Centre / -Centre	Flaherty, Jim (PC)
Durham East / -Est	O'Toole, John R. (PC)
Durham West / -Ouest	Ecker, Hon / L'hon Janet (PC) Minister of Community and Social Services / ministre des Services sociaux et communautaires
Durham-York	Munro, Julia (PC)
Eglinton	Saunderson, Hon / L'hon William (PC) Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism / ministre du Développement économique, du Commerce et du Tourisme
Elgin	North, Peter (Ind)
Essex-Kent	Hoy, Pat (L)
Essex South / -Sud	Crozier, Bruce (L)
Etobicoke-Humber	Ford, Douglas B. (PC)
Etobicoke-Lakeshore	Kells, Morley (PC)
Etobicoke-Rexdale	Hastings, John (PC)
Etobicoke West / -Ouest	Stockwell, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Speaker / président
Fort William	McLeod, Lyn (L)
Fort York	Marchese, Rosario (ND)
Frontenac-Addington	Vankoughnet, Bill (PC)
Grey-Owen Sound	Murdoch, Bill (PC)
Guelph	Elliott, Brenda (PC)
Halton Centre / -Centre	Young, Terence H. (PC)
Halton North / -Nord	Chudleigh, Ted (PC)
Hamilton Centre / -Centre	Christopherson, David (ND)
Hamilton East / -Est	Agostino, Dominic (L)
Hamilton Mountain	Pettit, Trevor (PC)
Hamilton West / -Ouest	Ross, Lillian (PC)
Hastings-Peterborough	Danford, Harry (PC)
High Park-Swansea	Shea, Derwyn (PC)
Huron	Johns, Helen (PC)
Kenora	Miclash, Frank (L)
Kingston and The Islands / Kingston et Les Îles	Gerretsen, John (L)
Kitchener	Wettlaufer, Wayne (PC)
Kitchener-Wilmot	Leadston, Gary L. (PC)
Lake Nipigon / Lac-Nipigon	Pouliot, Gilles (ND)
Lambton	Beaubien, Marcel (PC)
Lanark-Renfrew	Jordan, W. Leo (PC)
Lawrence	Cordiano, Joseph (L)
Leeds-Grenville	Runciman, Hon / L'hon Robert W. (PC) Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services / solliciteur général et ministre des Services correctionnels
Lincoln	Sheehan, Frank (PC)
London Centre / -Centre	Boyd, Marion (ND)
London North / -Nord	Cunningham, Hon / L'hon Dianne (PC) Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, minister responsible for women's issues / ministre des Affaires intergouvernementales, ministre déléguée à la Condition féminine
London South / -Sud	Wood, Bob (PC)
Markham	Tsubouchi, Hon / L'hon David H. (PC) Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce
Middlesex	Smith, Bruce (PC)
Mississauga East / -Est	DeFaria, Carl (PC)
Mississauga North / -Nord	Snobelen, Hon / L'hon John (PC) Minister of Education and Training / ministère de l'Éducation et de la Formation
Mississauga South / -Sud	Marland, Margaret (PC)
Mississauga West / -Ouest	Sampson, Hon / L'hon Rob (PC) Minister without Portfolio (privatization) / ministre sans portefeuille (privatisation)
Muskoka-Georgian Bay / Muskoka-Baie-Georgienne	Grimmett, Bill (PC)
Nepean	Baird, John R. (PC)

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Niagara Falls	Maves, Bart (PC)
Niagara South / -Sud	Hudak, Tim (PC)
Nickel Belt	Laughren, Floyd (ND)
Nipissing	Harris, Hon / L'hon Michael D. (PC) Premier and President of the Executive Council / premier ministre et président du Conseil exécutif
Norfolk	Barrett, Toby (PC)
Northumberland	Galt, Doug (PC)
Oakville South / -Sud	Carr, Gary (PC)
Oakwood	Colle, Mike (L)
Oriole	Caplan, David
Oshawa	Ouellette, Jerry J. (PC)
Ottawa Centre / -Centre	Patten, Richard (L)
Ottawa East / -Est	Grandmaître, Bernard (L)
Ottawa-Rideau	Guzzo, Garry J. (PC)
Ottawa South / -Sud	McGuinty, Dalton (L) Leader of the Opposition / chef de l'opposition
Ottawa West / -Ouest	Cullen, Alex
Oxford	Hardeman, Ernie (PC)
Parkdale	Ruprecht, Tony (L)
Parry Sound	Eves, Hon / L'hon Ernie L. (PC) Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance / vice-premier ministre, ministre des Finances
Perth	Johnson, Bert (PC)
Peterborough	Stewart, R. Gary (PC)
Port Arthur	Gravelle, Michael (L)
Prescott and Russell / Prescott et Russell	Lalonde, Jean-Marc (L)
Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings / Prince EdwardLennox-Hastings-Sud	Fox, Gary (PC)
Quinte	Rollins, E.J. Douglas (PC)
Rainy River	Hampton, Howard (ND) Leader of the New Democratic Party / Chef du Nouveau Parti démocratique
Renfrew North / -Nord	Conway, Sean G. (L)
Riverdale	Churley, Marilyn (ND)
S-D-G & East Grenville / S-D-G et Grenville-Est	Villeneuve, Hon / L'hon Noble (PC) Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs / ministre de l'Agriculture, de l'Alimentation et des Affaires rurales, ministre délégué aux Affaires francophones
St Andrew-St Patrick	Bassett, Isabel (PC)
St Catharines	Bradley, James J. (L)
St Catharines-Brock	Froese, Tom (PC)
St George-St David	Leach, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing / ministre des Affaires municipales et du Logement
Sarnia	Boushy, Dave (PC)
Sault Ste Marie / Sault-Sainte-Marie	Martin, Tony (ND)
Scarborough-Agincourt	Phillips, Gerry (L)
Scarborough Centre / -Centre	Newman, Dan (PC)
Scarborough East / -Est	Gilchrist, Steve (PC)
Scarborough-Ellesmere	Mushinski, Hon / L'hon Marilyn (PC) Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation / ministre des Affaires civiques, de la Culture et des Loisirs
Scarborough North / -Nord	Curling, Alvin (L)
Scarborough West / -Ouest	Brown, Jim (PC)
Simcoe Centre / -Centre	Tascona, Joseph N. (PC)
Simcoe East / -Est	McLean, Allan K. (PC)
Simcoe West / -Ouest	Wilson, Hon / L'hon Jim (PC) Minister of Health / ministre de la Santé
Sudbury	Bartolucci, Rick (L)
Sudbury East / -Est	Martel, Shelley (ND)
Timiskaming	Ramsay, David (L)
Victoria-Haliburton	Hodgson, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Minister of Natural Resources, Minister of Northern Development and Mines / ministre des Richesses naturelles, ministre du Développement du Nord et des Mines
Waterloo North / -Nord	Witmer, Hon / L'hon Elizabeth (PC) Minister of Labour / ministre du Travail
Welland-Thorold	Kormos, Peter (ND)
Wellington	Arnott, Ted (PC)
Wentworth East / -Est	Doyle, Ed (PC)
Wentworth North / -Nord	Skarica, Toni (PC)
Willowdale	Harnick, Hon / L'hon Charles (PC) Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs / procureur général, ministre délégué aux Affaires autochtones
Wilson Heights	Kwinter, Monte (L)
Windsor-Riverside	Lessard, Wayne
Windsor-Sandwich	Pupatello, Sandra (L)
Windsor-Walkerville	Duncan, Dwight (L)
York Centre / -Centre	Palladini, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Transportation / ministre des Transports
York East / -Est	Parker, John L. (PC)
York Mills	Turnbull, David (PC)
York-Mackenzie	Klees, Frank (PC)
Yorkview	Sergio, Mario (L)
York South / -Sud	Kennedy, Gerard (L)

A list arranged by members' surnames and including all responsibilities of each member appears in the first and last issues of each session and on the first Monday of each month.

Une liste alphabétique des noms des députés, comprenant toutes les responsabilités de chaque député, figure dans les premier et dernier numéros de chaque session et le premier lundi de chaque mois.

CONTENTS

Tuesday 23 September 1997

THIRD READINGS

Community Safety Act, 1996,
Bill 102, Mr Runciman
Mr Runciman 12325, 12329
Mr Jim Brown 12327
Mr Ramsay 12328, 12329, 12338
Mr Kormos 12328, 12337
12338, 12347
Mr Galt 12328, 12345
Mr Bartolucci 12329
Mr Bisson 12336
Mr Grimmett 12337, 12347
Mr Lalonde 12337
Mr Gravelle 12346
Mr Martin 12346
Mr Carroll 12346
Debate deemed adjourned 12347

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Mardi 23 septembre 1997

TROISIÈME LECTURE

Loi de 1996 sur la sécurité de la collectivité,
Projet de loi 102, M Runciman
Débat présumé ajournée 12347

A 2 ON
X1
-1023

Government Publications

No. 235A

Nº 235A

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly
of Ontario
First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative
de l'Ontario
Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Wednesday 24 September 1997

Mercredi 24 septembre 1997

SEP 30 1997
UNIV. OF TORONTO

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday 24 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mercredi 24 septembre 1997

The House met at 1332.
Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

CLASS SIZE

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): John Snobelen's new education legislation will not achieve what parents, students and teachers want and expect from this government. Rather than enhancing our system, all partners in education now agree that this bill and the minister's tactics will only lead to an inferior quality of education with inferior results for students.

Look at what has happened so far because of the cuts to education: 28 school boards have made cuts to special education; 25 have cancelled junior kindergarten; nine, library services; 50 have made cuts to transportation services; and 49 have cut elementary and secondary school staff. This has caused class sizes to grow to critical levels, and no, this legislation will neither protect nor reduce class sizes.

The minister and this document only pay lip-service to limiting class sizes. It doesn't give details and it doesn't give numbers. If the government were truly committed to protecting class sizes, it would call my bill, Bill 110, which not only protects class sizes but protects and enshrines a pupil's right to learn in a meaningful way in an appropriate class size.

There's no question about it: The government spin, the advertising, the PR gurus all have the right fluff, but the people of Ontario know that Shakespeare was right when he said, "All that glitters is not gold."

NORTH BAY DAYS OF ACTION

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): This is day 3 of the North Bay Days of Action and the activity mounts. There are rallies being held, there are educational seminars; people are getting together and expressing their outrage at the actions of the Harris government.

There are a lot of letters of support coming to the organizers as well; for example, a letter to Lana Mitchell and Dawson Pratt, who are co-chairs of the North Bay Days of Action, from the Ontario Coalition for Better Child Care. They indicate that many child care workers from the north will be coming to North Bay on the weekend and "demonstrating that there is real opposition to the Tory program. The child care community will be there," they say in their own words, "because we are alarmed at the government moves to direct public funding to programs that don't provide for high-quality child care services/programs such as tax credits and deductions or vouchers for unlicensed/unregulated care. Implementing workfare will place children, already at risk due to poverty, in double jeopardy thanks to care provisions without even minimal health and safety standards."

While there will be many expressions of protest, there will also be some celebration: child care workers who will be celebrating the court decision that says the Harris government's attack on pay equity was unconstitutional; and of course the stunning retreat on Bill 136. As Dawson Pratt, one of the co-chairs, says, "Fighting back works."

"Our slogan is 'Organize, Educate, Resist.' Our goal is 'Take Back Ontario.' Ordinary people can achieve change when they stick together."

JULIE BROOKS

Mrs Julia Munro (Durham-York): What do a collection of tents from the local Canadian Tire store and a love of the outdoors have in common? If you are a 20-year-old Sunderland woman, it resulted in her receiving the prestigious Gold Duke of Edinburgh Award. His Royal Highness Prince Philip presented Julie Brooks, who had already received the bronze and silver awards, with the Gold Duke of Edinburgh Award, Young Canadians Challenge, at a recent ceremony in Toronto.

Julie won the award for planning a five-day outdoor excursion which saw three canoes of participants paddling and portaging through five lakes in the Minden area. She had to acquire the food, ready the equipment, map out the route and lead the expedition.

Community service requirements are also prerequisite to qualifying for the award. Julie served as the 1994 Sunderland Ambassador of the Fair, taught Sunday school at St Andrew's United Church in Sunderland and performed with the school band.

Julie grew up in Sunderland, where she attended Sunderland public school and graduated from Brock high school in Cannington.

I congratulate Julie for her award-winning accomplishments and I wish her success as she attends her second year at Lakehead University in Thunder Bay, where she is studying outdoor education.

GOVERNMENT'S RECORD

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Sound the bugles of retreat. The Conservative government of Mike Harris appears to be in complete disarray these days as it lurches from crisis to crisis, seemingly rudderless and having lost its nerve.

Instead of producing a compliant, acquiescent population with its bullying, intimidating tactics, the Harris regime has annoyed, antagonized and angered the people of Ontario. The very rich and the privileged may cheer on their man Mike, but the people on Main Street are beginning to see through the Nonsense Revolution, which seeks to confront and divide and to destroy the institutions and programs built with the sweat and struggle of so many in our province.

The Premier can huff and puff and bluster at what he calls the enemy of the people, but when his Conservative Party hits the skids in the polls, mighty Mike will run for cover and take John Snobelen and Elizabeth Witmer with him.

Those the Harris crowd sought to intimidate stood up to the bully and the bully has blinked. Panic has set into the nonsense revolutionaries as policies change weekly, daily or even hourly.

But the gentler, kinder, more accommodating image that Mike's public relations handlers are trying to portray will fool no one. It infuriates the angry, extremist right wing of the Conservative caucus and wins no converts among those who have seen the real Harris revolutionaries in action.

Listen for the beeping sound and get out of the way if you're behind the Harris truck. It's backing up in full retreat.

CANCER PREVENTION

Ms Marilyn Churley (Riverdale): The Women's Network on Health and Environment is holding a public preview of the film Exposure: Environmental Links to Breast Cancer, to be held at 8 pm on Thursday, September 25, in the medical sciences auditorium at the University of Toronto. The preview will be followed by discussion. I urge all of those who are interested in prevention and treatment of breast cancer to go see that film because it makes the connections between environmental carcinogens and cancer.

I say to the Minister of Health and the Minister of Environment, it is now nearly 18 months since all parties in this Legislature voted to establish a committee to consider the banning or phasing out of carcinogenic substances as a step towards the primary prevention of cancer. I made that resolution, it was passed by this House and there's been absolutely no response from the Minister of Health and the Minister of Environment except to pass the buck. After two years in office and no action, cancer patients and their families have no confidence that either of you even understands what primary prevention of cancer is all about.

You have established Cancer Care Ontario, but we need to know that direction for prevention is set there and that you will refer the Report on the Primary Prevention of Cancer to the board of Cancer Care Ontario for consideration and action. I urge both ministers to take that into account.

1340

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): Last Thursday, the Leader of the Opposition stood to question the Minister of Education. The leader used a constituent of mine as an example of a student suffering because of ministry cuts. The member knew his example was a local board of education decision. It was not connected to any policy or direction from the Ministry of Education.

It is from sheer frustration with local school staff and the board that these parents contacted the Leader of the Opposition. The parents, who live a few houses from the Wyevale school, have a real issue. Their concerns should have been resolved at the local level.

Under the amendments to the Education Act, parents will have greater say in their children's education and school policies. Bill 160, if passed, will give parents an opportunity to be more involved in the direction of education in their district. With the implementation of these changes, incidents such as this will not happen again.

I have spoken to the people at Wyevale. I understand their anger at the decision that the staff at the board of education have made. The Wyevale school board trustee is quoted as saying, "She was not privy to the decision, since it was an administrative decision, and the board of trustees was not consulted." It is the elected officials who are responsible to their constituents, not staff.

It is not cuts to education that are causing the problem; it is local decisions being made without consultation to those affected or those elected.

Tonight's meeting with the Simcoe County Board of Education I hope will resolve this matter, and the pupils will be in their proper school.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): The Minister of Education is making up students' educational futures as he goes along. Wasn't it just yesterday that the minister was describing his new school year as one of the hallmarks of his educational reform? Today he is saying there won't be an extended year after all. How fast can this minister change his mind and how can anybody know what is coming next?

Parents have some very real concerns about what the Harris government has already done to education — they are truly worried about what this Minister of Education wants to do — and the only thing they know for sure is that the needs of their kids are not what is driving the agenda.

Parents have 10 top questions for John Snobelen that they want answered:

(10) Will you guarantee that capping class sizes will not mean losses elsewhere?

(9) Will all the boards in Ontario have junior kindergarten in September 1998?

(8) Are libraries, music programs, gym and special education part of the classroom as you define it?

(7) How much tax is business going to pay for education, and will their taxes be pooled?

(6) What are the specific powers and duties of school councils?

(5) How are you going to make it a law that schools have to have school councils, and what will you do to schools that can't manage it?

(4) Which positions are you going to designate as non-teaching positions?

(3) If education taxes stay in the community in which they're raised, how do you plan to guarantee equality?

(2) Can you guarantee that in cities such as Toronto and Ottawa there will not be massive cuts to public boards in order to make up for inequities between public and separate school funding?

(1) Question number one from parents: Can you guarantee that we will see a specific and detailed funding model by November 1?

Most of all they want the Minister of Education —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you.

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): Let me say to the Minister of Environment and Energy that, contrary to his hope that things would die off in terms of further requests for a public inquiry into Plastimet, things continue to grow and pressure mounts.

On Saturday, the Hamilton Spectator said, in part:

"...this newspaper has called four times for an investigation. Today's instalment makes it five.... When it comes to the fire, the response to the fire, events leading up to and possibly contributing to the fire and the legacy of the fire, the Harris government's policy is clear: Deny, deny, deny. Given that, we can't promise you an end to Plastimet editorials. Something is really wrong here, and we just can't get past that."

Further: "Were the right measures taken at the right times in an effort to get Plastimet owners to correct fire code violations? If appropriate measures were taken, are fire code enforcement measures impotent? Does Ontario need new fire code regulations that would allow authorities to force quick compliance on people like the Plastimet owners? Did local police respond with the appropriate crowd control measures when the fire broke out? Did the local fire department respond appropriately with the right materials and strategy for dealing with this fire? Did the Ministry of the Environment respond appropriately? Should area residents have been evacuated sooner than they were?"

Yesterday the regional chairman and mayor of the city sent out a joint news release calling for a public inquiry to be held in the interest of our community and others. The regional municipality of Niagara has said they want one in the interest of their municipality and ours. We need a public inquiry into Plastimet.

SENIORS SEMINAR

Mr Tom Froese (St Catharines-Brock): I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone involved in a seniors seminar I sponsored on Friday afternoon, September 19, 1997, in the city of St Catharines. The seminar, partnered with Tabor Manor Mennonite Homes residents and staff, such as Rudy Siemens and Pam Pauls, was covered by Cogeco community television and attended by seniors from across the Niagara region.

The seniors heard about the benefits of the Ontario drug benefit plan with Gary Michaluk of the Ministry of Health; how to avoid scam artists, with Niagara Regional Police Detective Bob Glen; and the key components of the Ministry of Transportation seniors driver licensing program, with Steve Kivell of that ministry.

Without a doubt, this government is committed to seniors and safety, and certainly avenues for public awareness are important. In fact Detective Glen said that there had been fewer scams reported since he spoke at my last seminar on April 4, 1997, which was also televised. Certainly, seniors seminars are one way to promote that kind of awareness. Again, my thanks to all those involved.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): I beg leave to inform the House that today the Clerk received the 45th report of the standing committee on government agencies. Pursuant to standing order 105(g)(9), the report is deemed to be adopted by this House.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Yesterday the member for St Catharines (Mr Bradley) raised a point of privilege with respect to a Ministry of Education advertising campaign. The government House leader (Mr Johnson) and the third party House leader also made submissions with respect to this matter. The member for St Catharines argued that the ad campaign conveyed the impression that the passage of the Education Quality Improvement Act is a foregone conclusion.

I have reviewed the ad in question, and I must say that I cannot find within it any evidence that the phrase, "is implementing a plan," relates to any specific proceeding of this House. In fact the reference to a plan, in my view, leaves the impression that there are a number of components involved, some of which may certainly be legislation but not necessarily one particular bill.

My point is this: If the education bill introduced Monday does not pass, the government may still have in its plan to reduce class size by some other means. The terminology used in the ad does not rely upon any particular piece of legislation to project its message; indeed, it would still make sense to a listener even in the absence of the education bill.

In short, the more generic nature of this ad leads me to the conclusion that a prima facie case of privilege has not been made out.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Well, the member for Ottawa-Rideau, I may throw someone out today. I've been promising for a while, and I may fulfil that promise, member for Ottawa-Rideau.

1350

ORAL QUESTIONS

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Minister of Health. I understand he's just now making his way into the House.

Yesterday in this Legislature I raised the question with you of three Ottawa hospitals that were going to be closed two years before the necessary renovations were completed at a fourth Ottawa hospital, and that 23,000 patients would be left in the lurch as a result. You said something that came as tremendous news to us in the province of Ontario. You said "that if the physical space isn't available, then nobody will move anywhere." What you did was you told us that there is some flexibility attached to the dates on which hospitals are supposed to be closed. I just wanted to confirm that for those three hospitals in Ottawa, and for that matter for hospitals everywhere in the province that have been set to close as a result of the work of your commission, there is now some flexibility attached to those dates of closure.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): Until the commission says otherwise, they are their dates, they are their directions. They are bound in law. All of us are bound to those dates. There will be no change in the dates.

What I said in response to a hypothetical question yesterday, a ridiculous hypothetical question which was meant to scaremonger the people of Ottawa and the people of Ontario, that somehow all the common sense from all the administrators, doctors and nurses would be thrown out of the system, and that 24,000 people who rely on emergency rooms today would somehow be out on the street because the six new emergency rooms, in addition to the ones they have today, the more capacity for patients that's envisioned for Ottawa by the Health Services Restructuring Commission, that if that wasn't ready that people would be thrown out in the streets — it's a ridiculous question, it's hypothetical and I'm surprised he's pursuing it again today.

Mr McGuinty: Yesterday you told us there was some flexibility attached to the dates on which hospitals are supposed to close. Do you know what happened yesterday? We should all understand this. Yesterday the minister slipped and for one moment he assumed some responsibility as the minister responsible for the health of patients in Ontario. Imagine that. It was a momentary lapse. He's proved that to us today. Perhaps he's fully recovered and is now assuming his role that he has assumed under the Harris government.

Wellesley is slated to close in March 1999. Is that date also flexible, Minister? Because that's what you said yesterday. You said that if the space wasn't there, if the supports weren't in place, then that date could be changed. Northwestern is slated to close very soon, November 3 of this year. There is a very real concern there as well about accommodation and supports. Is that date also flexible? Is there flexibility, yes or no?

Hon Mr Wilson: Under the law, the flexibility can only be exercised by the Health Services Restructuring Commission. I suggest the honourable member ask the commission that question.

Mr McGuinty: You can't have it both ways, and that's not in keeping with the story you delivered to us in this House yesterday. Yesterday you said — I was taken aback because you were so reasonable — that if the need should arise, if it's in the interests of Ontario patients, if the supports aren't there, if the renovations haven't been completed, then, "Yes, I will act to ensure that the hospitals don't close." That's what you said. I didn't say that.

What you said yesterday, Minister — you should understand this — was a good thing. I want to support you in that. What I want you to do now is to stand up and confirm that what you said yesterday is what you again believe in today, that there is some flexibility attached to hospital closure dates and we will do whatever is necessary to protect health care in Ontario.

Hon Mr Wilson: Yes, I've learned one thing in the last 24 hours, and the old adage that politicians shouldn't answer hypothetical ridiculous questions is something I shouldn't have done. The honourable member said, "If," — and there was a big "if" — "X, Y and Z happen." He's correct in his quote back to me, and we all have the Hansard. I said I'm sure the commission would exercise flexibility if there's no place for those patients to go.

What I want to know from the honourable member is, are you in favour of restructuring or not? That's what I want to know; that's what the voters of Ontario want to know. You're sitting on the fence. Yes, your cousins in Ottawa, the Liberals, cut us $2 billion. You've gotten away with absolute — you should be disgraced on that one, but no, no, the voters decided to put the Liberals back in office in Ottawa. That's fine. We're coping with that. We're restructuring the system. We're making the system better for patients.

I don't know where you are in this equation, Mr McGuinty, and I won't give up till I find out where your party stands on hospital restructuring in this province.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My second question is for the Minister of Education and Training. I want to return to the case of Gordie Kirwan, because I believe that case to be very instructive in telling us something about you, where you're coming from and whether or not you have a genuine interest in the wellbeing of our students in Ontario.

You will recall that several months ago now I brought to this House the case of Gordie Kirwan, a young man who is 22 years of age, handsome, strapping, in perfect health but for the fact that he has the mind of a three-year-old. Gordie doesn't play with a football; he plays with his teddy bear.

His parents have delivered the message to you and I have as well. You promised that you would change the law in Ontario so that Gordie could continue his education, because as it stands right now, his parents are paying over $1,000 a month to allow their son to continue with his education.

Why should parents and students across the province believe you've got students' interests at heart if you're not even going to look after Gordie Kirwan?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I believe I answered this question for the Leader of the Opposition last week. I told the Leader of the Opposition that we had agreed, I have agreed, to compensate Gordie Kirwan's family for the costs of the program this year. We have done that. We've lived up to our obligation.

But the larger question is, and I pointed this out to the Leader of the Opposition, can we learn something from this case that will help other people, other young adults in the same circumstance across Ontario? I think the answer to that question is yes. We're working now in developing a policy that will help all the young people who are in that circumstance right across the province.

Mr McGuinty: I want to take issue once again with the minister when he says he has paid the tuition fees, because he has not. The other day in this House I produced the receipt issued to Gordie's mother showing she had paid over $1,000 for tuition fees for the month of September. She paid that, that's her hard-earned money and you should stop saying that you paid it.

We're not just talking about Gordie here; we're talking about the thousands of Gordies right across the province. Members should understand that it was over two years ago that Gordie's dad came across an unknown guy by the name of Mike Harris, then leader of the third party. He bought him a cup of coffee and he explained to him the problems they were having in getting education for their son. Mike Harris, then leader of the third party, said, "Don't worry, because if I become Premier I will fix this."

You've been in power over two years. They're still paying for the tuition fees. You've broken your promise to Gordie's parents, you've broken your promise to Gordie and you've broken the promise to thousands of others right across the province who are like Gordie. Minister, you tell us you're going to fix it. When are you going to do it?

Hon Mr Snobelen: The Leader of the Opposition, I believe, heard my reply just a few moments ago when I said that the ministry had agreed to, I had agreed to, compensate Gordie's parents for the cost of tuition, and we have done that. I pointed that out to the Leader of the Opposition last week.

I think the Leader of the Opposition in his question recognizes the fact that for some time governments, Liberal governments, NDP governments, have been petitioned to take care of adults over 21 who have some chance of education, using education services, and are precluded by the Education Act. We are taking that on. We're working very hard with my colleagues to get a policy and a program that will work. This is not a simple matter. Obviously, there are issues of integration versus segregation. There are different opinions on how this should be handled within the community. We are working to find a solution to this.

But let me say again to the Leader of the Opposition that we have made payment to the Kirwans and lived up to our obligation to them.

1400

Mr McGuinty: I think this small snippet of the problems faced by one particular family, in terms of trying to have their son educated, is most instructive in terms of the approach this government brings to people in need generally. Gordie Kirwan may never pay taxes, he will likely never vote, and you have failed to live up to your responsibility to him.

The Premier made a promise over two years ago that if he became Premier he would fix this, he would make a change in the law. You personally have met with the Kirwans; you personally phoned Mrs Kirwan and said you would fix it. You said you would ensure that she wouldn't have to pay any money starting in September of this year. She's paid money; they've cashed her cheque. You told me that you sent her a cheque to reimburse her. I can tell you that as of today she has not received it. What I want to ask you once again is, when are you going to do something for Gordie and the thousands of others just like him right across this province?

Hon Mr Snobelen: Let me once again, for probably the fifth time in the last week, make this very clear to the Leader of the Opposition: Gordie is in school. We have agreed to compensate Gordie's family for the cost of being in school and we have issued payment. That is the status of this file.

If this reveals anything, it's that the Leader of the Opposition is willing to play politics with this kind of issue, just like he played politics yesterday by trying to inflame people across the province, by trying to inflame teachers across the province, by inferring that a section of the bill that we put forward in this House would somehow ban strikes when he should know as a lawyer that it will not, when he should have got the legal opinion that it will not. He was clearly off base yesterday; he's clearly off base today. He should get his facts straight.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): The opposition gallery has in it Mr Ross McClellan, a previous member for Bellwoods. Welcome.

HOME CARE

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a question for the Minister of Health. You've cut $23 million from the operating budgets of hospitals in Hamilton. That's a figure that you and your officials have announced, and that takes into account a $7-million reinvestment that you announced. The $23-million cut means that Hamilton hospitals are being forced to discharge patients earlier than ever. In fact, they're being forced to discharge patients when those patients are still in need of care.

Some of that care will be provided by the homemakers program. But people in Hamilton are getting a letter — and have gotten a letter — from the Visiting Homemakers Association saying to them that the homemakers association has no more budget to provide them with needed homemaking services, that in fact homemaking services are being cut, they're simply not going to be available. How can you tell people on the one hand, while you're cutting hospital budgets, that they're going to get care in the community and care in their homes when they get a letter from the homemakers services saying there's no more care available?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): I'd appreciate if the honourable member would give me a copy of that letter. It's certainly contradictory to anything I've heard from Hamilton. I will personally check the association. We were there just a few weeks ago to announce millions of dollars for home care in Hamilton.

Secondly, I will say that it is not the responsibility of the Minister of Health, it is the responsibility of the hospitals, to make sure a plan is in place before they discharge people. It's not legal for them to discharge people without a care plan in place. If you have individual cases, I suggest you take those to the hospitals. They have a fiduciary responsibility to look after those patients.

More money is going into home care in Hamilton, so I'd be quite curious to find out what that letter says.

Mr Hampton: I'll quote to the minister from this letter:

"As many of you have already experienced, the hours provided to clients are being reduced, yet the number of short visits is increasing and the complexity of client care is greater....

"We know that the reduction in hours is being felt by clients.... Some clients are purchasing homemaking services to make up the difference in the hours dropped from public funding."

That's what the letter says, Minister. It says that homemakers can't provide the services that are needed and people who can't get the services any longer have to go out and buy them privately. This is called two-tier health care. You get a little bit from the public but then you have to spend more out of your own pocket. It's a lot like American health care: You purchase the services privately.

Minister, isn't that what's really happening? You cut the hospitals, you also limit the homemakers and people are put in the position where they have to spend money out of their own pocket to get private homemaker services. That's what's really happening, isn't it?

Hon Mr Wilson: The Hamilton-Wentworth home care budget has gone up from $23.5 million to $43.9 million, an 86.4% increase. They have more than their fair share of home care in the province. It's one of the highest per capita areas in the province. I will be personally looking into that letter from the home care association. It sounds like a bit of politics to me.

Yes, the community care access centre is reporting an expected deficit of $1.1 million. That isn't unusual. That's part of the ongoing process. We project at the beginning of the year. The local community tells us what their demand is, we give them the funding, and of course the funding's up dramatically over the last little while. My note indicates that staff are working every day with the people in Hamilton to address the demands. Their community care access centre is one of I think two in the province that isn't up and running, and Mr Jackson's trying to get that going. We've had some problems there.

It's not true that there's less money; there's clearly more money in Hamilton.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Final supplementary.

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): Minister, in the past it is quite true that you have covered deficits at the end, but let me quote from this letter again. The Visiting Homemakers Association "and all other service provider agencies, have recently received the disturbing news that the home care program must stay within its allocated budget from now on. In previous years, the Ministry of Health has provided additional funding to cover any deficit incurred during the year by the home care program. It will no longer do this."

The real issue here is you don't have a clue what's going on. You cut money from the hospitals, they have to put people out into the community earlier, the demand is increasing. Even your restructuring commission has made it very clear from its documents that they don't know what the demand is going to be as this keeps on going with people coming home earlier from hospitals as a result of the cuts. You simply don't know what the demand is going to be and yet you have told homemaking services that they're not going to be able to build the deficits that they have been able to do in the past to ensure that people get cared for. This is not the hospitals' problem, Minister. This is your problem. When are you going to resolve it?

Hon Mr Wilson: I'll refer the last question to the Honourable Cam Jackson.

Hon Cameron Jackson (Minister without Portfolio [Seniors Issues]): I want to acknowledge the member's supplementary question because she comes from a community, in London, where she has seen the successful model, as brought forward by this government, fully implemented to streamline the process, to bring in the accountability systems that were missing in home care in this province. This government brought that in two years ago, proper assessment criteria for patients.

The problem with the opposition members, especially the former government, is that they had five years to stabilize this environment and create stable criteria. This government believes that a person in London should get the same level of care as a person in Hamilton, Windsor or Ottawa. This government has brought in those criteria so that fairness and additional funding — I remind the member there's 170 million new dollars going into long-term care and community-based supports in this province and Hamilton is getting its fair share.

1410

EDUCATION REFORM

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): My next question is for the Minister of Education. I wonder if the Minister of Education can explain the confusing state that he has created.

A week ago he announced that children would be going back to school a week early. Not only did he announce it, but it was part of his propaganda piece. It was a story he spun on to The National, the CBC news, that night. Then we find out this week, in fact this morning, that students aren't going to be going back to school a week early after all. We're told that someone in the Ministry of Education did some arithmetic and figured out that if they sent students back to school a week early, it would cost some more money, and that would interfere with the $1 billion the government wants to take out of education. If you send kids back to school a week early, you can't get the full $1 billion.

I want to ask the minister this simple question, will students be going back to school a week early in 1998 or not?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): First, the leader of the third party has it wrong. We did receive a report a week and a half ago that made the recommendation that students go back to school the week before Labour Day. We received that recommendation along with others. I said then, and said today, that we support the thinking behind those recommendations. We did not adopt them all at that time, nor did we adopt that one.

I said today very quickly, because there are some concerns with parents — particularly rural members have brought it to my attention, in the rural parts of Ontario — that an earlier start to school would be a problem, so we moved today to say we will work with the school communities, we will work with our colleagues in the House of all political parties, to find a way to get the in-school time of students up to the level recommended by the EIC without having to expand the students' school year.

We will accept the recommendation of the EIC regarding teachers going back to school a week before the students, because we believe it's important to have them be ready for the students when they arrive at the beginning of the school year. That's what we announced today. It's in response to the requests we have heard from people from —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Supplementary.

Mr Hampton: The Minister of Education gets more confusing as days go on. Go into a school. Teachers are already in their schools before Labour Day. Everybody knows that. Your announcement was very specific: Students were going to be in the schools before Labour Day. You were going to add a week before Labour Day to the school year, but now you've done the arithmetic and you find out it doesn't work.

I want to ask you about your $1-million dollar propaganda campaign, because that seems to be a waste too. You're out spending $1 million on propaganda. I have been in touch with a number of schools: Robert Moore school in my community, which has to do fund-raising with students to pay for computers; Alexander MacKenzie, which has to do fund-raising with students to pay for playground equipment. Why don't you stick your $1-million propaganda campaign where it will do some good? Why don't you quit your campaign and give the moneys to the schools so they can buy the computers they need?

Hon Mr Snobelen: Mr Speaker, you looked a little concerned.

The Speaker: I was just as worried as you were for a minute there, but it wasn't out of order.

Hon Mr Snobelen: Perhaps the leader of the third party would like to read this document before he asks questions in the House. It's called The Road Ahead. It's from the Education Improvement Commission and it spells out their recommendations, one of which is that the province move to have teachers in school a full week before students arrive. We have adopted that.

We said this morning that we believe instructional time and time on tests for our students in the province can be increased without expanding the school calendar. The EIC reports to us they have recommended two thirds of that in their report. We think we can find the other third inside of that time. I have asked my colleagues to help me to consult with people to design just that.

Regarding our advertisements that have gone out, the mailout has gone out to every household in the province to tell them about a better education in Ontario. We think that's good information. If the leader of the third party is worried about costs, he might want to look at the full-colour brochure his government sent out to inform the people of Ontario. He might want to read the letter from the then Minister of Education, with the picture of the then Minister of Education and compare that with our —

The Speaker: Final supplementary.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Quinte, come to order, please.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): I'm referring to the backgrounder that he put out last week when he made his announcement. In that backgrounder on page 2 it says,

"The Education Improvement Commission has recommended that the school year for elementary students be increased by two weeks and for secondary school students by three weeks," and then it says, "The legislation would allow the province to act on these recommendations."

It didn't say that the teachers would be in an extra week; it said the students. It also justified that on the basis of increasing the contact between teachers and students. Maybe the minister can explain how he increases the contact between teachers and students if he legislates that teachers go back, but not students.

Hon Mr Snobelen: I've got to say I'm not shocked at the —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Minister.

Hon Mr Snobelen: Mr Speaker, I am surprised at the question from the member for Algoma, because the member for Algoma usually has read the reports and usually is briefed upon this subject, and he apparently is not.

The Education Improvement Commission suggested that we increase the amount of instructional time that students sit. They suggested two weeks for elementary school students; they suggested three weeks for secondary school students. We think it's a good idea. We think it will improve education. We think it will improve the students' performance. They suggested that we reduce the number of exam days allowed for secondary school students, the number of PA days that happen during the school year.

I can tell the member for Algoma that I was speaking with parents on Monday of this week and they suggested that if we had teachers come in the week before students, perhaps they wouldn't lose all the half days at the start of the year getting ready for the students, perhaps they could have more instructional time at the end of June, perhaps they could use the calendar better to find those five additional days. That would be preferable to parents than adding to the school year. I think those are good suggestions we've heard from parents, and we intend to listen to them and act on them.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Gerard Kennedy (York South): I have a question for the Minister of Health. I'd like to talk to you about the situation in London. We've heard there in recent days about a critical situation to do with ICU beds, and now general surgery beds are also a huge problem.

Today there was a story about a 70-year-old who went to London from Thunder Bay for heart surgery and he's experiencing something that I believe people are going to call the Harris hospital boomerang. He is recovering from heart surgery in London and the people there would like him to go back to Thunder Bay, but there are no beds in Thunder Bay for him to go back to because they are squeezed between two Harris hospital cuts. You took $55 million out of the hospitals in London in the last two years. You're going to take more beds away.

My question is, what will you do to help this 70-year-old stranded in London find a bed?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): I spoke with Mr Tony Dagnone, the administrator of the hospital, about two hours ago on the phone. He said there's no basis for this story. Again, the Minister of Health is not responsible. You are to direct your questions to the hospital. You would have found out that the family went to the media because — the hospital's not sure why the family went to the media. The woman in the story says they are getting excellent care.

The solution to the problem, though, if there is a problem, is that there will be more beds in Thunder Bay. There are new transitional beds. I haven't got the note in front of me now, but what the story points out — and I can only go by the story at this point — with respect to the alternative levels of care beds, it's a new type of bed the commission is recommending in communities like Thunder Bay, and some in London and Toronto and right across the province, called transitional beds, which will take the pressure off the acute care beds.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): There are no beds in Thunder Bay.

Hon Mr Wilson: "Bed blockers" is a term that came forward when the Liberals were in office in the 1980s. That was the problem. You did nothing about it, folks.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Member for Fort William, you must withdraw that comment you made earlier.

Mrs McLeod: You mean about it not being true that there are beds in Thunder Bay, Mr Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes, that comment. You must withdraw it.

Mrs McLeod: I withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Supplementary.

1420

Mr Kennedy: There's a reason why this family had to go to the media, because there's no point, as you've just demonstrated, in going to the Minister of Health. When families are told that their loved ones have to leave hospitals and are told by those hospitals it's because of your cuts, because there are no beds available, they expect at least some response from you, Minister.

You've closed the chronic care hospital in Thunder Bay, you've put those beds into an acute care hospital. They don't have the space. They've got 60 people taking up those beds. Minister, is it your responsibility. You may say it isn't, but everybody in this House knows it's your job. It's your job to find this gentleman, 70 years old, a bed. It's your job to make sure there is something available for him.

Will you at least allow some funding to go back into Thunder Bay or into London so that this gentleman and others don't find themselves squeezed? Will you at least admit that the hospitals in London have been cancelling surgery, no ICU beds? They can't fit people in and now they can't even send people back. Will you at least admit there's a problem and that you will do something about it?

Hon Mr Wilson: Hospital restructuring is designed to correct exactly the situation the honourable member describes. There will be more of these transitional beds to get rid of the bed blockers that you did nothing about.

Second, the honourable member is completely misinformed about the role of the Minister of Health in this province and in this country. I can't micromanage the system. If there's a complaint, it must go to the hospital board, which is a group of citizens who have a responsibility for running that hospital. In this case and in every case, I would ask that you ask the hospital. Give these good people who have the responsibility for operating the hospital the opportunity to respond and solve the problems at the local level.

I cannot, no matter how hard you wish, direct one doctor to do one thing in this province. I cannot keep a patient in or discharge a patient. That is not under the law something the Minister of Health can do. Maybe you think you can, maybe you want to micromanage the system. I have faith in the doctors, I have faith in the nurses, I have faith in the administration that if —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Members for Windsor-Sandwich and Ottawa West, come to order.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): Throw him out.

The Speaker: Member for Grey-Owen Sound, it would be helpful if you came to order as well.

Interjections.

The Speaker: We will wait. Minister.

Hon Mr Wilson: The honourable member is getting a terrible reputation across the province of, first of all, not having —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Minister.

Hon Mr Wilson: London is one of the best health care areas in Ontario. I would ask the honourable member to leave the chamber, go talk to the administration there and get his facts straight. Your own hospitals condemned you for not getting your facts straight. Now you've taken it upon yourself to upset the good people in London. The patient in question is getting good care. The patient was never in danger of being discharged without a plan in place.

I wish the honourable member would check his facts before he brings those cases. You brought a case to the Legislature earlier this week and you couldn't have been more wrong in that case. The fact of the matter is he does put me at a disadvantage. He takes advantage of the fact that the minister cannot talk about the details of a case. All I can do is ask you to please check your facts —

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like you to rule on the word "bed blocker," whether that is a parliamentary word or not. I think he referred to patients as bed blockers. Is that a parliamentary word?

The Speaker: That's parliamentary. I would assume that's some technical term they use in the Ministry of Health. I don't know.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Holy smokes, don't start heckling me. That's just my opinion. I assume that is a technical term.

HEALTH CARDS

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): My question is also to the Minister of Health. Yesterday you announced a series of measures that you're going to be taking to cut down on health care fraud. I think everyone in the province wants to be sure that our health dollars are used appropriately, that no one is taking advantage of the system.

My concern around your announcement was that you stated that as of January 1 the Ministry of Health will no longer allow health care providers to give the benefit of the doubt, and that only when people are clearly in an emergency situation would they get health care without a health card.

I wonder if you've really given much thought to this, because the fact is that the majority of people who present themselves in need of care without a health card prove in the course of things to be entitled to health care in Ontario.

There are many reasons why people don't have a health card. They may have had their ID stolen, including their health card, or when they want to apply for a health card they may not have access to their identification. They may be homeless and may not have belongings. They may be entitled, but for whatever reason don't have them.

Minister, can you tell us what you're going to do about these people?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): The reports in the media were not meant to be taken exactly at face value in terms of —

Interjections.

Hon Mr Wilson: Common sense dictates that everyone in the province right now agrees with the honourable member and agrees with what I said yesterday, yes, but at the end of the day if you're ineligible. Yes, a lot of people don't have it on them. I don't have mine on me right now. But during my time in hospital, if that should happen, I would have the opportunity to present a valid card.

At the end of the day, though — this isn't a change in law; this is just an enforcement of what the law has been right across this country under the Canada Health Act — if you're not eligible, you're not eligible. You'll be swiping your Visa card and not your health card. But you'll be given ample opportunity to show that you are eligible for health benefits in Ontario.

Mrs Boyd: Then I'm not quite clear what the difference is. I guess my real concern is that's not exactly what's happening. Let me tell you the story of a 21-year-old woman who last spring presented herself at Doctors Hospital because she wasn't feeling well. She didn't have a health card, but she had lived in Ontario all her life. The hospital told her they'd treat her, but she needed to pay $25 down. She didn't have it, so she left.

The next day she was feeling worse. She went to the Toronto Western Hospital. She was told they would treat her, but she would be billed. She didn't have the money, so she left.

Two days later she was admitted as an emergency to the Wellesley Hospital because her fever was life-threatening. She occupied a bed there for four days. It turns out she had a urinary tract infection that could have been treated on the first day for very little cost, and it cost us all a great deal of money.

All I'm suggesting to you is that, first of all, we need to be setting up procedures that are consumer-friendly in terms of getting the health cards, and second of all, people aren't being turned away with minor conditions because they're being told they're going to be charged up front because they don't have a health card. How are we going to deal with these very expensive mistakes?

Hon Mr Wilson: The difference is, we're told — and no government has the exact figure to what extent this is going on; we'll know better because of our new program — many people apparently go through our system now and no one ever checks. They might mention the health card but they never follow up. They have to eventually have a valid health card. If there's any doubt at the point of service, they can ask for other ID. They can phone the Ministry of Health. There are a number of things that can be done. Again, emergency services must be covered, but they have to be true emergencies.

Yes, we are cracking down on fraud. We all know anecdotal stories of people coming from other countries and from other jurisdictions, where they haven't paid taxes here, they don't have eligibility here, and they're supposedly receiving health services. That's what we want cut down on, without, as the honourable member has pointed out, jeopardizing care and access for our own residents and those who are entitled to health benefits in Ontario.

1430

CROSS-BORDER TRAVEL

VOYAGES TRANSFRONTALIERS

Mr John Hastings (Etobicoke-Rexdale): My question is directed to the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism, and it relates to the concern many people have raised in my riding regarding the proposed new immigration law that would require, under section 110 of this new law, that all Canadians and foreigners would have to register both coming from and going into the United States and fill out additional visa information documents.

Exiger un visa aux Canadiens et aux Canadiennes qui veulent entrer aux États-Unis est non seulement contre une longue tradition mais remet aussi en question tout notre travail concernant le libre-échange.

Minister, I have a lot of companies and workers who are very concerned about this whole thing —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Minister.

Hon William Saunderson (Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism): I'm very pleased to respond to the member for Etobicoke-Rexdale. It certainly is a big concern.

There's no doubt that if section 110 of the new US immigration law was enacted, there would be long lineups and confusion at the borders. Such gridlocks would be bad for Ontario, not only for transportation and business, but for tourism as well.

More than 76 million trips — and I want to emphasize that — were made by Canadians to the United States last year. Ontario exported $116 billion worth of merchandise to the US last year. Our trade development strategy has increased our merchandise exports 6% in the first six months of this year. Clearly our tourism initiatives also have helped, because we attracted over 26 million Americans to Ontario in 1996.

Gridlocks at border crossings would discourage tourists on both sides of the border. Enacting this law would certainly be counterproductive at a time when we are trying to dismantle barriers to free trade.

Mr Hastings: If this law gets implemented unchanged, how will you provide for preventing an unmitigated disaster, Minister?

Interjections.

Hon Mr Saunderson: This is no laughing matter. This is a very serious matter that we should be considering. I'm happy to say that I have written to Mr Axworthy, the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Ottawa, expressing my concerns about this matter and asking him to please keep us informed of the developments. I've also spoken to Mr Gregory Johnson, the US consul general in Toronto, outlining the ramifications of such a law. He responded by saying that he took the issue very seriously and would be conveying my message and our concern to Washington.

I want to conclude by saying that my staff are in touch with federal officials in Ottawa and also in Washington to make sure we get a speedy resolution of this problem so that Ontarians and Canadians will not be concerned and our trade will not be interrupted, nor will our tourism be damaged.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): My question is to the Minister of Health. Since your government has taken office, you have proceeded to cut a total of $56 million out of Hamilton-area hospitals, both in capital and operating costs, in the past two years.

Minister, there is a crisis in hospital care in the city of Hamilton and surrounding areas. We have examples. One gentleman suffered a stroke and was left for hours in a wheelchair in an emergency room without a doctor to see him, without a stretcher being available. That's under your jurisdiction. We had a woman who has a rare condition that needs treatment. Because of her condition, it takes her husband four hours to get her ready to go to the hospital for treatment. In the past three months on four occasions she got there and there was not a bed available. She was sent home. We had a situation in the backyard of your minister of seniors where Joe Brant hospital had to convert a boardroom into an emergency waiting room.

You have created this crisis before your commission — what are you going to do —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you. Minister.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): Again, the honourable member is encouraged to discuss those individual cases with the hospital and the public hospital board there. I'd be interested to know what their response is. I encourage the honourable member to do that.

Mr Agostino: I have discussed these cases with the families, with the doctors and with the hospitals. In every single case they have said it is because of the cuts you have made to the health care system in Hamilton that people are sitting in wheelchairs without a stretcher being available, that this woman cannot get a bed. Every single case has been blamed on you and the cuts of your government, and this is before your thugs on the restructuring commission create havoc in Hamilton next month.

It's been estimated that as a result of the cuts that are being made there, as a result of what is happening in the districts around Hamilton, there will be at least 4,500 more patients from outside the city who are going to need services in Hamilton next year. Your commission is going to come in in about a month and close at least one Hamilton hospital.

Minister, you have a crisis in Ottawa, you have a crisis in Windsor, you have a crisis in Thunder Bay. You are going to create a crisis. Can you tell me what proactive action you're going to take to guarantee to the people of Hamilton that you're going to avert this crisis that is going to occur once your restructuring commission comes to town and decides that it's going to close our hospitals?

Hon Mr Wilson: So far the restructuring commission has been very positive in increasing services in every area of the province. The law is very clear that it can't cut services. The honourable member is making the case of the need to restructure. Obviously the status quo isn't good enough in Hamilton.

I was just in Hamilton last week and I was at probably the hospitals you're talking about, at least one of them, and certainly had no indication of what the honourable member's talking about. However, I do have indication from all of your hospitals in Hamilton that they would like to see the commission come in, that they realize the status quo isn't an option, that they would like the cooperation of their local MPPs.

They do not need the word "crisis" thrown around as they try and improve the health care system and increase services for a growing and aging population, something that your party failed to do, that should have been done 10, 15 years ago. It's unfortunate that it's happening in a short period of time, but we will have a better system with more services to serve more patients.

TVONTARIO

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Culture and communications. On September 11 and 12, Wawatay radio and Wahsa distance education stopped broadcasting to protest your government's intentions to privatize TVOntario. They wanted to let their listeners in the far north know what it would be like after you privatize TVOntario and they no longer have a carrier to help them put out their broadcasting signal. You see, they use the TVO satellite to broadcast education and information programs to 35 first nation communities in the remote far north.

Minister, in your drive, in your rush to sell off TVOntario, can you tell us what plans you have to ensure that Wawatay and Wahsa distance education continue to broadcast?

Hon Marilyn Mushinski (Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation): I refer that question to the minister responsible for privatization.

Hon Rob Sampson (Minister without Portfolio [Privatization]): The leader of the third party is well aware of the fact that a very important part of our privatization review framework is to take a look at the different options and alternatives that are available to bring in the private sector to help us manage the businesses government is involved in in a different and more effective way. Part of the process, of course, is to involve the public in some consultation. We think Ontarians have a role to play in this process and we intend to listen to what they say and respond to initiatives such as the one he just spoke to.

1440

Mr Hampton: I asked a very specific question. These are two education and public information broadcasters that would go off the air. They are able to broadcast now because TVOntario includes them on TVOntario's satellite signal because they see it as part of TVOntario's mandate.

The reality is, if Wahsa distance education goes off the air, all kinds of people in those 35 remote first nation communities will not receive any educational programming in their own language. If Wawatay goes off the air, there will be no public information program in the Cree or Ojicree language.

I've asked a specific question and I still didn't get an answer. The Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation doesn't know. Can the minister of privatization tell us? Have you any plans whatsoever to ensure that Wahsa distance education continues to broadcast and Wawatay radio continues to broadcast after you privatize TVO?

Hon Mr Sampson: I thought I did answer the member's question by saying that we believe all Ontarians have a role to play and some advice to provide as we assess the options and alternatives as they relate to TVO. Of course we'll listen to their concerns and their issues. That's why we have that very important part of our process, so that we can listen to what Ontarians say and have them help us assess the alternatives that are available to us to bring private sector to partner with government in providing a much better and more cost-effective service to Ontarians.

HOME CARE

Mr Derwyn Shea (High Park-Swansea): My question is directed to the minister responsible for seniors. You will be aware that I have a long-standing interest in and support of long-term care in the province of Ontario, particularly for Runnymede hospital. In light of some questions raised earlier today in the House and in response to last night on the CBC national newscast, home care was described as the future of health care in Canada. The reporter interviewed several patients who appreciated the opportunity to receive care outside of hospitals and nursing homes.

Governments across Canada are recognizing the value of home care. I would ask the minister if home care is a priority for the government and whether that priority is being backed up with the necessary funding.

Hon Cameron Jackson (Minister without Portfolio [Seniors Issues]): I think members of this House would be pleased to know that Ontario is spending over $1.2 billion on home care, community-based supports, and a further over $1.2 billion on institutional-based care extended outside of a hospital setting for the frail elderly and the disabled in this province. We are spending record numbers of dollars to provide decent home care in this province and we have expanded it significantly in many parts of the province. It also forms part of a $170-million community-based funding increase this government has invested.

I have visited Runnymede with the honourable member. We have looked at the program and its impact, making sure that sufficient home care services are available, and I'm pleased to report that in the member's constituency area, funding for home care in Metro Toronto stands at $130 million today, and that's a $75 million dollars increase since —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Supplementary.

Mr Shea: My supplementary is also for the minister responsible for seniors. The National report addressed the related questions of how individuals can find out about home care available to them and fears that it might not be available. In spite of federal government cuts to our nation's health care system, can he assure the House that Ontario residents can get the services they need?

Hon Mr Jackson: We have increased substantively the amount of dollars to recognize growth. These are dollars that are being directly applied to the assessed needs in communities all across the province. There are some areas that are overserviced and moneys are going directly to communities. The member for St Catharines has had his community traditionally underserviced in this province. We've flowed additional dollars there. There are one or two communities that are overserviced and they're not getting additional dollars. They are expected to deliver the service fairly, equitably and efficiently as well.

I want to remind all members that in an Ontario where for 12 years not one new nursing home or long-term-care bed was approved by either the Liberal or NDP government, the system has problems we are addressing immediately by flowing these home care dollars into community settings to provide compassionate care and appropriate care. There are no waiting lists. There is demand, but there are no waiting lists within this province for home care at this time.

KIDNEY DIALYSIS

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): My question is for the Minister of Health, who has disappeared momentarily.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Put the question. He'll probably —

Interjection: Here he is.

The Speaker: Okay, go ahead.

Mr Cleary: My question is to the Minister of Health. It has been over a year and a half since you announced that you had chosen a provider for dialysis treatment in Cornwall, but you soon withdrew the deal when you got caught up in a legal battle. Now, 18 months later, you've dropped your appeal, so the court proceedings are over and so is the 30-day waiting period that you said you required, but you've failed to give a progress report.

At this point, Cornwall and area residents are uncertain if and when they might receive dialysis treatment. Hospital officials are asking what you are doing and if you are accepting proposals from all parties for space. I ask you for a full disclosure today on the Cornwall dialysis. Are there any outstanding issues? How many proposals are being considered? When do you think things will happen? And where do we go from here?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Health): If the honourable member would read the court's decision, he would know exactly what we're doing. It's a public document and he is welcome to read it. We are following the court's decision, which was to negotiate with Dr Posen. Dr Posen has made an arrangement to get rid of that American company that was so discredited by your party, which stopped the process. You've never explained that honestly to your constituents.

It was the member for Renfrew North and the member for Fort William —

The Speaker: I think that was unparliamentary. I would ask you to withdraw it.

Hon Mr Wilson: Speaker, I withdraw.

The way this went, a proper tender went out, a particular party won that tender, questions were raised in this House calling into question that tender and that put us into the court action. That's what happened. I haven't been free to this point to say because it has been tied up in court for over a year. So read your Hansard. That's the history.

Having said that, we're moving very positively in the future to do what the court directed, to negotiate with Dr Posen. Hopefully all that will get sorted out and new services will be up and running in Ottawa and Cornwall.

Mr Cleary: Minister, I can remember how frustrated you were when you were in opposition and you didn't have dialysis in your riding.

There have been 18 months of dithering around. After your announcement last spring, these people hoped they would be relieved of another winter's driving to Ottawa and Kingston. Please cut out the rhetoric today and tell the people of eastern Ontario that they won't have to drive again through these weather conditions. Instead, provide some comfort to these people by revealing today that the Cornwall dialysis facility will be treating patients this coming winter.

Hon Mr Wilson: That's certainly the intention. We were able to do that right across the province, with the exception of eastern Ontario because of the court case. Now that that has cleared, that is exactly what we're going to do. We have some 20 clinics up and running; they are already up and running. The proof is that the government's policy, my personal quest over the last seven years, I agree with the honourable member, has been very much fulfilled across the province.

Because of legal reasons we were unable to move in eastern Ontario until now, but I can assure the honourable member we're moving just as quickly as we possibly can, and we certainly are very much aware of the winter and the driving conditions your constituents would face, the same conditions my constituents faced, as you mentioned, and we will get you those services just as fast as we can.

1450

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY OFFICE

Ms Shelley Martel (Sudbury East): I have a question to the Attorney General. I want to return to the issue of the drivers' licence suspension project that we raised yesterday.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Order. I need to hear these questions. I appreciate there are a lot of important meetings taking place as we speak, but I wish you'd come to order.

Ms Martel: Minister, on May 9 you said, "The testing of the suspension of drivers' licences will begin immediately to ensure a smooth and full implementation in September of 1997." Further in the press release you went on to say, "Other enforcement measures will be implemented later this year, including suspensions of drivers' licences, which is currently being tested." That was May 9.

Our information is quite different. Will you confirm in the House today that in fact you have not begun the drivers' licence suspension project at all and that when you do begin testing, you will only start with 100 drivers who are in default? Can you confirm that in the House today?

Hon Charles Harnick (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): It's certainly our intention to begin the process of the enforcement measures to which the member refers. We've indicated we would do it in September, and it's going to happen in September.

PETITIONS

TVONTARIO

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I have a petition that's directed to the minister responsible for privatization, and it's in opposition to privatizing TVOntario. It reads:

"We, the undersigned, oppose any plans to privatize TVOntario and strongly support TVO's proposal to convert the agency to a not-for-profit corporation. We, the undersigned, strongly urge the government of Ontario to ensure continued access by Wahsa and Wawatay radio to TVO's distribution system. The privatization of TVOntario would jeopardize the excellent educational and information programming provided by TVOntario. The sale of TVO to commercial interests would also jeopardize Wawatay radio network's native language programming, and Wahsa's distance education services, because both depend on TVO's distribution system."

I have attached my name to that petition as well.

CHILD CARE

Mr Frank Klees (York-Mackenzie): I have a petition that was brought to my attention by a constituent. I would like to read it, as follows:

"We, the undersigned residents of Ontario, draw the attention of the Legislature of Ontario to the following:

"That managing the family home and caring for infants and preschool children is an honourable profession which has not been recognized for its value to our society and deserves respect and support;

"That child care policies and funding should provide equity and fairness to all Ontario families;

"Therefore, your petitioners call upon the Legislature,

"(a) to pursue policy and funding initiatives that will support a full range of child care choices such as extending the child care tax credit to all families, including those providing full-time parental care; and

"(b) to pursue discussions with the federal government to review the tax system to find ways to assist two-parent families where one parent chooses to remain at home."

I am pleased to add my name to this petition.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-Walkerville): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas Windsor-Essex county was the first community to undergo hospital restructuring; and

"Whereas the community supported the recommendations of the Win-Win report based on a funding model that included the expansion of community-based care; and

"Whereas recent reports estimate that Windsor-Essex hospital expenditure is underfunded by approximately $122 per person; and

"Whereas this represents the lowest funding per capita for hospital services of any community in Ontario with a population of over 200,000; and

"Whereas hospitals across the province have been forced to further reduce expenditures 18%; and

"Whereas these cuts have forced hospitals to eliminate emergency services in the west end of Windsor and other desperately needed services; and

"Whereas the minister acknowledged that additional funding was necessary in high-growth areas;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly to call on the Minister of Health to provide the appropriate level of funding to hospitals in Windsor-Essex which would allow Windsor Regional Hospital to provide urgent care services for the west-end community and to restore equitable health care funding across Windsor and Essex county."

Like hundreds of my fellow Windsorites I affix my signature to this petition.

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): I have a petition regarding the call for a public inquiry into the Plastimet fire in Hamilton.

"Whereas a fire at a PVC plastic vinyl plant located in the middle of one of Hamilton's residential areas burned for three days; and

"Whereas the city of Hamilton declared a state of emergency and called for a limited voluntary evacuation of several blocks around the site; and

"Whereas the burning of PVC results in the formation and release of toxic substances such as dioxins, as well as large quantities of heavy metals and other dangerous chemicals;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to hold a full public inquiry into the Hamilton Plastimet fire."

We're not backing away from this demand for one minute.

MUNICIPAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): I have a petition from a small number of the residents of my riding of Peterborough expressing their concern with the change of services between the province and at the municipal level.

KIDNEY DIALYSIS

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly.

"Whereas there is no dialysis treatment currently available in Cornwall; and

"Whereas the lack of local medical treatment forces dialysis patients throughout Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry and beyond to drive to Ottawa and Kingston, sometimes several times each week, even during dangerous winter weather conditions, to receive the basic medical attention, incurring unnecessary stress and cost; and

"Whereas the Minister of Health promised on April 24, 1996, to rectify this medical shortfall by establishing a dialysis treatment facility in Cornwall; and

"Whereas this promise made by the Minister of Health has, to date, not been kept, resulting in local patients and their families travelling to Ottawa and Kingston for treatment several times a week;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly to ensure that the Minister of Health follows through on his commitment made last April to set up a long-awaited dialysis and much-needed health service in the Cornwall area."

That's signed by residents from the Cornwall area.

PAY EQUITY

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario regarding pay equity in Bill 136:

"Whereas the Harris government has introduced Bill 136; and

"Whereas Bill 136 strips entitlements to employee status and therefore pay equity rights for home child care providers; and

"Whereas home child care providers are predominantly female; and

"Whereas home child care providers are one of the lowest-paid groups of workers in Ontario;

"Therefore we, the undersigned citizens of Ontario, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to withdraw Bill 136 and its implications for the Pay Equity Act."

On behalf of my NDP colleagues, I add my name to theirs.

COURT DECISION

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth): I have a petition that's signed by 54 constituents.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas communities strongly disagree with allowing women to go topless in public;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To enact legislation to require women to wear tops in public places for the protection of our children and for public safety in general."

I sign this so it becomes a record of the assembly.

1500

EDUCATION REFORM

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): This is a petition on secondary school reform in Ontario.

"Dear Minister:

"We believe that the heart of education in our province is in the relationship between students and teachers and that this human and relational dimension should be maintained and extended in any proposed reform. As the Minister of Education and Training, you should know how strongly we oppose many of the secondary school reform recommendations being proposed by your ministry and government.

"We recognize and support the need to review secondary education in Ontario. The proposal for reform as put forward by your ministry, however, is substantially flawed in several key areas: (a) reduced instruction time, (b) reduction in instruction in English, (c) reduction of qualified teaching personnel, (d) academic work experience credit not linked to educational curriculum, (e) devaluation of formal education.

"We strongly urge your ministry to delay the implementation of secondary school reform so that all interested stakeholders — parents, students, school councils, trustees and teachers — are able to participate in a more meaningful consultation process which will help ensure that a high quality of publicly funded education is provided."

I affix my signature to this petition.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): I have a petition regarding the review of the Occupational Health and Safety Act.

"Whereas workers' health and safety must be protected in the province of Ontario, especially the right to refuse work which is likely to endanger a worker, the right to know about workplace hazards and the right to participate in joint health and safety committees; and

"Whereas the Occupational Health and Safety Act and its regulations help protect workers' health and safety and workers' rights in this area; and

"Whereas the government's discussion paper, Review of the Occupational Health and Safety Act, threatens workers' health and safety by proposing to deregulate the existing act and regulations to reduce or eliminate workers' health and safety rights and to reduce enforcement of health and safety laws by the Ministry of Labour; and

"Whereas workers must have a full opportunity to be heard about this proposed drastic erosion in their present protections from injuries and occupational diseases;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to oppose any attempt to erode the present provisions of the Occupational Health and Safety Act and its regulations. Further we, the undersigned, demand that public hearings on the discussion paper be held in at least 20 communities throughout Ontario."

I proudly add my name to theirs.

COURT DECISION

Mr John L. Parker (York East): I have a petition here signed by eight Ontario residents relating to the recent Ontario court decision relating to toplessness in public. It expresses disapproval of that decision and it makes recommendations as to municipal bylaws and federal legislation to address the matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): I have a petition here that was submitted to me by Ted Loughead, the staff representative of OPSEU, Region 4, in Kingston and it deals with Bill 136. It is addressed to the Honourable Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"We, the following undersigned citizens of Ontario, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas Bill 136, the Public Sector Dispute Resolution Act, 1997, will not meet its stated objective to facilitate collective bargaining in the event of mergers and amalgamations; and

"Further, if enacted, Bill 136 will interfere with collective bargaining, impose a new bureaucratic and dictatorial regime, remove the right to fair and impartial arbitration of disputes and the right to strike; and

"Whereas the Ontario Labour Relations Board has a long and successful history of mediating labour disputes;

"Therefore, in the interest of maintaining and enhancing quality public services provide by dedicated public employees, we hereby petition the Ontario government to withdraw its proposed Bill 136 legislation and support a fair and workable system that will not disrupt the supply of public services to the community or the livelihoods of thousands of Ontarians."

It's signed by approximately 40 individuals and I have signed my name to it as well, as I am in complete agreement with same.

NURSING STAFF

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I have a petition here from a number of people from the community of Timmins. It reads as follows:

"Please help us send a message to our government by signing our petition to stop the cuts to nursing staff in nursing homes. Hopefully this petition will make a better life for the sick people and the elderly people of our community.

"Sick people are not asking to be sick. People at nursing homes are in need of special care.

"There are many disadvantages with the cuts in nursing staff that are to be made in the future. Disabled people will end up suffering more because they will not be getting the care they should have. Lack of proper care could lead to depression in some patients.

"At this moment, nurses have difficulty to keep up with their duties because there are so many sick patients in nursing homes. With the proposed cuts, the nurses left working will get exhausted from rushing too much, which could lead to accidents. Furthermore, nurses will end up being on sick leave because of stress and pressure because of the lack of other nurses. Just think of how these cuts would affect your family in special need of care."

This is by one of the residents in the nursing home and it was signed by a number of family members, totalling around 500 people. I affix my signature to that petition.

WATER CHLORINATION

Mr Ted Chudleigh (Halton North): A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the chemical substance chlorine was added to the people of Milton's pure well water supply in 1995; and

"Whereas recent studies on the use of chlorine additives in drinking water have raised the spectre of chlorine as a possible cancer agent; and

"Whereas the people of the town of Milton overwhelmingly supported the belief that a standby chlorination requirement is sufficient enough to prevent the spread of a serious bacterial threat;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Be it resolved that the Ontario government grant the people of Milton's request for a variance allowing only standby chlorination to be used in treating the pure well water supplies for Milton's water delivery system."

I'm in agreement with this and I will affix my signature to it, there being over 3,000 signatures now on these petitions.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I have a petition that reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Progressive Conservative government has failed to address the root causes of waste, duplication and unnecessary administration in our health care system; and

"Whereas the provincial government has instead introduced Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, that makes it easier for employers to reduce the number of front-line staff and to lower their salaries and benefits and thus causing further deterioration in quality patient care; and

"Whereas Bill 136 also erodes the democratic process by tampering with collective agreements and potentially interfering with workers' choice of bargaining agents;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to withdraw Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, and restructure the health care system in a safe, coordinated and rational way."

I've added my name to that petition as well.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

UNIFORM FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL CHILD SUPPORT GUIDELINES ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR L'HARMONISATION DES LIGNES DIRECTRICES FÉDÉRALES ET PROVINCIALES SUR LES ALIMENTS POUR LES ENFANTS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 128, An Act to amend the Family Law Act to provide for child support guidelines and to promote uniformity between orders for the support of children under the Divorce Act (Canada) and orders for the support of children under the Family Law Act / Projet de loi 128, Loi modifiant la Loi sur le droit de la famille pour prévoir des lignes directrices sur les aliments pour les enfants et pour promouvoir l'harmonisation entre les ordonnances alimentaires au profit des enfants rendues en vertu de la Loi sur le divorce (Canada) et celles rendues en vertu de la Loi sur le droit de la famille.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Churley): Member for Windsor-Sandwich, I believe you had the floor.

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor-Sandwich): We are continuing debate on Bill 128. I had the opportunity last time they had called this bill to be speaking to it and ended the day, so I am pleased to finish with the last nine minutes of it.

Bill 128 has to do with custody and support. Our greatest difficulty with the government coming forward with a bill of this nature is that the government goes forward with making changes without understanding the very nature of what it has done to family support in Ontario so far.

We know in the Windsor area that they closed a regional office. Before they closed the regional office, we petitioned the Attorney General, who actually went to law school in Windsor, who knows the system in Windsor very well. We said to the minister, "Minister, the Windsor regional office is one of your most fruitful regional offices for family support. It makes the government money in the amount it costs to run the office versus the kind of support it's able to garner from parents who are paying support. It makes some $25 million a year, far in excess of other regional offices just by virtue of the kind of industry we have in the Windsor area."

They closed the regional office anyway and instead went forward with some kind of new-fangled system, never tested, never tried, which was a complete and utter disaster.

Now you want to come forward with Bill 128 and say, "We think we've got something that's going to help the system." Friends, this government couldn't handle the original system, couldn't make a simple change to mechanics without creating much concern and strife for many families across Ontario, let alone just those in Windsor and Essex county.

The difficulty of coming here today to say, "Yes, you may make changes in the law somewhere," without understanding that this very government cannot be trusted to implement change — this government wants to be proud of bringing change to Ontarians. When you come from Windsor and Essex county, you see the kind of bulldozer, steamroller approach this government takes to change.

We have a hospital system in complete disarray because of that same mentality that you bring to bear in every ministry this government operates. The Minister of Health stands on his feet today and says: "I'm not responsible. I'm not in charge. I can't tell them all what to do." People of Ontario need to understand the Ontario government funds, and because they fund they also make people obliged to acts —

Interjection.

1510

Mrs Pupatello: — like the hospital act. This member from Sarnia wants to yell out.

Let's talk to the people from Lambton. They saw exactly what happened after a steamroller, bulldozer approach in Lambton. In fact, all the galleries here were full of people from this member's riding because they knew his government was not listening. They were not listening to the very people who saw change coming to Lambton, that the hospitals were going to be closed with no input, that they weren't going to be told where their services were going to come from.

Yesterday, my office in Windsor received frantic phone calls from the emergency services in Windsor. They called our office to say: "We need help. Somebody has to help us. We have a furious doctor running the emergency there, saying, 'I can't go into the waiting room to bring a patient into emergency to treat because I have nowhere to put the patient.'" These people are angry because those who are already in emergency don't have a bed to be sent to in the hospital because the hospital beds are all full of people who have to move into long-term-care beds which aren't there.

You think you are making change. I'm telling you that you're destroying any kind of confidence we could have in your hospital system, and believe me, you are going to own this one.

Today in the House the minister referred to these as "bed blockers." When you come from Windsor, these patients are not bed blockers. He may refer to them in that abstract manner because it's easier for him to deal with things that aren't real. Well, what we hear about are things that are real. These are patients who are being sent home, and in the end the patients —

Mr E.J. Douglas Rollins (Quinte): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I've been sitting here listening and I have Bill 128 in my hand. I don't see anything about beds, I don't see anything about hospitals and I don't see anything about that.

The Acting Speaker: I get your point of order. Thank you. Take your seat. Member for Windsor-Sandwich, he does have a point. You must speak, under the rules, to Bill 128.

Mrs Pupatello: When we talk about Bill 128, we are talking about the kind of change this government wants to bring to bear to Ontarians. What you need to do before you change the law is make sure you have systems in place to deal with the law. This Attorney General should have lost his job months ago with the fiasco he created with family support, where people are losing their homes because they couldn't pay their mortgages because you decided to change the system. You decided to close regional offices but you didn't have a system in place.

Your government uses the same pattern in every ministry, and that is exactly the relationship of the Windsor hospital situation and this Bill 128. You forced the closure of emergency care out of Windsor Western on the west side of town with no expansion done at the other two sites.

Yesterday three ambulances waited at emergency at Hotel-Dieu Grace for an hour. They couldn't leave the hospital because a patient was still on a stretcher in the emergency with no bed to move the patient on to. That is the same pattern that is brought to bear with Bill 128 —

Mr Gerry Martiniuk (Cambridge): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: Again, I believe the member for Windsor-Sandwich is wandering. She's not talking to the point. The bill is before us.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Windsor-Sandwich, please try and stay on Bill 128.

Mrs Pupatello: Thank you, Speaker. You'll understand that the pattern being set — when you make changes in one place you need to ensure that the environment is ready to make changes. Therefore, you don't close the regional office of family support before your computer system is working, so that you've tested it and tried it. Similarly, you do not close an emergency ward before the other two sites are expanded with sufficient beds, with enough bays for ambulances to pull into. That is exactly the connection. This pattern is the same.

You insist on making changes before you've prepared any groundwork out there — a steamroller, bulldozer approach to your government. What do we get instead? We get this kind of affiliation for patients: He wants to call them "bed blockers." These patients from Windsor are not bed blockers. The people that are sent home from emergency, only to die at home, are not bed blockers. These are people who pay taxes. The people with family support who can't pay their mortgage payment, what are they? Are they government blockers somehow? These are individuals who get family support and they should be able to pay a mortgage payment with money that is truly theirs. Instead, you close the regional office, there is no system in place for these people, and Bill 128 somehow is going to cure that.

Mr John L. Parker (York East): Madam Speaker, on a point of order: I'm just happy to remind you, and perhaps through you the member for Windsor-Sandwich, that we are still on Bill 128.

Mrs Pupatello: When we arrive and when we have an issue that you cannot turn around and say does not exist, you'll continue to interrupt me because you don't want my point to get out there. That's what is happening in this House today. It's going to take an awful lot of that to try to stop me in this House, let me tell you.

We have an emergency report called for by the Minister of Health himself. It itemizes clearly that conditions are unsafe, undignified, that appropriate care is not being delivered in Windsor area hospitals. It is his report that he called for, that he must own up to, but today he chooses to stand and say: "I'm not responsible. It's not me. I haven't got anything I can do about that." If that's the case, give up the limo, give up the cheque, go back to being a backbencher and put somebody in charge who can bloody well do this job, because he's dealing with families, and when you come from Windsor it makes a difference.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I am pleased to be able to respond to the speech made by the member from Windsor. I think she was quite good at demonstrating the links that exist between this bill and the context of everything else that this government is doing. I think it was a superb job of demonstrating that you cannot look at this particular bill, Bill 128, without the context of looking at what the government's doing when it comes to children with hospitals; when it comes to what the government is doing around the family support plan; when it comes to what the government has done with welfare cuts; when it comes to what the government has done with the cuts to day care; when it comes to what the government has done when it comes to social housing; when it comes to the all-out attack that this government has made on working families and the children of this province over the last two and a half years.

As I say, I think the member for Windsor-Sandwich showed that there are links between Bill 128 and what this government is doing. I think she did a good job of showing those links. On the other issue that she spoke to, in regard to the family support plan, again the government gets nervous. They all stood up and said, "Madam Speaker, on a point of order: The member is talking about FSP and is not talking about Bill 128." The members of the government are nervous. They don't like it when members of the opposition, or even be it the public through the committee process, come to them and hold them to task on their decisions.

The reality is that you guys have messed up big time. The family support plan has never been in the disastrous state that it is in now, since Charles Harnick, the now Attorney General of the province of Ontario, has come to power and has made it a mess. He shut down the regional offices. They took all the files, they put them in boxes, then they shipped them off to Downsview, and nobody knew where they were. Meanwhile, support order changes and all kinds of things that needed to be dealt with weren't, and people who used to pay and never had a problem getting money to their spouses were being all messed up. Who's getting hurt? Again, it's the kids.

I congratulate the member. I think she demonstrated that this government, when it comes to children, has no record to be proud of.

Mr Parker: I listened with great interest to the comments opposite. Frankly, I thought I'd made an error in reading the order paper and I'd stumbled in on the wrong debate, because the subject we were here to discuss is Bill 128, which is a child support bill. What that has to do with the tale we were being told about hospitals in Windsor is beyond me.

If we had been hearing a discussion about child support, we might have heard about the disaster that was left to this government by the previous government, with the boxes upon boxes with the dust already thick on those boxes of child support claims that were sitting in those regional offices throughout the province receiving no attention whatsoever. We would have been hearing about the countless phone calls that went totally unanswered, let alone answered and not responded to, by the previous government, and the mess, the Augean stables that this government has had to clean out in dealing with the mess that was left behind by the so-called family assistance plan left by the previous government, and what we are trying to do now to try to get out from under that.

There will be reason to cheer in the weeks ahead as the backlog left to us by the previous government is dealt with and we can get on with dealing with cases as they are currently being brought forward. Phone calls are being answered. Phone calls are being returned. Action is taking place, not something that's totally unknown in this province — it was unknown until this government took office. It's taking a while to get through the backlog that we were left with, yes, that's true, but we're just about through the backlog and we're on top of the current cases.

If the member for Windsor-Sandwich had been discussing Bill 128, we might have heard a little bit about the child support guidelines that are brought forward in Bill 128. We might have heard something about how Bill 128 will ensure the public has adequate information to make decisions on how best to proceed with their child support claims.

1520

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I was delighted to see the member tie in this bill with the entire government program, because that's what you have to do. You can't speak only about the bill in isolation. She was worried. She thought the government had sounded the bugles of retreat. The government appears to be in full panic the last couple of weeks. They're going from crisis to crisis, many of which they created themselves, and that's what she pointed out.

I was as astounded as she — she mentioned this in her speech — when the Minister of Health today referred to patients in hospital beds as bed blockers. I can't believe that. That demonstrates the bureaucratic, unfeeling approach that the government is taking to health care. The member wanted to mention that, and I don't blame her for mentioning that.

As well, she would recall that the Premier said a while ago that nurses were like hula hoops. He compared them to hula hoops. He said, "Hula hoops went out of style; people had to do something different," and he said that's what nurses would have to do. I know the nurses haven't forgiven the government for that, and I think the patients, when they hear that they are referred to as bed blockers, are going to be equally concerned. I'm glad the member mentioned that.

Several times government members, who are feeling very edgy today — they see the government diving in the polls, they see the government doing very poorly in by-elections, so they're starting to worry. They're running for cover now. So every time somebody mentions something that appears to be a little bit off topic when there's a bill before the House, the government members are up protesting. I am responding, of course, to what the member has had to say. I worry about that, because I know, for instance, that the government members tend to —

Mr Martiniuk: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: It had better be good.

Mr Martiniuk: Yes, it is good, Madam Speaker. Again, the Liberal Party seems to be wandering all over the place. The member for St Catharines knows the rules of this House, and he is ignoring them. The point —

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Member, take your seat. I get your point.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I want order, please. The members are giving their two-minute responses to the previous speaker, and they are allowed to say what they choose to say in response to that speech. Go ahead.

Mr Bradley: The member for Cambridge, the government member, has made my point just now. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions and comments?

Mr Len Wood (Cochrane North): It's quite obvious that there is a lot of nervousness in this Legislature among the Conservative backbenchers as they go home for the weekend and hear all the commotion that is going on, and people are unhappy. They attack the comments that the member for Windsor-Sandwich is making on Bill 128. If you are going to have a discussion in this Legislature on Bill 128, surely you have to bring in all the mistakes that the Minister of Education has made as he has been trying to restructure the education system. One week he is saying one thing and another week he is saying another thing.

The Minister of Health is talking about patients who are in beds being bed blockers. You talk about a slap in the face — somebody is going in for surgery and spends time in hospital, and then you get the Minister of Health making comments of this kind.

The Minister of Education is saying, "I didn't mean that the students were going to have to go back one week earlier, a week before Labour Day; I meant that the teachers are going to have to go back one week before Labour Day." They've been doing that for the last 30 years. The Minister of Education doesn't even understand that the teachers have been going back one week or two weeks earlier, before September, to prepare their classes for the new year. All of a sudden the Minister of Education is saying: "There is some confusion out there. What I meant to say was it's an attack on teachers, it's not on students," and he doesn't understand the whole system. I understand it, as a lot of people from northern Ontario do.

The member for Windsor-Sandwich has explained fully that this government has no caring about women and children. The first thing they did when they came into government was to cut 21% or 22% of the money that they need for food, lodging and to pay the hydroelectricity. The most vulnerable people in society were given a slap on the face by this government, and they are continuing to do it over the last two and a half years. It's just one slap after another. I congratulate the member for Windsor-Sandwich.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Windsor-Sandwich, you can sum up.

Mrs Pupatello: One of these days, the MPPs from all over Ontario are going to understand what has happened to the health care system in Windsor, because it's coming to a community near you. The pace of change and the pattern is so completely backwards. Just like it is with family support, so it is with health care, and you will understand when it's in your backyard and when it's your constituents who are being affected like mine are. So every one of you who wants to heckle and interrupt is going to learn sooner rather than later that your health minister wants not to be responsible, but he is, and you have a responsibility as a provincial government to provide the right level of funding for quality care in this province.

Because our community was ahead of the game, we have spent millions of dollars never to be reimbursed by that ministry. Your Premier doesn't have the gall or the nerve to come into my community, other than at the airport and barely stepping off the curb during an election campaign, to even come and see for himself what kind of situation we have in Windsor.

Any one of you who wants to question the credibility of the issues, I invite you personally to come to my riding. I will personally give you a tour. I will introduce you to Conservatives who are helping me with this fight, because this is not about what party you belong to; this is about what kind of health care we get.

Some of your members already know this, because several of your members voted in favour of my private member's bill to completely abolish the health commission that is causing the destruction at the behest of the Premier of Ontario. You cannot get away with this kind of thing without hurting people. This will come home to roost — it will take us time to get this message out — because eventually this is coming to your own backyard. Unfortunately, Windsor was first. We are the canary in the coal mine here. Everything that you are doing today is not allowing us to go forward with good, positive health care in the Windsor community, and you will learn this.

The Acting Speaker: Before we continue with debate, I want to say two things to the members. Number one, I want to remind the members that you are supposed to, under the rules, stick to generally — you all know we're fairly lenient here — the contents of the bill, which is Bill 128 today. Number two, I want to say to members that you have the right at any time to stand up on a point of order, and I appreciate that, but I would also appreciate that the members show respect for each other and not stand up on two-minute rebuttals unless you're absolutely clear. Use your common sense, if I may say so, and make sure —

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Seriously, show some respect for each other, because when you interrupt somebody in a two-minute rebuttal, you realize that they lose most of their time. Of course I will take your point of order, but I would ask all members to please think carefully and make sure that your point of order is legitimate and fair. Thank you. Further debate?

1530

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): It gives me pleasure to be able to join in this debate on Bill 128 that is dealing with family support. I'll try and keep on the important highlights of family support, because this is an issue that I heard about during the campaign leading up to September 4, but I can tell members in the House that I heard about a lot of other concerns from voters in Windsor-Riverside as well. Many people were saying that this government was moving too far, too fast, and they were concerned —

Interjection: And in the wrong direction.

Mr Lessard: And in the wrong direction as well. They were concerned because they were seeing a crisis in emergency care in the hospitals in our community. They saw the prospect of closing parts of hospitals in the community without changes being made to adequately address those closures. They were seeing a health care system in crisis in the Windsor area and they had a great deal of concern about that. The member for Windsor-Sandwich touched on that during her remarks as well. It's really difficult to try and speak just about family support as an issue I heard during the campaign without really considering everything about this government's agenda over the last two years. All these things fit together.

As this government was moving ahead with its agenda, something else I heard during the campaign that people were concerned about was the fact that the health care cuts were affecting our community, cuts to education were affecting our community and cuts to environmental protection were affecting our community. We had a very effective regional office in Windsor that was protecting the environment, that was out investigating spills, that was making sure our drinking water was safe to drink. That's an office that has been cut in half over the last year and a half as far as staff are concerned, since this government got elected in 1995. That was something that people were concerned about as well and told me about during the election.

Family support did come up, because there were many people in my riding who were concerned about the closure of the regional family support office in Windsor and the impact that was having, especially on women and children who were unable to get the support they needed to survive. We're talking mostly about support that was due to children to provide clothing, to provide housing and to provide food. They were having problems getting the support payments that were being made to the family support plan by their spouses. Those payments weren't getting to the people who needed that money to survive.

In this government's expediency in moving too far, too fast and in the wrong direction, in closing hospitals, in cutting health care, in cutting protection to the environment and downloading responsibilities on to municipalities, there are certain things this government overlooked. I know some of the members opposite are going to say: "You're complaining about the government moving too far, too fast. Here's a bill we should be moving faster on." Everybody agrees this is a bill that should have been passed last May actually, or even before, because this bill deals with uniformity of support orders between federal and provincial legislation.

Before coming to this place on September 4, I was a lawyer in private practice — not a family law lawyer, but I had occasion to deal with family law cases. I know these federal support guidelines were introduced well over a year ago. The proposals for the legislation for the federal support guidelines were suggested well over a year ago. They've been subject to debate in the House of Commons, they've been subject to debate among lawyers and people in the legal profession. They make a lot of sense.

They take out a lot of the arguing and the bickering between spouses that say, "I should be receiving a certain level of support for a whole number of different issues." The federal guidelines say that if your income is a certain amount and this is the number of children you have, then this is the amount of support you should pay. That's something that makes sense.

Frankly, I think most people would fail to understand why it has taken this government so long to bring in and implement legislation that falls along the side of the federal guidelines, given the amount of time they've taken to put those federal guidelines into place. This is legislation that mirrors those federal guidelines.

For many people the distinction is very difficult to understand, but just to give some explanation to people who may be watching this, when it comes to couples who are legally married, in order to end that relationship they have to get a divorce. Divorces are done through courts and through the federal legislation. That, of course, is the process under which a judge will set the amount of support, if any, that is going to be paid by one spouse to the other or children.

There's also a great number of people who don't fall within the jurisdiction of the federal divorce legislation because they haven't been legally married. They may be living in common-law relationships; they may be living in relationships where they have children but they haven't gotten married. Those people who break up obviously have an obligation to support their children and this legislation recognizes that. I think it's important that it does acknowledge that every parent of a child continues to have an obligation to support that child. It's important that we remind people of the obligation they have.

How is that obligation enforced if it's not an action that takes place in divorce court but actually takes place in provincial court? That's something we need to look at. In Windsor we had a regional office that was providing for the effective enforcement of support orders that had been made in provincial court. We've seen that office closed since this government was elected in 1995, and people who never had any problem getting their support after 1990 started to have all kinds of problems after 1995, when that office was closed.

I brought up a case just the other day during question period that wasn't really just a problem with enforcement. There are a great number of other problems that we're having. We've heard from a number of people who have said: "I spoke to my spouse. They said that they paid the money to the family support plan. They paid it on time, but we don't have the money. It never got to us. We don't have any money for groceries or to pay the rent. What are we supposed to do?" Of course, they can't pay them directly. They have to pay through the family support plan. They're in a lot of trouble, a lot of difficulty, if they don't get that money after it's been paid by the payor. You really have to wonder what's happening with all that money.

The case I brought up the other day, of Sharon Stockford, was a case where she wasn't having a problem getting the money that was owed to her; the problem was that her circumstances changed. She had a child who had moved out of the house and therefore wasn't really entitled to the level of support that she has actually been getting. What she wanted to do was simply to get in touch with somebody from this government and say: "This support order needs to be changed. You're collecting too much money and you're giving me too much money, and it needs to be changed." She wasn't able to get in touch with anybody. She's tried to call the 800 number; there's no answer. She's tried to write a letter; there's no response. She sends faxes; there's no response. It's a simple thing to get that order changed, you would think. All she had to do was find somebody in this government who was going to be able to listen to her and make some change, and she wasn't able to do that.

She called our office and we tried to do the same thing. We try to call the 800 number. We don't get any response either.

In August — this was before the election, but I can tell you that we were working on many of these cases during the election as well. We had people who were working on the election campaign doing case work. For a while, there was an 800 number and there was a person you could actually speak to at the other end. But now when you call that number, it just goes right to voice mail. There's nobody there to answer the phone any more. You leave a message on voice mail; there's never any response.

This is just another example of the incompetence of this government and the Attorney General as well. That's something we need to take into consideration when we're talking about passing this legislation to unify —

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Come on, member for Kingston and The Islands.

Mr Lessard: — orders for support under the Divorce Act and the Family Law Act as well.

The Attorney General had the gall to say to me in response to my question that he had called my constituency office and the phones were disconnected or something like that. It's not my phones that are disconnected, it's the Attorney General's phones that are disconnected. There's nobody there to answer the Attorney General's phones. There's nobody there at the family support plan to answer the phones. We haven't had any problem with our telephones, Madam Speaker. I just want to assure you of that because that's something that does come within the jurisdiction of the Speaker's office. I can assure you that we haven't got any problem with our telephones. Anybody who calls our office gets someone to answer the phone and gets a response to their questions, and that's the way it should be.

1540

Mr Bisson: Except at the family support plan office.

Mr Lessard: At the family support plan they don't get that kind of service, and everybody who's called there knows that.

One of the things that does concern me about this legislation, Bill 128, is the fact that everybody thinks it's already passed. There have been advertising campaigns with respect to the federal guidelines, and anybody who's got a support order that's been made or who's been through provincial court already thinks that this is the law here in Ontario. They don't realize that this government hasn't gotten around to passing laws that affect provincial court orders up until this time and they're going to start making applications to the courts for variations of these existing orders.

What's going to happen when thousands of people make application at the same time for variations of their support orders? It really makes me wonder what impact that's going to have on our legal system, a legal system that is currently suffering under a burden of not enough people working in the courthouse, not enough courtrooms.

There are difficulties in the registrar's office in the courthouse in Windsor, I can tell you. If people want to make an application to vary their support order, they have to go and take one of those tickets off the doorway, like you get at the meat or the deli counter that tells you what number it is that you have to make your application at, and there are often times when you're going to spend at least two or three hours waiting in that line to file your application to get a variation to your support order.

What we really need is some streamlining of the system so that every time a person's financial circumstances change, for example, if a person who is paying support loses their job — and we know that if you're working in the government of Ontario there's a higher prospect that you're going to be losing your job since this government got elected in 1995. But if you lose your job and your income changes and you therefore want to get your support order varied, there isn't a simple system to enable you to do that. It's unfortunate that isn't something that is provided for in this legislation.

Something else that isn't provided for in this legislation is indexing if inflation goes up, for example. There isn't any automatic provision in this legislation to increase those support orders. That's another case where if inflation rises rapidly again, which I hope we don't see, people will then also be faced with the prospect of having to make an application for variation and to go through the court system.

You know that oftentimes people who are applying for variations because they've lost their jobs don't have the income to pay for a lawyer. They don't have the financial means to do that. The first thing that people do is go down to the legal aid office and say: "I lost my job. I can't continue to pay the support that I owe. Can I get a certificate to provide me with a legal aid lawyer?" They're told they can't. There have been so many cuts to the legal aid plan since this government got elected that those who really need legal aid aren't going to be able to get a lawyer to make these applications they're entitled to.

What are they going to do? They're going to have to try and represent themselves. We're seeing a great number of people who are being forced through necessity to represent themselves in provincial court. Judges are going to have to take a lot more time to deal with people who are unrepresented in court. That's going to lead to huge backlogs, I suspect, in our court system.

But really what I heard most when I was out campaigning was from people who were concerned about enforcement mechanisms, people who say they've got their orders for support already but they're not getting that support. There were supposed to be some mechanisms that this government has promised on numerous occasions to bring in, like suspension of drivers' licences. I heard yesterday that this program has really been taking a long time to get in place and it isn't uniform across the province as far as the suspension of drivers' licences is concerned. We're really not sure when that's going to come into place.

I just bring that up as another example of some of the bungling that is attributed to the current Attorney General and the difficulty he's having not only with the family support plan but the legal aid plan and a number of other problems that are taking place in the Attorney General's office.

Really, the difficulties are with respect to enforcement. I'm having a number of people call my office now. These are parents who are calling. They're not getting the support and they're struggling to feed and house their families. This is something that should be a very simple process: A judge issues a court order; the Family Responsibility Office gets that order; they give it to the employer; the employer starts to make the payments; the employer forwards those payments to the Family Responsibility Office; they deposit the money or they send the payments out to the recipient.

But that isn't what's happening. What's happening now is just a complete mess. Families aren't getting the money, and payors don't have the money. It's been deducted from their salary already and the employer has sent the money to the Family Responsibility Office. Where does that money go? That's the problem we're faced with right now. Either it sits in a bag of mail or it's deposited into the wrong account — however, I really doubt that; I've rarely heard of people getting too much money in their accounts. Or has the Attorney General's cuts to the program completely crippled this plan?

Families are going without these payments. They call out of desperation. That's the reason they're calling our offices. I know they're not just calling my office; they're calling the government members' offices as well. This money has been allocated to them for the basic necessities of life: food, shelter and clothing. That's what's being denied to them because of the bungling of this government.

In my riding of Windsor-Riverside we have employers who have very large payrolls: Chrysler, Ford, General Motors, Hiram Walker. They have automated payrolls. The money comes out automatically and goes to the family support plan. But where does that money go? It's not going to the recipients. That's what they're calling and telling us about. The standard line from the Attorney General is that it must be somebody else's fault. "It's the payor's fault. They're not getting the money to us in time. The cheque's getting lost in the mail." It's always someone else's fault. But I want to say to the Attorney General that we know it's not somebody else's fault. We've heard this over and over again. This is the responsibility of the Attorney General and he needs to face up to that responsibility and take the actions necessary to clean up this mess.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Jack Carroll (Chatham-Kent): It's a pleasure to stand up and make some comments on the speech given by the member for Windsor-Riverside and to officially welcome him to the House. I've done it personally but this is the first chance I've had to do it publicly. It's nice to have him back again. It's obvious, though, that he's been here before, because he has the knack already in a very short period of time of standing up and talking about everything except the subject at hand. He made very small reference to Bill 128. He talked about education, health, legal aid, pretty well everything, but he did make some small reference to Bill 128.

He did talk about what we really need is more streamlining. Exactly right; what we really need is more streamlining. That's what Bill 128 is all about. I'm glad to see that he acknowledged that. He has picked up on some of the lingo. Some of the jargon has become very popular in this place, because at the very beginning of his speech he talked about "too far, too fast."

Mr Bisson: Heading in the wrong direction.

Mr Carroll: That's right. He also mentioned "in the wrong direction." Coming from southwestern Ontario, he's very familiar with directions. But he did talk about "too far, too fast," and it's interesting.

The other day we passed a bill on behalf of the member for Sudbury in an afternoon, because we all agreed it was something we needed to do. Now we have a piece of legislation here that we all agree is something we need to do. We introduced it in June and here we are, almost into the month of October, and the opposition still has not let us proceed with this bill. I don't understand how they can say we're going too far, too fast, and then at the same time slow us down from implementing a piece of legislation that they agree is in the best interests of young people and children in our province who are the victims of marriage breakup.

Just as final comment, it is nice to see the member for Windsor-Riverside here with us and to understand that he hasn't lost a beat since he was here before.

1550

Mr Bernard Grandmaître (Ottawa East): I would like to congratulate the member on his speech and also congratulate him for coming back to visit us, once in a while anyway, even if it's only every four or five years.

The member talked about the legal aid system, and I thought it was very appropriate that he talked about the lack of service and the cutbacks in legal aid, especially in family law, for the simple reason that in my own constituency office we get a number of phone calls every day about the family support program, and it's not working.

As my colleague from Windsor-Sandwich pointed out, I think it's totally wrong for a government to introduce a new program when no alternative services are in place. I thought she was absolutely right to point out to the government that we need changes to some programs, but to make sure that alternative services are in place.

The present minister went on to say with great fanfare that he was going to change the system, that former governments, including ours, were incompetent, yet he made a mess of the present system. Now he's blaming families, he's blaming couples and he's also blaming children for the mess he has created. I think it's about time that this minister and this ministry take their own responsibility and put in place a system that will work.

Mr Bisson: I want to congratulate my colleague Mr Lessard from Windsor-Riverside for what I think was a bang-on speech in regard to where we find ourselves today when it comes to the family support plan. This bill, Bill 128, deals with the particular aspect about how courts are able to assess what support payments should be paid when people are being separated. The member is making the point that once the court makes that order, it is then the responsibility of the family support plan to make sure that the money comes from the payor to the payee.

Ever since Mr Charles Harnick, the Attorney General of this province, made changes to the family support plan and closed the regional offices of what used to be the family support plan, this system has been in a mess. The member talked about what he heard on the campaign trail, which is what we are hearing in our constituency offices all across this province. You're hearing it, the same as I'm hearing it in my riding office, which is, "I am trying to pay support payments to my wife, the money is coming off my paycheque, my employer is deducting the amount of money, but my ex-wife is not getting the money." That's what the payors are telling us. The payees, on the other hand, are saying: "I can't pay my bills. My children are going without food. The rent is not being paid or the hydro or the phone. When I call my husband to find out what happened, I am finding out that the money has been deducted from his cheque."

The problem is, the person in the middle, Charles Harnick, the Attorney General of this province, has messed up the system. We have case after case after case in our constituency offices that we try to deal with through the Attorney General, and he is not able to do anything. We're saying if you're going to enact changes, at least make sure they work so that the people of this province, especially the children, aren't hurt in your zeal for change.

Mr Jim Flaherty (Durham Centre): I listened with interest to the comments of the member for Windsor-Riverside. He is a lawyer, as he mentioned, and as a lawyer he would know how important it is for persons in Ontario with disputes, particularly family disputes, to have access to efficient, inexpensive dispute resolution. This is even more so when children are involved, and children are involved in the vast majority of these unfortunate marriage breakup situations.

I urge him to encourage the other members opposite to deal with this bill expeditiously. This is the third time this bill has been debated on second reading in this place. This bill is designed to give some degree of guidance and some degree of certainty to families, to husbands and wives and children, in situations where there is a marital dispute in the province.

The federal Divorce Act has its guidelines, but of course it only deals with divorce. There are many separated couples in Ontario. There are many common-law couples in Ontario who break up. These people and their children certainly are entitled to expeditious passage of this important piece of legislation so they will have the same rights as those persons who go through divorce proceedings in Ontario governed by federal legislation.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): Is the Attorney General going to —

The Acting Speaker: Member for Kingston and The Islands, come to order.

Mr Flaherty: I urge the member opposite to speak to his colleagues and encourage them to deal promptly with this piece of legislation. In fact, by 1996, a year ago, every one of the American states had already dealt with mandatory support guidelines for children of divorced and separated couples.

Mr Bisson: You stop whining like everybody else. You are the government.

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Members for Cochrane South and Kingston and The Islands.

Mr Flaherty: This is an important matter. It's serious for all of the children in the province who are children of broken families, and I encourage all members to speedily pass this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Windsor-Riverside.

Mr Lessard: I'm glad to see there were so many people who were listening with interest to my remarks.

To the member for Chatham-Kent, who made some comment about my saying that the government was moving too far, too fast and in the wrong direction, why is it that we can't get speedy passage of this bill if that's the case? I wonder that myself. It seems as though this government is not able to manage their agenda. That's probably the best reason that this legislation isn't through right now.

They don't seem to have any problem when it comes to ramming through Bill 136, which is going to adversely affect the rights of working people here in Ontario. They didn't have any problem with that. They didn't have any problem with speedily moving through Bill 99, which is going to adversely affect injured workers and make changes to the workers' compensation system in Ontario. They didn't have any problem in getting that through really fast. They didn't have any problem in closing those regional offices for the family support plan as well. That was done pretty quickly.

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Durham Centre, come to order.

Mr Lessard: Why is the government not able to put through this legislation that is so important for women and children in getting their support in this province? I think the members in the government need to ask themselves why it's taking so long and not blame the opposition members for the delay in this legislation.

I just want to say to the member for Ottawa East that I'm not here just for a visit. I hope I'm going to be here for the long term.

I also want to indicate that the important issue here is really the implementation. This legislation will pass. We support it, but it needs to be implemented, and the people who deserve the support need to get it.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Carroll: I rise to —

Mr Gerretsen: Don't do it.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Kingston and The Islands, come to order.

1600

Mr Carroll: It's interesting to be part of such a controversial piece of legislation.

I rise today in support of the Uniform Federal and Provincial Child Support Guidelines Act, just in case people had forgotten the name of it. Harmonizing the Family Law Act with the federal guidelines will provide one approach for calculating child support for all Ontarians. These guidelines will apply regardless of whether the child support is sought under federal or provincial law.

Throughout this debate members from both opposition parties have registered their support for this bill. We heard that again today. They have applauded the bill's goal of replacing the current practice of determining child support on a case-by-case basis with the more consistent and predictable approach that these guidelines will bring.

We have also heard acknowledgements that Bill 128 will mean a faster, easier and less expensive way for many parents to calculate the amount of support available to their children. Despite this show of support, some opposition members have accused the government of dragging its feet on this bill. I'd like to remind those opposite, especially the member for Windsor-Riverside, who's just newly arrived, that we were ready to proceed with this legislation in June, after the federal guidelines were finalized. It was the opposition members who delayed second reading of this bill.

There are indications now that even though the parties opposite support the bill, they want to refer it to committee for hearings. There's absolutely nothing to be gained but only valuable time to be lost by further reviewing this bill. The purpose of the bill is to bring Ontario in line with federal guidelines which were fully scrutinized and debated at the federal level. Those guidelines were the result of six years of extensive research and consultation by the federal government. They consulted with lawyers, judges, advocacy groups and parents all across Canada. Together they determined that those guidelines provided the best results for the children. Those are the same guidelines that we propose to incorporate into Ontario's Family Law Act.

In October 1996, a House of Commons standing committee met for four days and heard from 14 witnesses. All but three of those witnesses then appeared before the much-publicized Senate hearings in December 1996 and January 1997. The Senate held six days of hearings and listened to 28 witnesses, who represented the broadest possible spectrum of interest, many of whom were from Ontario. They included Phil Epstein, a Toronto family law specialist; the Canadian Bar Association; the Canadian Council for Co-parenting; an organization called SCOPE involved in family support; Fathers Are Capable Too, an organization with the acronym FACT; the National Association of Women and the Law; REAL Women; the Ontario Catholic Women's League; Nicholas Bala, professor of family law at Queen's University; and Ross Finnie, an economist and professor at Carleton.

These witnesses raised every conceivable issue, from the level of awards to sex bias, custody and access, support for post-secondary students, and complaints that the enforcement provisions were too strong. The federal government undertook as a result of these hearings to review custody and access issues, and we fully endorse that review.

As a result of these hearings, a number of amendments and adjustments were made in the federal child support guideline proposals and they are reflected in Ontario's proposed legislation. As other provinces have proceeded to enact their harmonized child support guidelines, they too have relied on the federal hearings as their major source of public input. Only one province, Manitoba, chose to have public hearings, and only one witness applied to be heard at the hearings.

The federal guidelines have been extensively researched and thoroughly debated to ensure that they benefit children. Legal experts and community organizations have told us that bringing Ontario's Family Law Act into line with the federal guidelines is the right thing to do. In this way, all Ontario child support cases will be treated the same way.

At the same time, there appears to be consensus in this place that Bill 128 puts children first and that it is a bill well worth passing. What then, I ask, is the purpose of delaying this bill by more debate in this House or by holding public hearings? It is in the best interests of children and parents involved in child support cases to proceed with this bill as soon as possible.

We urge all members to expedite the passage of Bill 128 so that all affected people in Ontario can benefit from the predictability and consistency that Bill 128 will bring to the calculation of child support in Ontario.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Questions or comments?

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): We've heard over and over again that Bill 128 is going to have to deal with the fact that many of us from throughout the province deal with on a daily basis, and that's the fact that support payments aren't getting through to the people who most need them. We've heard member after member in this House for the past year or so talk about this, talk to Mr Harnick about the problems. I too have had a great number of these problems come to my office on a regular basis since they closed the regional office in Thunder Bay. That was the reason. The reason was that it became a mess after that.

I don't know how many times we have to tell the Attorney General about the problems, but when we bring the cases to him and we talk about a lady who is going to lose her home because she is not receiving the payments, we've tried many times to help out. It's a quagmire out there and we keep bringing this to the attention of the Attorney General and getting nowhere

At one point, I was telling him in a question to him about a company in my riding which has been there for many years, a well-established, well-developed company. They too are being tarnished because they were told that the payments were not being made through the proper channels in order that the recipient could get the payments. We got back into the quagmire that was formed by moving the regional office out of the area, out of Thunder Bay, not only creating hardship for the recipient but creating hardship for the company, which was doing everything by the law and submitting the payments. But again, it was just a problem created through the Attorney General's office. I wish the members opposite would hear this and speak to the person who is responsible, the Attorney General.

Mr Len Wood: I listened very attentively to the member for Chatham-Kent, concerned that the opposition parties were holding up Bill 128, the child support guidelines. Most of the comments he made during the seven or eight minutes that he was talking were concern that Bill 128 should pass through without any public hearings and that it should go to third reading and become law. Even if it does, even if that process were to be followed, as long as we have an Attorney General who is so incompetent that in January, when he closed down all the regional offices, put everything into trucks and left the boxes lying all over the place, not secure or anything at all — as long as we have this situation that hasn't been rectified yet — it happened in January when they closed down the regional offices and laid off all the staff, and the women and children in most cases are not getting the money that is being taken off the paycheques. We don't know where it is. It must be piled up in one of the offices that the Attorney General is responsible for.

So for the member for Chatham-Kent to say that the opposition parties are holding this legislation up, there's no fact to that charge at all. We were back in January in an emergency winter sitting of the Legislature to deal with whatever agenda the Conservative government wanted to bring forward. Then they called an emergency summer sitting of the Legislature. We came back on August 18 to deal with whatever the government felt was a priority to get passed into legislation. Now they're saying it's the opposition parties that are not cooperating to bring this legislation through.

How incompetent can a government be that they have to bring back the Legislature in two emergency sessions inside of nine months to try to get their agenda through? Their priorities are all over the place. They don't have any priorities.

1610

Mr Parker: I'm pleased to have this opportunity to respond to the remarks by my colleague the member for Chatham-Kent. I would like to remind my friends opposite that the member for Chatham-Kent was speaking on the subject of Bill 128 and not on the subject of the Family Responsibility Office. If he was speaking on the subject of the Family Responsibility Office, he might have spoken at some great length about the absolute mess that the so-called family support plan was in when this government took office and the unforgivable backlog that was left to this government to clean up, with boxes upon boxes of files left untouched in the regional offices and all of the phone calls that went unanswered as the office was inadequate to meet the needs that were out there, and about the heroic efforts this government is putting forward to get through that backlog and to put the whole plan on a more stable and sustainable footing under the Family Responsibility Office and the much better service that the people of this province are receiving from the Family Responsibility Office under this government than they ever received under the family support plan under the previous government.

But that is not what this debate is about, of course. This debate is about Bill 128, which is about uniform child support guidelines; it's about bringing the Ontario legislation into conformity with the federal legislation. As my friend from Durham mentioned earlier, the federal legislation is restricted to Divorce Act settlements, those cases that are resolved under the federal Divorce Act and administered under the federal legislation. In Ontario, we have the Family Law Act, which applies where the Divorce Act is not brought in. This provision here will bring the family support act in Ontario into line with the federal legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Chatham-Kent, you have two minutes.

Mr Carroll: I appreciate the interest shown by the member for Kenora, the member for Cochrane North and my colleague the member for York East. It's interesting that my colleague from York East seemed to be the only one who was paying attention to anything I said, because he's the only one who made any comment on what I said.

The member for Cochrane North talked about our government calling the Legislature back for special sessions so we could advance our agenda. I guess we're making up for the year 1994-95, the last year of the former government, when the Legislature sat vacant for probably 11 of the 12 months of the year. I think those people who work in this place like to see it busy and like to see that we are advancing our agenda, because the people of Ontario need us to do that.

Bill 128 is one small example of some legislation that should have passed through here very simply, that should have been accepted by all party members and should have become law long before now, because it is in the best interests of the young people in our province and some of those single parents who are having trouble with child support issues. That should have happened a long time ago. Unfortunately, because of the way we do things in this place, it didn't happen, and that's sad, because nobody wins in that particular environment; everybody turns out to be losers.

I would hope that today sees the end of the debate on this bill, that we get it done, that we get it enacted, so that the people in the province who need the assistance this bill will provide, namely, young people and single parents or parents who are owed support from their former spouse, can get on with their lives, lead productive lives. That's all we're trying to do. I would hope the opposition members support us in that cause.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-Walkerville): First of all, I want to begin by welcoming my colleague from Windsor, Mr Lessard. I can tell members in the House he's an able and competent campaigner and speaks passionately on the issues he believes in and is worthy of listening to on issues, though we don't agree.

I would like to begin by saying that I personally will be voting in favour of this bill. I think it's a step in the right direction, and I think we need to be speaking about some fundamentals and some things this bill represents, because government members opposite have tried to suggest to us that we're not talking on topic when we speak about things like going too far, too fast. This issue is a great example of what happens when a government does something without considering the consequences. You were able to shut down the family support plan offices a lot faster than you're able to pass this bill, and what did you do? You created chaos.

I've raised issue after issue in this House. Isn't it amazing when you get a case — one case happened in January. A woman died waiting for her support payment. When you raise it in the House, presto, you get a call from the Family Responsibility Office five minutes after you've stood up. But God help you if you're a woman in Windsor with cancer waiting for a family support plan payment.

So when you talk to me about dealing with this bill quickly, great. How is it you could close those offices so fast? Let me tell you, you created a mess. You know it, every one of you. You've had the same calls we have. You didn't think through the consequences. You didn't think for a minute, did you, that if you close six offices and lay off staff, lay off lawyers, lay off advocates, and don't even have another replacement office open, there are going to be problems?

I know many of the government members are small business people, and they know how to run an efficient operation; they're customer-service oriented. Let's remember who the customers are in this case. It's single mothers with children, who wait for those cheques to be deposited in their bank.

Yes, there was a mess when you came to office. There is no question about that. There is no question that we had to do better. There's no question that in this Legislature we had to be debating all kinds of options. The problem is that you moved and closed those offices without thinking through the consequences. Lo and behold, a year later you bring in another bill. So what do we have? We have a government that starts by closing an important office that serves people in their home communities and serves them in a relatively efficient manner, and you started a mess.

I will tell you the experience in my constituency office. Members may or may not have the same experiences. I am seeing now that cases when we call are being dealt with more quickly than they were before. There's no question. Instead of taking three weeks, it's now taking 10 days. But the fact remains that the situation should never have occurred. Had you taken a reasonable, moderate, balanced approach to this issue, looked at the backlog on the one hand, looked at alternatives for service delivery, looked at the timing of change, and coordinated that with initiatives like this, my friends, you would not have done the irreparable harm that you have done to tens of thousands of our poorest and most vulnerable fellow citizens.

So I say to the members opposite, too far, too fast is precisely what we should be talking about, because this issue is in and of itself an example of what goes wrong when you come in with an ideological agenda, without thinking of the facts, and the government doesn't let the facts get in the way of a good story too often.

1620

I was pleased to hear the member for Chatham support the federal government on what they've done and to say that this is something we should be doing. We don't disagree; we're going to vote in favour of this. But the question remains: How is it you could close the family support plan offices in a matter of weeks and leave those women and children without a mechanism for collecting their payments, yet you can't get this bill through the House, can't use your majority? It's because it's not important enough to you, just like health care is not important enough to you, just like you can close hospitals in Windsor and not provide for reinvestment prior to those hospitals closing.

Let me tell you, members opposite, the emergency room situation in Windsor is but the tip of the iceberg. The Health Services Restructuring Commission met today to consider a range of investment options, and when they come to your community and they don't do it, you'll get the calls.

On this particular bill, we know that this bill is going in the right direction, but the horror stories continue. Yes, the response is going quicker. It's not 10 days; it's seven days, six days, five days. But we say to the government that when you make change of this magnitude, it affects people, whether it be in health care, whether it be in education, whether it be in family support plan offices.

When you move to address the problems — and you as a government are faced with significant problems, no question, and you inherited a bad situation in this case, no question — we urge you to think things through, do things carefully, be balanced, review the options so you're not left with the kind of situation we were all confronted with when you closed the regional family support plan offices.

We believe, by the way, that those offices should stay open. We believe that people are better served in their own community. We believe, based on the hundreds of phone calls and meetings we've been a part of, that they are the right way to go. We introduced those offices. It was a Liberal government that brought that plan into being in this province.

I am convinced more than ever that when governments want to centralize bureaucracy and make it big and deliver services from Toronto instead of in people's home communities, it won't work. This is precisely the example we should be considering when we talk about megacities like Chatham, when we talk about megacities like Toronto. What kind of bureaucracy are we creating, and will it serve the people it's intended to serve or will it be inefficient and leave the most vulnerable behind?

I applaud the government on this bill. I will be casting my vote in favour. It is a step in the right direction. It makes good sense, not just common sense. It strikes me as being an important element in the delivery of support to families and children who need it. I urge the government in your deliberations, be it on this issue or any other — there were individuals who went weeks and months without support payments simply because they were tied up in an unfunctioning bureaucracy. Was that cost to them associated with your attempted cleanup really worth it? Had we taken a few more months, discussed alternatives, looked at options — that may not suit you, but I tell you, it would suit the people of this province. As we change, as we adjust to the realities of the latter part of the 20th century and the beginning of the 21st century, we have an obligation to move with prudence, with due consideration to the impact our decisions and legislation have on the lives of people, even if it's something like this that I think it would be pretty hard to disagree with. Do things right the first time and save the heartache that you created with the family support plan offices.

Mr Miclash: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I do not believe we have a quorum in the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you please check if we have a quorum?

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments, the Member for Dovercourt — Riverdale.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Riverdale): How can you forget, Speaker, now that my riding has a soap opera named after it?

I'm happy to be able to speak for a couple of minutes in response to the comments by the member for Windsor-Walkerville. The member for Windsor-Walkerville gets to the heart of the issue here. Although the members from the Tory party stand up and complain — I know they'll do it continually — that all the opposition is doing is talking about issues other than this particular bill, I have to say they are connected. The member for Windsor-Walkerville talked about why. Whether you like it or not, you're going to keep hearing us talk about the mess at the family support plan.

I would say in response to the member for Windsor-Walkerville, who said that indeed you inherited a mess, I guess all new governments like to blame previous governments for any so-called mess they inherit, and they continue to do it on and on. There's only so long you can do that, and you're past that point.

I have to give credit: I believe it was under the Liberal-NDP accord, and I know Ian Scott was the first Attorney General to start this program. We've always said there were problems with it. It was underresourced. There were problems when we were the government, no doubt about it. There were certainly problems when the Liberals first brought it in as a new program. We improved on it. God knows, it needed more improvements. We have never denied that.

But your government took it and pulled it apart. When the members over there stand up and say they inherited this awful mess and there were boxes covered in dust, you are not fooling the people out there. The women and children who used to get their payments under our government and under the Liberal government stopped getting their payments. That is the reality.

Mr Carroll: I need to comment on my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville's expression of my support for the federal government. I cannot let that go totally unchallenged. In this particular initiative, I do support the federal government, as I think we should when one of our co-governments does something right. It doesn't happen that often at the federal level, but in this particular case it happened and I think it's okay to support that. I would of course expect that the member for Windsor-Walkerville would see the opportune time to support this provincial government when and if he agrees with anything we do.

I had given most of the blame for the family support plan situation that exists in the province to our friends in the third party. It's nice for the official opposition to acknowledge that they started the mess. The member for Windsor-Walkerville would like to continue the mess. He said, "We think the offices should stay open." What he's saying is the status quo, which hasn't worked for the last 10 years, should be maintained.

The members in the third party say: "Yes, we agree with that. We tried to improve the mess that the Liberals gave us. We didn't get it fixed properly, but you guys are trying to change it." I think 10 or 12 years of trying to make a program work and spending millions and millions of dollars on it and having a situation where there are thousands of calls every day that go unanswered, millions of dollars of money that doesn't get from the person who pays it to the person who should receive it — I think 10 years is long enough to give it a trial, and it's okay to change it. That's what we're attempting to do.

Bill 128 doesn't specifically do that, but I am pleased that the member for Windsor-Walkerville has stood in his place today and given our government support on that bill. We appreciate that.

1630

Mr Miclash: As the member for Windsor-Walkerville has indicated, this is a bill that we certainly can support. The member for Chatham-Kent was just talking a little bit about where the plan began. I have to say to him that I was here when the plan began under the Attorney General. It was a plan that was working fairly well, and it was a plan that was improved upon by the third party as they moved forward, but then we had an Attorney General come in and mess up the entire program. It is a mess today. This is a thing that you're hearing in your office, I'm hearing in my office, all the members from around Ontario are hearing in their offices. It's a plan that your Attorney General has messed up. When are you going to get that through to your Attorney General?

The member has indicated, yes, we'll support Bill 128, but we'll also support any plans or any help we can give the Attorney General in ensuring that our constituents aren't being put behind the eight-ball when it comes to their support payments, to ensure that our companies aren't being given a bad reputation when they find out that the support payment is not getting through the channels because the regional offices have been closed. We've been saying that day after day after day.

This is a plan that was brought into place to fix a situation. Here we have a situation which has grown worse and more out of proportion than this Attorney General would have ever thought. The closing of the regional offices has created a mess. We've said that a million times if we've said it once. We have to get that through to the Attorney General on behalf of the single parents out there who are not receiving their support payments, on behalf of the children who are being affected because they're not receiving the support payments they deserve.

To the member for Chatham-Kent, this is the problem. Yes, we do support Bill 128 and we do support cleaning up this mess.

Mr Lessard: I want to thank the member for Windsor-Walkerville, especially his remarks at the outset, when he talked about my capabilities and qualifications. I only wonder why he wasn't saying things like that in 1995. I wish I could use it in my next campaign brochure. Maybe I will.

One of the things he did say that I disagree with is that this government started with a mess when it came to the family support plan in 1995. I disagree with that. There may be differences of opinion with respect to that. We know it wasn't perfect, that there was some room for improvement.

I think the member for Windsor-Walkerville and everybody will agree that one of the things you don't do is just make a mess, if that's what you think it is, even worse. What have they done? They say they had a mess. They appointed the current Attorney General as the person who is Mr Fixit and the person who is given the lead role in trying to address a mess that they say is there, and look at the results he has had. I think that's evidence in itself.

He made some comments as well about why this legislation hasn't been passed, even though everybody agrees that it should. He indicated his support for the legislation as well. But he really addressed the priorities of this government. When it comes to closing the regional offices, they didn't have any problem in doing that quickly and expeditiously. When it came to closing hospitals, no problem. When it comes to jamming through legislation like Bill 136 or Bill 99, there are no problems with that.

Why is it that they have a problem with getting this legislation through? It really is their priorities. They're not focused on the concerns of women and children. That's the only reason. That's the reason that the enforcement mechanisms they introduced almost a year ago haven't collected one single penny of support for people who deserve it.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr Duncan: Thanks to the members who responded. I listened with interest to the member for Chatham-Kent. I was reminded of Kipling's words about "words you've spoken with truth twisted by knaves that make a trap for fools." I support your bill. You said to me, "Why don't you sometimes?" The very first thing I said was, "I support your bill." It's a step in the right direction, there's no question. But I urge the government members again, when you make change, particularly of the magnitude that you are contemplating, be it in this, be it in health care or be it in education, you would be wise to move carefully and cautiously.

It was not a complete mess, with all due respect to the member for Chatham-Kent. It worked rather well, and it worked to serve people. Do you throw the baby out with the bath water? No, not at all. The $100 million in uncollected payments, certainly you have to deal with that; certainly you do. But you don't do it by ripping the guts out of a program before you have something in place to replace it, especially when you're dealing with the lives of children and women who rely on those payments.

I would suggest to the members opposite that this family support plan that you dealt with early on should be indicative of what can happen to you when you move without thought, when you do things for the wrong reason. If you want change, have reason to make consultation, involve people and move process along, be careful —

The Deputy Speaker: The time has expired. Further debate?

Mr Lessard: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I've already participated in the debate, but for the benefit of the next speaker I believe we should have a quorum.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you please check if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Riverdale.

Ms Churley: I will say at the outset that because of the new draconian rules to shut down the opposition down, I only have 10 minutes to speak to this important bill. I'm sure, Speaker, you can relate to this. I am one of the Deputy Speakers, as are you, and we don't get to speak as often as we might like on some of these important bills.

I'm not complaining; it's just a fact. I love my job and appreciate doing it, and appreciate having the opportunity. But I don't get as many opportunities as I would like sometimes to speak on bills. I certainly resent the fact that now, because of those rule changes to shut the opposition down and speed things up as much as possible, I only get 10 minutes to speak on this bill today.

Interjections.

Ms Churley: I think it's important to remind people, as the opposition say, "Oh, you've just wasted a minute talking about this," that that is what the government has done. They have shut down the opposition, and that includes the people out there, to the largest extent that they have been able to do.

1640

I've heard time and time again today in great outrageous tones: "It's the opposition who held this bill up. This is an important bill. You all say you support it. Why are you holding it up?" Let me remind the government members, in case they're not clear on how this place works yet, it's the House leader, I suppose in consultation with the Premier and some other members, who decides what comes before this House. I'll remind the members there are three readings. At first reading there is no debate, on second reading there is debate, sometimes committee hearings. Obviously on a bill like this that we all support, there aren't committee hearings. Then, after a vote on that, we go into third reading, more debate, and then there's royal assent.

The opposition should be given the opportunity, and should not be berated for choosing to want, to debate an important bill. I want to remind the members that it's up to them when they call bills. They have been able to ram through all kinds of other bills one, two, three, bringing in closure, bringing in time allocation. Bill 136, for instance, is one they really wanted to ram through. They tried to do it with Bill 26. It didn't work because we held them up. But this is par for the course with this government.

I would say to the people who are listening to this nonsense that this opposition is holding up such an important bill that it's they who have been holding up the bill. If they think it's so important, it should have been on their priority list. Why have there been so many days and so many gaps in calling the reading? I think that's a disgrace and I don't think we should hear any more about that nonsense, because clearly, as always, this government, these members try to place the blame on the opposition or commissions or arm's-length bodies. They refuse to take responsibility for their own actions. This bill could have been passed a long time ago and it's their own fault that it hasn't been.

I want to talk briefly about the importance of this bill. My colleague from London Centre gave very good opening remarks on this bill on behalf of our caucus and went into a great deal of detail about the implications of it. It's a very important bill and it should be passed quickly. The government should have brought it through the House a lot more quickly than they did. I'm not going to go into the details. I believe that people have done that. It's actually pretty straightforward and important that it be done, and I congratulate the government on moving forward with it. But you're not going to shut down this caucus —

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): On a point of order, Speaker: My apologies to the member, but there isn't a quorum again. Why can't the Tories keep a quorum here? They've got so many members.

The Deputy Speaker: Could you please check.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Riverdale.

Ms Churley: You're not going to shut down this caucus from talking about the problems at the family support plan until they are fixed. As I said earlier, and all the members from my caucus have always said, there were problems with the plan. There were problems when the Liberals brought it in. There were problems when we took it over. It was underresourced. It needed more resources. That's the point we're trying to make here. What did this government do? What did the Attorney General, Charles Harnick, do when he took over? Instead of looking at it and thinking, "This plan needs more resources," he tore it apart. He had to find money for the tax cut. He took money out of it. He closed eight regional offices and fired over 100 — I forget the number now — experienced workers. The plan was left a mess. There's no doubt about it.

They opened up a regional office. It was full of unopened boxes, computers not plugged in. That is the reality. No matter how much the government members yell and scream and say, "It's all the Liberals' fault, it's all the NDP's fault, it's not our fault," that is not the case. Charles Harnick took it over and made it far worse.

I'm going to tell you why we will not shut up about it until it's fixed. We know for a fact — we have the evidence, and the Attorney General and the members in this room have the evidence too — that women and children who were getting their payments on time under our government — I'm talking in numbers of thousands — stopped getting their cheques on time.

Mr E.J. Douglas Rollins (Quinte): That's not true.

Mr Parker: Not true.

Ms Churley: I hear members over there say that's not true. I can assure you, Speaker, that I do not tell a lie. It is the truth and we have all kinds of evidence of that. The members know it, which is why they're so defensive on this issue. Surely they're getting the same calls in their offices, the same letters. We have the evidence that the women and children who were getting their money before, under our government, under the Liberal government, stopped getting their money. That is a fact. So the member for York East can get up and self-righteously talk about the boxes covered in dust and all of these things and the terrible mess they inherited; it is not the case.

They had a level of problems and they needed to work from that base to start fixing, which is what our government was doing, but they didn't say: "Let's take a long look at where the problems are. Let's look at what the NDP were doing with this, where they were going. Let's talk to people and figure out what to do." What did the Attorney General do but just rip it all apart and talk to no one, because he had to save money for the tax cut? The irony is that it is in such a mess that it's quite likely he's going to have to put in more money than he took out, and the tragedy is that a lot of it will have to go towards fixing up the mess that was created.

The reason we will bring this up repeatedly, over and over again, is that, I may remind all members of the House, when we stand up here and point fingers at each other, "It's your fault," "It's your fault," "It's your fault," let's remember that there are women and children out here who were affected by this in a negative way. I got letters and phone calls. I met with women who were going for months and months. They couldn't pay their bills. Some of them lost of their houses or were kicked out of their apartments. All kinds of awful happened to people, and it still is happening to them.

We must not forget in these discussions, and sometimes we get somewhat abstract when we're talking about these bills in this place —

Mr Lessard: Not you.

Ms Churley: But no, not me. Because I am the critic for our party for women's issues, perhaps I deal more directly with women across the province who have experienced problems since this government took over and since Charles Harnick, the Attorney General, took over the family support plan, maybe more than everybody. Generally you will deal with mostly people in your own riding; I have been dealing with women and kids across the province since this government took over the family plan. It is heartaching at times when you hear what these people went through.

Let us all bear in mind that we have got a problem here, and the problem was created because an already underresourced situation was made worse. You cannot deny that fact. It is a reality. I want to see the members of this government go to the Attorney General and the Premier and say that you will not tolerate this government, your own government, ripping money out of the pockets of kids and their mothers — this is not even taxpayers' money; it's money legitimately coming from in most cases their fathers — that you won't tolerate that and you want the problem fixed now.

1650

The Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Flaherty: I listened to the comments of the member for Riverdale, who is the NDP's women's critic, as I understand it. She complains about draconian rules. She had 10 minutes to speak, of which she spent exactly zero time talking about Bill 128, which deals with child support guidelines in Ontario. For our government, kids come first.

This is an important bill for the support of children in this province. The federal government guidelines are already in place. Many other provinces have already acted on this. This bill was introduced in June of this year. This is the third day of second reading debate on this bill.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): Why didn't you call it before?

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Algoma.

Mr Flaherty: She says there's an effort to shut down the opposition. As I say, it's the third day of debate on second reading on this bill. This is a bill that she says she supports. She doesn't talk about the bill in the Legislature. It delays getting the guidelines in place for single mothers, for the children of families that have suffered marital dissolution in the province of Ontario. That's what it means. She wastes 10 minutes of time without even debating the bill that is before the Legislature. She says it's debate on an important bill. Debate means posing different points of view, rational debate.

What is it in Bill 128 that you don't like? If there isn't something in the bill that you don't like, why are you standing up and pretending you're debating the bill? If you support the bill, stand up and say: "We support the bill. We want to move it forward. We care about kids. It's important for the children in the Ontario that they have this sort of certainty, that guidelines are in place for the support of children and single mothers in the province." It's extremely important. I invite you, if you disagree with something in the bill, to say what it is you disagree with. If not, let's get on with it for the sake of the kids in the province.

Mr Miclash: I've just heard something in this House that I didn't think I would ever hear, and that's the member from the government party saying to his party, "Kids come first." I have to ask the member, if kids come first over there, why wasn't this piece of legislation brought in a lot sooner?

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Algoma, order.

Mr Miclash: The member for Riverdale, the critic of the third party for women's issues, has illustrated to the members across the way a point that they've heard in their offices, a point that we've heard in our offices. It's kids that are being hurt out there because the Attorney General can't get his act in order.

I spoke earlier about the regional offices. The member for Riverdale spoke about the closing of regional offices. The member for Durham Centre can't seem to get it through to himself that it was the closing of the regional offices that affected the kids, the kids of the single parent who's coming into my office, into his office, saying there are problems with this plan. It's not because of the employer, not because of the spouse, as the member for Riverdale has indicated, often the father. It's because the payments are not getting through following up the closing of the regional offices. I can't say that enough. I'm seeing too many cases, my colleagues are seeing too many cases, the members opposite are seeing too many cases. When are these people going to realize that?

Again, as the member for Riverdale has indicated, we support this piece of legislation. We want to know why it wasn't up here earlier if kids come first for this government. I commend her for her comments and for the research she's done across the province.

Mr Wildman: I listened to the comments of the member for Riverdale in my office on the TV and then I came in to listen to the last portion of her speech because I know how knowledgeable she is with regard to the whole problem of family support in this province.

I think it's very odd to have members opposite arguing that the House leaders for the official opposition and the third party, my friend from St Catharines and myself, somehow are able to hold up legislation in this House. I wish we had that power, frankly. I really wish we had that power, but we don't. The fact is that the government House leader — nobody else — decides when bills are to be called. He is the one who determines whether you deal with it in June or in late September.

Mr Flaherty: Three days of debate.

Mr Wildman: The opposition can determine how many days they want to debate, but whether those three days are in June or in late September is the responsibility of the government House leader and nobody else.

The fact is that we support this legislation. As the member for Riverdale said, we are very concerned, though, that even if this bill passes, the government will not be able to properly implement it because of the mess the Attorney General has made of the family support plan. Ever since the regional offices were closed and all of those staff were laid off, our offices have been inundated by people who can't get their support payments. I've had one staff person working half of her time in my constituency office on this problem and still we have people who haven't had payments from January —

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Time has expired.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham East): I'm also pleased to respond to the member for Riverdale, whose complaint was with respect to the 10-minute limitation on the time. As the member for Durham Centre has pointed out, I think your time should be spent focusing on the issues within the bill.

For me, it's most important to remind people who may be viewing today that starting October 22, 1997, in 43 different communities throughout the province, this government is going to provide a public forum for people to be informed. Furthermore, we have a child support guideline, a booklet that's available. I think this booklet answers most of the questions that people have who are in the midst of these difficult times in their lives. If they want to call the referral number, 1-800-268-8326, that's a toll-free number.

I would ask for unanimous consent that the member for Durham Centre be given another two minutes to respond to the allegation that we don't care about children. I'm asking for unanimous consent, Mr Speaker, on that issue.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the member for Durham Centre have two minutes to explain? No.

Mr O'Toole: Mr Speaker, the member for Durham Centre has very capably focused today. They've refused to give us the time to try and relate to the people who might be viewing today who need to know how to solve the problems when it comes to child support, the family guidelines.

As the member for Durham Centre has said a couple of times, the confusion that's out there — the federal government and other provinces have taken the time to develop the guidelines. The people can find out. Remember to call 1-800-268-8326 or attend one of the open sessions that will start October 22 to explain the details of this important bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Riverdale, two minutes.

Ms Churley: To the members for Durham Centre, Algoma, Durham East and Kenora, thank you very much for your comments.

I want to say to the member for Durham Centre that he just doesn't get it. When you say, "Kids come first," yes, kids come first in Mike Harris's Ontario all right. We have more kids lining up at food banks, living in hostels, going to school hungry. That's the kind of caring this government is showing to kids.

The member for Algoma repeated again some of the things I said, I think even more forcefully, about how it's the government's responsibility, the government's alone, to bring in bills. If you introduce it in June, why wait till the end of September to bring it back? It's your responsibility, so don't give us that.

To the member for Kenora, I'd like to thank you for your remarks. I believe you reiterated again that we're talking about kids and their mothers here. Let's bear that in mind.

To the member for Durham East, it's not enough that the government cuts my time down to 10 minutes, but now he thinks as a government member that he can tell me what I should say in my 10 minutes. No, thank you. I will get up here —

Interjection.

Ms Churley: Sorry, but I'm opposed to a lot of the things you are doing that are directly hurting kids and I will continue repeatedly to speak out about that. When he holds up a booklet, let me say to the member for Durham East that kids can't eat your lousy booklet. They can't eat your 1-800 number. We're talking here and reminding you that the kids need to get the money their fathers or mothers have paid into the plan. So yes, I support this bill; we all support this bill. Get on with it, but the most important thing is to fix that family support plan.

1700

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mrs Julia Munro (Durham-York): I rise to support the Uniform Federal and Provincial Child Support Guidelines Act. What we are asking the Legislature to do here today and in these discussions is to bring Ontario's Family Law Act into line with the federal child support guidelines. By doing so, the same approach to calculating child support will apply regardless of whether a child support order is made under federal or provincial law. By harmonizing the guidelines with the federal guidelines, we will provide for the consistency of approach that legal experts and community organizations have stressed as being so important to avoid confusion and, most important, inequity for families in Ontario.

In second reading debate, members of all parties have recognized the importance of this legislation and have indicated their support for the bill. The bill provides a consistent approach to calculating child support in Ontario. It does so by bringing Ontario's Family Law Act into line with the federal child support guidelines which took effect May 1, 1997. The federal guidelines replace the current case-by-case approach to determining child support in divorce cases.

These guidelines will allow parents and judges to calculate the amount of child support in divorce cases by referring to a support table or grid. This support table sets out the amount of child support based on the payor's income and the number of children entitled to support. At the same time, the guidelines allow for some flexibility to pay more or less than the support table in certain circumstances. This approach will provide many parents with a faster, easier and less expensive way to determine the amount of support their children are entitled to.

The member for London Centre has stressed another benefit of moving from the case-by-case approach to a more predictable method of setting child support levels. Since the guidelines will allow many parents to determine what level of support a child will receive, a judge is likely to order before they get to court —

Mr Kormos: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: My apologies to the member, but there really should be a quorum here to hear what she has to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Would you check and see if a quorum is present?

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Durham-York.

Mrs Munro: I would just like to continue and certainly recognize the fact that we are now able to establish quorum.

Since the guidelines allow many parents to determine what level of child support a judge is likely to order before they get to court, it's been clearly noted that this will allow us to avoid lengthy and costly court battles that very often ensue.

Throughout this debate, the opposition has raised the need to inform clients about the guidelines and to effectively put in systems to deal with the demand for variations to child support orders. This government has made those preparations. We are already implementing the guidelines. We have been doing that since May 1 in the General Division courts that deal with divorce cases which are covered by the guidelines. We are ready to do the same for cases that fall under the Family Law Act if and when Bill 128 becomes law.

We already have the most comprehensive implementation of any of the provinces. Our initiatives include a toll-free 1-800 public inquiry line, consumer information kits, trained staff in the courts to provide information and a series of public information sessions on the guidelines to be held in 43 communities, starting October 22. These sessions will be held in cities across the province in conjunction with local lawyers who have been trained by the Ministry of the Attorney General.

We are pleased with the support and enthusiasm we have received from lawyers throughout Ontario. The member for London Centre has already commended this government for its educational initiatives for the public and for the court system. With regard to variations, public education is a key strategy to manage the increase in caseload that may result from these guidelines.

First, by informing the public and encouraging them to review the guidelines, it is hoped the parties may be able to reach consent agreements before they get to court. This will cut down court time and costs. Federal publications have explained how their guidelines work and Ontario's public education sessions will greatly assist this goal.

Second, our family court staff have been trained in the use of the guidelines and can assist people in filing their applications. Additional training of court staff is planned for this fall.

Third, the courts are already closely monitoring activity related to the guidelines and are prepared to deal with increased demand. Negotiations are under way with the federal government to secure necessary funding. We are already implementing the federal guidelines, but until this bill becomes law, we cannot implement them for all the children in Ontario. This is because so many parents with child support orders, such as those who are separated or were never married, fall under the Family Law Act. Not passing Bill 128 only serves to perpetuate the confusion that two different approaches under two different sets of laws pose for the public.

The member for London Centre stated that this is a bill that both oppositions have clearly indicated they are prepared to support. This support has been voiced by the members for Downsview, Parkdale, Fort York, Welland-Thorold and Scarborough-Agincourt. We urge the members to take action now to expedite passage of Bill 128, a bill that puts children first and that treats all Ontario families the same.

1710

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Miclash: I would like to congratulate the member for Durham-York on her comments and her contribution to the debate this afternoon.

The member for Durham-York indicated there are parents out there with support orders, and I must remind the member that's something we've been saying for the last 18 months. Yes, there are parents out there with child support orders. The unfortunate thing about it is that they are no good to those parents when the child support order cannot be followed through upon and when the payments don't flow.

You indicated, much as did a member earlier on, your colleague who sits in the front of you, that children come first. I don't think this government has proven that to anyone. I don't think there's anyone out there believing that, especially the members in this House who hear on a regular basis — you've heard from all of us, the Premier has heard from us on a regular basis — that it's just not happening.

We talked about the regional offices earlier on, about how they were instrumental in ensuring that yes, children came first. Why would you close the regional offices down and create chaos if your party truly believed in the fact that children come first? Why would we be hearing from all those parents who cannot provide for their children? Why would we be hearing from those companies that are saying, "We're doing our thing, we're putting forth the payments, we're ensuring that we follow the rules and regulations"?

It's the government that is blocking the payments. They are not getting through to the actual people who need them: the children. As many times as you can indicate that your government believes children come first, I will stand up and tell you that according to my office and the people coming through to my office, it's not getting to where it's supposed to be: to the children.

Mr Kormos: I appreciate the comments of the member for Durham-York. As they stand alone they are, I suppose, somewhat irrefutable. She spoke about the need for this legislation and we quite frankly agree, which is why we have questioned why the government House leader allowed it to linger so long before finally calling it for debate here in the House. The fact is that the government House leader has put other matters ahead of this, has put this low on the scale in terms of this government's priorities. We understand that even today the government House leader wanted to debate his cottagers bill, somehow placing cottagers higher on the scale of preference than kids. I have some problems with this government talking a big game about their commitment to kids and moms.

Here's the government that pulled, stole $12 million, well, $11.5 million, to be more precise, out of funding for children's aid societies across the province at a time when the demand for services from children's aid is escalating. We know that the increased demand was concurrent with the attack on single moms and the poorest families when this government slashed social assistance benefits to the poorest people in our province by just shy of 22%. How do they respond? They cut back on $11.5 million worth of funding to children's aid societies as demand escalates.

I tell you, this is a government that has abandoned kids, abandoned poor people, abandoned single moms, abandoned the sick, abandoned the unemployed, and it does it all in the name of a tax break, two thirds of which is going to go to the top 10% of income earners. They are telling kids in this province to pay for that tax break for the rich. Shame.

Mr Parker: I want to say what a pleasure it was to listen to the remarks of my colleague from Durham-York, who seems to be the only speaker since the member for Durham Centre who has a grasp of the subject matter of the bill we are here to debate today.

We've heard a lot of complaints about the time available to comment on this bill, but as opposition members get up and speak, they talk about everything but this bill. The member for Durham-York did a very good job of summarizing the content and impact and essential nature of the bill and she was able to do that in less than the 10 minutes available to her to speak to this House.

The opposition has insisted on three days of debate on this bill. I would understand the need for extensive debate on this bill if the opposition had something useful to say about it, but when the opposition gets their opportunity to stand and speak in this debate, they don't talk about this bill at all; they talk about virtually everything else. But the member for Durham-York was able to summarize the entire bill and explain what it's about in less than the 10 minutes that was available to her to speak.

I know that if she had wanted to speak at greater length, she might have quoted from Phil Epstein, one of the leading matrimonial lawyers in Toronto, one of the leading matrimonial lawyers across the country, who says:

"This is a progressive step by the Ontario government and will undoubtedly provide a better and more effective method of determining child support. The adoption of the guidelines will lower legal costs for parents, speed up the resolution of family disputes and create predictability and certainty. Above all, they will ensure more consistent treatment to support-paying parents and yet provide sufficient flexibility to ensure awards are fair and relate to individual family circumstances."

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): I too welcome the opportunity to comment on those remarks made by the member for Durham-York. I think the member very well articulated the points of this bill as they compare to federal guidelines and I want to compliment her on her comments.

It's interesting to note, though, that when the member for York East pointed out that the member for Durham-York was able to do it in less than the 10 minutes allowed, it took most of his two minutes to go on, not on what the member for Durham-York was saying but on what members throughout the Legislature have been saying today. I guess it depends on which side of the House you're sitting on as to who you should criticize. I'm surprised that he too didn't get up and take his full two minutes to speak directly to this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Durham-York has two minutes to respond.

Mrs Munro: I certainly appreciate the comments that have come from the members for Kenora, Welland-Thorold, York East and Essex South.

Throughout the debate this afternoon there has been reference made to the question of clouding the issue, the fact that we are looking at Bill 128 and yet it seems to engender a great deal of response in regard to other issues by members of the opposition. It became clear as well in those comments that were made by the members. I think, however, that perhaps one of the things that can be drawn from the comments that have been made is the fact that there is a very clear sense of support for this bill, and therefore the only things that can be said are to take issue with other areas.

The question the member for Kenora raises on the issue of child support needs to be examined, certainly on the basis of the record of this government in making those changes that were clearly necessary. By increasing the staff from 90 to 139, by reducing the amount of time, we have very clearly recognized a problem and have addressed that.

On the issue of the support that members of the community have seen fit to provide for this bill, I think it speaks directly to the need for continued cooperation in providing those services that best meet the needs of children. That, quite frankly, is what we are doing in this as in other pieces of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Crozier: I welcome the opportunity to make some comments on the Uniform Federal and Provincial Child Support Guidelines Act, 1997, Bill 128. I want to say to you, Speaker, and to the members assembled today that what we are talking about is in fact all about kids. In this bill we talk about parents agreeing, we talk about courts, we talk about agencies, but the result of all of it is what we think and how are we reacting towards the future of our kids, and well we should.

I think children are our most important asset. If the government really believes that kids come first, I would recommend to them that they have a minister who is responsible for children, who is responsible for youth, because we all know that children, as they're referred to in this context, are too young to vote. They have no voice. Children can't come before our committees, even one that might discuss a bill similar to this. Therefore, they have no voice. When social services are either enhanced or withdraw, but particularly when they're withdrawn, kids have no voice. When social services are restricted — and I think of a young lady in my riding by the name of Kimberly. When home care is restricted because the government just says there isn't enough money — they don't deny that she has the need, but there isn't enough money — she's affected, but she has no voice.

1720

I'm glad and pleased that the goals of this piece of legislation are commendable. They are goals we can support. In the few minutes I have left, part of what I say will be directly to Bill 128. I'll warn you ahead of time that part of what I have to say, although it isn't in Bill 128, certainly flows from Bill 128 and I think therefore can be connected to it and is worth mentioning at this time.

We realize that it's going to provide uniformity with the Divorce Act of Canada and the Family Law Act of Ontario. It should allow for flexibility, and this bill does, so that courts can use the guidelines and alter the circumstances a bit from what the guidelines might say, dependent upon the exceptional circumstances the court may see.

I've listened to the debate here in the House and I've watched a bit of it on television back in my office. In spite of the criticism the government members make of the references to other acts that flow from the results of this act, those references should be taken in the context in which they're given, and that is, as I said at the outset, that we're all concerned about children.

I haven't been in this Legislature much longer than the majority of the government members, but I can recall when Mike Harris, Ernie Eves, Jim Wilson, Runciman and Harnick were all over on this side of the Legislature. You might find this hard to believe, but I can recall debates when they didn't speak totally about the bill that was before them. Perhaps I'm just taking a lesson from Mike Harris when he sat over on this side. I can remember when he spoke to a bill that had nothing to do with rivers and streams, but Mike Harris tied this Legislature up for hours on end by reading the name of every lake, river and stream in the province. Speaker, I know you at least will be tolerant. I find it hard to believe that members across in the government have not had the same concerns, the same frustration that we've had with the fact that the family support plan offices were closed.

I was elected in December 1993, so I spent about 18 months here before the election in 1995. I can honestly say that the amount of time my constituency office had to deal with family support matters was rather limited. I can honestly say, and prove it by the record of calls, the record of contacts, the records of calls we make from our office, that the amount of time we've had to spend since these family support plan offices have been closed has dramatically increased. There may have been a backlog before. There may have been a backlog back in the mid-1980s relative to the number of cases that were in front of us, but it certainly increased dramatically when these family support plan offices were closed.

It is hard for me to understand why or how members of the government can stand and say there isn't any problem. I don't know what colour the sky is in the world you live in, but it's the same sky in Essex South as it is in Durham, in Mississauga, in Kenora and North Bay. I suspect that their offices are receiving the same calls we are, or there are some significant differences around this province that I'm not aware of.

Yes, this legislation is going in the right direction. It's allowing flexibility. It's allowing parents, if they can agree on the family support and the court sees this as being appropriate, to agree on this, but after this piece of legislation is in effect, it has to be able to be carried out. You have to give the resources in which this and other acts can be followed, and that is all we're asking.

We're asking that you take the concern you have shown in this bill and that you show that same concern with the changes that were made under Bill 82, the changes to the family support plan. As was pointed out before, the family support plan is money from spouses that is paid into a central area and then distributed to the spouse and children who need it.

We encourage you, when you use the word "expedite," that you do the same thing with the family support plan that you've done with this. We had an example today where under the family support plan it allows for the suspension of licences. The family support plan was adopted some months ago, and we understand that there is a very legitimate tool that is not being used yet. I encourage the government to move as quickly as possible, to take related pieces of legislation and put resources behind it so that yes, the backlog can be cleared up and our offices can move on to other business, but more important, that families in this province, spouses who have children, can put food on the table, can pay the rent, can pay the bills they have before them, because that is all any of us really want.

With that, I will reiterate that we support this bill and that I and the members of our caucus intend to vote in favour of it.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Kormos: Speaker, I want to indicate to you my appreciation and I think the appreciation of every member of this House of how you've listened carefully to all of the debate with acute attention because you understand, like folks out there do, that this is an incredibly important matter.

I say to the government members, please, if need be, take some leadership from your colleagues like Toni Skarica from Wentworth North and Bill Murdoch from Grey-Owen Sound or even Gary Carr from Oakville South. Show some courage and stand up and speak out, because you know there is a crisis with the family support plan. You know that it fell into total disarray. You've received the phone calls that my friend Mr Crozier referred to. You know that Bill 82 was passed almost 10 months ago and not one cent of arrears has been collected by this government with their 10 tough tools in Bill 82. Stand up and speak out for the people in your constituencies, like Toni Skarica, like Gary Carr, like Billy Murdoch. By God, they may not be as popular as some of you are in the Premier's office, but they're popular in their ridings and in their constituencies. Their constituents — the people in Wentworth North and the people in Oakville South and the people in Grey-Owen Sound — know that whether or not they always agree with their members — Toni Skarica, Bill Murdoch or Gary Carr — they've got members who have the courage of their convictions. They know they have members who aren't prepared to just stand here and read the line coming out of the Premier's office, the trite and oftentimes so unexciting speeches that are written for them by the spin doctors. Have courage my friends and take their leadership.

1730

Mr O'Toole: It's a privilege to respond to the member for Essex South. I would agree he's made a number of points which I would attempt to share with the viewers today and those who are listening in the House.

He was making reference to the Family Responsibility Office and he would know that our Bill 82 strengthened the functions and collection aspect of it. I want to talk about some of the differences: The old family support office had 90 enforcement officers; we've moved that to 139. People are receiving money quicker and faster. There were 24 phone lines handling only 6% of the 50,000 calls every day. We've now got 65 phone lines and we're able to handle 3,000 calls per day. Total disbursements per week between January and July 1996 were about $220 million. That had increased some 6% or 7% between January and July 1997, to $223 million.

I think most striking, though, is that in the old family support office the slow response caused 90,000 pieces of backlogged correspondence. Think about it, those were 90,000 inquiries looking into getting the money into the hands of those in need. We've cleared the backlog now, which means there are only 38,000 pieces of mail. We're working hard to solve it and we'll only be happy when there's zero backlog.

The issue here really is to streamline the process for the family and for those who are in need. If you look at the start of this process, we've had over 9,000 inquiries with the hotline. That's 1-800-980-4962. I'd encourage those people to call that. There are information sessions that are starting in October in 43 communities.

I want to conclude by saying the system will be faster and fairer for family support. In conclusion, we believe kids come first.

Mr Miclash: It's always a privilege to rise and comment on some of the comments made by the member for Essex South. But before I do that, I must comment on the previous speaker, the member for Durham East, who at one time indicated to his press that it was tough for him to go home to face the comments that were being made by the Harris government. It was hard to handle the negativism that was coming back regarding the tax cut which this government continues to go forth and implement.

The member for Essex South brought up a very interesting comment when he talked about the resources that are needed to implement a lot of the plans that are put forth by any government. It reminded me of going back home and listening to some of the front-line workers. I'm talking about front-line workers who work for Comsoc. I'm talking about front-line workers who work for Natural Resources. I'm talking about board members, whether it be a board member for a hospital or a board member for a school board. They're also saying, "Yes, we hear about all these resources. We hear the Minister of Community and Social Services say there's all kinds of money out there for autistic children, there's all kinds of money out there for different programs."

I go back and talk to the front-line workers and they say: "We don't know about this resource. Where is it?" The member for Essex South is very correct in suggesting that the resources have to flow in order for these programs to actually get to the people who need them. Again, it doesn't matter how many announcements you make.

The member for Durham East can get up and talk about these wonderful program, but if the dollars don't flow, folks, the programs don't work, the children don't come first, they're not benefited. For you to stand here today and keep telling me that in terms of your government children come first, and for me to return home and find out that that's not the case — I can tell you what it is, but I can't say it in this House or I'll get thrown out.

Mr Len Wood: I just want to congratulate the member for Essex South. He was right on topic when dealing with Bill 128. It's intended to make uniformity between the federal legislation and the provincial legislation and make sure that the dollars flow from spouses to the children and that child support will have priority over spousal support.

If we look back at the mess that this government has made as a result of shutting down a number of offices last January and laying off hundreds of workers in that ministry — and it's not only that ministry. It's every other ministry where they've laid off, whether it's environment, natural resources or agriculture. In all the other ministries they've laid off thousands of workers across this province and they've created nothing but a mess.

I tour the province as well and I go into some of the Conservative ridings. I know that when they go home on the weekends, after about an hour out in the community the Conservative members have no choice but to retreat into the basement and take on a bunker mentality. They are being harassed something terrible for the sins of Mike Harris and the Minister of Labour and the mess that the Attorney General have made in this province.

Mr Garry J. Guzzo (Ottawa-Rideau): With a $100-billion debt —

The Acting Speaker: The member for Ottawa-Rideau, come to order.

Mr Len Wood: We know some of the concerns with which they are trying to defend themselves in this Legislature but they can't defend themselves when they go home to their own ridings because they're telling them that their term of office is finished. They're gone. They're only into two and a half years and they're never going to be able to clean up the mess they've created They're looking at alternatives. I'm sure that as we get into the campaign for the next election they will be looking at Howard Hampton and the NDP to form the next government in Ontario. I'm looking forward to that as well because I know it can happen. We had good government for five years and we've got a mess now that it's going to take a long time to clean up.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I just want to remind members it's 25 to 6. I realize hunger pains may be setting in. Control yourselves. You may not agree with what you hear from other members, but it's my job to make sure that they say it.

The Chair recognizes the member for Essex South.

Mr Crozier: I agree with almost everything that my friend from Cochrane North said, but not totally, and my friends from Welland-Thorold, Kenora and Durham East. Like my friend from Kenora, it was the comments of my friend from Durham East that interested me the most.

I agree that Bill 82 strengthened and gave tools to collect from those bad dads, for the most part, who are not paying their family support. The problem is that you haven't used the tools yet. That's what we're trying to tell you. You've got to use the tools. They're no good in the box, so get them out of the box.

He also mentioned some interesting statistics, not the least of which are the telephone lines you have. You've obviously forgotten your colleague from Grey-Owen Sound who had a private member's resolution that wanted to get rid of these telephone answering systems — voice mail. Why would the ministry have to supply us members with a specific private number to call about family support issues if it wasn't for the fact that you can't get through on the lines that you already have? What I guess we should do is give out 3,000 private numbers a day because this is what folks are telling you. They can't get through. They can't get satisfaction. The system is all bound up. Even if you get somebody to talk you, they can't give you an answer. All they want are the funds that are due to them.

You can give all kinds of tools, but if you don't use the tools they aren't worth the box they're in.

1740

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Further debate?

Mr Bisson: I would like to take this opportunity in debate on Bill 128 to use a specific example of something that's actually happening to a constituent of mine in my riding. I have his signed letter here, but I'm reluctant to use his name because I don't have his permission to utilize his name in full, so we'll just call this person Roger for this particular case.

Let's be clear what the government is doing here. The federal government has enacted legislation that reforms the Divorce Act to require child support under the act to be determined according to child support guidelines which are prescribed by regulation. Those regulations are to be guided by a couple of points. In other words, if you go to divorce court and there is to be a support payment awarded by the court, the court has to follow guidelines under the federal regulations.

The child support guidelines consist of three major elements. The first is a table setting out the amount of child support to be awarded according to the pair's income and the number of children. So the court says, "All right, what does the meat chart say? According to how many kids you have and how much money you make, how much you should pay in support?" Then there are rules permitting an amount of child support other than in the table to be ordered and the procedure for obtaining income information and determining the amount.

The point here is that new guidelines the federal government established say: "We've got a meat chart. You make X dollars, you have X number of kids, you will pay Y amount of child support." It doesn't in my view take into consideration certain things that cause a problem. Let me give you this particular case, to be quite specific.

The provincial government in this case, under Bill 128, is bringing legislation that will mirror what the federal government is doing by statute. In other words, the federal government says, "We'll have these guidelines." The province says, "We're rubber-stamping the federal government's legislation and we will enact the very same rules in Ontario." There's a rationale for that, but I think the government has to take a look at some of the applications of this law as it applies to very special circumstances. I want to give you this particular one.

I have a constituent who writes this letter about a fictitious father. It talks about a father of three who got divorced back in 1982. He and his wife did not get along. They went through a divorce. At the time the divorce happened, the father made $30,000 per year. They eventually went to divorce court. The award was settled at $100 per month per child, for a total of $300. Time goes by. This particular individual remarries and has two children of his own in his second marriage. The wife remarries and goes on with her life with her new husband.

As time goes by, what happens is that the husband, who is now remarried, goes out and buys a car, like everybody else would like to be able to — nothing extravagant. He buys a house, has mortgage payments. Everything is based on what he accepted as the settlement for separation when he went to the divorce court with his former wife, that he would pay $300 per month. He expected that at one point the money would go up, but that the amount it would go up would be in relation to the income he had.

Unfortunately, what happens is his ex-wife's new husband dies in a car accident, so she's forced to go on social assistance to support herself. When she goes to social assistance, the new guidelines for the provincial government are that the social assistance people say, "Make sure that all arrears are paid and make sure the ex-husband is paying the full amount under the current law when it comes to support payments." The social assistance office tells the wife: "You need to take your ex-husband back to court, because since 1982 there have been new federal guidelines established and you will be able to get more money. We're telling you, you have to take this person to court." So this fellow now is taken back to court and his support payment is increased by some 300%.

The point the individual makes is that he accepts that he has to pay support. He accepts that he has a financial and moral responsibility when it comes to the children. But he's saying, "Is it fair for me and my new family that at this point I have to pay 300% extra over what I was paying before without any ability to take a look at if I can afford to pay?" When you work out the math in this particular individual's case, the total amount of money that he pays, he has nothing extravagant: a car payment, a mortgage payment and basically just the bills to keep the household going. No family vacations, no three-wheel vehicles, no snow machine, no Ski-Doos, nothing like that, just basic living.

When he takes into account his income of today against what the courts have awarded, he is not able to make that extra 300% payment the court has awarded. So he says, "The legislation is supposed to account for special circumstances." Under the federal legislation, they're saying there are guidelines that take into account special circumstances.

This particular individual is saying: "I accept that I have to pay the original amount. I also accept that I'm going to pay additional amounts because my ex-wife's circumstances have changed. But to increase that support payment by 300% over what it was before, that puts me in a position where I'm not able to make ends meet."

There should be some provision within the law where the courts and judges making these decisions are able to take a look at special circumstances, not just look at the meat chart and say, "You make X amount of money, you have X amount of children and I don't take into account anything else and I award X amount of dollars."

There should be some common sense used to say: "Yes, that's what the guidelines say, but in this particular case at this time this individual can't pay a 300% increase. We will therefore award X amount for a period of a year or two until financial circumstances change for one or the other," and a readjustment is then made on the ability to pay.

The fellow says, "I don't want to stop paying child support. In fact, I want to take my responsibilities, but don't bankrupt me, because the social assistance people are saying this has to be done" — so the province can get off the hook in paying the family benefits to his ex-wife.

This is what I'm asking the government to do: When this particular bill goes to committee, I think you need to take a look at the special provisions guidelines to ensure that the courts have some latitude in looking at how the award is given. If the person has the ability to pay, they should pay the full amount. There's no argument there. This individual says, "If I have the money, I'm prepared to pay. But in a case where I don't have the money at this time because of circumstances" — it's unfortunate that his ex-wife's husband died in a car accident, but why is he made to pay? The point he's making is that you have to have special provision in the legislation to enable the courts to look at the ability to pay in a proper way.

The second thing he's saying is that the provisions of these guidelines as applied put his current family in jeopardy. He now has to work overtime, has to work on the side, has to do everything he can to make extra dollars to be able to afford the 300% increase in his child support payment. He says: "This is putting stress on my current family. My new wife and I are arguing because now I'm not at home all the time. I come home, I'm dog-tired, I've got to go back to work again and it's putting stress on my current family."

In the long run, as a society, we're not going to be better off if we end up in a situation where for whatever reason they end up getting separated because of the stress that is put on through this.

I'm asking the government, by way of this legislation, by way of Bill 128, to hear the pleas of Roger and try to put into this legislation special consideration for the ability to pay. No husband, no father should have the ability not to pay his family support. They have to take the responsibility, but it's got to be done within the context of ability to pay. As financial circumstances change, if the person is able to pay more at a later date, the courts can deal with it at that time, that as the person's income increases and expenses come down, the person's support payments are adjusted until the point where you get to the maximum amount.

I'd like to thank you, Mr Speaker, for the ability to speak to this particular bill. I would ask the government to take these comments from Roger seriously and take a look at how you can put in special provisions so that you can deal with ability to pay when it comes to support order payments.

The Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Parker: Let me congratulate the member for Cochrane South for being the first opposition member in this debate to focus his remarks on the subject matter of the bill before us, which is Bill 128, An Act to amend the Family Law Act to provide for child support guidelines.

The member comments on the difficulties that are presented when there is a change in circumstances. We are aware of the difficulty that is created under those circumstances.

1750

That difficulty exists at present, and when there is a change in circumstances, that provides for a reapplication to the court for a change in the court order or for a change to the agreement. Those provisions will not change as a result of Bill 128, but what will change is that the subject matter of the court application will flow much more smoothly and much more readily than it does at present. Right now one of the most painful, agonizing and frankly expensive aspects of matrimonial litigation is not the break-up of the marriage itself — that's usually the one part that the parties agree to, and is dealt with fairly simply — but it's dealing with matters of children that is painful to all the parties, devastating to the children themselves and time-consuming and expensive in the process.

Bill 128 will bring the provincial law into conformity with the federal divorce law and provide for some uniformity and predictability in the resolution of those disputes having to do with child support. What it will mean is that there will be fewer people who have to go to court to battle these things out, because they will be guided towards arriving at a resolution out of court far more readily than they ever have in the past.

Who likes this? Well, one person is Carole Curtis, a Toronto lawyer: "It is important that the province have the same law as the federal law —

The Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): I also want to compliment the member for Cochrane South for his remarks, short as they were, only 10 minutes as we're now into that segment of debate, and certainly support his call for some amendments, which would be very positive and should be listened to, I hope, by the government members.

I want to use my time just to speak on behalf of the literally hundreds of constituents who have come to my office particularly in the last year and a half who have not been treated at all well by the system, by a government that basically put forward a bill, closed down regional offices of the family support plan and continues to talk as if the system is working better, when we know, those of us who are dealing with these people on a daily basis, the system is not working.

People still cannot get through. People are still not receiving the support they are supposed to be receiving. So we have women and children in this province, and certainly in Thunder Bay that is the case, who are still well behind in the payments not because the money isn't there but because the money is locked into the system under the new Family Responsibility Office.

It is extraordinarily important to note that despite what the government members will continually say as they trot out their statistics, the fact is that the people in my riding and in Thunder Bay, and I think all across Ontario are being treated in a manner that is nothing less than insulting, and it's extremely frustrating for them. They come to us and in many ways we become their office, we become the place they can go to, because at least we apparently have some good contact with the office. But the contact even from our point of view can be very difficult.

I want to speak on behalf of those people who still come into our office, still look for help, have not been well served by the family responsibility changes. We know that a lot of the issues in terms of Bill 128 could be dealt with very handily by the regional offices as they were set up, and I still wish that was in place.

Mr Lessard: My colleague from Cochrane South brings up an interesting situation of a client in his own riding with respect to what sorts of problems can happen, and it's an unusual situation, certainly. That's a case where a support order was made 15 years ago and these parties entered into an agreement based on the situation at that time. Both parties went their own way and got remarried, but because of an unfortunate death of one of the former spouses they were able to go back to court and have this variation made.

Nobody knows how this legislation is going to be interpreted. That was interpreted according to the federal guidelines that were introduced in May, as I understand the story. This person did what he was supposed to do. He went to court and it was interpreted, as I understand it, and they didn't take into consideration the special circumstances the way he felt they should be.

But it really brings up something else, and that is that there are going to be a great many people who are going to make applications for variations to their support orders, either upwards or downwards. What we've found with this government in other decisions they've made and other programs they've implemented is that they've moved too far too fast and they've brought in things without having any consideration of the impact they're going to have.

They haven't put in place the systems necessary to try to deal with this huge increase in variation applications that are going to be brought. With cuts to the legal aid plan, there is going to be reduced access for women to bring applications to vary their support upward. Their enforcement mechanisms aren't working. They closed the regional offices without knowing what the impact was going to be. They've created a mess.

Mr Flaherty: I listened with interest to the speech of the member for Cochrane South and the recent comments by the member for Windsor-Riverside with respect to going too far too fast. My goodness, here we are trying to put through legislation for guidelines for the support of single mothers and children in Ontario and he says we're going too fast and too far. It seems to me we should expedite this as quickly as possible in the interests of those who suffer from marriage breakdown and their children in Ontario. I'm surprised the honourable member would indicate that this ought to be done slowly as opposed to as quickly as possible, but that's his view.

This policy, this bill, is designed to make support orders more consistent and more predictable in the province. Presently, as the member for York East indicated, we have a significant delay and significant expense caused by the fact that there are no guidelines, there are no references that people can have access to in order to make their own assessment of where they're likely to fall in terms of support for themselves and their children in cases of marriage breakdown.

This is consistent with the civil justice reforms the Attorney General has initiated with respect to mandatory mediation in civil matters, with respect to case management in civil matters, all designed, again, to increase consistency, predictability, reduce delay and thereby reduce expense.

Also we have the Agency Reform Commission, which is chaired by my colleague the member for Ottawa-Rideau, again designed to reduce the number of commissions in Ontario, to reduce delay and to reduce expense in cases dealing with administrative tribunals; we have many in the province, soon to be fewer.

I urge all members to put kids first and get this legislation passed as quickly as possible in the interests of the families of Ontario.

The Speaker: Responses?

Mr Bisson: In the two minutes I have left, I want to make the point to the government that when you go through looking at this bill at the committee level and you deal with it when it comes to dealing with amendments, you need to take a look at the question of special provisions.

This is but one case, the case of Roger in my constituency. Through no fault of his own or his ex-wife, the situation has changed. The wife has been forced to go back, because she has gone on FSP, to the courts to get the former amount of support payments changed and because of these new federal guidelines he's being asked to pay a 300% increase in his support payments. He is saying he's prepared to pay, he's prepared to pay the maximum based on how much he's making and how much he's able to pay.

The courts have to be able to deal with that in a progressive way, to turn around and say, "One, yes, I will pay; number two, look at my income, look at my circumstances when it comes to my debts." The courts have to deal with debts in a real way, not allowing people to load a bunch of debt on to themselves so that they don't make their payments, but to take a look in a progressive way at how we can deal with this so we don't put the second family in jeopardy when it comes to their ability to make payment to that first particular support payment.

I would like to thank the members opposite for my being able to have made these comments. I hope the government, in looking at these amendments, deals with Roger's concern in an effective way so that the courts are able to deal with this when it comes to special provisions. I also believe there isn't a quorum in the House.

On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I don't believe there's a quorum in the House.

The Speaker: Quorum, please.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Speaker: It now being after 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 6:30 of the clock this evening.

The House adjourned at 1801.

Evening sitting reported in volume B.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO
ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lieutenant Governor / Lieutenante-gouverneure: Hon / L'hon Hilary M. Weston
Speaker / Président: Hon / L'hon Chris Stockwell
Clerk / Greffier: Claude L. DesRosiers
Clerk Assistant / Greffière adjointe: Deborah Deller
Clerks at the Table / Greffiers parlementaires: Todd Decker, Lisa Freedman
Sergeant-at-Arms / Sergent d'armes: Dennis Clark

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Algoma	Wildman, Bud (ND)
Algoma-Manitoulin	Brown, Michael A. (L)
Beaches-Woodbine	Lankin, Frances (ND)
Brampton North / -Nord	Spina, Joseph (PC)
Brampton South / -Sud	Clement, Tony (PC)
Brant-Haldimand	Preston, Peter L. (PC)
Brantford	Johnson, Ron (PC)
Bruce	Fisher, Barbara (PC)
Burlington South / -Sud	Jackson, Hon / L'hon Cameron (PC) Minister without Portfolio (seniors issues) / ministre sans portefeuille (affaires des pernonnes âgées)
Cambridge	Martiniuk, Gerry (PC)
Carleton	Sterling, Hon / L'hon Norman W. (PC) Minister of Environment and Energy / ministre de l'Environnement et de l'Énergie
Carleton East / -Est	Morin, Gilles E. (L)
Chatham-Kent	Carroll, Jack (PC)
Cochrane North / -Nord	Wood, Len (ND)
Cochrane South / -Sud	Bisson, Gilles (ND)
Cornwall	Cleary, John C. (L)
Don Mills	Johnson, Hon / L'hon David (PC) Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, government House leader / président du Conseil de gestion, leader parlementaire du gouvernement
Dovercourt	Silipo, Tony (ND)
Downsview	Castrilli, Annamarie (L)
Dufferin-Peel	Tilson, David (PC)
Durham Centre / -Centre	Flaherty, Jim (PC)
Durham East / -Est	O'Toole, John R. (PC)
Durham West / -Ouest	Ecker, Hon / L'hon Janet (PC) Minister of Community and Social Services / ministre des Services sociaux et communautaires
Durham-York	Munro, Julia (PC)
Eglinton	Saunderson, Hon / L'hon William (PC) Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism / ministre du Développement économique, du Commerce et du Tourisme
Elgin	North, Peter (Ind)
Essex-Kent	Hoy, Pat (L)
Essex South / -Sud	Crozier, Bruce (L)
Etobicoke-Humber	Ford, Douglas B. (PC)
Etobicoke-Lakeshore	Kells, Morley (PC)
Etobicoke-Rexdale	Hastings, John (PC)
Etobicoke West / -Ouest	Stockwell, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Speaker / président
Fort William	McLeod, Lyn (L)
Fort York	Marchese, Rosario (ND)
Frontenac-Addington	Vankoughnet, Bill (PC)
Grey-Owen Sound	Murdoch, Bill (PC)
Guelph	Elliott, Brenda (PC)
Halton Centre / -Centre	Young, Terence H. (PC)
Halton North / -Nord	Chudleigh, Ted (PC)
Hamilton Centre / -Centre	Christopherson, David (ND)
Hamilton East / -Est	Agostino, Dominic (L)
Hamilton Mountain	Pettit, Trevor (PC)
Hamilton West / -Ouest	Ross, Lillian (PC)
Hastings-Peterborough	Danford, Harry (PC)
High Park-Swansea	Shea, Derwyn (PC)
Huron	Johns, Helen (PC)
Kenora	Miclash, Frank (L)
Kingston and The Islands / Kingston et Les Îles	Gerretsen, John (L)
Kitchener	Wettlaufer, Wayne (PC)
Kitchener-Wilmot	Leadston, Gary L. (PC)
Lake Nipigon / Lac-Nipigon	Pouliot, Gilles (ND)
Lambton	Beaubien, Marcel (PC)
Lanark-Renfrew	Jordan, W. Leo (PC)
Lawrence	Cordiano, Joseph (L)
Leeds-Grenville	Runciman, Hon / L'hon Robert W. (PC) Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services / solliciteur général et ministre des Services correctionnels
Lincoln	Sheehan, Frank (PC)
London Centre / -Centre	Boyd, Marion (ND)
London North / -Nord	Cunningham, Hon / L'hon Dianne (PC) Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, minister responsible for women's issues / ministre des Affaires intergouvernementales, ministre déléguée à la Condition féminine
London South / -Sud	Wood, Bob (PC)
Markham	Tsubouchi, Hon / L'hon David H. (PC) Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce
Middlesex	Smith, Bruce (PC)
Mississauga East / -Est	DeFaria, Carl (PC)
Mississauga North / -Nord	Snobelen, Hon / L'hon John (PC) Minister of Education and Training / ministère de l'Éducation et de la Formation
Mississauga South / -Sud	Marland, Margaret (PC)
Mississauga West / -Ouest	Sampson, Hon / L'hon Rob (PC) Minister without Portfolio (privatization) / ministre sans portefeuille (privatisation)
Muskoka-Georgian Bay / Muskoka-Baie-Georgienne	Grimmett, Bill (PC)
Nepean	Baird, John R. (PC)

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Niagara Falls	Maves, Bart (PC)
Niagara South / -Sud	Hudak, Tim (PC)
Nickel Belt	Laughren, Floyd (ND)
Nipissing	Harris, Hon / L'hon Michael D. (PC) Premier and President of the Executive Council / premier ministre et président du Conseil exécutif
Norfolk	Barrett, Toby (PC)
Northumberland	Galt, Doug (PC)
Oakville South / -Sud	Carr, Gary (PC)
Oakwood	Colle, Mike (L)
Oriole	Caplan, David (L)
Oshawa	Ouellette, Jerry J. (PC)
Ottawa Centre / -Centre	Patten, Richard (L)
Ottawa East / -Est	Grandmaître, Bernard (L)
Ottawa-Rideau	Guzzo, Garry J. (PC)
Ottawa South / -Sud	McGuinty, Dalton (L) Leader of the Opposition / chef de l'opposition
Ottawa West / -Ouest	Cullen, Alex (L)
Oxford	Hardeman, Ernie (PC)
Parkdale	Ruprecht, Tony (L)
Parry Sound	Eves, Hon / L'hon Ernie L. (PC) Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance / vice-premier ministre, ministre des Finances
Perth	Johnson, Bert (PC)
Peterborough	Stewart, R. Gary (PC)
Port Arthur	Gravelle, Michael (L)
Prescott and Russell / Prescott et Russell	Lalonde, Jean-Marc (L)
Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings / Prince EdwardLennox-Hastings-Sud	Fox, Gary (PC)
Quinte	Rollins, E.J. Douglas (PC)
Rainy River	Hampton, Howard (ND) Leader of the New Democratic Party / Chef du Nouveau Parti démocratique
Renfrew North / -Nord	Conway, Sean G. (L)
Riverdale	Churley, Marilyn (ND)
S-D-G & East Grenville / S-D-G et Grenville-Est	Villeneuve, Hon / L'hon Noble (PC) Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs / ministre de l'Agriculture, de l'Alimentation et des Affaires rurales, ministre délégué aux Affaires francophones
St Andrew-St Patrick	Bassett, Isabel (PC)
St Catharines	Bradley, James J. (L)
St Catharines-Brock	Froese, Tom (PC)
St George-St David	Leach, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing / ministre des Affaires municipales et du Logement
Sarnia	Boushy, Dave (PC)
Sault Ste Marie / Sault-Sainte-Marie	Martin, Tony (ND)
Scarborough-Agincourt	Phillips, Gerry (L)
Scarborough Centre / -Centre	Newman, Dan (PC)
Scarborough East / -Est	Gilchrist, Steve (PC)
Scarborough-Ellesmere	Mushinski, Hon / L'hon Marilyn (PC) Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation / ministre des Affaires civiques, de la Culture et des Loisirs
Scarborough North / -Nord	Curling, Alvin (L)
Scarborough West / -Ouest	Brown, Jim (PC)
Simcoe Centre / -Centre	Tascona, Joseph N. (PC)
Simcoe East / -Est	McLean, Allan K. (PC)
Simcoe West / -Ouest	Wilson, Hon / L'hon Jim (PC) Minister of Health / ministre de la Santé
Sudbury	Bartolucci, Rick (L)
Sudbury East / -Est	Martel, Shelley (ND)
Timiskaming	Ramsay, David (L)
Victoria-Haliburton	Hodgson, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Minister of Natural Resources, Minister of Northern Development and Mines / ministre des Richesses naturelles, ministre du Développement du Nord et des Mines
Waterloo North / -Nord	Witmer, Hon / L'hon Elizabeth (PC) Minister of Labour / ministre du Travail
Welland-Thorold	Kormos, Peter (ND)
Wellington	Arnott, Ted (PC)
Wentworth East / -Est	Doyle, Ed (PC)
Wentworth North / -Nord	Skarica, Toni (PC)
Willowdale	Harnick, Hon / L'hon Charles (PC) Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs / procureur général, ministre délégué aux Affaires autochtones
Wilson Heights	Kwinter, Monte (L)
Windsor-Riverside	Lessard, Wayne (ND)
Windsor-Sandwich	Pupatello, Sandra (L)
Windsor-Walkerville	Duncan, Dwight (L)
York Centre / -Centre	Palladini, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Transportation / ministre des Transports
York East / -Est	Parker, John L. (PC)
York Mills	Turnbull, David (PC)
York-Mackenzie	Klees, Frank (PC)
Yorkview	Sergio, Mario (L)
York South / -Sud	Kennedy, Gerard (L)

A list arranged by members' surnames and including all responsibilities of each member appears in the first and last issues of each session and on the first Monday of each month.

Une liste alphabétique des noms des députés, comprenant toutes les responsabilités de chaque député, figure dans les premier et dernier numéros de chaque session et le premier lundi de chaque mois.

CONTENTS

Wednesday 24 September 1997

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

Class size
Mr Bartolucci 12349
North Bay Days of Action
Ms Lankin 12349
Julie Brooks
Mrs Munro 12349
Government's record
Mr Bradley 12350
Cancer prevention
Ms Churley 12350
Education financing
Mr McLean 12350
Mrs McLeod 12350
Fire in Hamilton
Mr Christopherson 12351
Seniors seminar
Mr Froese 12351

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

Standing committee on government agencies
The Speaker 12351
Report deemed adopted 12351

ORAL QUESTIONS

Hospital restructuring
Mr McGuinty 12352
Mr Wilson 12352, 12356, 12359
Mr Kennedy 12356
Mr Agostino 12358
Education financing
Mr McGuinty 12353
Mr Snobelen 12353
Home care
Mr Hampton 12354
Mr Wilson 12354
Mrs Boyd 12354
Mr Jackson 12355, 12360
Mr Shea 12360
Education reform
Mr Hampton 12355
Mr Snobelen 12355, 12356
Mr Wildman 12356
Health cards
Mrs Boyd 12357
Mr Wilson 12357
Cross-border travel
Mr Hastings 12358
Mr Saunderson 12358
TVOntario
Mr Hampton 12359
Mr Sampson 12359
Kidney dialysis
Mr Cleary 12360
Mr Wilson 12360
Family Responsibility Office
Ms Martel 12361
Mr Harnick 12361

PETITIONS

TVOntario
Mr Miclash 12361
Child care
Mr Klees 12361
Hospital restructuring
Mr Duncan 12361
Fire in Hamilton
Mr Christopherson 12362
Municipal restructuring
Mr Stewart 12362
Kidney dialysis
Mr Cleary 12362
Pay equity
Mr Christopherson 12362
Court decision
Mr Bert Johnson 12362
Mr Parker 12363
Education reform
Mr Curling 12362
Occupational health and safety
Mr Christopherson 12363
Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Gerretsen 12363
Mr Miclash 12364
Nursing staff
Mr Bisson 12363
Water chlorination
Mr Chudleigh 12364

THIRD READINGS

Uniform Federal and Provincial Child Support Guidelines Act, 1997, Bill 128, Mr Harnick
Mrs Pupatello 12364, 12367
Mr Bisson 12366, 12371, 12384 12387, 12387
Mr Parker 12366, 12373 12381, 12386
Mr Bradley 12366
Mr Len Wood 12367, 12373, 12384
Mr Lessard 12368, 12372 12376, 12386
Mr Carroll 12370, 12372, 12374 12375
Mr Grandmaître 12371
Mr Flaherty 12371, 12378, 12387
Mr Miclash 12373, 12376, 12378 12381, 12383
Mr Duncan 12374, 12376
Ms Churley 12375, 12377, 12379
Mr Wildman 12379
Mr O'Toole 12379, 12383
Mrs Munro 12380, 12382
Mr Kormos 12381, 12383
Mr Crozier 12382, 12384
Mr Gravelle 12386
Debate deemed adjourned 12387

OTHER BUSINESS

Speaker's ruling
The Speaker 12351
Visitor
The Speaker 12354

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Mercredi 24 septembre 1997

QUESTIONS ORALES

Voyages transfrontaliers
M. Hastings 12358

TROISIÈME LECTURE

Loi de 1997 sur l'harmonisation des lignes directrices fédérales et provinciales sur les aliments pour les enfants, projet de loi 128, M. Harnick
Débat présumé ajournée 12387

A 2 ON
Y 1
-D23

No. 235B

Nº 235B

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly of Ontario

First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Wednesday 24 September 1997

Mercredi 24 septembre 1997

SEP 24 1997
Toronto

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday 24 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mercredi 24 septembre 1997

The House met at 1830.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FARMING AND FOOD PRODUCTION PROTECTION ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR LA PROTECTION DE L'AGRICULTURE ET DE LA PRODUCTION ALIMENTAIRE

Mr Villeneuve moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 146, An Act to protect Farming and Food Production / Projet de loi 146, Loi protégeant l'agriculture et la production alimentaire.

Hon Noble Villeneuve (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs): At the outset I beg indulgence of the House to permit me to share my opening statement time with the member for Hastings-Peterborough and the member for Durham East.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Agreed? Agreed.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: Thank you, colleagues. First of all, we have a number of very distinguished guests in the members' gallery. We have representatives from the executive committee of the OFA, members from the sheep marketing board, the land use committee of the OFA, Ontario pork producers' representation, Ontario cattlemen's and other commodity groups. I want to welcome you here with us tonight.

It is my great pleasure this evening to introduce for second reading Bill 146, An Act to protect Farming and Food Production. It was a promise we made in the rural economic development task force and I believe it's the last promise we are in the process of completing. We have very strong support from the food production areas of Ontario.

This proposed legislation is crucial to protecting the ability of farmers to continue producing an abundant supply of wholesome, high-quality, affordable food and other agricultural products for Ontario's consumers and for the markets around the world. It reasserts this government's commitment to agriculture and food production as the vibrant, competitive and growing sector that it is.

Just to outline some things that some of my colleagues possibly are not aware of: It annually contributes $25 billion to the provincial economy; employs well over 600,000 people and creates more jobs every year; and exports products worth well over $5 billion annually to the far reaches of the globe, products that are recognized the world over as being of the highest quality.

In order to continue feeding all of us as well as creating jobs and economic growth, our farmers need assurances that they can conduct their normal business practices without fear of nuisance lawsuits and unnecessary restrictive bylaws. While we have a law that provides this kind of protection, it is limited and out of date and no longer effective.

In the previous 10 years since the Farm Practices Protection Act was introduced, the population mix in rural Ontario has changed, with more urban people moving into our rural areas. New, innovative kinds of farming are being introduced, involving non-traditional livestock and crops. Modern normal farming practices include activities not covered under the current legislation, and on-farm activities in which farmers add value to the commodities they produce are indeed increasing.

Times have changed and the current act has not changed with the times. Before this government was elected, we went out and listened to farmers and rural residents and this legislation was one of their key concerns. They told us that protection provided was not adequate. The legislation did not cover a number of modern farming activities. It did not apply to new and innovative operations that were starting up all over the province. There was concern about increasing conflict over restrictive municipal bylaws.

We made a pledge then that we would put in place a law that is more in step with the times; a law that protected the rights of farmers using normal farming practices to continue raising the food products we all use without having to resort to unnecessary, time-consuming and costly litigation; a law that would protect Ontario's ability both now and in future generations to maintain a growing, thriving job creating agrifood sector.

The bill before us today does this because it balances the rights of those who conduct their farming businesses in rural Ontario with the rights of all those who live in rural Ontario. It adheres to our strong health, safety, and I emphasize, environmental standards. It is forward-looking, providing much-needed protection for today's farmers and for generations to come, and builds on the tremendous environmental work that has been done by farmers and farm organizations over the past 10 years.

As an example, the Ontario Farm Environmental Coalition has been working since the early 1990s with farmers across the province, encouraging them to conduct farming activities in a manner that respects the environment. Dozens of farm organizations and marketing boards are involved in the coalition, including the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Christian Farmers Federation of Ontario, AgCare and the Ontario Farm Animal Council. All told, the coalition represents thousands of farmers and rural people.

Central to the coalition's efforts are environmental farm plans. These individual plans set out opportunities for environmental enhancement and provide a strategy for making low-cost, highly effective changes on the farm. In combination with educational workshops, technical advice, peer reviews and funding incentives, the plans are helping farmers make environmental improvements in their own operations. It's voluntary, it's working, and you may even ask why. Well, it's because farmers care.

So far, 10,000 participants have attended local EFP workshops. Close to 5,000 peer-approved plans have been developed. Last fall, the coalition launched phase 2 of the program, with a primary goal of involving 6,000 new farmers by the year 2000. I'm proud that the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs has been involved from the beginning, providing technical expertise to develop program materials and answers to technical questions during workshops sponsored by the ministry.

I know from years of experience the significant changes that are occurring in rural Ontario. Having been a farmer and a rural resident for decades myself, I can understand the attraction that draws people from the city to the countryside. For most it is a more tranquil, less rushed and more desirable lifestyle, and I think we all understand that.

There's a real sense of community in rural living. Neighbours generally get along and help one another out. That's why so many have decided to make the move from, say, the streets of downtown Toronto, London or Ottawa to the concession roads of rural Ontario, and we welcome them. But make no mistake: For farmers it is their place of business that these people have moved into, with all the challenges and opportunities that entails.

1840

The business of farming has evolved rapidly. In the year 1900, at the turn of the century that we're now completing, each farmer fed about 12 people and about 50 cents of every consumer dollar earned was spent on food. With growing populations, farmers have been called upon to boost their productivity, and indeed they have.

Today the average farmer feeds more than 120 people and our food prices are among the world's lowest, with food costing only about 12.5 cents of every dollar earned. Fewer than 3% of Canadians operate farms, yet they produce enough food and other numerous commodities such as herbs for pharmaceuticals, flowers, flax for fibre and feedstock for alternative fuels to supply most of the domestic and many import markets. And let's not forget, they accomplish all this in an environmentally responsible way. That is of utmost importance and I want to emphasize that throughout this presentation.

Farmers are the original environmentalists. They, more than anyone, know the importance of taking care of air, water and soil. These elements are literally their lifelines, the farmer's way of earning his or her living. They, more than anyone, understand that you need a productive, safe and healthy environment for things to go well on the farm. That's the first step in the production of wholesome, high-quality food that very often our consumers take for granted.

It's also a driving force for some of the non-food commodities, such as ethanol. It's what consumers demand and, as importantly, it's what farmers expect of themselves and wish to produce. That's why farmers and farm groups invest their time and money in many initiatives aimed at protecting our environment. Besides environmental farm plans, there are countless projects involving millions of farmers' hard-earned dollars aimed at such things as reducing pesticide use, improving tilling practices, developing more efficient manure management practices, erosion control, and we could name many others.

Farmers see these projects as long-term investments both in the environment and in their own businesses. For farmers, the two are connected at the most basic level. You cannot have one without the other.

I think we can all agree that creating a climate in which farmers continue to provide us with high-quality, affordable food without unnecessary restrictions is not only a worthwhile goal, but it's indeed a must. I think most of my colleagues in this Legislature would agree with that. That's why we're putting forward this balanced piece of legislation, and I emphasize the word "balanced" because it was carefully crafted after extensive public consultations were carried out by the parliamentary assistant to yours truly, the MPP for Hastings-Peterborough, my colleague Harry Danford, with help from Lambton MPP Marcel Beaubien. That's the way we like to do things: to ensure that new policy or legislation meets the needs of those it will affect. I emphasize, these were pre-bill consultations from farmers and rural residents across Ontario.

Earlier this year, my colleague Mr Danford did an excellent job gathering information, opinions and suggestions from farmers, rural municipal leaders and other stakeholders at eight meetings across this province. The response was most encouraging. More than 850 people attended these meetings and more than 60 written submissions were received. We received excellent input regarding the review of the current law and insights into how the new legislation could best be written and put into effect.

I certainly want to thank my friends across the province from the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Christian Farmers Federation of Ontario, the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, normally known as ROMA, and many commodity groups that also contributed tremendously to both the consultation process and the development of the bill. I'd also like to thank all of the rural residents who took time to share their concerns and the issues, because they contributed immensely to bringing balance to this legislation.

Many of those suggestions are incorporated in the bill. It's a bill that's before the House today for second reading, a bill that we hope to have become law before the end of this year. I believe, and I think my honourable colleagues will agree, that the bill does what we all set out to do: strengthen the protection of farming and food production while keeping in harmony with health, safety and the environment. The proposed act provides added protection for farmers without overriding or duplicating other legislation and policies designed to protect the public of this province.

Farmers have told me again and again that their interest in strengthening this legislation is so they can get on with the day-to-day operations of their farms, what they know how to do best. They have said emphatically that they do not want a licence to pollute. I emphasize: They do not want nor does this grant them a licence to pollute.

Therefore, the new law would continue to be subject to the provincial Environmental Protection Act, the Pesticides Act, the Health Protection and Promotion Act and the Ontario Water Resources Act. Further, it would adhere to cabinet-approved policy statements. Farmers understand thoroughly the need to have these safeguards in place. They understand better than anyone the need to safeguard their environment. That's why they have wholeheartedly agreed with these provisions.

At the same time, the proposed act deals constructively with the emerging concerns around unduly restrictive municipal bylaws. Before its implementation, the ministry, our farm groups and municipalities will be working together to increase awareness among municipal decision-makers about what are the normal, modern farming practices.

Under the new law, the minister would be able to issue farm practices policy statements which can also be used by municipalities as guidelines in helping them develop new bylaws.

At the same time, a public awareness program would focus on the realities of living in rural Ontario. This would be accomplished in cooperation with farm and rural groups, along with realtors or real estate agents who are involved on numerous occasions in the transfer of titles and properties. We have to do a better job of informing people who move to rural areas that farms are also places of business where sometimes the crop can't wait until after the weekend to be harvested; where at the height of the season greenhouse operators have to run the lights all night; where weather conditions mean that farm equipment could well be running 24 hours a day. We do know that grain dryers, once the season starts, run 24 hours a day.

We must also do a better job in reminding everyone that Ontario's economic roots are firmly planted in our farmers' fields in rural Ontario and that we all depend on a healthy, wholesome and affordable food supply and all of the non-food products that also come from those very same fields and farms in rural Ontario.

I know that some farmers already regularly advise their neighbours when they need to combine or spread manure on an adjacent field. Often the timing of these activities can be worked out to everyone's satisfaction. If it doesn't or can't happen, staff of the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs are quite knowledgeable and adept at helping mediate resolutions between neighbours before disputes escalate. These measures are designed to head off needless confrontation before it occurs and that too is the way we like to do things. That's why we had pre-bill consultation last winter and early spring.

The vast majority of conflicts in the past, and I'm confident those that we will have in the future, will be settled either among the parties themselves or with mediation help from the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs staff. However, if after all these avenues have been exhausted the dispute continues, the issue can be brought before the new Normal Farm Practices Protection Board for a ruling on a specific farm practice. I see application to the board as a last resort. If the board rules that the farm practice in question is normal, the bylaw would not apply in that one specific case, and these cases will all be handled on an individual basis.

There have been a few concerns raised since this bill was introduced in June: that it would leave municipalities powerless to govern in their own development; and that large, intensive farms could be built without regard to local councils' or residents' wishes.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): It doesn't matter. You're going to amalgamate them all. You're turn Ontario into one large Chatham-Kent.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Algoma.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: I want to assure everyone that all farming operations, regardless of size, will continue to be required to adhere to current environmental laws and regulations. Farmers wouldn't have it any other way, nor would this government.

At the same time, we intend to increase representation from rural municipalities to the new board. This change would help ensure that a balanced approach is taken to making rulings and that the rights of everyone in rural Ontario are taken into serious consideration.

Mr Len Wood (Cochrane North): You're going to turn rural Ontario into a megacity.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Cochrane North.

1850

Hon Mr Villeneuve: The board's central role under the act is to determine whether or not the activity in question is a normal farm practice. In their deliberations, board members will take into account such things as the purpose of the bylaw, the effect of the practice on abutting lands and whether the bylaw reflects a provincial interest as established under legislation or policy statements. I have every confidence that the new board will have the necessary experience and knowledge to make fair and balanced decisions, I emphasize again, on what is a normal farm practice. It's not complicated.

Bill 146 is a major improvement over current legislation for a number of reasons. It clarifies what constitutes an agricultural operation and sets out more specifically the kinds of businesses included. As examples, farmers now raise emus or ostriches. Beekeepers, maple syrup producers, these are all added under the new law. It spells out that normal farming practices are those that are consistent with proper and acceptable customs and standards followed by the industry. It adds light, vibration, smoke and flies to the current list of noise, odour and dust as the effects that can be expected from normal modern farming practices. It includes activities that farmers may undertake on their farms to add value to the commodities they produce.

Let's not forget that a strong, viable farming sector in turn provides the input to maintain a strong, competitive food manufacturing and distribution system in Ontario. We have seen investment in food manufacturing rebound tremendously in the past two years in response to the improved business climate.

The proposed Farming and Food Production Protection Act is indeed a bill whose time has come. Just ask people like Neil McCaig, who is the fourth generation of his family to work his farm just outside Guelph, in the shadow of the city. He welcomes the proposed legislation, and after its first reading said, "We are seeing the city build up so fast, and this government says farmers need protection against those fast-growing urban areas." Neil is a lot like the tens of thousands of other family farmers in rural Ontario who want to ensure that both he and future generations can continue to work the land and supply our tables with wholesome, abundant, affordable food.

In fact, the new bill has a lot of supporters throughout rural Ontario even before it's passed. Here is a sampling. A Woodstock Sentinel-Review editorial states, "...we must protect what's left of our prime agricultural land. And that means giving our farmers the right to carry out the necessary chores which contribute to our province's multibillion-dollar agrifood business" sector " — without the hassles."

An editorial headline in the St Thomas Times-Journal says, "It Takes Noise to Grow...Food." Some of the politicians in here make that noise, but I know they don't produce any food.

An editorial in The Guelph Mercury said, "The proposed legislation is a prudent move —

Mr Len Wood: Careful, or you'll wake up one of your members. He's sleeping.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Cochrane North, order.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: — as urban development rapidly encroaches on farm lands."

Mary O'Connor, of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, who happens to be here tonight, said in the Brantford Expositor, "It's good for the farmers of Ontario because the government of the day is recognizing agriculture as a major provincial interest."

Even my honourable colleague the leader of the third party said, "I agree that farmers and the work farmers do is very valuable for this province, and that work needs to be protected."

I'm pleased that there continues to be strong support in the rural areas of Ontario for the hardworking people who produce the food we consume and the many non-food products we all use. I trust that Bill 146 will receive equally strong support here in this Legislature. The bill is one of several forward-looking initiatives that show this government remains committed to Ontario's agrifood industry in our rural communities.

Further examples: The rural job strategy will see $30 million of new money to go towards cost-shared projects which will boost economic development and job creation in rural Ontario. The strategy that was announced by my colleague the Minister of Finance in the May budget was this $30-million rural job strategy. Since then my colleague Barb Fisher, MPP from Bruce, conducted public consultation with farmers and rural residents and others across the province to ensure that the program meets their needs. I'm looking forward to launching the strategy in the next few weeks and I'm confident that this initiative will accomplish our goal of boosting business competitiveness, export investments and, most important, jobs in rural Ontario.

On the research front, the ministry has joined a group of agrifood companies, commodity groups, universities and financial institutions called Ontario Agri-Food Research. We've invested $1 million over five years in this non-profit corporation, which is dedicated to bringing scientific advances from the lab to the market. Our enhanced partnership between the agreement of the University of Guelph is successfully increasing the efficiency and responsiveness in the delivery of essential research lab and education programming.

J'aimerais en ce moment souligner le fait qu'une entente entre l'Université Guelph et les collèges, tels Ridgetown, Kemptville et Alfred, a eu une réaction très positive, et nos initiatives nous ont fourni plus d'inscriptions dans nos collèges et nos universités agricoles cette année que dans les 10 dernières années, et les nouveaux diplômés ont des emplois quand ils terminent leurs études.

1900

Just one example is a major, half-million-dollar project looking to improve production and processing technologies for high-end, food-grade quality corn as well as enhanced corn drying and storage technology, and this was financed through the Grow Ontario program. There's a golden opportunity in products like tacos and corn chips that our producers and processors can take advantage of. With an expected 15% annual growth rate, this market definitely is on the front-end investment in research, and it's only one of the many other markets that could be explored with improved technology. This is a truly industry-wide effort, because the corn producers, processors, seed companies, the University of Guelph and Ridgetown college are all involved. I am pleased that through that Grow Ontario program we were able to invest $227,000, or about half the cost of this research project, which will inevitably bear fruit.

In marketing and investment, we're encouraging the development of products that add value to raw commodities, which will pay big dividends for the agrifood sector and for the entire province. A successful example is the new ethanol industry which this government has supported from its very earliest stages. I'm pleased to report that the Commercial Alcohols ethanol production facility in Chatham is going to be operational in December, fully two months ahead of schedule. Full production will begin January. Ethanol blends continue to be very popular at the pumps, and I understand that Sunoco is ready to do a major marketing of the blend in all their Ontario locations once the Commercial Alcohols plant comes on stream and the supply of Ontario-produced ethanol is more plentiful. This is terrific news for the industry, the Ontario economy and the environment. With production set at 150 litres a year, the Commercial Alcohols facility alone creates a substantial new market for farmers and the commodities they produce.

Ethanol production is the kind of activity that we will continue to support. It adds value to raw commodities, it boosts the rural economy and it creates new markets. It's a creator of jobs. In fact, the Commercial Alcohols plant has already given work to between 400 and 500 construction workers over the past two years and will employ some 45 full-time, high-tech people once the plant is open and operating on a 24-hour basis.

We're also committed to working with the industry to further develop export markets. We're determined to reach our target of doubling agrifood exports to $10 billion a year by the year 2001, and we're well on our way. These exports increased nearly 12% between 1995 and 1996. This year, between January and May, they increased again by more than $100 million over the same period last year. These exports are mainly to the US and to the Pacific Rim.

When you consider that every $1 billion of exports to other countries creates about 12,000 jobs in our local Ontario economy, I think we all realize the importance of the agrifood sector and the importance of these markets and exports.

This government has and will continue to encourage a strong agrifood sector and rural economy. We're doing it today with the second reading of the timely and much-needed Farming and Food Production Protection Act. I believe, and I think that all members can agree, that it achieves a balance between protecting the rights of those who farm in rural Ontario with all those who live in rural Ontario. With this legislation, we will continue working with the people of Ontario who contribute so much to our very high standard of living.

We'll forge ahead with research and technology advances, explore new markets here at home and around the globe, and boost investment and competitiveness throughout the province. We'll do our utmost to assist rural communities to reach their potential as full participants in the bright economic future ahead for Ontario's agrifood industry. Most of all, we'll continue to create a climate in which those who produce food and those who consume it can go on reaping the rewards of one of our most highly respected and vital industries. Ontario is known worldwide as a very high quality food producer and exporter, and I am very proud of that reputation, because when Ontario's agrifood industry thrives, everyone in Ontario benefits.

Mr Harry Danford (Hastings-Peterborough): I too am pleased to speak this evening in support of Bill 146, An Act to protect Farming and Food Production, and I want to spend a few moments to review how Bill 146 was prepared. Along with my colleague the member for Lambton, I was involved in the consultation process leading to this bill and I want to personally assure the House that the consultation process was both extensive and comprehensive.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank Minister Villeneuve for providing me with the opportunity to be involved in the consultation and the input to Bill 146. It gave me the opportunity not only to work on this important piece of legislation for our government but also to meet face to face with a great many people from all walks of life in rural Ontario, and many have chosen to be with us here tonight. Whether it was in Ridgetown, New Liskeard or Barrie, rural residents spoke up about their concerns and gave freely of their ideas and suggestions on how we can get this bill right. I also want to assure the members that we listened with equal concern and care.

When we started this process, we asked our key stakeholders about the best means of consulting, and we worked closely with those stakeholders, those who would be affected by the bill. We established an advisory committee whose members provided excellent advice and became our partners in the consultation process. Those partners included the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Christian Farmers Federation of Ontario and the Rural Ontario Municipal Association. The advisory committee also included representatives of the Farm Practices Protection Board, the Ministry of Environment and Energy and the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

The resulting consultation process was designed to include several methods of gathering input. We held open meetings at various locations across the whole province. We requested written submissions as well. We participated at the annual meeting of the Rural Ontario Municipal Association. We held discussions, as well, with the Farm Practices Protection Board.

I was involved in eight public meetings between January 23 and February 6 of this year. The meetings were held across the province: Ridgetown, Walkerton, Alfred, Kemptville, Peterborough, New Liskeard, Barrie and Brantford. The meeting in New Liskeard incorporated telephone connections to Dryden, Emo, Thunder Bay, Sault Ste Marie, Gore Bay, Verner, Kapuskasing and Huntsville. I think it's fair to say that we ensured that both farming and non-farming residents from across this province had an opportunity to talk to us about this proposed legislation.

We recognize the concerns of non-farming rural residents, but I would like to reaffirm what the minister said about farmers being the original environmentalists. It is in the farmers' best interests to properly maintain the land they farm. All the participants were keenly aware of the importance of maintaining high standards for safety, health and environment, but none more so than the farmers themselves. Over 850 people attended these sessions: 75% were farmers, 20% were municipal politicians or their staff and 5% represented rural non-farm residents.

Prior to the public meetings, OMAFRA issued a discussion paper on the Farm Practices Protection Act to help identify the issues, and we used this paper to begin our small group discussions at the public meetings. Oral and written reports from the groups were collected at each meeting to ensure that every participant's view was documented. Another open meeting was organized by the local Federation of Agriculture in Kirkton, Ontario, and the format of their meeting mirrored that of those organized by OMAFRA.

We also wanted to make sure that we received input from rural municipalities. To that end, the member for Lambton and I participated in the annual conference of the Rural Ontario Municipal Association in February of this year, and in an open session, over 700 conference delegates were given the opportunity to comment on the Farm Practices Protection Act. As well, members of the Farm Practices Protection Board had an opportunity to provide their firsthand knowledge during a discussion at one of their board meetings.

1910

Our consultation process also included written submissions, as I mentioned. In response to the ministry's request for these comments, 66 organizations and individuals provided comments either through the mail or electronically. Who responded? Twenty-seven percent of the written submissions came from individual farmers, 26% from farm organizations, 21% from municipal councils and planners across the province, 11% from producer and grower organizations and 15% from concerned rural residents.

I think you can agree we did indeed conduct extensive and comprehensive consultation to ensure that all interested parties had an opportunity to comment, and because of this process we received a full spectrum of comments.

We listened carefully to all the comments and concerns we heard at the province-wide meetings, we reviewed all the written submissions with equal care and, as a result, I want to assure my colleagues in the House this evening that we have proposed legislation that balances the right of farmers to conduct their business with the rights of all residents who live within our rural communities.

As Minister Villeneuve has told you, our guiding principle throughout the review of the current Farm Practices Protection Act was to strength the protection of farming and food production, while keeping keep it in harmony with health, safety and indeed the environment. Our aim was to ensure that the agrifood sector, which is after all Ontario's second-largest economic contributor, could continue fuelling economic growth and creating jobs without unnecessary restrictions.

We want to reinforce agriculture and food production as a provincial interest and meet the needs of the rural community as well., which I might say was the request at our ROMA meeting we had in February. It came from the floor of the municipalities that we establish agriculture as a provincial interest. With this proposed legislation, we're reaffirming our confidence in the province's farmers as valued generators of economic growth and as contentious custodians of the environment.

Our consultation confirmed that the current 10-year-old legislation does not meet the needs of today's growing rural population or its farmers. It is out of date and simply ineffective. The proposed legislation will remedy that situation, not only for today's agrifood industry but indeed for generations to come.

As the members know, our ministry's stakeholders come from all walks of life in rural Ontario. Our government has recognized that they may all be affected by this bill. We have an obligation to strengthen the production of farming and food production, and an equal obligation to maintain the health, safety and the environment of rural Ontario. With Bill 146 we have fulfilled these obligations.

I believe that this bill, if passed, will work for the benefit of all residents of rural Ontario. For the first time, the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs will be able to give advice to municipalities on what is acceptable in a bylaw that will affect food production, and this is something that municipalities have asked for.

Bill 146 will balance the need for a secure food supply with other equally important issues such as health, safety and the environment. This bill will support the needs of our growing agrifood sector and the needs of all those who live and work in rural Ontario. That was our goal when we started out on the consultations and I think we have achieved our goal with this bill, Bill 146.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham East): I first want to thank, and feel very privileged that the minister, Noble Villeneuve, has asked me to contribute to this debate tonight. It's a pleasure for me to follow the member from Hastings-Peterborough, Mr Danford. I know just how hard he works and his contribution and knowledge in support of the agricultural industry today.

With respect to Bill 146, I monitored the process. In fact, I asked the minister to listen to input from my constituents in Durham East, and let me just speak for a moment about my riding of Durham East.

Durham East is a very unique, high-performance, high-productivity area in the agricultural sector of this very important province, and I am very proud to represent the agricultural sector, my riding of Durham East, here at Queen's Park.

Agriculture, as Mr Danford and the minister have said, is the second-largest industry in Ontario, and I'd like the members to know that in the riding of Durham, in fact the whole region of Durham, agriculture is the second most important industry both in employment and in dollars added to the value of Durham region's economy, a multi-million dollar agribusiness. In fact, it's the most important and successful growing sector in our economy.

This isn't done by any stretch by the minister alone, and the minister has clearly acknowledged tonight the important contributors. The important contributors are our partners; the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Christian Farmers and all the producer groups. It would be remiss of me not to mention some of them, and the more important ones I might add are the poultry producers, the Ontario Cattlemen's Association, the corn producers, all the other producer groups, and all of them are represented very clearly in my riding.

The gross product value is $25 billion and, as the minister said, over 600,000 jobs are created by the agricultural sector; $5 billion annually in exports of very high quality products. That's something each one of us, all members regardless of party, should be very proud of and support the producer sector in our economy and in our riding, most importantly in our riding.

Let me speak for a moment to the importance in my riding of Durham East. I look around, and I was trying to think about it to make a few comments tonight. I've been limited in the amount of time I can contribute, but the first name that came to mind when I was thinking through was that the first person who really contributed to my involvement in public life was a gentleman by the name of Garnet Rickard. He has since passed away; well respected, Order of Canada, one of the leaders in the agricultural sector in our economy, well recognized and respected.

The tradition of farming is carried on by the family, the Rickard family and his wife Annabel, who succeeded him. She's sort of the mother of the whole industry, if you will, and there are Don and Gail Rickard and they're still carrying on in the farm business, and Jim and Ramona Rickard, all of whom are committed and their family. I've met and know those people personally people. They're in the apple business and the cash crop business, and their families are absolutely committed to agriculture.

What does it mean to be committed to agriculture? The minister mentioned it and Mr Danford mentioned it as well; it really starts with the whole aspect of farm stewardship. This bill addresses some recognition of noise and other nuisance kind of bylaws, but the farming industry itself has taken the role of steward, and I consider it — it's been explained to me by many farmers and many families — that the land is the factory. Would it make any sense for them to contaminate the factory, the land, the soil, the air, the water they so depend on for the value and the contribution?

There's only 3% of the total number of inhabitants actually owning and operating farms, 3% of all the people employed, but every farm that I drive by feeds 120 families. So think about it: When you drive by, there has to be some understanding and respect for their contribution not only to the economy, which we talk about, but they feed us. They are the bread basket of this province.

I know the producer groups individually have their issues, as does the federation, but they work together, and whether it's the milk marketing board or the other boards, they have supply-demand issues that they try to deal with and I think they are doing a marvellous job.

I have to remind people in my riding, as kind of urban and rural — the urban people come to me as they move into the countryside and they have some concerns about operations that may be at night, harvesting or a corn dryer or whatever kind of operation, and I try to tell them, "Milk doesn't come from Beckers; it comes from a cow." They have to be reminded. They have to be reminded. It sounds overly simplistic, but I'm going to refer back to my riding, because my riding of Durham East, which is east of Oshawa, includes Port Perry, north Oshawa, the municipality of Clarington —

Mr Len Wood: Your people are going to love you for that. All the urban people are suing him.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Cochrane North, you are out of your seat.

1920

Mr O'Toole: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I'm starting to have to yell over the noise. I know they're somewhat agitated, but I'd expect they would support the agricultural community, and I'm waiting and anxious to hear their comments.

I was very pleased to be with the minister on June 26, when he introduced this legislation. In fact, with me there was Brenda Elliott, Doug Rollins and Harry Danford, of course, the PA to the minister, myself and Ted Arnott, the member for Wellington. It was in his riding, at a dairy farm in Wellington, where the minister made this important announcement. The public were excited, but also the agricultural community was excited. Everyone seems to agree.

I consulted with people in my riding during the process of looking at the Farm Practices Protection Act and the issues specific in this legislation. I talked to farmers like Dave Frew, who is very well known, with his father, Don, a highly respected operator in my riding. They run a very large operation, almost 2,000 acres, and they have a large pork producer operation and a corn and cash crop operation. I asked him what kinds of things, and he said: "You know, it's kind of the smell and the noise issues. The city folk are moving out. We need to have some protection for our investment." They put the money in the ground before they get one cent back. Even the weather can turn on a farmer, and really we have to support them.

I look around again, and I want to go back to my riding. Going through my riding lists, I recognized first that probably one of the more important commodities is apples. Kirk Kemp is at the apple growers' association, and he's a very well-respected operator in my riding of Durham East. Ted Watson, of Ted Watson Farms, is very well respected; one of the first pick-your-own operations in the area. Wilmot Orchards, which was Charles Stevens; Charles has a mixed fruit-growing operation. Twin Brand Orchards with the Gibson family is well known, well respected.

But on the leading edge, the entrepreneurial edge, I've gotten to know Sandy and Fred Archibald. Just recently they opened up a winery section. Talk about diversification and investing in the future. There is a very innovative, creative couple, a young family making huge investments in jobs and contribution to the gross domestic product. They're starting a wine operation just north of Bowmanville. I wish them success.

Irwin Smith is also just south of Port Perry in my riding of Durham East. Irwin and his family, a long-practising, long-tradition family, three or four generations, have opened Ocala wines. They're producing hybrid grapes. Can you imagine? This isn't the Niagara region I'm talking about. It talks about the imagination and creativity and diversification of our farm operations today. I commend those people who make the investment of time and person for the betterment of themselves, of course, at great risk, but more importantly for the betterment of all of Ontario.

I'd be remiss not to mention the Price's market in Bowmanville. My children all worked there in the gardens. It's a garden-farm marketing operation which has grown profoundly over the years, offering fresh Ontario produce to the visitors and the tourists driving along on Highway 2 through Bowmanville. They're well known. In fact, many people have their first corn from Price's Market. Not to somehow market the different groups here, but Pingle's Farm Market as well in Courtice is very well respected.

I could go on and on, but I've mentioned a number of the more important contributors. It isn't just the farm producer groups, it's the whole attachment, it's the whole industry. I'm trying to think. There are three or four farm implements dealers that not only employ mechanics and sales people but provide a service to the agricultural community. They employ people, they create wealth, they create jobs. It's important. This government has to work with that farm implement dealers group as well.

When I think of my riding, Durham East, it's so diverse. For example, Tyrone Mills is one of the oldest still-operating mills. They have a completely water-powered apple cider crushing kind of operation. It's a must-visit. I commend the Schaffers for investing their time and resources into making a full, live demonstration, a real working product of how a farm and farm operations have survived over the years and indeed, as I said about the wine producing, have prospered.

There's another fellow I dealt with quite regularly when the Farm Practices Protection Act was being reviewed. I sent Mr Ulrich Ruegger a copy. Mr Ruegger came to me and said that he doesn't believe in any pesticides, he doesn't believe in any kind of artificial things in farm operations. There's room for those kinds of producers. In fact, one of the things the minister said which I agree with, and all the producer groups concerned, is that we must have the highest quality product when we're talking about the export market. I know it's well recognized, and the export market is some $5 billion and growing annually. In fact, it's one of the faster-growing sectors in our economy.

A couple of other local operators come to mind. I deal with a lot of constituents in the agricultural sector. Arnot Wotten, who is well known as a drover in the area but also a producer of cattle, often calls me and says, "Now, what's the government doing about this Farm Practices Protection Act?" I've shared the bill with him. It's quite a small bill. It's very, very important, quite readable.

To make a few concluding remarks, the preamble here, which I've shared with Ulrich Ruegger, Arnot Wotten and many people in my riding, says, "It is desirable to conserve, protect and encourage the development and improvement of agricultural lands for the production of food...." I think everyone here would agree with that, so I expect this bill to have unanimous support.

Our minister has worked so hard to work with the farm community to make sure it addresses the issues of the day. It talks about the intensive operation situation in cattle and chicken operations. It addresses the effectiveness of producing high-quality foods. In the definition section on page 1, it talks about "agricultural operation." It means "an agricultural, aquacultural, horticultural or silvicultural operation that is carried on in the expectation of gain or reward." That broadens the definition of the agricultural operation to be inclusive of those persons who may have a small sawmill operation, a maple syrup operation, diversifying their operation to be competitive in the world economy.

Then it goes on to define more clearly, as the minister said, the definition of "disturbance," what constitutes these nuisance bylaws, the municipal bylaws. I was a municipal councillor in Clarington and indeed on regional council in Durham region. As growth encroaches on agricultural land, these nuisance issues of noise, odour and smell do emerge. What is the long-practising farm operation to do with the gradual migration of city folk who are less tolerant of those things? They need protection. Our minister has listened, and the definition of "disturbance" has now been expanded. It means issues of "odour, dust, flies, light, smoke, noise and vibration" that could constitute a nuisance.

"Agricultural operation," again, the definition section makes it very clear, and I think persons who are moving to the rural sector for the high quality of life have to recognize that the food basket not only of this province but of the country and indeed perhaps the world is the agricultural sector. Everything we drink and eat has to be grown somewhere, and our population in Ontario is one of the highest producing sectors in the whole economy.

The bill goes on to define a few other aspects of what is not liable, and it defines very clearly what is liable. There is no compromise when it comes to this farm stewardship issue. The environment and any of those other issues around that are not exposed to risk in this bill, and it is very clearly outlined in here.

In my final, concluding remarks, I have to say I'm anxious to hear how the opposition responds to this bill. I thank the minister again for allowing me to have time to speak on it and to recognize formally in this House many of the people I work hard, as the minister and other members do, to represent here at Queen's Park. Indeed their concerns are heard. Indeed this minister has recognized many of those concerns.

My final remark has to be a little more light-hearted. I go back to an important story to me. I go back to Garnet Rickard, who serves as a great model for me. He was just a wise farmer, a man wise from working on the earth and producing the food he ate. He said to me, "There's not too much that falls beyond the span of an apple tree." If you think about it, if each of us stays close to the source of our very existence, agriculture is self-sustaining, where the land itself and the water and the soil are the factory. They have the highest respect for that, and it goes on to produce food for us, our family and indeed the province. To me, I always look at the definition of a farmer as a person who's outstanding in their field.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

1930

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I'd just like to make a few comments on what the minister and others from the governing party have said.

I realize that many changes have to come to protect agriculture and the farm operations and to help municipalities in their municipal and official plans. I know all this from my municipal days, that if we're going to survive here in Ontario, we have to add value to what we grow. But I can't understand some of the doubletalk that I've heard here tonight from a government that would let the agricultural budget deteriorate by 43% and pretend to care so much about agriculture.

In my days, I've had many farmers in my constituency office. They had so much money to put into a project and the bank would give them so much, and they'd just need a little bit to bridge that gap and they're away and adding value to what they grow. I think the government is overlooking something to let the agricultural budget not have a little pot of money to assist in those projects.

I know we all want to protect our agricultural land, and we have to, if we're going to live here. I know you've got the best asset in the farmers because they're good farmers. A good agricultural person will do everything he can to protect that land, because much of that has been handed down from generation to generation. There are many in Ontario and beyond looking to buy prime agricultural land not only because they think that's the future for Ontario but they're looking at the export market, which is going to be a very valuable asset to the people of Ontario.

Mr Wildman: I was really impressed with the tour of Durham East that was given to us by the member who just spoke. I'm sure that all of his farm constituents whom he named will be happy to receive the Hansard when he sends it out.

I listened carefully, as carefully as the member for London South, to the remarks of the minister. I am a little bit concerned that while we have before us a piece of legislation that purports to respond to the concerns of the farm community, and which I think does to a large extent, the minister, who as member for the united counties and South Grenville on this side of the House railed against the fact that the proportion of the total provincial budget of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food was declining, has presided over the most drastic decline in history of the budget in relation to the total budget of the province; and how a minister who also has as part of his responsibilities rural affairs and who says he is concerned about representing the rural communities, could sit by and see this government destroy a number of rural constituencies in this Legislature by amalgamations, and then move further to amalgamate large school boards so that we have in his own area the so-called alphabet soup board, the Lanark, Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, Prescott-Russell and whatever board that is so large that everybody thinks it is impossible to —

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. The time has expired.

Mr Wildman: This is a man who purports to represent rural Ontario, when he lets his government run roughshod over the concerns of —

The Deputy Speaker: The time has expired.

Mr Jack Carroll (Chatham-Kent): I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments in support of the minister who introduced Bill 146.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): Don't be too hard on him, Jack.

Mr Carroll: No, I'll take it easy. I'm not so sure what Bill 146 has to do with education. I must have been reading a different version of the bill, I guess, than the member.

Mr Wildman: You try and compartmentalize everything.

Mr Carroll: Anyway, the minister spoke about my riding of Chatham-Kent and he spoke about our new ethanol plant. I was glad to hear him make reference to that. It's a wonderful new industry, creating new jobs in the agrifood industry.

You know, Bill 146 does a few things for us. It respects the rights of both the urban and the agricultural interests. It protects the environment, but it lays out for us in fairly plain terms how important it is that we promote agriculture and agrifood growth in Ontario. There is nowhere in all of the industries available to us where we have more potential for good things and for growth than we do in agrifood and the agricultural industry.

I look at my small area of Chatham-Kent. Mind you, while it may be small, it is also probably the finest agricultural area in Ontario. But in addition to our ethanol plant and the new industries surrounding ethanol, we also have revitalized the sugar beet industry that disappeared years ago because Ontario was not competitive in the sugar beet industry. We've seen that revived under the auspices of our government.

We also have the beginnings of a wonderful hemp industry. There's a lot of great qualities that the hemp product has. The minister's been very supportive of that industry. We see it starting down in our area.

All in all, Bill 146 recognizes how important agriculture and the agrifood industry is to our province. Our minister has done a great job of promoting the benefits of the agrifood and agriculture industry and we're very pleased with Bill 146.

Mr Pat Hoy (Essex-Kent): I'll make some brief comments; I'm going to comment at length about this bill shortly. To the member for Durham East, who said he didn't have enough time, I remind you that you're the government that changed the rules and shortened debating time by 30 minutes for yourself and for us in the opposition.

I want to comment to the minister on what he mentioned about environmental standards. We agree that the past bill, future bills and indeed this one should protect environmental standards. We don't want the broader public to think anything else, other than the fact that we want to protect our environment, through this and any other piece of legislation. We also need to allow the farmers to go about their business of creating jobs, wealth and food for our province, and indeed we will always strive for that.

Minister, you said you wanted this bill to be law by the end of the year. We will assist you in the passage of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Minister, you have two minutes.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: I want to thank all my colleagues who participated, my colleagues from Cornwall, Algoma, Chatham-Kent and Essex-Kent.

I always find it interesting when the member for Algoma, who has been around here for a long time, seems to forget that for five years, while his government had the opportunity of running this province, they put us in debt by $50 billion of additional debt — $50 billion. Besides that, they closed down two of our agricultural colleges — two out of five. Do you remember that? How do you dare accuse us after what you did to this province? You come back and find fault with what we're doing? I do not understand that in any way, shape or form.

I've been very close to the agricultural community and I make it a point to travel. I went down to the Niagara area on Friday last, where the grape and wine festival is beginning. You know the doom and gloom that you preached and the Liberals provincially preached whenever the free trade deal was coming. Travel to Niagara these days and see what's going on there. A very positive grape and wine industry.

Mr Crozier: Come down to Essex county and try some of our wine too.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: The member from Essex there, we supported the ethanol industry with dollars. Your leader, when you were the government, spoke against the ethanol industry.

Mr Hoy: You cut the funding.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: How do you have the audacity of finding fault with a government that is supporting what you couldn't support and is very positive for agriculture? We have $5.3 billion of annual exports — better than you could ever claim — and the exports from Ontario's agri-food are rising. I'm very proud of that.

ROYAL ASSENT

SANCTION ROYALE

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): I beg to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to a certain bill in her chambers.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): The following is the title of the bill to which Her Honour did assent:

Bill 156, An Act to amend certain statutes with respect to the Regional Municipality of Sudbury / Projet de loi 156, Loi modifiant certaines lois en ce qui concerne la municipalité régionale de Sudbury.

1940

FARMING AND FOOD PRODUCTION PROTECTION ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR LA PROTECTION DE L'AGRICULTURE ET DE LA PRODUCTION AGRICOLE

(continued)

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate.

Mr Cleary: It is a pleasure to rise and make a few comments on Bill 146 —

The Deputy Speaker: Before you start, do you plan to split the time?

Mr Cleary Yes. It is a pleasure to rise and make a few comments on Bill 146, An Act to protect Farming and Food Production. I'd like to split my time with my colleague from Essex-Kent.

The Deputy Speaker: Agreed? Agreed.

Mr Cleary: As all members know, the goal of the bill is to extend the powers and jurisdictions of the existing Farm Practices Protection Board, and in expanding the powers, the government wants to rename the board to include the word "normal," making the new name the Normal Farm Practices Protection Board. My reaction and the reaction I've heard from many farmers, including several I spoke to at the plowing match last week, is that the overall premise of the bill is a positive step for agriculture and food production in Ontario.

The bill should serve to protect farmers from nuisance lawsuits and restrictive bylaws while also ensuring that farm practices and the results of operating a farm are kept within reasonable limits. This is important because each year about 600 complaints are lodged against farm operations due to dust, noise and smell.

We have to remember that only a few short years ago things were much different in the agricultural community. Every farm had a farm family, and we weren't stuck with the corn dryers, feedlots and all that goes with farming now where one farmer on a concession road is probably operating the whole farm. Why are farmers doing this? To provide safe, economical, high-quality food for the people of Ontario and to export and to add value and create jobs.

For years those complaints about farm practices have turned to the Farm Practices Protection Board to rule on the appropriateness or even environmental and safety concerns arising from farm operations. Under Bill 146 the board will still do that, but in addition to ruling on noise, dust and smells, the board will also have the authority to rule on other farm outcomes — smoke, flies, vibrations and lights.

Focusing on the decision to include lights, meaning lights from late-night harvesting or commodity transportation trucks or even greenhouses, shows what this bill is trying to do. Bill 146 has also attempted to update the reality of farming in today's Ontario. For example, since some farmers are using greenhouses, the usage should now be reflected as a normal farm practice.

Further, as different and more innovative farm techniques and processes are introduced, this bill should leave room for the farm practices board to make evaluations on those new practices in terms of the impact on the environment and the community at large. There are lots of times that environmental issues that should be dealt with by the Ministry of Environment fall at the doorstep of agriculture. It seems every year we have new crops being grown, so we have to be prepared for those results of innovation.

There are definitely some positive aspects to this bill: Allowing farmers to do their job to the best of their ability while still protecting neighbours and municipalities is a good thing. But there are several concerns with the bill. First and foremost, some farmers have said they don't think the minister has consulted enough with them on the contents of this bill, that the bill was pretty much launched in June without their knowing what was going to be in it. They feel that the meetings held last winter in only eight selected communities were not sufficient to gather their concerns. Some farmers have expressed concern that the minister may not have consulted enough on what actually constitutes a normal farm operation. I know many of the large farm groups have done their best to come up with a bill that should be satisfactory, but some individual farmers still say they would like to have a chance to comment.

On the other side of the fence, I have also heard from rural residents who don't run farms, and they have said that the legislation does not address their concerns. People like Diane Lalonde, Francis Hogan, Anita Frayne and Lawrence Hogan of the organization called PROTECT have contacted me with their concerns about farm operations.

There are also concerns that the wee change the minister is making to the name of the board, just adding the word "normal," will result in little unnecessary expense, things like printing new letterhead and business cards.

Now, perhaps more than ever, because the face of the province, municipal responsibilities and municipal boundaries are all drastically changing, it is essential that the people of Ontario have the opportunity to comment on what the government is doing. I say this because I know first hand that not all the people of Ontario are happy; it doesn't matter what you do. To comment specifically on agriculture, all farmers are not happy with the direction and the policies the agriculture ministry has implemented over the past two years.

Let me be frank. The current minister has done a lot of damage to rural Ontario: slashed the budget by 43%; closed field offices in Alexandria, Cayuga, Waterloo, Plantagenet, Embrun, Matheson, to name a few; eliminated services in the field; closed the Brighton veterinary college and wiped out other lab services and research programs; reduced support for agricultural colleges; cancelled the dairy audit program, reduced the municipal outlet drainage program, cut Foodland Ontario promotions, cancelled the Niagara tender fruit lands program, and that is only a partial list of cuts.

Let me be clear: Although the bill before us right now, Bill 146, may be a good thing for farmers, and I think it is, this is not to say that all farm legislation from this administration has been helpful to farmers. Since taking office just over two years ago, this minister has slashed the ag budget by 43%, and these are figures out of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. The minister has also cut many programs that were very helpful to farmers, which has had a damaging impact on rural Ontario.

As we move forward on this piece of legislation, I suggest that we move with caution and we ensure that it will actually benefit all of rural Ontario, farmers and non-farmers alike, and I'm sure there are lots in the agricultural community who will assist you and look forward to working with you.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

1950

Mr Hoy: I'm pleased to be able to speak on Bill 146 tonight, An Act to protect Farming and Food Production. Speaker, you would know that there have been rule changes and that this allows the government to ram through legislation like Bill 136. Today was the first day of public hearings, and I am on the committee that should be listening to the people tonight who would appear before that committee to speak on Bill 136. But this government, in its zeal to get legislation through quickly, can now introduce two bills per day, so I had to make a decision on where I should be this evening. As agriculture critic for our party, I decided that I must be here to speak to Bill 146.

This bill was a commitment that was made in the Harris revolution document. Indeed, the revolution document said they would do something with regard to farm practices protection.

Here we are going into the third year of the government's mandate and we are only at second reading of what was promised during the election. The Harris government has been quick on legislation to close hospitals, has been quick on legislation to create chaos in our classrooms, and throughout the education system has been quick to amalgamate, but they are very slow in regard to bringing forth something they actually promised in their Common Sense Revolution document, going into the third year of their mandate.

The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs has indeed been slow. We had a resolution not so long ago from the member for Huron encouraging the minister to work with farmers and farm organizations. His own member brought forth a resolution urging the minister to speak and talk with farm organizations. Tomorrow there's yet another resolution from the member for Halton North urging the government to recognize the importance of safe and cost-effective biotechnology and to support well-research science. So you see, the government has been moving slowly, in particular the minister, on agricultural programs.

The minister has been slow to act. His back bench, when he was moving quickly and making cuts to agriculture, said, "Slow down." He completely slowed down.

He was slow on ethanol. The original plan of this government was to cut ethanol funding, and then he was slow on information as to what would happen with that money.

He was slow in regard to the farm tax rebate: $175 million has been taken away from rural communities, and yet they do not know how that money will be replaced. The government talks about a fund of money, but rural municipalities tell me they don't think it's enough money. They think they will be in competition with large cities for those moneys, and the minister has not even made it clear how much of the $175 million lost in the farm tax rebate will be flowing back.

There were many people who attended the plowing match expecting the minister to announce his rural job strategy. He announced in the budget of May that there was a strategy that would provide for jobs for rural Ontarians, and he's slow to deliver on the money, and as I've said, he was slow in bringing forth Bill 146.

But now that it's here, some months ago at my home I was watching a popular television show called This Business of Farming. It's hosted by Ross Daly. I've appeared on the show myself. The minister talked about the need for this bill, the need for change, the changing dynamic of agriculture, the changing dynamic of rural Ontario, and the minister said he was going to consult with the opposition. To date, he hasn't done that. I don't know if he's talked to the third party, the NDP, but he simply has not talked to our caucus and consulted about this bill.

This government likes to pretend that it consults, always open to consultation, and on TV it probably appeared to be a very wise move. People probably believed the minister, that he was going to consult with the opposition, but I tell you, Speaker, he did not. It was a façade.

There is no doubt that agriculture has changed. Agriculture has always been in a state of change. We have museums that show the change in the evolution of agriculture here in Ontario. Some of these museums are quite local, and some of them provide information and are highlighted for the whole of the province.

Yes, agriculture has been changing. It has been changing over the 25 years I've farmed. I can remember yields that now would almost appear to be a failure, so yes, agriculture has changed.

I find it interesting that in the fall of 1984 the current minister voted against right-to-farm legislation. It was a private member's bill in the name of Mr Jack Riddell and the bill contained a section allowing the minister guidelines on normal farm practices. This section was to provide a mechanism to determine what was normal and what was abnormal. In 1984 Jack Riddell recognized the need for legislation such as this, but the current minister, Mr Villeneuve, was opposed to this, to giving the minister supreme powers to dictate how farmers should operate their business. Mr Villeneuve said, "Section 3 of the bill concerns me. It gives the minister absolute power over all of agriculture, which should not occur."

Interestingly enough, the minister now believes this provision should be added under his legislation. He likes it in his legislation, but not in anyone else's; not one with the foresight in 1984 to bring about what was then called right-to-farm legislation.

Section 10 of this bill allows the minister to unilaterally define the nature of farm operations that qualify under the earlier general definition of normal farm practices, including additional crops and activities, and limits expansions or clarification of activities described within the definitions. The existing legislation does not have this ability of the minister to specifically define agricultural practices, but Noble Villeneuve now feels he must give himself the kinds of powers he opposed when he was in opposition.

From the compendium notes to the bill: "The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs may issue directives in relation to agricultural operations or normal farm practices, or may adopt in whole or in part any directives, guidelines or policy statements prescribed under other pieces of legislation or by other ministries. Any decision made by the farm practices protection board must be consistent with the prescribed directives and statements. This provision should ensure that other government priorities and policies are maintained and respected."

You see that the minister is going to have his hand, through section 10, on the policy-making in agriculture, something that in 1984 he was opposed to.

I'm not one to very often, in fact very, very rarely, quote Brian Mulroney, but Brian Mulroney did say one thing that I think is apropos, and actually I've quoted this particular line on many occasions. It is the only line from Brian Mulroney I do quote, and that is that, "Only a donkey would not change his mind." So I'm pleased the minister has had a change of heart and sees the full wisdom of farm practices protection. Farmers have been asking for stronger protection, and changes within this industry such as those I've mentioned call for a new act.

Farms are increasing in size. Producers are specializing in their choice of what commodity they want to specialize in. Greenhouses is one of those areas. It's an expanding agriculture component here in Ontario. I know the minister has visited the greenhouses in southern Ontario. I too have visited those sites. I think he'll agree it's marvellous to see tomato plants, the vines, growing some 25- and 30-feet long, coming forth from a small site on the floor, a cement floor.

2000

I'm reminded of a story when some European friends dropped into my farm. they came by and visited the farm. Our farm was a cash crop operation and they said: "Where are your chickens? Where are your hogs? Where are your cows?" I said, "Well, agriculture here in Ontario has changed dramatically, perhaps over the last 50 years more so than any other time." I drove them four or five miles down the road and showed them a turkey farm and they were amazed at the size of the whole complex.

That wasn't so many years ago, but actually that turkey farm now would be considered very small. Five hundred-acre holdings at one time were considered to be large farms, but now we have many producers working thousands and thousands of acres and they have invested huge sums of money.

The investment in agriculture is indeed large and the risk is high. We know that market fluctuations exist and can make or break farm operations. We know the weather can wreak havoc on a farm. Just a few minutes of hail can take a beautiful farm and bring it almost to ruin, and on some occasions, particularly in the fruit industry, they don't come back from that; the particular trees will die. We need such strong safety nets to help farmers out through these risks they face.

Most farmers are good stewards of the land. After all, the land, the water and the air are important to their livelihood. Most farmers are indeed good stewards of the land and most farmers respect their neighbours, whether they be farm or non-farm. They respect that they live across the road, down the concession, and they respect that they are living in rural Ontario.

An example of this might be that some time ago farmers began to store more and more grains on their farms. As a matter of fact, it was encouraged. It was part of a marketing plan to store more and more of one's grains on the farms and, after that, farmers decided to dry more and more grains on their farms. With the technology that existed then, there were those who said that these grain dryers in particular were very loud, so farmers worked hard to satisfy their neighbours, farm and non-farm, by putting up barriers to block the sound. Then, as technology changed, they bought centrifugal fans and other types of drying systems that reduced noise.

Farmers have always tried to appease their neighbours. They've always tried to do what is best for the whole community and, I might add, this was done at some cost. Shifting from one type of grain drying or any other type of facility like it to another always costs money.

But in any society or within any one group within that society there may be a few who disregard those around them and the rights of those around them, and that is why we as legislators must bring forth law, regulation and guidelines, and for many situations, not just with agriculture but other situations. Examples could be those who choose to drive too fast on our highways, and we have laws for that; those who pass school buses when the lights are flashing, and we have laws for that.

Mr Crozier: We need stiffer laws.

Mr Hoy: We need stiffer laws for that and I've given the government some ideas on how to do that.

We need to develop a new Farming and Food Production Protection Act to meet the needs of an industry that is ever changing and one that I expect will continue to change, to meet the needs of new technologies and to meet the needs of the new demographics in rural Ontario.

The number of new farm operators in my immediate area, those new to the business in the last few years, is very small. I can recall a gentleman being in a building where there was a large crowd, and he looked around and after a bit he came to me and he said, "There are only two new young farmers in this whole crowd of agricultural entrepreneurs." There were only two. Further to that he said, "There are only two who don't have an off-farm job." There were only two. My point is that there are few new young farmers coming into agriculture, and at least in my vicinity that holds true.

We have an aging population within our farm community, and yearly there are farmers in Ontario who seek out a retirement. In the fact that we don't have new farmers coming along, it is other farmers that are buying out their operations or renting them. Thus, farms are getting bigger and bigger.

As those retiring farmers decide to stay on the farm a few years but eventually many of them move into a more urban setting, they actually seem to be trading places with the urban people. The urban people will come out and buy the retired farmer's home. The expanding farm had no need for that home; they had a home. They were just simply buying more farm operations. So now we have a situation with an aging farm population and many more urban people moving into rural ridings.

Of course, municipalities have told me that with the downloading the government is anticipating and the lack of clear definition of how the trade in downloading will occur monetarily, they believe they are going to have to go into a mode where they will provide more severances in the rural community, and now we will have, I expect, more urban and small urban communities shifting their populations into the rural area.

I was at a meeting where there was a group of wardens. They were concerned about the government's actions on downloading and property taxes. They said their tax rates could increase by 60% to 70%. You can see the pressure on local councils to look for revenues to offset tax increases of 60% and 70%. There were some wardens who said the tax increases may only be 40% or 35%. But can you imagine 60% and 70% and the pressure on municipalities and their councils to raise moneys to provide the services within their community?

We need to address legitimate complaints regarding farm practices, but we also must allow for normal farm practices to take place. We need to develop a dispute-resolution process to deal with those legitimate complaints and with those that are frivolous. There are occasions when personalities intervene into situations and it's difficult to resolve what is occurring. So we need a dispute resolution for both legitimate complaints and complaints that might be deemed to be frivolous.

This act has been expanded to include and bring about some help to the farm community in the issuance of complaints. It has been expanded to include odour, noise, dust, light, smoke and vibration. It is a required change and it is a welcome change.

I want to speak briefly about nutrient management plans. They are not part of the act, but as far as agriculture goes, they are something we need to discuss further and expand on. When I was at the International Plowing Match just recently, I stopped by the OMAFRA display and picked up a nutrient management book.

2010

Mr Crozier: Did you have to pay for it?

Mr Hoy: The member for Essex South asked, did I have to pay for it. This particular book I did not have to pay for. I assume the reason is because it's put out by both the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs and Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada. I don't know, but it's possible that the minister can't attach a user fee to something that the federal government is also involved in. I'm not certain of that, but to me that would make some sense.

In any regard, I picked up this book, which was given out freely to anyone who wanted it, and I bumped into the cash register right beside it. The farmers were telling me they could not believe that the OMAFRA site, for the first time in history at the International Plowing Match, had a cash register sitting on the desk for those who wanted to get information on agricultural issues. I guess that would be a user fee. To me, that's a user fee, and a user fee is something that the Premier of Ontario called a tax. The government wants to collect, initially, $1 million in user fees from the farm community.

For the people in northern Ontario who don't have the capability to access the Internet, their only other alternative is to get publications like the one I hold in my hand. So they are penalized; they have to pay for it. They can't use the Internet because they don't have the capability. Many areas have party lines and it's not feasible, it's not there, so they rely on this exclusively.

When I had the opportunity to look at this book, and I'm not going to read it all, there is some valuable information in it in regard to nutrient management. I just want to quote: "Nutrients retained on your farm reduce both the risk of damage to the environment and the cost of what might otherwise have been spent on fertilizers." It sounds like good information. I think the minister and the ministry should embark on a plan to enhance nutrient management; to have persons made more aware of the opportunities that exist; to provide advice, and certainly I would hope at no cost, to the farmers of Ontario to assist them. Let's not have a cash register sitting at OMAFRA. I think we must return to this issue of nutrient management at some point in time.

The new act will address changing farms, technology, demographics, and we need this act because we have a change in local governance.

Mr Wildman: Who brought that on?

Mr Hoy: The member asked who brought that on. The Mike Harris government brought that on.

The rural and urban mix is what many people refer to as amalgamation. Here in Ontario, and particularly within my riding of Essex-Kent, the county of Kent has been amalgamated into one municipality. A commissioner was brought in and said, "This is what will happen to what was formerly known as Chatham and the county of Kent." It's interesting to note that the commissioner gave the people two options as to what they could choose, and only one municipality in 22 picked the option that the commissioner was offering in Kent county.

What we had was a governance that at one time could be described as rural and another governance that one could describe as urban, and now we have a governance that is a combination of both. My riding, across both Essex and Kent counties, is about 90 miles long and it doesn't have a population of more than 4,500 people centred in any one village or town. Clearly there are parts of my riding in Kent county that have populations of less than 4,500 people, and it diminishes from there as we get into the farther reaches of the rural community, but now they are put together with a larger municipality.

Rural people are worried and concerned about this amalgamation. They fear that the urban population, which quite clearly has the voting power and has more people who are bending their ear, will bring about a problem in regard to frivolous complaints to Bill 146. Also, they are fearful that over time even those small towns and villages will have the opportunity, potentially, to elect members of council. They're worried that those who live out in the farther reaches of the rural community will not have an opportunity to sit on local council because of the concentration of voters, even within a ward system. There's a concern in rural Ontario about what is commonly known as the rural-urban mix and amalgamation.

Bill 146 is not as extensive as an OFA model that was provided to the minister. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture, in its wisdom, showed the minister a model for Bill 146. In regard to definitions, the OFA provided an expanded view, in most cases, of what the minister has put within Bill 146.

For example, the OFA mentions bird-bangers. I remember that not so long ago there was a debate, and a rather heated debate, about the use of bird-bangers. They are required to keep birds from migrating into fruit crops in particular and are designed to scare them away. The history of this is interesting in that while the urban people or those who came from an urban setting into a rural community found these to be disruptive, the farming community tried to assist. The farmers would change the direction of these noisemakers or, as technology changed and capabilities changed, they had these loud noises going off in rotation. So the farm community has always responded to complaints by others, and the OFA mentioned these particular devices.

The OFA model provides an extensive definition of "farmer," something I think the minister could have taken more notice of. Past history has had us believe that the definition of "farmer" could be tied to one's gross income, but in this case I'm not certain that gross income provides for a clear definition of "farmer" within an act that will be imparted to a quasi-judicial board. I think it might be wise for the minister to have a second look at the definition of "farmer."

2020

Within its bill, the OFA definition of "normal farm practices" included the wording "land zoned for agriculture." I know that when people are talking about certain disruptions or perceived disruptions in the agricultural community, the immediate response is, "It's zoned agricultural; therefore, these activities can indeed take place," notwithstanding that the activity must be a normal farm practice, but I think by stating that the land was zoned agricultural provides a certain comfort level to all parties. I've had urban persons say: "Of course, he or she can do that on that piece of land. It's zoned agricultural." They understand that. Of course, the agricultural community understands that all too well.

The major difference in the makeup of the board between the minister's bill and the OFA model is centred around membership. The federation of agriculture would like and suggests that six members be selected by the minister from a list of names nominated by farm organizations in the province. There are other differences between the two models, but this is the most striking. The OFA did not say that they had to come from within their organization. They said nominated persons should come from within farm organizations, and I think that makes good sense. It would be an excellent idea to have persons who understand the issues nominated from the farm community and put forth by farm organizations. That doesn't preclude the fact that the minister could make other appointments from maybe a broader spectrum; perhaps from within the range of municipalities, someone with experience at the municipal level, as a suggestion.

Thus the difference in the number of board members may not be all that significant, but how they are selected could be very important. The differences between the two bills on numbers of persons on the board would also affect the suggestion of quorum that the OFA had put forth. But I think those differences of quorum etc can be worked out. I think the significant situation here is who will be on that board.

The Farm Practices Protection Board will decide what is normal. That's their first obligation. They will decide what is normal farm practice and we will need informed persons to know what is normal and what is abnormal. Clearly we cannot have anyone on that board who is confused as to what is normal.

Once we've decided what is a normal farm practice, we have the issue of compliance. We need to have strong compliance once a decision is made by this board. I want to talk about a situation that occurred in my riding. We had an individual who deemed in his mind that it would be proper to burn manure. He burned manure. This created an odour that I have to say I've never been around. It was awful, apparently. This situation occurred and the prevailing winds took this smoke, first of all, and the odour towards his neighbours. They suffered from sore throat, sore eyes. It was taken to the board and was deemed not to be a normal farm practice; that's what the board said. Herein lies a greater problem.

The Ministry of Environment has been investigating and trying to cease this burning of manure for almost two years. We have a situation where the board has said, "This is not normal," and the people who were complainants had a valid case, and we don't have any enforcement. Maybe part of that is because in my region the Ministry of Environment has been slashed. I know the people I talked to in regard to this case are gone; they're not there any more. The municipality got involved, their lawyer got involved. The MOE was involved, but to date nothing has happened.

This isn't the only case within my riding. It might be the most graphic in terms of the nuisance and it may be one that is not likely to occur again in Ontario. But in other situations in my riding when people call the Ministry of Environment to look into cases, they either don't do it at all or they're very slow and the occurrence of the nuisance has ceased. The ministry arrives too late and what was occurring has now passed.

If we're going to have a situation where rural and urban residents can live in harmony, and in most cases they do, and we have a board that says, "This is not normal," then we have to have compliance and enforcement. The board can dismiss a case if it is normal farm practice. The board can order farmers to cease a practice if it is not normal. The board can order the farmer to modify the situation. I think this is a good component of what the board may order. It may be that the farmer or farm in question really didn't realize that they were causing such a great nuisance. It may be that the farm did not understand that this was wrong. With new technologies comes a new definition of what is normal. It could be that the farmer did not understand that what he was doing was causing someone else some grief. So I think it's good that the board can ask the farmer to modify.

Bill 146 states, "No municipal bylaw applies to restrict a normal farm practice carried on as part of an agricultural operation." This is something that the broader community has been grappling with for some time. Municipal bylaw changes are occurring throughout Ontario in regard to situations that exist. The bill says, "No municipal bylaw applies to restrict a normal farm practice carried on as part of an agricultural operation." Municipalities have had requests for such bylaws, so now we have something in place that can adjudicate and have experts provide information on what is normal. I think that because of the rural-urban mix in the amalgamations that are going on, this board is going to be very busy as municipalities try to seek out from the government, from this board, what is normal.

I know in Kent county there are 49 working groups looking at all manner of things, including bylaws. I think the request for information on what is normal is going to be coming towards the government at a rapid pace and in large degree — quantities of requests.

2030

Notice of hearing: It states within the bill that one who is not a party to the hearing may be given notice. Those living in a municipality may not have a direct interest in what is occurring in the far southwest corner, but to the whole of the municipality, now that we've made it one municipality — not 21, but one — will want to know what is occurring in a particular ward that would affect the whole of the municipality.

There was a situation at one time where councillors at the local level dealt with a great many things and that was rather localized. Surely they had bylaws to look after and respect the environment and whatever other manner of legislation the Ontario government had. There's an effort here to make everyone aware that a hearing is being held.

What we have here is a situation where there may be a complaint in the southwest corner of a municipality, just to use an example, and there is going to be a bylaw change that affects the whole of the municipality, and it may be unique to one area. It may never have the opportunity for occurrence elsewhere.

The government and the ministers talked about an awareness campaign. We know that hasn't started yet. This is designed to notify those in the rural communities of what rural life may be, I think, through what I've read from the minister, who is looking for partners in this exercise, and I expect that those partners will be willing to take part.

Perhaps more important is the government's role to tell the people what the laws are and what the situations are that exist within Ontario. Perhaps it is the government's role to provide those informations. After all, it is their act. It is their board. It is their right to allow appeals to the board. As we talk about appeals, let me say that in a great many pieces of legislation this government has brought forth, there is no right of appeal. I am pleased to see that in this act there is an allowance for appeals. That is very good.

I want to spend a moment talking about the agricultural cuts that have occurred here in Ontario. We've had cuts to agriculture of $75 million. In the last budget the minister said he had added $5 million back in, and that's correct, so instead of having a cut of $81 million, we're looking at $75 million or $76 million. But then he went on to say, later in the day and in days to come, that he wanted to have user fees of at least $1 million, and that was just the beginning.

I remind the members that the Premier of this province said a user fee is simply a tax. Mike Harris said that a user fee is simply a tax. Now there are user fees for such things as information for beginning, part-time farmers. I was talking about the fact that there seemed to be no new farmers. Here the government is saying, "Well, if you're interested in this and you want to assist us in creating jobs for the province and you want to assist us in increasing those exports and you want to increase the tax base within your local community and you want information on being a beginning farmer, by Jove you can have it but it's going to cost you."

Farmers want to be able to manage those risks that I mentioned before. They want to be able to manage commodity markets, the times of year to sell, and all other matters that pertain to any business. If the government truly wants the agricultural community to thrive, and to help them increase exports and create jobs, why on earth would they charge farmers for a guide to farm money matters? They decided, "We're going to charge you now." Agricultural software is now being charged for and it is at a higher price — not only for publications that are to help farmers in one's mind, how to do one's business, but there are also charges for such things that come under what would be deemed as a safety feature. The government is going to charge for a video on silo safety. They're everywhere with charges now. It doesn't matter if you're trying to increase your knowledge of agriculture. It doesn't matter if you want to protect yourself against injury, maybe even death. The government says, "We're going to charge you for it."

I think that many members in this House would be surprised to know that the largest crop in Ontario is actually forage. Others might have picked corn, soybeans, wheat, maybe others would have picked tomatoes, others might have picked something else, but that is the largest crop in Ontario. The soil and crop publications the government used to provide at no cost are now being charged for. They're charging throughout for the publications that they used to put forth —

At the plowing match people were coming to me, because I was there every day, and they said, "Can you believe this cash register at the desk of the OMAFRA building?" They were going around, imitating that commercial we used to see on TV, going "ker-ching, ker-ching," and they knew that the minister must have been smiling, because I would presume the cash register was ringing or he would have gotten rid of it. It was an amazing thing to see that there.

Interjections.

Mr Hoy: We must have hit a nerve, because all of a sudden the members have woken up. I'm glad to see they're awake. I'm glad to see they're listening. It's almost like they've had a cold drink of water on a sore tooth or something over there.

I also want to talk about what is happening in rural Ontario as it pertains to highways. This government has downloaded on to municipalities and rural Ontario in the main what was known as provincial highways to the tune of $225 million. I was really struck when the minister got up and said they don't have any provincial significance. What a slap in the face of rural Ontario to tell them that the roads they drive daily are not of provincial significance. Can you imagine?

The minister, on that side of the House, said that. He probably didn't give it enough thought, that the produce the Minister of Agriculture is so proud of — and I am as well — moves across these roads every day to the 400-series highways and is brought here to Toronto and other sites in Ontario for processing, distribution, sales, and they are finally consumed by the people of Ontario. He says they are not of provincial significance.

The rural people I talk to are very concerned. As a matter of fact, they came to me and said, "Pat, when do you think that these roads will turn to gravel roads and will no longer have the nice hard top that is on them?" They're concerned about that. They are very concerned about the $225 million that is missing, they're worried about the $175 million from the farm tax rebate and they're worried about the $667 million of municipal support grants that are also missing. This is rural Ontario. I have those same concerns as a constituent in my riding.

2040

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Questions or comments?

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): I want to acknowledge with thanks the member for Essex-Kent for his comments with respect to this bill. I think he has provided some enlightenment for a lot of people who live in the cities, like myself, who are unfamiliar with what is considered normal farm practices. We acknowledge the importance of production by farmers in our communities because, even though we may not be involved in farming activities, we certainly all enjoy eating the products of their labours.

I'm not really too familiar with the production of agricultural crops, the production of eggs, cream and milk and many of the other things that are referred to in this bill. But we know that some of the things that are considered, by definition in this bill, as normal farm practices are going to be adjudicated by what is referred to as a Normal Farm Practices Protection Board. That is where I have some concern about what this government's agenda is. We've seen time and time again that this is a government that's moving too far, too fast, oftentimes in the wrong direction.

Where is this board going to get the resources to make some of these adjudications? That's what my concern is. I want to make sure they have the resources to make those adjudications. The member says that the board is going to be busy; they're going to need that and we want to ensure that farmers aren't going to be subject to user fees in order to do this.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: I want to thank my colleagues from Cornwall and Essex-Kent for their contributions. They leave me a little puzzled because they were in favour, but I wonder if they really are in favour. They have been known to flip and flop a bit in the past. I found it interesting that both my colleagues were at the OMAFRA booth at the plowing match and that they took note of the excellent literature that was there. I walked by a tent at the plowing match and it had Liberal T-shirts for sale. That's basically all they had.

Mr Hoy: They were not for sale.

Mr Crozier: They were not for sale.

Mr Hoy: You have it all wrong.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: "They were not for sale." There's the old Liberal giveaway again and again. The farm tax rebate: I found it interesting that the honourable member commented on that, because for all of the years of the Liberal reign I think the farm tax rebate got more farmers against the Liberal Party than any other. We now know where we're going with the farm tax rebate. The farm land and buildings are taxed at 25%, the rural residence and one acre at 100%, and the government of Ontario will be reinvesting in those municipalities.

Again, he spoke of ethanol. I want to remind him that when Lyn McLeod was the Minister of Energy, I wrote to her and asked her to support the ethanol industry and Lyn McLeod said, "No, it's not economical." I still have that correspondence.

Consultation: We consulted with 850 farmers and you were certainly welcome to make your presentation if you so desired.

Mr Crozier: It's a pleasure for me to respond to the comments from my colleagues from Cornwall and from Essex-Kent. I think they did a fine job in pointing out some of the things where this government isn't necessarily the friend of agriculture. But they pointed out that we support this bill and I am pleased that they did. If we weren't under these draconian rules we have now, I would have had the opportunity to get up for 30 minutes this evening and extol the virtues of Essex county.

In that vein, I only have about a minute and 20 seconds. In Essex county we have over 6,000 jobs that are created through agriculture and we're proud of it: $40 million in wages. I know you'd be interested to know the economic contribution made in Essex county alone, which happens to be greater than the three Atlantic provinces: field crops, $92.7 million in Essex county; processing vegetables, $18.7 million; fresh vegetables $16.6 million —

Hon Mr Villeneuve: Are you supporting me on this? Are you supporting the bill?

Mr Crozier: If you would have listened to me about 15 seconds ago, I said I'm proud we are — fresh vegetables, $16.6 million; fruit, $7.8 million; greenhouse crops, $85 million. We have the fastest-growing, largest greenhouse area in North America. We're proud of it and it's right there in Essex county. We know what agriculture contributes to this province. We'd appreciate it if you'd just give us those highways back so we can get our products out to the rest of Ontario.

Mr Len Wood: I wanted to have an opportunity to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture as to the reasons why he wanted to bring forward this bill so quickly and get it into law, or get it into second reading, before the dumping and downloading that is taking place.

I know the member commented on this briefly, but it's something we might hear more about. Why would they want to eliminate a lot of rural politicians at the municipal level and get this bill through? There would be less voice out in those areas while they are having to pay the extra cost of everything that Mike Harris is dumping and downloading on to the people in rural and urban Ontario.

I've learned a lot from this discussion that's going on today. Originally being the son of a farmer in Perth county, I know a little bit about farming. There are concerns out there in the farming community as the urban areas move into those areas. I still have a sister and some cousins who are involved in farming. But there is a concern out there that the Mike Harris government is moving too fast, moving in the wrong direction and they're hurting a lot of people in Ontario.

The concern is when you take away the rural voice through restructuring and dumping and downloading. Chatham-Kent is a good example, where they've eliminated all the rural voices that used to be in that particular county. All the other counties are going to end up with the same thing. I'm sure that Perth county is concerned that the rural voice is being lost there as well. I have relatives and friends in those areas who have been speaking to me about their concerns, which are being talked about here today. I'm looking forward to further debate from other people.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Essex-Kent has two minutes to respond.

2050

Mr Hoy: I appreciate the comments of the members over the last few moments. I want to remind the minister that we supported ethanol. The federal government provided many dollars towards ethanol. They have an ethanol plan for all of Canada. One should remember that.

We also, as a government, provided money to young farmers at one time to give them a boost, to give them help. You know it's a capital-intensive business. As a matter of fact, I've heard you say that it costs a lot to get into farming and maintain a farm. You're right, and it is big business.

I just want to spend one more moment to try and have members opposite understand what the rural community is feeling as far as downloading goes. I mentioned some other concerns: highways, municipal support grants, farm tax rebate. Policing is another one.

The Solicitor General at one time called estimates put forth for Kent county of $220 per household as extreme. He said: "That's extreme. It's not going to happen. That's way out of sight." Indeed it is a lot of money, but at the end of the day, when it came forward, it was more than even that; it was more than $220 per household. The original estimates are now $272.51 per household.

I think the government needs to recognize more fully the role that rural Ontario plays and the capabilities they have to maintain the structures that are around them.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate.

Mr Wildman: I'd like to first ask for unanimous consent to defer the leadoff for our caucus on this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? It is agreed.

Mr Wildman: I appreciate the cooperation of my colleagues in the House. I'm pleased to be able to participate in this debate, as I have in previous debates about farm practices. I remember going back to when my good friend Ron McNeil represented Elgin county in this House and he brought forward legislation to protect farm practices in this province. I want to indicate clearly that our caucus is in support of this legislation. We will be raising a number of concerns, but that doesn't mean we are in any way denigrating the efforts of the minister to respond to the requests of the agricultural community to indeed protect their normal business practices in a way that will make it possible for them to continue to flourish in the province and to provide the products that are so important to the economy of this province and to all of us as consumers.

We have to look at this bill in the context of what the government is doing in rural Ontario. I am very concerned about the overall approach of the — I'm a little disturbed by the clock there. Are you just changing the clock? We've deferred the leadoff.

The Acting Speaker: Yes.

Mr Wildman: I'm concerned about what the government is doing in rural Ontario and the suggestion that this bill, which is entitled An Act to protect Farming and Food Production, ignores the attack that this government has levelled on rural Ontario and the effects this is having on rural residents, whether they be farmers or other business people who provide services and products to farmers in small-town Ontario.

This indeed is quite a surprise to me, actually. As someone who has served in this House for a good many years and has observed governments of all political stripes, I'm surprised that this government, which purports to represent the farm community, would in fact have such a concerted attack on rural Ontario. There is no indication in this legislation that this government is determined to protect family farms at all, particularly in the context of the other things this government is doing.

I think the effort to protect normal farm practices, while laudable, is far outweighed by the other efforts that this government is taking to attack farmers and other rural residents. We've heard mention of the changes to the farm tax rebate. The minister is quite correct when he says that farmers now will pay 25% of the property taxation on their farm land.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: And the buildings.

Mr Wildman: And the buildings, and they will pay 100% on the residential property around that. But what this means of course is that while the provincial government has paid the $170 million to $175 million in the past, this now is being downloaded to the rural municipalities; $175 million is suddenly going to be the responsibility of the rural municipality, and mark my words, the taxes on that rural residence and the land immediately around it are going to go sky-high as a result of this and the other downloading that the provincial government is loading on the rural municipalities in this province.

At the same time, the government is amalgamating and restructuring municipalities and school boards and hospitals and other services in rural Ontario. Suddenly we are going to see a situation where rural residents are going to have far fewer municipal and provincial representatives who will speak for them and instead we're going to see situations like we now have in Chatham-Kent, where this government has imposed amalgamation on the communities, has moved from 21 municipalities to one municipality that inevitably is going to be dominated by the rural centre. I think my friend from Essex talked about that. How is it that a bill that is simply going to protect, as it should, normal farm practices is also going to protect those farm businesses from the inevitable domination of non-farm people in these larger municipalities on their rural governments?

The same is happening with school boards. Suddenly we have enormous school boards that are inevitably going to be dominated by the urban parts of those communities, and the rural people are going to lose their voice over the education of their kids. How on earth can the minister, who's not just responsible for the agricultural and food industries but also for rural affairs, sit by and allow this kind of attack on rural Ontario? I don't understand it.

What other kinds of things do we have happening? We have the enormous downloading of services. Some people have talked about the transfer of rural highways to rural municipalities. We've also seen, as has been mentioned, the requirement now for rural municipalities to pay for Ontario Provincial Police services. Some of them have paid for it in the past, but now all of them are going to have to pay. I heard one of the members talk about $220 per household as something onerous in his municipality. Let me tell you, in my part of Ontario it's a lot higher than that. The average is between $400 and $450 a household in rural northern Ontario. In one municipality, the township of Day and Bright Additional, the bill estimate from the OPP is $750 per household. The total bill from the OPP is more than the total municipal budget, excluding education, was in 1996. That's what this government is doing to the rural residents of this province.

They can say they are responding to the requests of the farm organizations like the Ontario Federation of Agriculture or the Christian Farmers Federation of Ontario through this bill, and they are, but at the same time they're sticking their hands in the pockets of those people and they're taking a lot of money away from rural Ontario and restructuring the province in such a way that the rural voice will not be properly heard in the municipal governments across the rural parts of our province. I think this is most unfortunate.

This government is marginalizing the rural and farm voice in this province. There's a telling quote in the July 15, 1997, issue of Farm and Country magazine, where it says:

"Villeneuve hopes the act will go to second reading when the Legislature resumes sitting and wants the legislation passed before restructuring of rural municipalities begins in 1998.

"'In many instances, the rural voice will be diminished to some degree in our rural municipalities so this is a way to bring balance to the system,' Villeneuve says."

Right there we have an admission by this minister who is responsible for rural Ontario that his government is diminishing the rural voice in the municipalities of rural Ontario. How can the minister justify that? How can a government that claims to represent rural Ontario have a minister who has that responsibility get up and be quoted in a major farm magazine saying, "The rural voice is going to be diminished and that's why we need this kind of legislation"? How can you justify that?

2100

Basically, the minister is admitting that the Harris government, because of its sweeping changes — cuts in services and programs without any thought about what the long-term effects will be on the people they claim to represent — is hurting the people who live in rural Ontario, so he brings forward this legislation in response to the request of the farm organizations.

I ask my friend from Chatham-Kent, what effect is this legislation going to have in protecting the rural voice in Chatham-Kent once that amalgamation is forced through by this government? Frankly, I don't think it's going to give any protection. If 21 or 22 rural municipalities are amalgamated into one municipality, I don't think there's any guarantee that the farmers' interests are going to be protected one iota, even if we pass this bill. I don't think so and frankly I don't think the people in those rural municipalities think so either. When the dust settles from the government decision to amalgamate Chatham-Kent, we'll see how many small communities still have a voice in the municipal government. I don't think very many will at all.

We've also had the arguments in this House and the objections of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture over the cut in the number of rural constituencies represented here in this House. This minister stood by, despite his record in opposition of saying these constituencies must be protected.

We have a provincial government whose actions have had a profound effect on the lives of the people of Ontario, particularly in rural Ontario, through cuts in health care and education and increases in taxation. We have a government that has taken away the right of representation of a huge segment of Ontario. The people who live and work in rural Ontario, on the farms and in the other small businesses in rural and small-town Ontario, are being hit by this government's demand that bigger is better.

The legislation expands the list of disturbances reflected by the nature of local complaints family farms have been subjected to over the last 10 years. It's important to recognize that there haven't been a lot of hearings in the last two years. One of the reasons for that is that under the old legislation, the ministry staff and the board were able to settle a lot of problems before they actually went to hearings. Along with the work of the Ministry of Environment and Energy and the Ministry of Natural Resources, the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs has been able to deal with 700 to 800 complaints a year about farm practices. They haven't had to go to too many hearings, and I think this will probably be the case under the new legislation as well.

But what is happening in these ministries is alarming. We've seen enormous cuts of about 50% to both the Ministry of Environment and Energy and the Ministry of Natural Resources staff. It's going to be very difficult for these ministries to enforce the decisions under this new piece of legislation. Their budgets have been cut substantially. Their local offices have been closed. The people who used to serve farm families and their communities in these ministries are no longer there because of this government's cuts.

The bill includes an expanded definition of an agricultural operation. The minister mentioned a number of the new operations. I welcome that, and I understand the list can be added to by regulation. These additions reflect the current types of farm operations in Ontario. Bt as I said earlier, I don't think it really deals with the issue of protecting the family farm because of the other cuts and downloading that this government is carrying on in rural Ontario.

This government has systematically deprived Ontario's rural communities and family farms of the support and resources they have come to expect from the provincial government in terms of protecting their environment, their businesses and their way of life, and it's completely irresponsible for this government to carry on this way. The government is not considering the great harm they're causing these communities. There are very broad definitions in the bill, and when you have that, combined with the cuts in staff and program cuts in the various ministries, along with the municipal download, this government has weakened its support of rural communities and family farms right across this province.

Some rural community groups and family farms have argued that the change in the definition of a "normal farm practice" to include "acceptable" might give large corporate farms the same kind of protection as the family farm. I'd like the minister to respond to that concern. I hope he's listening, because I am a little concerned about that. Will this include the practices of corporate factory farms as normal farm practices on the list? I hope he is not contemplating — I don't think he is — the industrialization of agriculture. I hope his desire to protect the economy and the environment of rural, non-farm residents, as well as family farms, will be emphasized in the way the regulations are set under this bill.

The Harris government has cut environmental services, programs and inspections and cancelled the Clean Up Rural Beaches program, the CURB program, which guaranteed that rural residents and family farms, who work hard to be good stewards of their land, will have their environment and water supplies unharmed and their health protected. I don't understand how this government can justify the killing of the CURB program. We know the effect of rural farm runoff in some lakes and rivers in the province. Farmers have expressed concern about it. Those lakes and rivers often empty out into Lake Huron, and the effect that may have on the Great Lakes is very important. I hope particularly that in protecting the family farm and the environment, we're not going to allow for the expansion of factory farming in this province.

Both the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and the Christian Farm Federation of Ontario have said that Bill 146 is not an alternative to, nor could it ever replace, solid provincial agricultural land use legislation. I think this is a cue for the minister and his government to sit down and listen to the farmers in the province, who are concerned about protecting rural farm land, who wish to keep family farms in family hands for future generations. We've got to have good rural land use planning in this province. I don't understand why this government would not have continued the Niagara tender fruit lands program that was instituted by our government, which was cancelled by this government. I think it's time for the minister and the government to start listening to the farmers in this province, who say we have to address the pressures that are leading to so much development on the good farm land we have in the province, particularly the effect this is having on the future of farming across Ontario.

Although this particular bill is helpful to family farms that have subdivisions springing up around their operations and may be the constant target of complaints, I think we have to look at it in the context of what is happening in rural Ontario and what this government is doing.

2110

The proposed bill is similar to legislation in other provinces and the United States. It will protect farmers from vexatious and nuisance complaints which create great tensions between rural neighbours. But there are a number of things that Bill 146 will not do. It will not provide the kinds of supports farmers and rural residents have in other jurisdictions that also have right-to-farm legislation — supports like a solid land use policy for agricultural land and rights to representation at the local and provincial levels so that the rural voice is not diminished, as the minister says it will be.

The bill does not protect farmers and rural residents from problems caused by the Harris government's changes to environmental and health legislation, the cutbacks in inspection staff, program cuts or weakened provincial land use guidelines. It does not protect rural residents from increased property taxes which will result from the downloading that this government is doing across the province and that is particularly affecting rural Ontario. It does not guarantee that farmers' property taxes on their homes will not be increased as a result of that download. It does not give back the protection taken away by the actions of this government, and without solid land use legislation the family farm is threatened in this province.

The Acting Speaker: Comments or questions?

Hon Mr Villeneuve: I want to thank my colleague from Algoma, who has been extremely supportive of previous bills to protect farming and food production. I'm not sure where he is tonight. He didn't quite say whether he was —

Mr Wildman: I said I supported it.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: He's a supporter. Well, he took a while to get on track. He was talking about some of the major changes that were promised by his government. Tax reform was promised by the previous NDP government, but the delivery of that promise never did occur. This government is delivering. This government is picking up $2.5 billion of education costs from the tax bill.

Yes, there is a transfer of responsibilities, where those responsibilities really should be: close to the people who receive those services.

Yes, the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs — the "Rural Affairs" portion was tacked on by the previous government, but no funding. The funding was being cut back. There will be funding through the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs for community reinvestment programs to those communities where, as the honourable member mentioned, the rural voice has possibly been diminished. That's only normal when you amalgamate, because farms are large acreages.

Mr Wildman: Why are you doing that then?

Hon Mr Villeneuve: Because we were left with an $11.2-billion annual deficit. That's a very good reason. There was $50 billion more in debts when you left from the time you came in. Those are the reasons we have to do this. It is tough medicine; however, it's a situation that had to be corrected. The people of Ontario told Mike Harris and his newly elected government, "You had better keep your promises." We're in the process of doing that.

Tax reform: The farm tax rebate is being set on a permanent basis. A community reinvestment fund will look after those municipalities.

Mr Crozier: There are two significant points I'd like to make. The minister just said the farm tax rebate is being put on —

Hon Mr Villeneuve: You're not talking about what I said; it's about what Wildman said.

Mr Crozier: Is it all right with you, Speaker? I really don't listen to the minister. Is it all right with you? Thank you.

The minister says the farm tax rebate is being put on a permanent basis. The provincial government used to pay that $170 million. Certainly they've put it in legislation that it's permanent. What the rural municipalities don't know is where they are going to make up now that $170 million that they're going to have to pay. It's awfully nice of the minister to put one hand out like this, but you've always got to watch the other hand, because it's in your back pocket.

Second, my colleague from Essex-Kent made a point earlier that in the downloading of highways that are considered no longer to be provincially significant, most rural farm businesses are now not going to be able to access a provincial highway. They're going to have to pay for that. I guess the produce that comes off the farms isn't provincially significant.

It's interesting to note, as a matter of fact, that this applies to industry. The largest industry in Essex county outside of the city of Windsor, is the H.J. Heinz Co. Because of downloading, even an industry the size of the H.J. Heinz Co won't be on a provincial highway. Someone — not me — might suggest that the H.J. Heinz Co, which processes agricultural products, isn't significant. therefore we can put them onto a county road. I don't like that kind of downloading.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I was asked, and I might have told you, even if I wasn't, that it's been tradition that comments and questions be addressed to the person that has finished speaking.

Mr Crozier: On a point of order, Speaker: With reference to your tradition, almost all afternoon, government members were talking about whether speeches were made to a particular bill or not. Well, tradition also is that there's a fair amount of latitude.

The Acting Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order.

Mr Lessard: I want to acknowledge with thanks the comments that were made by my colleague with respect to how supportive he is of farming and the farm community and how he has expressed the concerns of many people who are involved in that industry. He talked about the impact of downloading of provincial responsibilities on our rural municipalities, and the impact that may have on taxes in those communities, how that may lead to increased taxes, and how that may be impacted as well by the transferring of responsibilities for rural roadways, provincial highways on to municipalities as well.

He also made comments about how rural voices are not going to be heard. That's very significant because we know that because of the amalgamation of municipalities and the expansion of urban municipalities out into the counties, the forcing of the cities on to counties, it's going to be more important than ever for rural voices to be heard.

The minister has indicated that he wants this legislation passed before the restructuring of rural municipalities begins in 1998. The member has indicated why he's concerned with that happening, because that's going to have a negative impact on taxation and the diminishing of those rural voices. He's also mentioned the impact of some of the cuts to the Ministry of Environment and Energy and how that's going to diminish their impact on being able to enforce some of these regulations as well.

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I'd like to respond to the member for Algoma, although I will say that I listened to much of his speech and he spoke very little with respect to Bill 146.

Mr Len Wood: He was right on target.

Mr Tilson: Well, he expressed some concerns about agriculture, and I suppose it's fair to do that, although we're here to talk about Bill 146. Comments were made by several of the members with respect to the farm tax rebate. This is something farmers have been asking for for years, to solve this issue of this bureaucracy. It went through your government, member for Algoma. I know it was dealt with by your cabinet, I know it was dealt with by the Liberal cabinet, and they never solved that issue. People can grumble about how this is being passed and how it's going to be dealt with by certain municipalities, but this is what the farmers have asked for, so I must congratulate the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs for bringing forward this solution to something that has been asked for by farmers for years.

Bill 146, of course, is a commitment that being made by the Conservative government. It was promised during the last election and the minister is fulfilling that promise to deliver a stronger and more effective Farm Practices Protection Act to ensure that farmers have the freedom to farm responsibly, to boost the economy and create jobs while being environmentally responsible.

This isn't the first time this type of legislation has occurred. I think it was first passed in 1988. It's been some time since this legislation has been reviewed. I congratulate the minister for bringing that.

2120

Mr Wildman: Ronnie McNeil brought in the right-to-farm bill.

Mr Tilson: Well, The original Farm Practices Protection Act was passed in 1988. I congratulate the minister for bringing it forward.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Algoma has two minutes to respond.

Mr Wildman: I'd like to thank my colleagues from Stormont, Dundas, Glengarry and East Grenville — that's just one of them — Essex South, Windsor-Riverside and Dufferin-Peel for participating and commenting on my remarks. I did say at the outset that we support this legislation, and as the minister acknowledged, going back to Ronnie McNeil's intervention. I supported these kinds of bills throughout my time in this place.

I fully understand the need for them. I live in a rural area; I grew up in a rural area. My neighbour who has a dairy farm from time to time carries out practices that affect the ambience of my home. I fully understand that. We're good neighbours, we get along well and he helps me out from time to time. I understand the need for him to be able to get his work done and to do it well and to be able to produce the milk that is so important for all of us in our economy and for human health.

I put it in the context, though, of the restructuring this government is imposing on rural Ontario. The minister himself said, "There's going to be a diminishing of the rural voice in the province." That's one of the reasons he put forward the need for this legislation. I don't think it's necessary for us to have a diminishing of the rural voice; it's unfortunate that's happening.

I talked about the problems of downloading; the imposition of the cost of rural highways and the OPP on rural communities and what this is going to mean; the imposition of the $170 million farm tax rebate cost to the municipalities. The fact is that farmers and other rural residents are going to see the taxes on their rural residences go sky high because of what this government is doing.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mrs Helen Johns (Huron): It's a pleasure to speak today about Bill 146. Bill 146 is one of the most important bills with respect to my riding of Huron county. I'd first like to take a minute and thank the minister for his commitment to rural Ontario. He, above any of the ministers, has been in my riding two or three times already touring rural farm areas, touring my riding, to ensure that the things he puts into place, and that affect my riding, are well considered. I'd like to thank him first for that commitment to my county and to rural Ontario.

I'd also like to say that rural Ontario has many different attributes to it than we see in urban Ontario. We need to have an ability to let agriculture grow in our ridings. Agriculture is the leading employer in my riding. In fact my Ontario Federation of Agriculture has gone so far as to do a study that talks about all the spinoffs and all the factors that are affected by agriculture in my riding. Believe me, without agriculture in Huron county, we would be in very desperate situations.

As a result of that, the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs has recognized that Huron county needs to be heard. In fact, when they were going out on their consultations — I heard the parliamentary assistant talk earlier about all the places they went to and he didn't mention Huron county — I want to say that after they were all done, Huron county raised enough of a little fuss that the member for Lambton came in and consulted with our people too. So I have to say to Marcel Beaubien that he did a wonderful job and we certainly appreciate that.

That was as a result of Henry Boot, who is the president of my Ontario Federation of Agriculture, feeling that we had a lot to contribute to the discussions. I think they did. We had a large number of people there and we talked about a lot of issues, so we got a chance to talk about a number of different things that were happening in the riding.

Since this bill has been introduced I have to say that in my riding there has been a lot of discussion. I would be very remiss in not talking about that today. We have had a number of groups talk about where agriculture is going to go in Huron county and where it will possibly evolve to. We all know that in the future we are going to be working very hard to increase our export business, to be able to create spinoffs, to have value added products within our area so that we can create more employment. But at the same time, we have other businesses and assets and important areas within the county also. We have tourism, for example, which is very important to our community and brings in revenue.

With that, we have had some very interesting discussions on the future of agriculture, the future of Huron county, the future of tourism. I'd like to say that one of the most important issues, because we're on Lake Huron, is what should happen with respect to the lake, the environment and agriculture combined. There's no question that this is a balance. We have to have a balance in Huron county, as we do in all of our large agricultural centres. I have discussed, with both members of the opposition and the third party, issues about this actual event that's happening in my riding. I think it's important today to say that all of us in this House have to look for a balance. We have to find a way to let agriculture grow, blossom, create jobs, stimulate our economies, because it's the leading jobgetter in my riding, second in Ontario.

Mr Wildman: Unless you protect the lake, agriculture is threatened.

Mrs Johns: But we also have to ensure that we protect the lake, as my honourable colleague across the room says. I want to say quite clearly and distinctly today that this bill does not give the agricultural community the right to pollute. I think we have been very careful here to say that this bill cannot override the Environmental Protection Act. It cannot override the Pesticides Act, the Health Protection and Promotion Act or the Ontario Water Resources Act. All of those are very important bills that protect our environment and lead us to have a healthy rural economy.

I've spoken to many farmers, both in livestock operations and in cash crops, and they have said that they want to be stewards of their land; they believe that is their most important asset. Most of their money is tied up in the land they have and they own, and they will do everything to protect that land.

I want to reinforce, for people watching today who are thinking about all the conflicting stories that they're hearing and thinking about "How will this affect me?" that the agricultural community does not wish to pollute. What they wish to do is to carry on what we call a normal farm practice. A normal farm practice allows them to do the work that we consider farming within our communities, but at the same time, to be protectors of the environment.

I know that the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, along with many different boards and commissions, has come together to talk about how we can best move to protect the environment and allow farming to work hand in hand, if you will. I think they have come up with some very good ideas. In my community many of the different municipalities have come up with manure bylaws which make farmers think about what they should do with manure, how they should look at that and how they should be concerned about how that will be disposed of.

This is a very important issue in farming that has been there since time immemorial, and we have to consider that carefully. I think we will see the agricultural community become more concerned about the manure bylaws in their communities. I think we'll see them work harder to make sure they are being stewards of their land so their land is protected and is there for future generations.

My children are eighth-generation Huron county people. It's important to recognize that they want to stay in Huron county and they want to work to have a great community and at the same time have job growth, have an ability to look forward into the future, be able to have jobs, be able to have farms, be able to have the things we believe are the reasons people should move to rural Ontario.

We have to recognize today that this bill is important, that the government is, first of all, delivering on a promise they said they would, but also allowing the agricultural community to operate without fear of nuisance lawsuits or unnecessarily restrictive bylaws. But at the same time, the agricultural community has to recognize that this bill does not give them the right to pollute; it gives them the right to operate their farms as good stewards of their land. I know that with the help of the OFA and all of the farm organizations, we're going to be able to accomplish this. I hope every member here will be very cognizant of that balance we have to have within our communities so that rural Ontario survives and flourishes.

I'm very proud of this bill. I'm very proud of the agricultural community for taking the active interest they did in it, especially in Huron county. They all came out to talk about this bill. They've written to me, they've called me, they've talked to me. In my area this has been the bill that has had the most consultation of any bill we have had so far. I'm very proud of Huron county for being involved in it.

I once again would like to thank OMAFRA for all the work they've done on this. This is a wonderful start for us in the agricultural community.

The Acting Speaker: It's 9:30. This House stands adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The House adjourned at 2132.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO
ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lieutenant Governor / Lieutenante-gouverneure: Hon / L'hon Hilary M. Weston
Speaker / Président: Hon / L'hon Chris Stockwell
Clerk / Greffier: Claude L. DesRosiers
Clerk Assistant / Greffière adjointe: Deborah Deller
Clerks at the Table / Greffiers parlementaires: Todd Decker, Lisa Freedman
Sergeant-at-Arms / Sergent d'armes: Dennis Clark

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Algoma	Wildman, Bud (ND)
Algoma-Manitoulin	Brown, Michael A. (L)
Beaches-Woodbine	Lankin, Frances (ND)
Brampton North / -Nord	Spina, Joseph (PC)
Brampton South / -Sud	Clement, Tony (PC)
Brant-Haldimand	Preston, Peter L. (PC)
Brantford	Johnson, Ron (PC)
Bruce	Fisher, Barbara (PC)
Burlington South / -Sud	Jackson, Hon / L'hon Cameron (PC) Minister without Portfolio (seniors issues) / ministre sans portefeuille (affaires des pernonnes âgées)
Cambridge	Martiniuk, Gerry (PC)
Carleton	Sterling, Hon / L'hon Norman W. (PC) Minister of Environment and Energy / ministre de l'Environnement et de l'Énergie
Carleton East / -Est	Morin, Gilles E. (L)
Chatham-Kent	Carroll, Jack (PC)
Cochrane North / -Nord	Wood, Len (ND)
Cochrane South / -Sud	Bisson, Gilles (ND)
Cornwall	Cleary, John C. (L)
Don Mills	Johnson, Hon / L'hon David (PC) Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, government House leader / président du Conseil de gestion, leader parlementaire du gouvernement
Dovercourt	Silipo, Tony (ND)
Downsview	Castrilli, Annamarie (L)
Dufferin-Peel	Tilson, David (PC)
Durham Centre / -Centre	Flaherty, Jim (PC)
Durham East / -Est	O'Toole, John R. (PC)
Durham West / -Ouest	Ecker, Hon / L'hon Janet (PC) Minister of Community and Social Services / ministre des Services sociaux et communautaires
Durham-York	Munro, Julia (PC)
Eglinton	Saunderson, Hon / L'hon William (PC) Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism / ministre du Développement économique, du Commerce et du Tourisme
Elgin	North, Peter (Ind)
Essex-Kent	Hoy, Pat (L)
Essex South / -Sud	Crozier, Bruce (L)
Etobicoke-Humber	Ford, Douglas B. (PC)
Etobicoke-Lakeshore	Kells, Morley (PC)
Etobicoke-Rexdale	Hastings, John (PC)
Etobicoke West / -Ouest	Stockwell, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Speaker / président
Fort William	McLeod, Lyn (L)
Fort York	Marchese, Rosario (ND)
Frontenac-Addington	Vankoughnet, Bill (PC)
Grey-Owen Sound	Murdoch, Bill (PC)
Guelph	Elliott, Brenda (PC)
Halton Centre / -Centre	Young, Terence H. (PC)
Halton North / -Nord	Chudleigh, Ted (PC)
Hamilton Centre / -Centre	Christopherson, David (ND)
Hamilton East / -Est	Agostino, Dominic (L)
Hamilton Mountain	Pettit, Trevor (PC)
Hamilton West / -Ouest	Ross, Lillian (PC)
Hastings-Peterborough	Danford, Harry (PC)
High Park-Swansea	Shea, Derwyn (PC)
Huron	Johns, Helen (PC)
Kenora	Miclash, Frank (L)
Kingston and The Islands / Kingston et Les Îles	Gerretsen, John (L)
Kitchener	Wettlaufer, Wayne (PC)
Kitchener-Wilmot	Leadston, Gary L. (PC)
Lake Nipigon / Lac-Nipigon	Pouliot, Gilles (ND)
Lambton	Beaubien, Marcel (PC)
Lanark-Renfrew	Jordan, W. Leo (PC)
Lawrence	Cordiano, Joseph (L)
Leeds-Grenville	Runciman, Hon / L'hon Robert W. (PC) Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services / solliciteur général et ministre des Services correctionnels
Lincoln	Sheehan, Frank (PC)
London Centre / -Centre	Boyd, Marion (ND)
London North / -Nord	Cunningham, Hon / L'hon Dianne (PC) Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, minister responsible for women's issues / ministre des Affaires intergouvernementales, ministre déléguée à la Condition féminine
London South / -Sud	Wood, Bob (PC)
Markham	Tsubouchi, Hon / L'hon David H. (PC) Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce
Middlesex	Smith, Bruce (PC)
Mississauga East / -Est	DeFaria, Carl (PC)
Mississauga North / -Nord	Snobelen, Hon / L'hon John (PC) Minister of Education and Training / ministère de l'Éducation et de la Formation
Mississauga South / -Sud	Marland, Margaret (PC)
Mississauga West / -Ouest	Sampson, Hon / L'hon Rob (PC) Minister without Portfolio (privatization) / ministre sans portefeuille (privatisation)
Muskoka-Georgian Bay / Muskoka-Baie-Georgienne	Grimmett, Bill (PC)
Nepean	Baird, John R. (PC)

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Niagara Falls	Maves, Bart (PC)
Niagara South / -Sud	Hudak, Tim (PC)
Nickel Belt	Laughren, Floyd (ND)
Nipissing	Harris, Hon / L'hon Michael D. (PC) Premier and President of the Executive Council / premier ministre et président du Conseil exécutif
Norfolk	Barrett, Toby (PC)
Northumberland	Galt, Doug (PC)
Oakville South / -Sud	Carr, Gary (PC)
Oakwood	Colle, Mike (L)
Oriole	Caplan, David (L)
Oshawa	Ouellette, Jerry J. (PC)
Ottawa Centre / -Centre	Patten, Richard (L)
Ottawa East / -Est	Grandmaître, Bernard (L)
Ottawa-Rideau	Guzzo, Garry J. (PC)
Ottawa South / -Sud	McGuinty, Dalton (L) Leader of the Opposition / chef de l'opposition
Ottawa West / -Ouest	Cullen, Alex (L)
Oxford	Hardeman, Ernie (PC)
Parkdale	Ruprecht, Tony (L)
Parry Sound	Eves, Hon / L'hon Ernie L. (PC) Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance / vice-premier ministre, ministre des Finances
Perth	Johnson, Bert (PC)
Peterborough	Stewart, R. Gary (PC)
Port Arthur	Gravelle, Michael (L)
Prescott and Russell / Prescott et Russell	Lalonde, Jean-Marc (L)
Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings / Prince EdwardLennox-Hastings-Sud	Fox, Gary (PC)
Quinte	Rollins, E.J. Douglas (PC)
Rainy River	Hampton, Howard (ND) Leader of the New Democratic Party / Chef du Nouveau Parti démocratique
Renfrew North / -Nord	Conway, Sean G. (L)
Riverdale	Churley, Marilyn (ND)
S-D-G & East Grenville / S-D-G et Grenville-Est	Villeneuve, Hon / L'hon Noble (PC) Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs / ministre de l'Agriculture, de l'Alimentation et des Affaires rurales, ministre délégué aux Affaires francophones
St Andrew-St Patrick	Bassett, Isabel (PC)
St Catharines	Bradley, James J. (L)
St Catharines-Brock	Froese, Tom (PC)
St George-St David	Leach, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing / ministre des Affaires municipales et du Logement
Sarnia	Boushy, Dave (PC)
Sault Ste Marie / Sault-Sainte-Marie	Martin, Tony (ND)
Scarborough-Agincourt	Phillips, Gerry (L)
Scarborough Centre / -Centre	Newman, Dan (PC)
Scarborough East / -Est	Gilchrist, Steve (PC)
Scarborough-Ellesmere	Mushinski, Hon / L'hon Marilyn (PC) Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation / ministre des Affaires civiques, de la Culture et des Loisirs
Scarborough North / -Nord	Curling, Alvin (L)
Scarborough West / -Ouest	Brown, Jim (PC)
Simcoe Centre / -Centre	Tascona, Joseph N. (PC)
Simcoe East / -Est	McLean, Allan K. (PC)
Simcoe West / -Ouest	Wilson, Hon / L'hon Jim (PC) Minister of Health / ministre de la Santé
Sudbury	Bartolucci, Rick (L)
Sudbury East / -Est	Martel, Shelley (ND)
Timiskaming	Ramsay, David (L)
Victoria-Haliburton	Hodgson, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Minister of Natural Resources, Minister of Northern Development and Mines / ministre des Richesses naturelles, ministre du Développement du Nord et des Mines
Waterloo North / -Nord	Witmer, Hon / L'hon Elizabeth (PC) Minister of Labour / ministre du Travail
Welland-Thorold	Kormos, Peter (ND)
Wellington	Arnott, Ted (PC)
Wentworth East / -Est	Doyle, Ed (PC)
Wentworth North / -Nord	Skarica, Toni (PC)
Willowdale	Harnick, Hon / L'hon Charles (PC) Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs / procureur général, ministre délégué aux Affaires autochtones
Wilson Heights	Kwinter, Monte (L)
Windsor-Riverside	Lessard, Wayne (ND)
Windsor-Sandwich	Pupatello, Sandra (L)
Windsor-Walkerville	Duncan, Dwight (L)
York Centre / -Centre	Palladini, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Transportation / ministre des Transports
York East / -Est	Parker, John L. (PC)
York Mills	Turnbull, David (PC)
York-Mackenzie	Klees, Frank (PC)
Yorkview	Sergio, Mario (L)
York South / -Sud	Kennedy, Gerard (L)

A list arranged by members' surnames and including all responsibilities of each member appears in the first and last issues of each session and on the first Monday of each month.

Une liste alphabétique des noms des députés, comprenant toutes les responsabilités de chaque député, figure dans les premier et dernier numéros de chaque session et le premier lundi de chaque mois.

CONTENTS

Wednesday 24 September 1997

SECOND READINGS

Farming and Food Production Protection Act, 1977
Bill 146, Mr Villeneuve
Mr Villeneuve 12389, 12398, 12405, 12408
Mr Danford 12393
Mr O'Toole 12394
Mr Cleary 12397, 12398
Mr Wildman 12397, 12406, 12410
Mr Carroll 12397
Mr Hoy 12397, 12399, 12406
Mr Lessard 12405, 12409
Mr Crozier 12405, 12409
Mr Len Wood 12405
Mr Tilson 12409
Mrs Johns 12410
Debate deemed adjourned 12411

ROYAL ASSENT

The Lieutenant Governor 12398

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Mercredi 24 septembre 1997

DEUXIÈME LECTURE

Loi de 1997 sur la protection de l'agriculture et de la production agricole, projet de loi 146, M. Villeneuve
Mr Villeneuve 12392
Débat présumé ajournée 12411

SANCTION ROYALE

La lieutenante-gouverneure 12398

Government
Publications

No. 236

Nº 236

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly
of Ontario
First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative
de l'Ontario
Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Thursday 25 September 1997

Jeudi 25 septembre 1997

LIBRARY
SEP 30 1997
University of Toronto

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Thursday 25 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Jeudi 25 septembre 1997

The House met at 1003.
Prayers.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Is there a quorum?

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Can you please check for a quorum.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present.

HUMBER RIVER

Mr Derwyn Shea (High Park-Swansea): It is with pleasure that I present the following resolution:

That in the opinion of this House, since the Humber River is the largest watershed of the nine river systems in Metropolitan Toronto, and

Since the history of the Humber River is one that parallels the growth and development of Toronto, and

Since the Humber River is currently home to many outstanding recreational, educational and tourist facilities, and

Since the province of Ontario through the Minister of Natural Resources is a signatory to the Canadian Heritage Rivers System Charter, which is a voluntary national program that for the last 13 years has recognized and promoted a total of 33 rivers in Canada, including four in Ontario which have been deemed to be culturally and historically important;

Therefore, the government of Ontario should recognize the importance of the Humber River to the history and character of the city of Toronto and the development of Ontario, and encourage the Canadian Heritage Rivers Board to nominate and ultimately designate the Humber River as the first urban river in Ontario recognized under this charter, and

The Minister of Natural Resources should accept the recommendations of this nomination bid and allow for a three-year management strategy to be put in place for the voluntary coordination of all concerned parties to work towards the enhancement of this precious natural resource for the benefit of all Ontarians and their future generations.

1010

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): According to rule 95, the member for High Park-Swansea has 10 minutes.

Mr Shea: Thank you, Mr Speaker. It's always a great pleasure to see the distinguished member for Perth in the chair. I know that he, like all other members of this House, shares my sincere concern with the issues of clean water and clean air. It is without doubt that we all understand that fresh water is essential to life on earth and that Canada is blessed with more than one fifth of the world's fresh water supply, much of it in the province of Ontario, and that our rivers are a priceless and irreplaceable part of our national and provincial heritage and identity. So it is with great pleasure that I advance this resolution today in the hope that my colleagues in this House will support this resolution and allow us to get on expeditiously with the designation of the Humber River.

I was particularly pleased in my research to note that the Minister of Natural Resources and the government of this province are signatories to the Canadian Heritage Rivers System Charter. We signed on in 1996, although other governments have been giving support to this system. I applaud all of them, because I think all Ontarians would like to see us take very careful care of our natural resources to ensure that we can return them in a condition that is appropriate as a legacy for our children and their children. I'm pleased to see that we are beginning to recognize the movement that is certainly North American, if not worldwide, as an attempt to restore some natural balance to our environment.

I want to give a little background about the Canadian Heritage Rivers System and why I think it's important that we support this resolution today and encourage the board to designate the Humber River as part of the system. I remind this House that the Canadian Heritage Rivers System Charter was established 13 years ago. It is a national program. It is signed by all 10 provinces and two territories, and Parks Canada acts as the lead agency. The program has no legislative power to enforce compliance, but it is based on voluntary compliance by all parties, private and public, who have interests in any designated river.

I want to pay particular tribute today to the tremendous effort that has been made already in this regard by the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority and by other agencies that I'll mention a little later on in my comments to bring us to this point where we hope the Humber River will be advanced through the Canadian Heritage Rivers Board for designation.

I want to indicate very briefly the vision that is considered appropriate for this designation: that our rivers will be nationally recognized and managed through the support and stewardship of local people and provincial, territorial and federal governments to ensure the long-term conservation of the rivers' cultural, natural and recreational values and integrity.

The charter of the rivers system is nationally recognized and managed through the support and stewardship of the local people, and I think that's terribly important for us all to remember.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Riverdale): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm sorry to interrupt this very important speech. It is indeed a very important matter and I don't believe there is a quorum.

The Acting Speaker: Will you please check for a quorum.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): Quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: Quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for High Park-Swansea.

Mr Shea: I will remind us that the charter of the system "defines a framework for cooperation between Canada and the provinces and the territories...to recognize, protect and manage, in a sustainable manner, Canada's important rivers and their natural heritage, human (cultural/historical) and recreational values."

That's an important statement for us all in this province that has so many marvellous rivers and fresh water resources. It's important that we manage them to the very best of our ability to the benefit of the ecology and as an appropriate legacy to leave to our children and to their children.

In Metropolitan Toronto we are blessed with a number of fresh water resources, but I want to remind us that they have been under threat for years and years and years. That threat has come to them as a result of the growing urbanism that has been attendant with the economic growth of this province. I remind us of the issue of the fresh water question for Lake Ontario, the Don River, the Humber River, Grenadier Pond, the Credit River and so forth. All of these fresh water resources in the Metropolitan area have been under threat for years and years and years. This rises far above partisan politics; it is an issue that goes to the very systemic nature of our developing community.

In recent years we have discovered I think a new sense of stewardship about the environment that is causing us all to recognize the importance, not only of clean air but also of clean water, and the importance of beginning to take seriously the stewardship issues of those resources. One of the responses in that regard has been the formation of coalitions and alliances of communities and groups to deal with these issues and to apply for designation — in this instance dealing with rivers — to the Canadian Heritage Rivers Board to allow a three-year strategy to be put in place for the recovery and refreshment of that fresh water source.

This resolution that I bring before the House today reflects and applauds the tremendous public effort made by so many on behalf of the health and the vitality of the Humber River in this particular instance. As I mentioned at the beginning of my comments, I refer specifically to the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority. I could remind us of the Humber River Heritage Committee. There are a number of others that are involved in the coalition and the alliances for the Humber River.

My background as a former chairman of the Metropolitan water pollution committee, chairman of the Metropolitan works committee, has always been one that has been dealing with the issue of water quality. I can tell you we have a long way to go in terms of restoring our fresh water resources to the natural condition they rightly deserve among us. We have, in this community, struggled hard to refresh our fresh water sources. Metropolitan Toronto taxpayers have, to their credit, over the years contributed significant amounts of their property tax dollars to water reclamation issues.

I would like to hope that this House would give its support now to designation of the Humber River, which would allow us to advance this process one step further. I remind us that in the process, when the application is made, the river has to go through a number of quality checks before it is given any designation. It must prove it has natural heritage value; it must prove it has human heritage value, recreational value and integrity value. I can tell you, in terms of recreation value — indeed when I grew up, and that was just a few years ago, it was a river —

Laughter.

Mr Shea: Thank you so much for my colleagues and that burst of laughter. All right, so it was a little more than just a few years ago. But I learned to swim in the Humber River and I learned to canoe in the Humber River, the river along the banks of which I walked and learned to appreciate the flora and fauna of the area. I hold it in very high regard. With sadness I have watched its degradation over the years and would like to see us restore it more and more to its appropriate condition that makes it a natural part of the heritage of this great city.

I remind us of the tremendous value of that river in terms of the economy of this province many years back, not only its prehistoric importance, but I talk about its historic importance — Étienne Brûlé, for example, and his great travel down the river. I might also mention the name of someone by the name of Florence Nightingale Graham, otherwise known to many of us as Elizabeth Arden, who was in fact a resident of Woodbridge, who herself had some associations with the river. So the river has natural heritage values, human heritage values, recreation values and integrity values. I suggest it meets all of the criteria appropriate for designation.

I would ask this House to support the designation advancement to the board for consideration so that it may join other Ontario rivers that have been so designated — the Bloodvein, the Missinabi, the French, the Mattawa, the Grand — and others that are in the nomination stream, such as the Trent-Severn waterway, the St Marys River and the Thames. I ask for the support of this House on this resolution.

1020

Mr Gerard Kennedy (York South): It is with pleasure I rise today to support the motion put forward by the member for High Park-Swansea.

The Humber River runs through the riding I represent in York South. It is a vital part of the greenway in Metro and one of the largest river and greenway areas anywhere. Even more important when we talk about heritage rivers is what the Humber River has meant to the development of Toronto and the Toronto area. We look at its historical place as a trading route that connected virtually all of North America in terms of its vital connection to the Toronto carrying place, up to Lake Simcoe.

As a native trading route, it contributed hugely to the history of this particular area. We wouldn't have developed if it hadn't been for the established patterns through the Humber River involving the different trading patterns. It sometimes took as many as 20 years for different items of trade to work their way up from as far away as Mexico to this region.

The French found this to be the route they would use as part of their initiation of trade. They made Baby Point, which is in the southern reaches of my riding, in the part of the Humber River travelling through Metro, into magasin Royal, one of their first forts, and subsequently contributed to the location here of the permanent site put on by Mr Simcoe.

We find indeed that the trade links were so important as to create some of the first families of Toronto. In fact the first European child was born into one of the families of the French traders and was there to greet Governor Simcoe when he came to found the city of York.

We have a political connection arising substantially from the existence and the nature of the Humber River. We would not have been a non-slavery colony had it not been for the water power provided by the Humber River. The Humber River allowed Governor Simcoe to put forward an act to make this one of the first jurisdictions to ban slavery, because the water power on the river substituted for the slaves. So the economic rationale was there for one of the earliest human rights gestures in that regard.

The Humber River drops 1,100 feet from the moraine down to the lake and is able to provide that water power. In fact, at one time there were 23 sites for the use of lumber and other types of mills — just mill sites; that doesn't include the actual number of mills — between Bloor and northern Weston. It was a tremendous source of early economic activity. It defined some of the essential character of Toronto, and it's important to understand that wouldn't have happened without the existence of the lake. We just need to understand slightly how the water power begat the mills, how that itself brought on the need for trades, for carpenters, for masons, for coopers, for people involved in things like belt-making for the mills, and then they became harness-makers who became the locus of the building steps of industry, and that industry eventually became the heartland of Canada's industrial development.

There certainly is no shortage of the heritage requirements to be met by the Humber River. I think many of us living in the current-day Metropolitan Toronto area can glide right on by the Humber River and not realize the contribution it makes. It has every bit the standing in terms of heritage and contribution to our essential forming history as do rivers existing in more raw and natural form without the incursion the rest of us provide in terms of our current-day use of the area.

We recognize that rich history which saw the continuity of this river provide some of the basic definition for Toronto. It was at one time known in fact as the Toronto River, just as Lake Ontario was known as Lake Toronto. When you look at the very name of this place, which means trees reflecting in the water, it was at the mouth of the Humber River that they had stakes for fishing nets that provided that graphic description which led to the place name initially of that river, the lake it came into and this whole region in terms of Toronto.

We know too that this river continues to have a tremendous amount of relevance. For the people who live in the northwest part of Metro, it is their source of current-day relief. It doesn't have the same economic implication, but it certainly does in terms of recreation and quality of life. The trails for biking, for walking up and down the Humber are the essential ingredient for the leisure activities of people who live in this part of Metro.

Something we probably don't recognize on our own is that the Humber River has an essential visual beauty and enjoyment that is comparable to world rivers anywhere. The people who put the work into drawing the Humber River to our latter-day attention compare it to the Seine or the Thames, anywhere in the places that those rivers course.

I think it's essential for us to recognize and celebrate the Humber River in order to recognize the type of quality of life that is available to us and to recognize too that the Humber River is not just a river for Toronto. It comes from the Oak Ridges moraine, it feeds off the Niagara Escarpment, some of the most defining features of the province that we recognize. The Niagara Escarpment has UN designation for its uniqueness, and we recognize too that that part of our natural heritage needs also to be preserved.

We recognize the essential importance that the Humber River has as a linking of the present day with some of our defining characteristics as a city certainly, and probably as a province when we think of the central importance the economic activity I spoke of has played in the development of the whole province. It behooves us very greatly, as we think of the kinds of things we need to do to sustain quality of life, as the word "Toronto" comes into play, encompassing a political entity, it is essential that the values of connection with our past, connection with nature — there has been a tremendous effort made by the people associated with the Humber River heritage to make sure that the Humber River sustains its place as a living part of our heritage. We see they have identified that 64 out of 75 species of fish that used to be there are still in the river.

There are tremendous efforts made to clean it. I've participated with Frontlines, our youth centre in the city of York, and with the Weston Ratepayers' Association in annual cleanups of the shore along the river. When you see the people out there picking up everything from large tires down to cigarette butts, you see the kind of relevance and importance this still has.

I think the Humber River's particular importance is one of the hidden secrets of Toronto. The heritage designation brought up by the member for High Park-Swansea is very timely and very important to the essential development of this city and of the province, to make sure that we pay attention to the things that have contributed to our quality of life. In making this commitment, which, as I think the member explained quite well, is something of an official gesture that doesn't bring with it a lot of sanction to support the river, it also reflects our commitment to make sure that the Humber River continues to come back to us as a living natural resource, as something that can be enjoyed without the incursions it has had.

1030

Ms Churley: I'm on my feet a little more quickly than I thought I was going to be and I'm not prepared, but I notice that the member for York South, after receiving a note, sat down abruptly.

I don't know if I can speak to this for 15 minutes without becoming very partisan and slamming the government for so many of the cuts they've made in terms of environmental protection, which includes protecting our water.

Let me start by congratulating the member for High Park-Swansea — I know the good doctor across the way is really looking forward to my later comments — for bringing this forward. As he said, and the member for York South said, I suppose overall this is more symbolic than necessarily a call for action to clean up the Humber, to do the kind of work that needs to be done, but indeed a very important symbolism.

As you know, my riding is in Riverdale. My riding is right on the edge of part of the Don River so I certainly understand — I remember my youth a little bit more clearly than the member for High Park-Swansea, but not a lot, not so many days ago. In fact I wasn't here. I grew up in Labrador, right on the edge of what was then called the Hamilton River and was changed eventually to the Churchill River. I grew up on the edge of a large and beautiful river.

I just spent some time there last summer. For the first time ever you could drive right through Happy Valley, Labrador, which is where I come from. It was a terrible drive. I could spend 15 minutes talking about that. It was the first time ever you could drive all the way from Quebec right up to Goose Bay, Labrador. It took two days of very bad road.

I'm mentioning this because having grown up in the wilds, really, and spent my life canoeing, and still enjoy canoeing, I, like many, feel very strongly about preserving and taking care of our natural heritage. Over the years we have forgotten that, and thus we're reaping the problems now that come as a result of the buildup of the area in Toronto.

I know more about the Don River and what's been happening there. Back in 1988 or 1989 — my very brief but productive stint at city council — one of the things I did with Barbara Hall, who was then the councillor for ward 7, and with Jack Layton, who was the councillor for ward 6, was that the three of us worked together and called the first ever Clean up the Don community meeting at city hall.

I remember the first notice we put out. We didn't know how people would respond. I believe the headline in our notice for the meeting was something about, "Do you know that you could once swim in the Don River?" It was that sort of thing, inviting people to come out to a founding meeting to discuss ways that we could get involved, as communities, in our community in Riverdale and then in other communities throughout Toronto where the Don runs, if people would be interested in getting involved.

We were quite surprised and very pleased to see the large turnout. Often, in my experience, I'd get a lot of people out to meetings when I'd call a meeting on traffic, and particularly parking problems, those kinds of things that are very relevant to people in their neighbourhood. It hits them right at their home and they tend to come out in large numbers to deal with issues that affect them directly daily. Sometimes, on other issues, not so many come out. We were quite surprised and gratified to see how many people, from all walks of life, came out to that very first meeting to talk about ways we could start, as a community, cleaning up the Don. As you know, the Don is extremely polluted. There was a time — we have pictures of people swimming and fishing in the Don, as I'm sure the member for High Park-Swansea remembers himself fishing and swimming in the Humber, but you can't do that any more.

I know that now, after the late 1980s when we started this organization, it runs clear across the city. There are thousands of individuals, citizens, who work together with their various city halls, who go out every year. They take part in events. They have cleanup days, just like they do for the Humber River. The citizens come out as volunteers to help clean up the river, a very dirty river now. There are a variety of activities that take place every year on the shores of the Don. People canoe down the Don, being very careful, I might add, not to fall in. The activities every year — I notice the member for High Park-Swansea is laughing about that. I bet he wouldn't want to fall in the Humber at this stage, either.

There are so many citizens across Toronto who are involved in these efforts and it's quite encouraging to see that. So I strongly support this today.

Now I'd like to speak for a few minutes about what I think the government needs to do so that this is not just a symbolic gesture. Let me say , before some of the government members say it, this is private members' hour and it's supposed to be non-partisan, so I'll be partisan in a very nice way this morning.

Mr Doug Galt (Northumberland): A change.

Ms Churley: You'll see, right? As I've said many times in this House —

Interjection: Is that possible?

Ms Churley: I'm going to try, I said. It depends on the reaction from the parliamentary assistant. The cuts to the environment, the financial cuts and the deregulation, are already starting to have — I know the parliamentary assistant says it's not deregulation, it's re-regulation. It is deregulation. The cuts and deregulation have already had a huge impact on the water quality across our province.

I know the member for High Park-Swansea mentioned conservation authorities. We all know their budgets were cut by about 70% shortly after the government took office. It's become much harder for them to do the kinds of work they did in terms of protecting wetlands and our rivers and doing educational tours, providing educational materials, a lot of the work they did to aid us in these fairly monumental tasks of cleaning up our rivers after so many years of very bad, profound levels of pollution: the runoff, the sewers, the garbage thrown into it, the toxic materials, very polluted. We need these conservation authorities to be part of the effort to preserve and clean up these rivers.

I would like the government — I'm asking politely, as I've asked many times not so politely — to take another look at what — I know it's not being talked about out there a lot because we have problems with health care, education, labour matters and women's shelters, and it goes across the board, so people are concerned about a lot more things. But overall, when polls are done on what people feel about environmental protection, the polls will show very high numbers, over 80% in most cases, who believe governments should be responsible for cleaning up the environment and preserving our environment and our health. On the whole people expect by now that governments are doing that.

When you get a barrage of cuts to the environment, there may be the brief headline or so, and then there are the dedicated people whose professional or daily lives, on a volunteer basis or whatever, are involved in environmental issues, who try to get the attention of the government, try to point out the problems with some of the cuts.

This is a good indication. The reason I believe the member for High Park-Swansea has brought this forward is that he is aware that, beyond a very important part of Ontario and our heritage, there are a lot of problems with the pollution in our rivers and that we need to call on not only the citizens, but we also have to expect — and he's right that the Metro government, the Toronto city government, have over the years put money and time and effort into the cleanup of our rivers, but the provincial government has a role to play as well, beyond a symbolic gesture today.

1040

I don't see any reason why all members in this House will not support this today. If I may say so, it really is a motherhood resolution before us today. The member will be able to feel good at the end of the session today. I'm sure everybody will support his motion. But I'm glad to find out today that — do we have a tree hugger in the Tory caucus? Do we? I don't know. But I know if there is a tree hugger in the Tory caucus, he should beware because they don't like tree huggers in that caucus. I don't know if I'm inviting him to join our caucus or not. There might be a few other questions asked first. But starting off as a tree hugger is good.

I believe that if the member for High Park-Swansea is interested in the Humber River he may have interests in other environmental matters as well. I would say to him that we very definitely need an ally, one ally, in the Tory caucus to help us in our quest to get some of the funding and the regulations that have been thrown out brought back in.

Do you want to speak to this for a few minutes?

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): You're doing fine.

Ms Churley: I was just asking my new colleague here, the member for Windsor-Riverside, if he wanted to say a few words, because I know he's very interested in the environment and has been for many years. I know that in his city of Windsor he has been very active over the years in environmental concerns and issues.

In terms of the environmental problems that have come about because of some of the cuts, the monitoring stations, for instance, for water have gone way down. There are hardly any left in the province any more. One of the big concerns about water in Ontario is the real concern that the government is in the process of starting to privatize our water, which is something we strongly object to, because our water is not only part of our natural heritage; the air we breathe and the water we drink are what keep us alive.

Some of the downloading, for instance, of responsibilities to municipalities in terms of sewers is worrisome as well, because you tend to think when you hear the word "sewer" that not a lot of people get into it, I must admit. The member for Welland-Thorold might be interested in sewers —

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): Very interested.

Ms Churley: — but not a lot of people are interested in it. But as you know, sewers have played a very large part in the polluting of our waterways over the years, and it still is a problem. I'm concerned to see that the government is downloading that responsibility, without giving the municipalities the proper tools and the proper funding. The government has cut all kinds of funding in terms of keeping our water clean.

Mr Galt: Now we know how the debt got doubled.

Ms Churley: Well, health comes first. I can tell the member how the debt got doubled, but people's health comes first, and keeping our environment clean comes first as well. You can't just decide to cut because you need it for your 30% tax cut and then figure out — which is this government's policy overall: Cut first, let it all fall apart, create the mess, ask questions later, and then start cleaning it up. That's why we're in such a mess today in terms of the environment and why rivers like the Humber are becoming so dirty: not enough attention has been paid to it.

In closing, I firmly support your resolution today and am happy to do so.

Mr Ted Chudleigh (Halton North): I'd like to thank the member for High Park-Swansea for bringing this resolution forward today.

The Humber River is a living reminder of the importance of waterways in the history of our great province of Ontario. In fact, it was down the Humber River in 1615, I believe, that Étienne Brûlé first travelled. Étienne was a personal aide to Samuel de Champlain. He came down the Humber River in the year 1615 on a mission to visit the Carantouan tribe of Indians in eastern Pennsylvania, and my apologies to the tribe for that pronunciation of their name. As such, he was the first European to gaze upon the waters of Lake Ontario. That first gaze was taken from the mouth of the Humber River, so it's a significant river in the history of this province.

Brûlé was on his way down to visit that Indian tribe in eastern Pennsylvania to bring about 500 braves up to do battle with the Iroquois, the Onondagas in those days, in around the Finger Lakes area. Champlain was travelling with his Huron friends with another 500 friends, warriors, and they were to meet in the Onondaga area and do battle against their arch foes, the Iroquois.

However, Brûlé, having travelled across Lake Ontario and up the Niagara River, was delayed, and I suspect he was delayed because he was probably also the first European to lay eyes on Niagara Falls. Being an explorer and enjoying the pastime of exploring new lands and being the first European to cast eyes on new geographical formations, I'm sure that he would not pass by Niagara Falls without visiting it.

As such, he was two days late visiting the battle site, in which Champlain was wounded in the leg and had to be carried home. Étienne Brûlé decided that perhaps the better part of valour would be not to return to Montreal right away, and he spent the next 15 years, with the exception of one visit, among the Indians.

During that period of time, the reports of missionaries and coureurs de bois of the area reported seeing him in various other parts of the Great Lakes basin, and it is probably arguable that he was the first European to view each of the Great Lakes, and that would include Niagara Falls. I think Étienne Brûlé is to be remembered in Canadian history not only as perhaps a character but as a true explorer, because he made no maps, he kept no journal of his journeys. As such, he travelled and explored merely for the joy of doing so.

The historical designations we are involved in in this debate today, this resolution today, remind us not only of the geographical formations that are before us and act as reminders, but they also remind us of the early explorers who passed through this land. They are something that is tangible that will remind us of the people like Étienne Brûlé, who perhaps ended his life in less glorious terms, in helping the English conquer Quebec City in 1629, and therefore not being very popular with his French compatriots at the time. But we are reminded of his history through the designation of this river and through other historical designations. That memory of early explorers will serve us well in our history. If we forget about our history, we are doomed in our future.

The Canadian Heritage Rivers System is a cooperative program of governments of Canada in all 10 provinces, as the member for High Park-Swansea has mentioned. Ontario's representative on the board is the director of Ontario Parks. If a nomination is deemed worthy of inclusion in the system, it is recommended to the Minister of Natural Resources and the federal Minister of Canadian Heritage.

In the member's resolution, he speaks about the size of the Humber River watershed. It covers about 900 square kilometres. It's a huge area from its headwaters in the Niagara Escarpment and the Oak Ridges moraine all the way down to the shores of Lake Ontario.

The point I'd like to make this morning is that the input and acceptance of all the local municipalities along the watershed are very important to this government, which is strong on consultation and listening to the local municipalities and their points of view.

The designation of a river is a symbolic honour. However, some municipalities have raised concerns that this designation may lead to future intrusions in municipal planning. This would certainly not be the government's intention, but it is important to note that the Ministry of Natural Resources will not move ahead with this designation without the support of local municipalities in this watershed.

That being said, I'd like to commend the member for High Park-Swansea for bringing this resolution forward and highlighting the great contributions the Humber River has made to the development of Ontario.

1050

Mr Mario Sergio (Yorkview): I am delighted to join the debate and spend the next few minutes on this topic. I commend the member for High Park-Swansea for bringing it forward.

It occupies a special place for me, since I represent the area that is completely straddled by the Humber River and I have myself resided in the so-called Humber Summit, which is an old settlement area. For the last 30-odd years, that's where I have lived. As a matter of fact, one of the early settlers, Joseph Rowntree, and the Rowntree family back in the late 1800s had a very successful mill, as the area was known for the mill's operations. Now we enjoy, not only as local residents but as a community within the Metropolitan Toronto area, and we have groups that come from far and wide to enjoy, the so-called Rowntree Mills Park. It's a beautiful area. It's wide. The river meanders around the now-residential area and it affords a tremendous recreational opportunity for everyone, visitors and residents alike.

I also have the very distinct pleasure, if I may say so, to live on what is now called Rowntree Mill Road, which was dedicated to the Rowntree family, and we also have at the mouth, at Rowntree Mill, at Islington Avenue, an old settlers' cemetery which is an historic site. Just up the street we have the Pine Ridge Presbyterian Church, which dates prior to Hurricane Hazel back in 1954. So the area abounds with history.

But let me get back for a second to the matter in front of us here, because I only have four minutes, unfortunately. I think we have to support today the initiative and support the designation of the Humber River as the first urban river to be recognized by the Canadian Heritage Rivers System.

It's most important that we allocate the Humber River its place, and rightly so, in history. The Humber River is full of history from top to bottom, as we heard from the last speaker. Even today you can appreciate and visit and see in South Humber Park a plaque commemorating the arrival of the first white person, Étienne Brûlé, who came down through the then-known, as it is today, Humber Trail, which used to be the only passage, which was first used by the aboriginal people and then by the settlers who arrived later, the only connection to Huronia, as we now know.

With the passage of time and the opening of other roads and with things like horses and cars, that became less known. But I have to say that at a particular time, the Humber River, especially in the north end, at the Humber cemetery now, contained I believe some 84 mills back in 1817, and then they started to diminish as time went by.

I have to say thanks in the House today to a number of people who on a continuing basis, a voluntary basis, are giving their time to support the natural beauty of the Humber River and maintain it. I would be remiss if I didn't mention a particular group in my own area, the Humber Crang, which continually does numerous projects cleaning up the Humber River. They are one of the very active participants in maintaining and raising awareness of the Humber River.

As well — and who doesn't know? — I'd like to give credit to my colleague from York South, Mr Kennedy, because there is a group of people working from the south end, especially Madelaine McDowell from Humber River Heritage. And who doesn't know Jane Jacobs? She continually holds tours and conferences with respect to the Humber River, and I think this speaks very loudly to the importance of the river.

I don't have time to go into the various aspects, the object as to why we should support the motion and make sure that the Humber River is recognized as such. If it's not done, I'm afraid that what we have enjoyed in the past and what we are enjoying now — I have to say that there is a trail which is part of the 84 kilometres along the Humber River which is being enjoyed by everyone. It is full of flora and fauna. There are deer, there are rabbits, there are raccoons, all kinds of wild animals for the enjoyment of the residents, kids and everyone in general.

In finishing, it is important that we ensure that the integrity of the natural heritage, the human heritage and the recreational value of the Humber River is kept.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham East): It is my privilege to rise and speak to Mr Derwyn Shea's ballot item number 99 and his resolution number 73. Mr Shea's resolution, for those who may be bringing it into context, is to recognize the important heritage significance of the Humber River, the largest watershed of the nine river systems in Metropolitan Toronto.

I respect Mr Shea very much, and on a personal note I would have to say that Mr Shea and his lovely wife, Julia, reside on the most beautiful Grenadier Pond. Recently I was asked as a guest to attend a small reception at their home and was pleased to watch what seemed to be remote-control white swans gracing the beautiful Grenadier Pond. That, as I'm sure Mr Shea recognizes, is meant in a very complimentary manner.

Mr Shea's resolution further goes on to serve as an education for perhaps each and every one of us who is paying attention today. Respect for our heritage: really, that's the theme. It's learning and respecting our heritage through knowledge. To me, the most important thing is to look at the importance of history. The waterways of this great province have served to both develop and explore, and still nurture each one of us today. Mr Chudleigh has given us a very fine history lesson as well.

I thank Mr Shea for bringing this to our attention. That the Canadian Heritage Rivers System was developed some 13 years ago was completely new to me. I apologize for my lack of knowledge on the subject, but it serves as a very definite focal point for us to examine why people like Mr Shea take the initiative to recognize these important geographical features and heritage aspects of our country.

In preparing to respond to Mr Shea and support his resolution, I looked to my immediate riding of Durham East. I looked to my own riding to see what I could learn about the history and heritage of our river systems. I am pleased to share with people that my riding of Durham East is east of Oshawa, is part of Durham region, and its southern boundary is the north shore of Lake Ontario. Lake Ontario is a great heritage body of water as well. In fact, the shoreline is graced by three or four very significant class 1 and class 2 wetlands. I might add that the Lynde Creek Marsh, as well as the Second Marsh, east of the General Motors headquarters building in Oshawa, and the Eastside Marsh, which is in Bowmanville, adjacent to the St Marys Cement property, are three very important class 1 and 2 wetlands that act as the lungs or filtration system for a very important creek system.

1100

I was pleased, when preparing for this morning, to examine the creek systems which feed these marshes; the water eventually goes to Lake Ontario. The creek systems are the Lynde Creek, of course, Black Creek, Farewell Creek, Bowmanville Creek, Soper Creek and Wilmot Creek. These are all widely known in the area, and not really appreciated for their importance. There were mills and all sorts of activity in the early economy and development of Ontario settlements. Bowmanville Creek had a number of important sawmills. In fact, Bowmanville's history can be traced completely to the establishment of a mill for milling flour and other agricultural products. If I move further north in my riding of Durham East, I come immediately to the Ganaraska Forest, which is an important forest stand, and also the Ganaraska Region Conservation Authority, which looks after the creek system and the flooding issues around the conservation mandate.

I run into the Oak Ridges moraine. I heard one of the previous speakers mention the Oak Ridges moraine. That almost completely crosses my riding of Durham East. We all know that the Oak Ridges moraine was the shore of the ancient Lake Iroquois, a once-great lake during the glacier period that has since receded.

It's important to go back to the basics of this discussion this morning, to talk about the heritage. I thank Mr Shea for encouraging me to look into the heritage of my own riding. I would ask everyone to do that. It's not just about the Humber or the Don or Soper Creek. It's the whole aspect of the importance of our waterway systems in Ontario and indeed our great country.

I just want to wrap up my remarks. Moving north in my riding of Durham East, we have Lake Scugog. Lake Scugog is more or less a manmade lake. I've got a bit of history on that which I'll share. It served as an important part of Port Perry; in fact it gave it its very fundamental economic purpose for existence. It served to transfer logs and other kinds of things down through the Trent system. I'll cover that in a moment. The history of Lake Scugog — I think this is important; I just learned this, actually — is that in 1828 the government gave a Mr Purdy permission to build a dam at Lindsay to power a grist mill. That mill was destroyed in 1929 and there was another dam built. Anyway, Lake Scugog then became a flooded area for the purpose of transferring both grains and lumber downstream. It eventually feeds into the Trent system, and I know my friend Mr Rollins is going to talk about the Trent system.

I want to conclude by saying that I have a cottage on the Otonabee River. This was once my grandfather's farm. The Otonabee River is just south of Peterborough and it's part of the Trent-Severn waterway system, which in itself deserves a complete discussion. But I know the Trent system is going to be covered by Mr Rollins, so I'm going to relinquish the rest of my time for him. I thank Mr Shea for the opportunity to speak on this subject this morning.

Mr E.J. Douglas Rollins (Quinte): It will do me great good to support the member for High Park-Swansea in bringing forward the Humber as a designated river. As my colleague from Durham East mentioned, I am going to talk about the Trent. It's also on the nomination list. I think it is the greatest inland waterway there is in Ontario, stretching from the shores of Lake Ontario up to the shores of Georgian Bay, with many locks and rivers and streams feeding into that great Trent system. We need to make sure we can travel that, as did our forefathers before us, and be able to see to the bottom of that great river. We've always been able to do that.

It hurts me, and I know it hurts a lot of us, to drive by the Humber and see the stuff floating down it. We've got to protect that environment for our children and particularly our grandchildren. I know it's only one little step for the future to put forward this nomination that our member has to make sure our grandchildren and great-grandchildren have the opportunity to see to the bottom of some of these rivers. It's very unfortunate to see how they have been polluted and mismanaged.

This is one step closer back to our heritage, back to our basics, where we've got to respect the soil, the water and the air. It has been said in this House that we as a government have done a lot of cutbacks to those. I can tell you that there are more people in this 82-member caucus on this side who are concerned about the waterways and the lands we all grew up on and breathe and work with than a lot of people want to give us credit for. We're going to have to make sure those waterways are left clear for us.

The Trent-Severn stretches from Trenton; it goes through my riding. The amount of boat traffic that goes up and down that each year is absolutely fantastic. When we see people from other countries express appreciation about the beauty of the Trent and being able to float up and down that, through all the canals and everything, it does me good to stand up and support the resolution this morning. Thank you and congratulations.

The Acting Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for High Park-Swansea.

Mr Shea: It's been very gratifying to hear the comments in the chamber today, to hear the comments from the member for York South, who represents the riding just immediately north of mine, who has echoed many of the points I raised during my outlining speech.

I appreciate the member for Riverdale, particularly her diligence in environmental issues. She expressed a number of questions about the issue before us, also reminding us that while this may appear to be symbolic, there is an opportunity, particularly in the three-year plan, to make this much more than symbolic, in fact to drive a recovery plan that's extremely important for this river, and I hope similarly for all the other freshwater resources that are so designated around this province.

I'd like to thank the parliamentary assistant of natural resources, the member for Halton North, who I think gave a remarkably fine historical setting for the river and reminded us of its contribution. He went back to 1615. I have to respond to the comments of the member for Riverdale: I was not swimming in the river in those years; it may only appear like that. But I do appreciate the comments of the member for Halton North, who also reminded us of the significant contributions of this river to the Niagara Escarpment and to the world biosphere and so forth. We should be conscious of all of that.

The member for Yorkview has given his comments about the quality of the water. I appreciate the comments of the member for Durham East, who has reminded us of the importance of the wetlands in his riding. That was picked up by the member for Quinte, who, in a very heartfelt way, reminded us of the determination we all have to restore the environment and make sure we leave a legacy for our children and their grandchildren that is one of honour.

I seek the support of this House in moving the Humber River one step closer to its designation.

BIOTECHNOLOGY

Mr Ted Chudleigh (Halton North): I move that in the opinion of this House, given that plant breeding and the science of biology (the study of living organisms) have been used for years in enhancing the quality of our food supply and are critical to the long-term economic and environmental sustainability of a safe agriculture and food industry in Ontario; and

Given the understanding that agricultural biotechnology is becoming an ever-emerging field of importance in transforming the global agriculture and food production industry by creating an increasingly competitive global food commodity market; and

Given that in a world of change, if government and industry fail to form strategic partnerships and lead the way as innovators towards this 21st-century industry, they face being driven out of the competitive global marketplace;

Therefore, the government of Ontario should recognize the importance of safe and cost-effective biotechnology and support well-researched science in advancing Ontario's agriculture and food production to ensure the industry's viability and competitiveness in the global marketplace and continue to work with all levels of government to ensure a safe food supply for the consumer and protect Canada's high standard and world leader status as a safe supplier of food; and

The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs should provide leadership and support to Ontario biotech initiatives and recognize their importance to future opportunities for growth, jobs and investment and continue to coordinate and support biotech research and development, and to lead efforts in pursuing investment from financial institutions for biotech and its applications for the agriculture and food industry in Ontario and become the political champion of this budding technological industry of the 21st century.

1110

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Pursuant to standing order 96(c)(i), the honourable member has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Chudleigh: I'm pleased to rise in the House today and discuss the future of agriculture and food in Ontario and indeed the world. Much like the Industrial Revolution was to mass production, or the invention of the microchip was to the advancement of computer technology, biotechnology is a 21st-century tool that will change agriculture and food production and productivity forever. My resolution calls on the government to recognize the importance of this new technology to Ontario's agrifood industry, provide leadership and support to Ontario's biotech initiatives, and champion this new field politically and in the financial community.

When I refer to biotechnology as a new technology, this isn't necessarily accurate. While many applications of agricultural biotechnology are new, the practice of plant breeding, seed selection and the study of living organisms have been around for over 10,000 years. In fact, as far back as 8000 BC people have saved the best of their crop to use as seed for the following year.

Today the study of genes has taken us to a powerful level of understanding, where we can use information to improve our overall quality of life. There are, however, many obstacles and myths to overcome while dealing with the powerful new applications of this science. Many of those in the House today will undoubtedly have heard about experiments regarding cloning of sheep and other organisms. There has been a mountain of speculation in the media as to the perils of these practices and their effects on people, especially when the technology is applied to humans.

Biotechnology, and specifically agricultural biotechnology, has in the past been poorly defined and generally misunderstood. Dr John Waugh, president of Calex Biosciences in Nepean, gives us far more poignant reasons to pursue this technology and highlights some very real concerns with the future of food safety. Dr Waugh wrote to me in support of this resolution, stating, "Agrifood biotechnology is not only one of the fastest growing industries in the world today, it represents one of the most critical of all human enterprises because of its potential to provide for safer foods, a cleaner environment and better health."

He goes on to say that recent outbreaks of E coli diseases in various parts of the world and BSE, more commonly known as mad cow disease, transmitted in beef in the UK, are clear examples as to why Ontario as a province should be concerned with food quality and food safety.

Canada is recognized as a world leader in the production of a safe food supply. The Canadian Seeds Act, the Canadian Feeds Act, the Health of Animals Act and the Canadian plant act, among others, provide the basis of regulations for food production in Canada. Through the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, the principles of this regulatory framework are put into action. The agency maintains standards, develops guidelines for testing and new products, provides a scientific assessment of risk and evaluation of products, and most importantly, ensures that the regulations contribute to growth and investment in the agrifood industry. Other countries, including Japan, have based their entire food safety systems on the regulatory framework we in Canada have enjoyed in developing and maintaining a safe food supply of their own.

That is why it is imperative that we take the steps necessary to lead the way for the development of biotechnology in Ontario. As recognized leaders in the safe production of food, Ontario has an opportunity to be a world leader in agricultural biotechnology and food production. We must be innovators and accept the challenge which is rightfully ours. If we fail to capture this opportunity, we risk being left behind in agrifood production and, more importantly, as world leaders in the safe production of foodstuffs.

Don't just take my word for it. There is a long list of supporters of biotechnology and of my resolution in the House today. They include the following organizations and individuals who wrote in support of this motion: Richard Penner, chair, and Paul van den Berre, vice-president, of the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association; Murray McLaughlin, president of Ontario Agricultural Food Technologies Inc, which represents over 30 industry groups including growers' associations and universities; Ray Mowling, vice-president of Monsanto; Terry Daynard, Ontario Corn Producers' Association; Larry Anderson, chair of the Ontario Bean Producers' Marketing Board; Tom Lassalin, chair of the Ontario Soybean Growers' Marketing Board; M. Rozanski, president of the University of Guelph; and Larry Milligan, vice-president of research, University of Guelph, to name a few of the supporters of this resolution. Seated in the members' gallery today are a few of these supporters of the resolution and I'd like to recognize them at this point and thank them for coming here and showing their support today.

If the names and faces of Ontario's biotechnologies haven't yet swayed you in support of my resolution, the following should: Recent estimates predict that worldwide sales from current biotechnology products will hit $150 billion by the year 2000. It is a technology that is already upon us. Ontario currently has the biotech infrastructure to become a world leader in biotech. If it does, it means much-needed jobs and stability for Ontario's farm community and rural heartland. Not only will there be jobs for Ontario's farmers, but a wealth of investment and growth for our intellectual community and the benefit of attracting global industries to Ontario with billions of dollars in spinoff potential. It's good for agriculture, it's good for safe food production and it's good for Ontario.

The proof is already here. Just last Friday, the Premier helped plant one of the 75 transgenic grapevines developed in Ontario at the University of Guelph to produce a stress-resistant grape that could revolutionize the growing of grapes and the production of wine in Ontario. The vine is expected to have a greater resistance to cold of between three to five degrees of Celsius. It doesn't sound like much but that's a tremendous amount in horticultural production, enough to avoid serious crop damage when winter temperatures fall to below minus 25 degrees Celsius.

Products like the grapevine and others currently being developed will give us a worldwide reputation as leaders in the field of biotechnology. The time is now for Ontario to lead the way to this new technology for the 21st century. If we fail to take this initiative, we'll be forced to follow in the footsteps of others and eventually get pushed out of the way. The innovators of agricultural biotechnology will not wait for us to get our act together while a rapidly growing world population, developing nations and depleting resources for food production put greater pressure on world food supplies.

Ontario must take this opportunity to provide leadership in Canada and the world in developing and producing products as a result of agricultural biotechnology. We must also, as a government, be willing to provide the political leadership and assistance necessary to get us there. Passing this resolution is a good start and it sends a signal to everyone involved in agriculture and food production that their government is listening and understands where the future is going but, more importantly, is committed to helping Ontario get there first. I ask the support of the House for this very important resolution.

Mr Pat Hoy (Essex-Kent): I am indeed pleased to speak to the resolution put forth this morning by the member for Halton North. This is the second time we've had a resolution put forth by a government member urging the Minister of Agriculture to get on and do his job, to get on and do what is normal within the realm of the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. It was not long ago in this House that the member for Huron stated that she thought that the minister should get out there and speak with the farmers and farm organizations of Ontario, and once again we have a member of the government stating that the minister should be acting.

In part, the resolution says, "The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs should provide leadership and support to Ontario biotech initiatives and recognize their importance to future opportunities for growth...." It says the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs should provide leadership; it doesn't say that he has been providing leadership. The member is urging the minister, Mr Villeneuve, to get on and do what is correct.

1120

I have often spoken about research and development in this House and I've stated before that for every dollar of investment there can be a $40 return in terms of research and development. That is a return that is absolutely phenomenal. We must be able to develop our research in regard to biotechnology and other areas here in Ontario. We can keep the technology here — we don't need to buy it from other sources — and then we can sell quality food products to a growing population not only here in Ontario, not only here in Canada, but indeed throughout the world.

We need research and development, as does any industry. Agriculture is no different than any other industry in the world. We need to maintain our competitive advantage with a proper regulatory system and of course financing and support from all levels of government.

Examples of what research and development has done for agriculture can be seen in the area of corn production where we've had a 100% increase since 1975 and we are using 25% less energy to achieve that goal. The same could be said of soybeans. There have been great advances in soybean technology. The member who has put forth this resolution would know full well that in the apple industry there have been great strides and great changes in how we produce that crop and how indeed it is grown.

What we have in Ontario currently is a situation where the University of Guelph and the agricultural colleges have come under one umbrella. The faculties have been downsized by 20% at the University of Guelph. For example, the effect on pig research is that when 12 researchers left, only five were replaced. I quote from an article in the Kent and Essex Farmer: "Generally, we're replacing one researcher for every three or four that we lose." That's sad.

Ontario Agricultural Food Technologies, whose president is Mr Murray McLaughlin, is made up of grower associations, 12 in number, universities, five in number, and from industry, 11, and they recognize the importance of agricultural technology here in Ontario. Indeed they are a non-profit organization formed to focus Ontario's participation in developing, promoting and adopting biotechnology in the agrifood sector of this province.

I have been a proponent of agricultural research for many years. We will support this resolution put forth by the member opposite. I hope this is a foreshadowing of a statement from the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs on his commitment to technology and biotechnology research here in Ontario, and I hope it happens soon.

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): I want to speak in support of this resolution for a few minutes, because this is another of those sort of mom-and-apple-pie types of resolutions that it's very difficult for any member to vote against. As the member for Essex-Kent has indicated, the resolution says, "The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs should provide leadership and support to Ontario biotech initiatives...." Really this is a resolution to encourage the Minister of Agriculture and Food to basically do his job, and how can any of us really object to that?

It also goes on to say that he should "lead efforts in pursuing investment from financial institutions." That is important as well, but we all recognize that government has a role to play in providing financial initiatives for business and for farmers as well and providing the resources to promote research into biotechnology as well. This isn't something that farmers are going to be able to do all on their own. This is something that they need some backing from the government to do as well.

My area is not an area that is predominantly farms or family farms — it's a suburban area that I represent — but we do have a major food producer in that area. It's Family Tradition Foods, formerly known as Green Giant. A few years ago Green Giant was going to take its plant out of the town of Tecumseh and take the jobs that were connected with it from the town, and it was the assistance that was provided by the then NDP government that ensured that the plant continued to exist and those jobs were maintained in the town of Tecumseh.

A couple of weeks ago I was back at that plant to celebrate the grand opening of a freezer-packing facility. That's a situation, an example, of where the government and industry in partnership can create jobs and advance the food packaging and production industry. Of course that plant uses farm products, products that have been developed and improved over the years because of improvements in production and hardier, resistant-type crops. They package things like corn, tomatoes, cauliflower, cabbage and products like that. They ship these all around the world. We know with further research, if they were products or vegetables that were more resistant to frost, they would be able to increase their production in that area, so this sort of research is something that is necessary.

We also have great production in our area of grapes that are used for wine-making. It's not just the Niagara Peninsula that specializes in the production of wine grapes. We have those down in Essex county as well. Once again, developments in more frost-resistant types of grapes would certainly benefit the wine-making industry in Essex county.

Having said that, we also know it's important to have a regulatory background when it comes to research and development in the biotech area. This is something that we all need to put our minds to as regulators, because we can't have research and development going on in an unfettered manner. We need to ensure that the products that are being developed are nutritious and safe and they increase product yield but they're not being done without any input from regulators. That's not such a big concern when it comes to fruit and vegetables, but it is a bigger concern when it comes to animal research.

The member who has introduced this resolution has made reference to the cloning of sheep that took place in Scotland, and that's an area that we all need to be concerned about, further developments in the cloning of animals and the development of different types of agricultural products.

Leadership and support of these initiatives are important, of course, but a strong regulatory framework in which this research and development can take place is important as well, because we've seen examples of what unfettered development of different types of products does to our environment. I'm thinking about products like CFC. Not an agricultural product, of course, but at the time that was developed there wasn't a great deal of thought about the future impact that CFCs were going to have on our atmosphere and the patterns in our weather. We've seen that has been very disastrous in increasing global warming. We want to make sure that when we're developing agricultural products we're not creating something that is going to be more harmful in the future, even though initially there may be increased yields and benefits to our communities.

I want to raise one other concern. I want to share some time with the member for Riverdale as well. We need to address our minds as to how we can ensure that increased advances in biotechnology are going to benefit people who are on the family farm and ensure that this isn't something that is going to just benefit large corporate farms. This is an expensive type of development and we need to ensure that when these products are developed, people who are on family farms are able to take advantage of that technology and the cost of it doesn't become prohibitive and therefore ensure that only large corporate farms are going to be able to benefit from this improved technology.

Just in closing, I support the motion and I do agree that government and industry need to form strategic partnerships, as has been indicated in the resolution, but those partnerships also need to include, on occasion, financial assistance and regulation as well.

1130

Mr Doug Galt (Northumberland): It's a pleasure for me to rise and speak on the resolution of the member for Halton North. Just before I really get into that, I'd like to set the record straight on some of the comments that were made by the member for Essex-Kent. I know he is not in his seat, but he is still in the House. It has to do with some of the criticism of the Minister of Agriculture and Food and some of the support.

I bring to his attention that some $5 million is being given to the University of Guelph, as I understand it, for research. Also, I suggest that our Minister of Agriculture and Food is an exemplary minister. He has been on three circuits of the province since election time, on consultation to find out what it is the farm community wants. I was very impressed to be at one of those last July and to hear the response from the public, and to be here last night to see the number of people in this House supporting the minister and his right-to-farm legislation being brought in for second reading last evening.

He also made reference to the member for Huron criticizing the minister, when in fact I was here last night — I thought he was — and she was complimenting the minister for the number of times he has been in her riding and consulting with the constituents of Huron county, so I was a little surprised with that comment.

Also, in connection with research and development in general in this province and what came out in the last budget, some $3 billion is to be spent over the next 10 years, in partnership with business and with universities and with the Ontario government. I don't know of any government in the past, particularly theirs, that really did that kind of thing for research and development. That is just to set the record straight and bring those to your attention.

Speaking on biotechnology, I'd like to talk for a few minutes about the father of high-yield agriculture. His name was Norman Borlaug and he was really the one who sparked the green revolution. If it hadn't been for him, literally millions of people today would be starving in this world.

We don't know too much about him, because he spent most of his time working in Third World countries. He developed the specialty rice varieties in the Philippines and the wheat varieties in Mexico. Really, in our part of the world, he received very little recognition until he received the Nobel Peace Prize back in 1970.

In the 1960s, when we had a population of between two billion and three billion in this world, there were great predictions that there was going to be massive starvation over the next few decades. There was even a book written at that time — it was a bestseller — called Famine 1975, but because of this plant breeder, we reversed the world food shortages that would have occurred. When you think about people who are starving today, it has nothing to with food production; it has to do with wars, particularly civil wars within countries. The food is there if we can get it to the people who desperately need it. It's quite a turnaround from what we had back in the 1960s.

I had the opportunity to work for a year in Indonesia, on the island of Java, in the city of Jogjakarta, and I saw first hand what this green revolution was doing for the people there, the biotechnology that created the green revolution. That was a country that was a massive importer of foods back in the 1960s and into the 1970s. Today that is a country that actually exports some food, all because of the green revolution. They are able to produce enough rice that they have small quantities to export, but at least they have come to a balance and are not in the position they were before.

They have a very rich soil, very heavy clay. Some dozen volcanoes spew out some very rich volcanic ash, so the quality of soil hadn't been a problem, but what they needed was biotechnology and to come up with the kind of plants so that they could plant rice three times a year and get the kind of production that was needed for that country.

The island of Java is about the size of southern Ontario, roughly 100 miles or 150 miles wide at the most, and they had a population when I was there of well over 100 million. They guessed it was in the neighbourhood of 120 million and growing quickly. Something like 50% of their population was under the age of 20 at that time. You can see the kinds of pressures that are going to come to a country such as that.

There is no question that more food, because of biotechnology, is being created on less land, and because of this — I'd like the member for Riverdale to take particular note of the fact — it preserves tremendous tracts of areas for wildlife habitat, and certainly into the future is going to preserve a tremendous amount of forest habitat for our wildlife.

Borlaug also had many other accomplishments. Shuttle breeding was one, for example, whereby they were able to speed up the disease resistance of certain strains of crops that previously weren't resistant. He developed cereals that could grow in various climates and various kinds of daylight. He developed a dwarf spring wheat that was very productive. Certainly he was very much recognized in the 1970s when the world global population took off.

Of course, it may be argued just a little bit, if you think about Malthus and his thesis going back, I believe, into the 1700s. His philosophy was that the world population would expand to fill the kind of technology of the day we had to produce food. If we hadn't come up with this technology, maybe the population wouldn't be increasing quite so rapidly, but we also know what the result of that would have been, and it would have been starvation. That's what would have limited the population.

Back in 1950 the global production of grain was in the neighbourhood of 692 million tons on an annual basis for a population of approximately 2.2 billion. By 1992, that production had increased to 1.9 billion tons of grain, and that was to feed a population of 5.6 billion. We increased the grain production 2.8 times and we increased the population by only 2.2. Obviously more people were being fed with a better quality diet. The global grain yields on a per acre basis have increased over that time period from about 0.45 tons per acres to 1.1 tons per acre.

As we look around Ontario and see some farms disappearing and we see some reverting to habitat for wildlife, the media develops a crisis about vanishing farms, when in fact the high-yield agriculture that is going on is very environmentally friendly, very favourable to developing and maintaining our wildlife habitat.

Just to quote from Borlaug himself, he stated, "Without high-yield farming, either millions would have starved or losses of pristine land would be 100 times greater than all losses to urban and suburban expansion." I think that's a quote very worth hanging on to.

If we were to feed today's population with organic farming, or the way we were doing it back in the 1940s and early 1950s, we would have to put under the plow another 10 million square miles, or put another way, we're saving that many from being plowed today. That equals, just for simplicity, about 1.5 times the size of South America.

If you were to project the population growth we have, we would be looking at putting another 25 million to 30 million square miles under the plow by 2050, and that's an area equal to North America, Europe and most of Asia. So it's certainly significant what high-yield agriculture is doing for the population of the world, especially the size we have today.

I mentioned a few minutes ago the support of OMAFRA and the Ontario government for research and development, and particularly OMAFRA through the University of Guelph: tremendous potential for biotechnology and what it can do to reduce the quantity of pesticides used. We don't need to put pesticides on nearly the number of acres. For example, we've tripled the production of corn, and therefore those two acres that do not get any pesticides are two acres that are left for wildlife habitat. Good biotechnology has reduced the quantity of antibiotics needed. It has reduced the soil erosion problems just because there's far less under the plow.

1140

There's a great industry in biotechnology. The potential by the year 2000 is for an industry of some $46 billion. In Canada in 1993, it was in the neighbourhood of $50 million and rising, and still on the increase.

There have certainly been a lot of interesting developments in biotechnology, including cloning, as mentioned by the member for Halton North, when Dolly was born. That raises all kinds of moral issues in our human population: Just how do we handle this kind of thing? We've handled many others. Recently we heard that you can take human embryos in the very early stages and examine them for some 27 various genetic defects and therefore save some people from some very, very serious genetic problems.

These are just some of the examples of biotechnology that's out there, that's working. We've evolved a long way in the last century because of it. I look forward to further research in biotechnology and therefore enthusiastically support the resolution being put forward by my friend from Halton North.

Ms Annamarie Castrilli (Downsview): Is there any doubt that science and technology have had a very positive and critical effect on our society? Is there any doubt that there's a high correlation between the kinds of products that have been created, the kind of research that has been done, and the quality of life that we now enjoy? Is there any doubt that research and technology are not just the domain of some academics in ivory towers, but are very real in our lives by creating jobs and by creating products which are worthwhile for us? Just a small example, a statistic that I think continually shocks many people: For every dollar that is spent in science, about $5 is generated in spinoff products, everything from transistors to better agricultural strains.

So this resolution is timely. The private member's resolution notes that the government has a responsibility and a critical role to play in the funding of science. That, of course, is a position that the Liberal Party has always taken and that I endorse. The fact is that many of the experiments that are required to be undertaken simply cannot be done without funding, and that funding will normally, most naturally, come from a government that is committed to the betterment of society.

Having said that, I think all of us have to pause and look at the record of this government and be shocked by what has happened since they took office. I'll be very brief and I'll simply cite for the record some of the statistics that I think will illustrate the point.

One of the very first things they did was to cancel a grant of $1.7 million to the Ottawa Life Sciences Council, a move that the director of the council said was "a serious blow" because the council had expected those funds to attract a further $9 million in private sector investment in companies working together to create medical devices and other biotechnology products.

Almost from the word go, there was little appreciation of the importance of science and technology, and biotechnology as well. Perhaps I could just cite from the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade and the estimates that have been tabled with the Legislature over the last three years.

If you look at the centres of excellence program, in 1995-96 it was reduced 2%; in 1996-97, another 2%; in 1997-98, another 9%.

The industry research program, 1995-96, 16% eliminated; 1996-97, a further 40%; 1997-98, a further 28%.

International agreements — those are agreements that are entered into with three countries in particular; it's a joint committee of researchers to expand areas of scientific and industrial exchange — 1995-96, 23% cut; 1996-97, 27% cut; 1997-98, 28% cut.

We move to the Radarsat program: totally eliminated in 1995-96 with the coming into power of this government.

The science and technology awareness program: totally eliminated in 1995-96.

The technical personnel program in 1995-96 was cut by 14%; in 1996-97, 52%; in 1997-98, 27% in addition to the other cuts.

The technology and adjustment research program in 1995-96 was cut by 62%; in 1996-97, by 93%; and eliminated totally in 1997-98.

The university research incentive fund in 1995-96 was reduced by 19%; in 1996-77, by 77%; in 1997-98, a further 78%. It went from a $3-million budget to $178,000.

This is shocking, quite frankly. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs can stand up and say that they have done so much in this sector, but the reality speaks otherwise. The reality is that this government has very little commitment to science and technology. I applaud the member for bringing his government to task. I hope he can do more than just pass a resolution. Let's have some real programs.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Riverdale): I'm pleased to be able to speak to this resolution today. I don't know a lot about biotechnology; I have to admit that. A number of years ago I did read a book by Jeremy Rifkin about more animal research, I think it was, animal biotechnology, where some alarming and unpredicted things happened to animals. The animals were being genetically changed and altered. Some of these animals ended up — I don't want to describe it here — just terribly deformed and in a lot of pain. I guess what it has to remind us is that we're dealing with nature here, that we're altering nature. When we do that, we have to be very, very careful.

The paragraph in this resolution that I like and that is significant for me and I believe allows me to be able to support this resolution is the second-last paragraph that says, "The government...should recognize the importance of safe and cost-effective biotechnology and support well-researched science in advancing Ontario's agriculture and food production...."

I don't know if people here are aware, but I know there is a major controversy in Europe, in the European Union, about genetically engineered crops. It's true they are further ahead of us there, so they've now reaped some of the rewards, but they've also seen some of the problems. The concern is about whether or not there has been enough research done to introduce certain varieties at the commercial level, which is what's been happening, and there have been problems.

In Canada, one of the few areas that I do know something about is that you may recall that there were genetically altered seeds in a canola variety of crop and then the product had to be withdrawn because it did not contain some of the genetic materials that the company that developed said were in it. That turned out to be a big problem, and that's an example of something that can go wrong if the research isn't done properly and isn't well verified.

We're hearing a lot today about the federal government because of downsizing and cutting and all kinds of, I suppose, other reasons. There's some controversy about Agrifood at the federal level creating a new food agency. I understand that they will be charged with the evolution of new foods. Now, this could possibly be a good thing. There could be problems as well, but certainly Agrifood now is a bit like the Ministry of Natural Resources on the provincial level: They have a conflict of interest.

1150

Agrifood has been very involved with the development of these new strains, these new genetic materials, the development of new foods, but they're also the regulator, as we see here with the Ministry of Natural Resources, for instance, having the Niagara Escarpment Commission turned over to them. They also are advocates for the aggregate or gravel industry. We see that real conflict here, and that is a conflict with Agrifood. As we get more and more into development — new strains, new genetically altered crops — it's very important that governments don't just look at the bottom line for the big corporations or at developing these new genetic materials, new foods, but that there is a strong regulatory body in place that makes sure the proper research has been done.

I know a little more about this as well; I believe it's soybeans. There was a genetically altered soybean which was designed to resist certain kinds of pesticides — I believe it was Roundup — and it works. You can spray tons of the stuff out of the sky from an airplane into the crop and the soybeans have been genetically altered so they can survive it, but everything else in the field can't.

You might think this is a good thing. I don't think it is. I don't think that developing crops that become totally dependent on dangerous pesticides, which is something we're trying to phase out, is a good idea. Of course, you have the added problem that as you develop more and more of these genetically engineered crops which can be resistant to certain kinds of sprays, well, guess what happens over time? A new kind of bug is developed. The bug will evolve to such an extent that it's a new, different breed of bug which can resist the particular chemical. It will not be bugged by it, in other words. Then you've got a whole new problem. You've got a whole new bug and you've got technology that's going to have to be created to deal with that.

I'm just pointing this out because I believe that in the process of developing more and more biotechnology, genetically altered seeds, you are playing with nature, and there are things, as has been discovered in Europe, that can go very wrong. The part of this resolution that I believe is important, which I will reiterate, is "support well-researched science." The Ontario government has to make sure there's an arm's-length body making sure that not just the short-term corporate bottom line is being looked at, but that consumer protection and the long-term viability of the many varieties of crops we have now will remain, because that is another danger as you develop more and more of these genetically altered crops. They've seen that in Europe as well. What happens is that some of the crops that exist today start to slip away. They disappear. You could end up losing a lot of the diversity within the agricultural system, which also is something that needs to be looked at.

I support the resolution. I'm sorry I didn't hear the mover of the motion, but I've read it and I support the words of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Environment and Energy to some extent. I believe we have to explore this, but I want to make sure that the money and the effort is put into the research so we know what we're getting into, so we know we're not putting crops out there which will cause huge problems later. That is the real danger, and I believe you would agree with that. With a proper regulatory system in place and good research, this should be carried through.

Mr Harry Danford (Hastings-Peterborough): I rise this morning in support of the member's resolution on biotechnology. It's encouraging to me that the agrifood industry is working hard to help ensure that we will all reap the benefits of new foods that are being, or will be, introduced into the marketplace. As a government, we have to make sure that we have a strong, more competitive agrifood sector. This will mean more job creation, investment attraction and certainly export development. The member for Halton Centre recognizes one of the tools that can help strengthen the agrifood sector.

He also raises some very important issues in his resolution. Almost every day there are stories in the newspapers or on TV about biotechnology. What is clear is that the agrifood industry must not only be responsible for the development of this emerging science but be seen to be responsible. I believe that by working with the industry we can do a better job both in developing food product innovations that meet consumer demand and in communicating the benefits of these innovations to the public.

This will benefit everyone, because that's the way we do things here in Ontario. Industry partnerships are beneficial in several ways, not the least of which is making good use of the research being conducted. There are several examples of this kind of cooperation already under way.

The Ontario government has partnered with the Food and Consumer Products Manufacturers of Canada. That will see the results of consumer research previously conducted in Canada, and indeed in other countries, combined with the information gathered here in Ontario. This was done through a grant from Grow Ontario. This government is supportive of any advancement that gives consumers what they want and deserve, namely, a wider choice of safe, high-quality food products.

I'd like to give the members an idea of the depth of support that OMAFRA already gives to biotechnology. In 1996, approximately $3.3 million of the total $39-million research budget was allocated to biotechnology research. Last summer the ministry launched a 1-800 number — 1-888-ONT-AGRI — to make it easier for investors and researchers to obtain information about the province's biotechnology industry.

We are an important part of Ontario agrifood technologies, a not-for-profit corporation aimed at coordinating and promoting the commercialization of technologies and products derived from biotechnology research. OAFT was launched in January and includes representatives of universities, agriculture groups, banks, agrifood companies and government. The ministry has committed $1 million over five years to this cooperative effort and is represented on its board of directors. It may interest members to know that the head of OAFT is Dr Murray McLaughlin, one of Canada's leading experts in biotechnology.

I would like to ask all the members of this House to support the member's resolution on biotechnology. As a government, we will continue to support biotechnology as a tool to allow the agriculture and food industry to prosper in the province of Ontario.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): In the short time I have to address this resolution put forward by the member for Halton North, I thought I'd focus in on one aspect. I want to read it because it's so important: "Given that in a world of change, if government and industry fail to form strategic partnerships and lead the way as innovators towards this 21st-century industry, they face being driven out of the competitive global marketplace."

This government has yet to adopt any strategic partnerships with Ontario's colleges and universities as far as research is concerned. The Conservatives have called for research to be driven by the interests of private sector business, with little regard for basic research — and as you know, that is extremely necessary — before any applied research can occur. They've not done any of that.

"The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs," the resolution says, "should provide leadership and support to Ontario biotech initiatives and recognize their importance to future opportunities for growth, jobs and investment and continue to coordinate and support biotech research and development."

I want to bring to the attention of the member and the ministers too, especially the Minister of Education, that the Smith report was presented. They had two reports: One was presented in December 1996, and the second one, on research, in May 1997. Yet we have not had any response. I just want to remind him that that report called for an increase in the research overhead infrastructure envelope, which is now at $23 million. The government responded energetically and put it to $27 million. What they asked for in the Smith report was that it should have gone to $100 million. They put a mere $4 million on it and said, "We are moving forward." It's quite inadequate.

1200

The report also recommended that the province develop a research policy covering basic and applied research and encompassing both the public and the private sector. As you know, I heard many of the members echoing the fact that this is a good step. The fact is that you have excluded universities, one of the most important partners in all of this research. There is no mention whatsoever of universities. Why would you exclude the universities, where actually most of the research is being developed?

While I support this resolution, because I can see what the member for Halton North is saying, his frustration, that the minister has got to get on with it and do his work and, as members have said, not only put the right amount of funds into research so the work can be done, my emphasis also is that the universities be included in all of what they're doing, because that's where it should be.

The Smith report released a framework for research policy for Ontario. It said that emphatically. Among the 20 sections, Smith recognized the value of the challenge fund and the tax credit announced in the budget and repeated the advisory panel's finding that base funding for research in Ontario is seriously deficient. If you recognize that, how can you move forward into the 21st century while pulling back so much of that money from research and development? The framework argues for clear public statements on the importance of research. You have not yet done any of that.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize very much that if this government is serious about promoting not only the development of biotechnology but also basic and applied research which would benefit all Ontarians, it should begin by implementing the research recommendations of its own report on research policy. The first step is to acknowledge the report; the second step is to act on it. A key component on acting on this report is clear: Talk to the colleges and universities of Ontario and include them in the planning and implementation of a research policy.

So far we have heard from many universities; they have come before me and have said that somehow they are being excluded from any sort of consultation that is meaningful. I commend you for bringing this forward and I commend you for telling the minister to get on with it and do his job.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Halton North, you have two minutes to reply.

Mr Chudleigh: It's a very short period of time to cover such a large subject, but I would thank the member for Essex South for his comments and refer him to the comments of the member for Hastings-Peterborough, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, as to the support the minister continues to give to the food and agricultural industry in Ontario.

The member for Windsor-Riverside indicated that this is a motherhood-type statement. It may well be inside this House, but let me tell you that it represents a strong statement to companies around the world that are involved in research and development in the biotechnology industry. They want to go and locate in provinces where they are needed and wanted. Ontario supports these initiatives, and the best researchers are attracted to those areas which have a benevolent climate to these types of developments.

The fears that are expressed by a number of members are perhaps indicative of the lack of understanding that many people in this country have, in that we take our food supply so much for granted. We expect our food supply to be safe. That doesn't happen by accident; it happens because we have one of the best food inspection and food development systems in the world, a system that is copied by other nations around the world and one which we should be extremely proud of. The quality of Canadian and Ontario foods in particular is never at risk, and it's something that I take great pride in. I think if you go to visit other countries where you have some concerns about the foods you eat, you'd never express those concerns when you're eating food at home.

I thank the member for Northumberland for his kind remarks. Dr Galt is perhaps, among us, the best qualified to give an opinion on these types of research, and his unqualified support of this resolution is indeed appreciated in this case.

The member for Downsview talked about the funding. The focus of our funding, as the member for Hastings-Peterborough pointed out, is far more targeted than it has been in the past, and I think that targeting of research dollars will make much better use of them.

I'd just say briefly that the member for Riverdale indicated that she honestly didn't know much about the subject, and I'd leave her comments at that. I thank the House for your support.

HUMBER RIVER

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): We will deal first with ballot item 99 standing in the name of Mr Shea. Mr Shea has introduced private member's notice of motion 73. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

BIOTECHNOLOGY

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): We will now deal with ballot item 100 in the name of Mr Chudleigh. Mr Chudleigh has introduced private member's notice of motion 70. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

All matters related to private members' business have been dealt with. The House will resume at 1:30 of the clock this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1207 to 1331.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

SCHOOL BUS SAFETY

Mr Pat Hoy (Essex-Kent): I have in my hand a news release issued September 22, 1997, by the St Thomas detachment of the OPP from which I would like to quote. It reads:

"With less than one month into the school year, the Elgin County OPP have received numerous complaints of vehicles failing to stop for school buses when they are picking up or dropping off children." It goes on to say: "The consequences for failing to stop for the bus when it has its 'bus signals' activated can be disastrous. A child could be severely injured or killed because you were either not paying attention or in such a hurry that you thought you could beat the...signals" on the bus.

Not three months ago a child was killed in a school bus accident near St Thomas.

Mr Palladini refuses to give the law teeth. He refuses to give the law a mechanism to convict drivers who pass school buses illegally. Raising fines is not enough to protect children. Your bill is a failure, Minister. There is no deterrent. Your job is to protect innocent children, not guilty drivers. Police should not have to beg drivers to heed the law. Lives are at stake. Pass vehicle liability.

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): I rise again in reference to the Plastimet fire in Hamilton and the absolute need for a public inquiry. I want to preface my remarks by saying that we have a tradition in Hamilton, a very proud history, that when it comes to community matters, regardless of the level of government and regardless of the party affiliation, we unite around each other and around a common cause. I've seen that since I've been in public office for 12 years now and I know it was there before I arrived.

I also referred yesterday to an editorial in Saturday's Hamilton Spectator, the fifth one, I might add, that spoke to a number of the questions that are outstanding. It refers to the fact that both Dominic Agostino and myself have called for the inquiry but that we are opposition. Then they go on to say:

"Lillian Ross, Trevor Pettit, Toni Skarica, Cam Jackson, Ed Doyle: Where are you? What do you think? Do you agree with Sterling and Wilson that calls for an inquiry are much ado about nothing? How about you, Premier Harris?

"Where do you stand on a short, concise, authoritative investigation into the Plastimet fire?"

I rise today to remind the Minister of Environment that one of his own members, Trevor Pettit, is on side with this issue. The minister keeps saying it's about politics and it's about partisan politics. The reality is that it is about community, it is about safety and it is about finding answers and making sure it doesn't happen again. I'm glad to see Trevor Pettit is on side. Now where are the other Tory MPPs? Where are they on this issue? Where are you standing up for our communities?

ONTARIO APPLES

Mr Doug Galt (Northumberland): Despite the hot, dry conditions farmers experienced this summer, all indications are that this year's apple harvest will be the second-largest in Ontario's history.

According to the Ontario Apple Marketing Commission, Ontario's producers expect to harvest about 15 million bushels of apples this fall. McIntosh, Empire and Red Delicious appear to be well above last year in volume. These are the three main varieties grown in Ontario, but we have lots of Spartan, Courtland, Northern Spy and Golden Delicious apples as well.

Now that I have everyone's attention focused on their stomachs, I'd like to remind the honourable members and the public that one of the premier apple festivals is set to take place this weekend. It's called the Brighton Applefest, and I'm proud to invite everyone to come to Brighton and enjoy a slice of what Northumberland apple producers have to offer.

The apple growers of Ontario are indeed an important component of our farming industry, especially in Northumberland, where the scenic apple route winds through miles of roadways lined with apple orchards.

The Big Apple at Colborne and the Applefest in Brighton make it a perfect destination for a fall drive in the country. That is all the more true this weekend, as we celebrate another great apple harvest in Ontario.

FAMINE IN NORTH KOREA

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): Today at Metro Hall in Toronto, a group of outstanding Canadians called Canadians for North Korean Famine Relief met to call for help for the famine in North Korea.

North Korea has experienced four straight years of significant natural disasters. The result has been a massive shortage of food and it is having a devastating impact, particularly on young people. The estimates of the death toll indicate that there are tens of thousands of young people dying of starvation in North Korea.

I appreciate that we have our own challenges in dealing with issues here in Ontario, but Ontario has always had a generous and caring attitude that responds to these enormous human tragedies, even when they are far removed geographically.

I understand the Bank of Montreal has agreed to accept donations. I have asked the Premier to consider providing some coordinating assistance on behalf of the people of Ontario. I recognize the challenges of a provincial government providing international relief, but certainly Ontario has responded to situations like this in Italy and Poland and Jamaica. I think Ontario could provide some coordinating activities. I realize that many of us disagree violently with the North Korean government, but in this case it is young people who are suffering terribly.

I would encourage, as always, Ontarians to have that caring, compassionate heart and to provide some assistance.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): Make no mistake about it: This government hurts kids. Its cuts to funding in education have forced five- and six-year-old youngsters in Niagara South in the Welland area to face hour-long rides to and from school, including kindergarten students. One parent reported to the Niagara South Board of Education earlier this week that his child actually spends more time on the bus than he does in the classroom with his half-day of kindergarten.

The Niagara South Board of Education has made it clear that it's as a direct result of the cuts in education funding of this government that it has had to eliminate some 25 buses and amalgamate bus runs, creating these longer and longer distances for five- and six-year-olds to travel.

This government simply doesn't understand that its cuts to education, along with a whole lot of other things, including health care, all in the name of funding a phoney tax break, two thirds of which is going to go to the top 10% of income earners, hurt some of the most vulnerable people in our society.

This government is prepared to attack the welfare of five- and six-year-old youngsters on their way to school and their way back home again so that those youngsters can be called upon to help pay for the phoney tax break.

When is this government going to understand that its policies are hurting people, hurting innocent people, hurting youngsters and their parents and grandparents, none of whom deserve to be attacked in the manner that this government is attacking them? I say shame on this government. When will it finally listen to the people of this province?

1340

FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth): My constituents want their government to be responsible and accountable, and I as their representative am here to help make this happen. Next Thursday I'll be introducing a private member's resolution to the House which asks that fiscal responsibility be compulsory for the province of Ontario.

Following the balancing of the budget by this government in the year 2000-01, my constituents and I would like to see legislation that would make it mandatory for future governments to balance their budgets and not overspend. I look forward to receiving support for this endeavour from the members of this Legislature, as I receive much support from the people of the great riding of Perth.

In 1995 the people of the province stated clearly that the time for government overspending had to end, governments should be accountable and spend within their means. They gave the job of straightening out the province's finances to the Mike Harris team, and I'm proud to say that we are succeeding.

As the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Ernie Eves, announced recently, we are on or ahead of schedule to balance the budget and we're witnessing the return of jobs, hope, growth and opportunity in Ontario.

The people of the riding of Perth made it clear to me during the election and afterwards that they wanted a provincial government that could provide quality service at a reasonable cost. They saw themselves living within their means while being forced to support a government that could not do the same.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-Walkerville): This morning we had reported that the medical director of trauma and the chief of emergency medicine at Hôtel Dieu and Windsor hospital are resigning effective the end of this year because, in their words, they can no longer be held responsible for what goes on in that emergency ward.

Another one of the doctors indicated that they are concerned and confused by the government and the government's inaction with respect to restructuring in the Windsor area.

Months ago, March of 1996, the Minister of Health for the government of Ontario acknowledged that money needed to be reinvested in the Windsor emergency rooms, indeed across Windsor's remaining hospitals, to accommodate the changes.

As of today, not one penny of that money has flowed. Patients' health is at risk, the quality of care in our community is at risk, and the minister hides behind the Health Services Restructuring Commission, which we now know is no more independent than any other of the façades this government has established.

Emergency care for patients in Windsor is at risk, health care for Windsorites is at risk. If this minister is not prepared to deal with it in a proper and expeditious manner, the minister ought to resign, and he ought to resign immediately.

EDUCATION REFORM

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): I've been following with great interest the Minister of Education's about-face on the length of the school year. I found it really striking to hear that the main reason he's backing down on his proposal to bring students into school a week before Labour Day is that his rural colleagues have talked to him in the last few days and they're very concerned about starting school before Labour Day. "There's a real problem in the farm community," the minister is quoted as saying. That of course is a very astute observation on the part of this minister.

What I find most striking is that what this tells us is that even the Conservative caucus members are more and more being shut out of decisions as the minister continues to ram through his $1 billion in cuts across the province. Because we know that at the end of the day, while the minister will continue to fudge back and forth, while he will continue to play with numbers, play with figures and play with days of the school year, his basic bottom line is to take $1 billion out of the system.

I just want to say to my Conservative colleagues opposite that I hope now you're beginning to twig to what the real agenda is, that in the same way you've brought the minister to his senses on this question of the school year, you will also bring him to his senses on the insanity of proceeding to cut another $1 billion out of the school system, because that would wreck greatly the system we have in place now.

TEAM CANADA 1972

Mr Jim Brown (Scarborough West): It is truly an honour today to rise in the Legislature to recognize the anniversary of a milestone event in Canadian sports history. September 28, 1972, at about 4:45 pm Canadian time, history was made. Everyone in Canada knows where they were at that moment. This was history — Canadian history. What government hasn't been able to do, a group of gutsy, spirited, fierce Canadians accomplished. Across the nation people jumped for joy and spontaneously sang O Canada.

Our nation was united as Team Canada '72 won the summit hockey series against the Soviets with only 34 seconds to go in the deciding game. Hearts, guts and spirit prevailed. Yvan Cournoyer, Serge Savard, Rod Seiling, Ron Ellis, Ken Dryden, Bobby Clarke and a whole host of great hockey players: just a few of the guys who never quit playing Canada's game the only way they knew how. We won. We beat them. Canada won. Shortly in the gallery we will have some of the members of Team Canada.

At the Ice Palace in Moscow, I sang O Canada with the 3,000 fans there. It was a passionate and proud O Canada, followed by, "We're number one." I was there. I was covering the series for the Toronto Sun. I remember the Russians taking away our horns. I remember them staring in amazement at a native Canadian in full head dress. I remember the snow in early September, the lineups, the hardships. The cry was, "Da, da, Canada; nyet, nyet, Soviet." We're number one, and with glowing hearts they did stand on guard for thee. They fought a war and they won.

This weekend marks the 25th anniversary of the summit series for hockey supremacy. The Soviets won two, lost one and tied one in Canada. After losing the first game in Russia, Team Canada had to win them all, and we did. Some of those players are here with us today and I honour them. Yes, thank you for uniting Canada. Thank you for exemplifying the Canadian spirit. Thank you for showing the world Canadian skill, guts, grit, spirit and heart —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): I would have let you go on, but the member for Durham East wants you to sit down. Sorry.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to let him finish his statement? Agreed.

Mr Jim Brown: Thank you.

Thank you, Team Canada, for uniting Canada. Thank you for exemplifying the Canadian spirit. You will long be remembered not only for what you did, but how you did it: in adversity, on foreign shores, with your backs to the wall and with sheer determination. I don't think Canadians will ever forget. Thank you, Team Canada, for making us very proud Canadians.

I will be tabling a resolution calling on the Ontario Legislature to support the inclusion of Team Canada '72, the whole team, in the Hockey Hall of Fame.

MEMBERS' PRIVILEGES

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I gave you notice of my intent to raise a point of privilege. I apologize that I wasn't able to give you further details, given the short time line and the fact that this just came up this morning. It's a point that I believe is quite a serious infringement not just of my own privileges as a member, but of those of committee members as a whole.

As I indicated in my notice to you, it relates to an issue that arose this morning in the general government committee. That committee is charged, as you know, by order of the House with holding hearings last week, today, and then clause by clause next Thursday on Bill 148, which is the companion bill to Bill 103, the megacity bill.

One of the groups that appeared before us last week at the request of the committee was the transition team. Because the committee was not able to hear them for the full time because of disruptions that happened in the morning of last week, there was agreement that the transition team members would return today during the second day of hearings.

This morning at the committee we learned that they would not be coming, and I put a motion to the committee, which the committee passed, to have the Chair or the clerk again contact the transition team and request that they attend. I did that at the time, as I explained, because I believe very strongly that the transition team, as a group that is appointed by order in council, as a group that's dealing with the issues of implementation of the megacity, is crucial to be at the committee for us to complete our questioning of them so that we, as the committee that is dealing with Bill 148, which also has as its main objective the bringing about of the megacity, have the opportunity to question them on the work they are doing.

The refusal of the members of the transition team to attend I think raises a serious question and a serious issue about our abilities as members of the Legislature to do our work, and that is compounded when two things happen which are true in this case.

1350

The first is when it is a committee that has requested that presence; it's not an individual member of the committee that wants to have a particular group of people there.

Second, I believe it is fundamental when we are dealing, as we are here, with a body that is appointed by order in council — it's not a group of citizens out there, it's not elected people at other levels of government; it's a body that is appointed by order in council and a body that is dealing more directly and is dealing exactly with the nature of the issue that's in front on the committee, which is the transition to the megacity.

I think it poses serious limitations and hence causes an infringement on not only my rights as a member of that committee but indeed other members' rights to be able to properly do our work if there is an outright refusal by those individuals to attend to the committee. I ask you, Speaker, to rule on that.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Let me just say first, before the government House leader gets up, that I, as Speaker of this House, will not hear nor am I allowed to rule on points of privilege at committees. Those are to be taken up at committees.

If the committee determines that they would like me to hear points of privilege, they then have to report to this House by way of the committee itself. If the committee chooses to report here, I can hear it, but until that takes place, I can't hear a point of privilege taken by an individual member at the committee level.

Further, there is a process by which a witness may be compelled to attend before a committee, but such a process again requires a motion properly made and passed by this House.

In essence, I say to the member for Dovercourt, your argument or discussion need be taken up at the committee level. If you don't find success there, the committee then must request the Speaker to hear submissions with respect to the point of privilege. Until that time happens, until I receive that request from the committee as a whole, I cannot seize the issue.

Mr Silipo: May I just rise on a very brief point?

The Speaker: A brief point, the member for Dovercourt.

Mr Silipo: I would just point out to you that I raised the issue of privilege this morning with the Chair of the committee. I was told, and I believe the Chair of the committee was correct in doing this, that he has no authority to deal with questions of privilege. I hope you can appreciate the position that this puts individual members of the committee in.

I hear and I appreciate your point that the committee can make certain decisions. But what it does is it leaves this vacuum, then, if a member is told that a committee Chair does not have the authority to rule on a question of privilege and that the only resort is to the Speaker, and the Speaker says that I have to go back to the committee Chair. If that's what you're telling me to do, then fine, that's what I will do. Otherwise, you're creating a vacuum here in which the committee Chair says, "Go talk to the Speaker," and the Speaker says, "Go talk to the committee Chair."

The Speaker: Let me just help you clarify the Chair of the committee's ruling. He or she — I'm not even sure who it is, to be honest — from what I understand is fundamentally saying the same thing that I'm saying. In essence, if they are to hear the point of privilege at the committee, they must do so by the committee, if they want to report it out to this House. They can't do it by an individual member, that particular point of privilege. I believe what they're telling you is that the only way to hear this point of privilege at this level, in this place, is for the committee to report it out here.

Mr Silipo: Speaker, I'm not arguing on that point. What I'm seeking some clarification on is that it seems to me what you are saying is that as an individual member I do not have the right to raise a point of privilege at a committee of this House and have the committee Chair rule on whether there is or is not a point of privilege, because what I was told by the Chair this morning was that he could not rule on that.

The Speaker: I understand the point you are making, that your point of privilege in committee was made, but the Chair ruled that they couldn't hear your point of privilege and they suggested you take it up here.

Mr Silipo: That's right, and that the only person who could deal with it was you.

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): That's not true.

The Speaker: Order. You've got to withdraw that comment. You can't say that. You should know that, member for Scarborough East. You can't say that.

Mr Gilchrist: I didn't —

The Speaker: No, you said, "That's not true." I heard you very clearly say that.

Interjections: Withdraw, withdraw.

Mr Gilchrist: I certainly withdraw that, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: You're going to have to give me an opportunity to review it and see exactly what happened, to review the situation and report back. It's only fair. I don't want to get all this information at this place, at this time. I think I should try and get the information myself on a firsthand basis, if the member for Dovercourt would allow me that opportunity. I will report back subsequently.

VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): I'd like to take this time at this point to introduce some guests in the Speaker's gallery. I'd like to inform the members of the Legislative Assembly that we have in the Speaker's gallery today a South African parliamentary delegation. Please welcome them.

We also have in the gallery today, whom the member for Scarborough West was speaking about earlier, five members of Team Canada 1972: Mr Rod Seiling, Mr Ron Ellis, Mr Yvan Cournoyer, Mr Frank Mahovlich and Mr Bill White. Welcome, gentlemen. And the waterboy, Mr Jim Bradley.

ORAL QUESTIONS

EDUCATION REFORM

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): My question is for the Minister of Education. We have just learned that teachers across this province are ready to take job action in response to your attacks on them and on education. They are ready to go on strike and you are about to get the fight you've been looking for. This is a very frightening time. It's a frightening time for students, who are worried about their education; it's a frightening time for parents, who are worried about their kids and about how they're going to manage. It's a frightening time for the teachers, who feel that you have driven them to this.

You have the crisis you set out to create. You've played a game of brinkmanship. You've taken students and parents to the edge of the precipice. I ask you this afternoon, will you pull back from the brink? Will you back off your $1 billion of cuts? Will you back away from firing 6,000 teachers? Will you do this now before it is too late to avoid this crisis?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I think the member for Fort William will know that a matter of weeks ago I went to Niagara-on-the-Lake. I met with the heads of the unions that represent teachers in Ontario and I asked them that day, as I would ask them again today, to reduce the level of rhetoric, to reduce all the sabre rattling, to come in and talk with us and find resolutions to the problems we have so that we can get that better system of education for our students. I think that's the responsible way of doing things.

I believe that at this point in time it would be useful for the member for Fort William, and indeed every member of this chamber, to take that same approach, to take the approach of saying, "Let's have a look at the issues that we have and let's find the solution."

This government heard the teachers' request regarding the importance of their right to strike and we honoured that. We heard their request in terms of having principals remain in the bargaining unit and we honoured that request. We listened.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Answer, please.

Hon Mr Snobelen: We heard their request in terms of their right to represent teachers and we honoured that request. We have a track record of listening carefully to what people have to say, and we'll continue that.

1400

Mrs McLeod: You said you would talk to teachers, but in fact you laid down ultimatums. Your ultimatum came right down to cutting $1 billion more out of education and firing thousands of teachers, and that ultimatum is still on the table today. You are talking about saving money by having some 6,000 fewer teachers. You don't improve education by having 6,000 fewer teachers. You don't improve education by having fewer teachers teaching more students and more classes. This is not about improving education. This is only about cutting money so that you can pay for your tax cut. It has always been about paying for your tax cut.

I ask you again today, will you back off your plan to cut $1 billion out of education? Will you back off your plan to cut more than 6,000 teachers? For the sake of our students, will you do this now?

Hon Mr Snobelen: It's exactly that kind of theatrics that I think raises the boiling temperature in the province of Ontario. It's exactly that kind of rhetoric. It's not useful for our students. It's not useful for improving education.

The member opposite should know that we have introduced in this House a bill that, if it passes, would have the effect of allowing us to cap the growth in class size — the growth in class size that happened while your government was in power, that happened while your government was in power in response to the social contract, some 7% increase in class sizes.

Our government wants to make sure that doesn't happen for and on behalf of our students in this province. We want to make sure their instructional time, their time on topic, their time on subject in school increases. We want to make sure that teachers get to spend most of their time with their students in class, where education happens, on what's important to our students. That's the purpose of the bill we put before this House. I think the public of Ontario knows that.

The Speaker: Answer, please.

Hon Mr Snobelen: I'd encourage the member for Fort William to communicate that, communicate it right across Ontario, because it's important for our students.

Mrs McLeod: Minister, you've been trying to pick a fight with Ontario teachers from the time you became Minister of Education. You have described teachers as being underworked and overpaid. You have consistently devalued teachers. You have tried to portray everything that is done outside the classroom as being administrative waste. You've accused teachers of being lazy and unprofessional and you've been eager to see professional teachers replaced by non-teachers so you could save money. You have pushed teachers into a confrontation and now you are going to get one, and the issues on the table are $1 billion more out of education and 6,000 fewer teachers.

Minister, I say to you, this is not about who gets the best spin; this is not about who wins. This is about students and their need to be in school. Clearly you are not ready to resolve this crisis you have created, and I don't believe you can. Will you step aside so someone else can?

Hon Mr Snobelen: For the third time today I'm going to ask the member for Fort William to drop the rhetoric. The member for Fort William knows that I have never said any of those things about teachers. The member for Fort William knows that I'm on record from day one in this ministry as saying that I have the highest regard for the profession of teaching and for teachers. She knows that I have from day one on this job said consistently, day after day after day in this House, that teachers are the backbone of our education system.

I believe our system has failed teachers. I don't think it's given them the support they need to make the difference they want to make with their students, and that's why step by step we're building a better education system for Ontario.

The member for Fort William perhaps would like to take the time today to stand up and withdraw her comments, because clearly they're contrary to the record that's very clear, established by this minister and this government, in support of the teachers and the students and the parents in Ontario.

The Speaker: New question.

Mr Joseph Cordiano (Lawrence): Minister of Education, it's obvious to everyone but to you that you should step aside and do so immediately. You've lost all credibility. One day you announce that you're extending the school year, and then you wake up the next morning and announce: "Oops, I've made a mistake. I've changed my mind." Whom did you consult? It wasn't parents, it wasn't teachers, it wasn't students. It was your Tory back bench. That's who you consulted.

You've created nothing but chaos and confusion. It's time you realize it's time for you to step aside. Minister, will you do the right thing today and step aside because you've lost any credibility with the people of this province?

Hon Mr Snobelen: On behalf of my colleagues, who together have worked very hard over the course of the last couple of years to take on the tough questions, to take on the tough issues in education, to take on a system that had a funding mechanism that left some students as second-class citizens in this province, that had no measures of performance, no measures of quality, that had allowed students and teachers to be trapped in mediocrity — that's what the system of education that we inherited had done.

My colleagues and I have worked very hard to take on the tough questions to help build a better system for our students. That's what we all want. I'm proud of our record. I'm proud of building step by step that system for our children and I'll remain proud of it as we go through the reading of this next bill.

Mr Cordiano: Minister, how can anyone believe you when you keep changing your mind? You say you'll protect classroom size, and you want to get rid of 6,000 teachers. You talk about improving education and then you want to take another $1 billion out of the system. One day you play hardball with the teachers and the next you want to sit down and talk to them, and then you're back to playing hardball.

No one's fooled. Everything you have to say is nothing but a snow job. You've lost all credibility. I ask you again, when will you step aside and let someone else take over who can do the job properly? Step aside, Minister.

Hon Mr Snobelen: The honourable member opposite and I might disagree on the type of job. Perhaps the member opposite believes the government of the day should not ask tough questions, that perhaps the government of the day should not ask, why is it our students perform in the middle of the pack on international and pan-Canadian tests? Why is it our costs are higher than other provinces, while our student performance is lower? Why is it our elementary school teachers in Ontario spend as much time in class as their colleagues across Canada — they are at the national average in terms of the time they spend in class with students — but our secondary school teachers are at the lowest time in terms of the amount of time they spend in class?

Those are tough questions and I appreciate that, but they're asked not on behalf of this government, they're asked on behalf of the future of the students of this province. I believe that's what a responsible government does; it asks the tough questions and it listens to the responses.

Mr Cordiano: You are the Minister of Education for the province of Ontario. When you say something — and don't forget that — people have the right to expect that you've done your homework and that you know what you're talking about. But you want everybody to believe that two plus two equals five. Let me give you the basic math. Classrooms minus teachers minus funding equals lousy education. That's what you're giving the parents and teachers of this province, and the students are going to have to put up with that. That's why I'm asking you again to step aside. Lousy education is unacceptable for the students of this province. Will you do the right thing and step aside?

Hon Mr Snobelen: There's maybe a more fundamental equation the member opposite would like to keep in mind. It is simple: mediocre education plus high debt — the $41,000 per student in debt you left every student in Ontario — equals no future for the young people of this province. We have taken on those issues. We have taken them on. We've asked the tough questions. We're listening for the right answers. We're putting that system together piece by piece for our students, for their future. That's the reason my colleagues and I are working so hard to make the improvements as quickly as we possibly can.

HOSPITAL FINANCING

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): A question for the Premier: For two years now we've been telling you that your cuts to hospital funding are damaging patient care across this province. You want to ignore that. You want to ignore the fact that you've cut over $600 million from hospital budgets. You insist on moving ahead, bulldozing people, shoving your cuts and changes down people's throats in community after community.

Today there were two studies released that you ought to have a look at: One is done by the University of Western Ontario school of business that examines what's happening with hospitals; the other is done by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce looking at hospital budgets. They both conclude that your cuts to hospitals and hospital budgets are damaging patient care all across this province. They lead to this question: Will you acknowledge now what everybody else knows, that you are damaging patient care? Will your government stop the cuts to hospitals?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): As you know, the context in which you're asking the question is that you are talking to a government that has increased health care funding to its highest level in the history of Ontario. Secondly, you are talking to a government that is carrying forward with the restructuring proposals that your Premier and your minister and your government started.

We have had some who have expressed concerns with the speed and the pace of those changes. As you will know, many hospitals have said, "Yes, the reductions you made in the first two years were quite appropriate and needed to be made, and so did the restructuring." However, at the same time they said, "Unless the restructuring gets along quicker — and thank God your government's there; the other two sat on it for 10 years — we don't believe there are any other savings in those budgets to reinvest in other areas." We concurred, we agreed, and we announced that any further reductions are on hold until we get the restructuring proposals up and running.

1410

Mr Hampton: Premier, you should have a look at this report by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. It looks at the budgets of 192 hospitals across the province, and it shows that many of them are in big trouble. It says you cannot cut hospital budgets and at the same time demand that they restructure the system. You can't do it.

Premier, the people you cite, for example, the Ontario Hospital Association, call upon you — they released these reports — to make a commitment today that there will be no further cuts to hospital budgets during the term of your government. Will you make that commitment today?

Hon Mr Harris: What they specifically asked for was that there be no cuts to hospital budgets until the restructuring is there, until we fund the restructuring, until the capital reinvestments are made, until the community reinvestments are made. We have made that commitment. We have made it to them. The Minister of Finance has made that commitment and I'm happy to give you that commitment today.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Final supplementary.

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): In fact, the Premier is mistaken. What the Minister of Finance has said is that they will not be cut in the 1998-99 fiscal year. That does not talk about the restructuring and the time frames according to these reports.

You've been given independent advice. This report from the Ivey business school says "less nursing time per patient, reduced patient supervision, slow recording of patient data, high employee stress, reduced level of cleanliness in facilities."

The real condemnation in these reports is that they set out clearly the problem with your agenda. We've been telling you all along that you cannot cut hospital funding and expect them to restructure at the same time. But you had to bull it through. Hospitals can't maintain patient care, drop budgets by over 7% and change all their clinical practices all at the same time. Taking care of sick people costs money, and restructuring costs money. You're destroying the ability of hospitals to do either one.

The question —

The Speaker: Thank you, member for London Centre. Premier?

Hon Mr Harris: We agree with the reports. The Ministry of Health sponsored the press conference today. Let me read to you from the Toronto Hospital, "We believe the revenue reduction targets for the first two of the three-year cycle were stringent but appropriate. The increased efficiencies were long overdue and we believe the targets were correct. We understand the policy regarding the third year has changed and essentially the hospital industry as a whole will be flatlined. The Toronto Hospital applauds that decision."

We have given an unqualified commitment. We've committed $2 billion in new money to hospitals to assist with the restructuring. We've committed new capital dollars to assist with the restructuring. We have committed as well that there will be no reductions to hospital budgets until the restructuring takes place and those supports are in the community. In the meantime we are funding those restructurings. So we've made all those commitments. They are still there, and the hospitals continue to tell us that is appropriate.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a question to the Minister of Labour, but I would say it's obvious the Premier still isn't listening. Minister of Labour, you have made some incredible changes to the way quasi-judicial appointments are made to bodies like the Ontario Labour Relations Board and the Workers' Compensation Board. You have made the process totally partisan. You have tried to ignore the fact that you've done this.

Last night, Mr Ron Ellis, the very respected founding chair of the Workers' Compensation Appeals Tribunal, made a very important speech to the Canadian Bar Association. Mr Ellis said the Harris government's policy on appointments to that tribunal and to the Ontario Labour Relations Board "is fundamentally different from anything that has been seen before in Ontario, and it is a policy that, in my respectful opinion, is incompatible with the judicial integrity" of the administration of justice.

What are you going to do to restore judicial integrity to the —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you. Minister.

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Minister of Labour): Perhaps I should also quote from what was said last night in the speech by Mr Ellis. He is referring here to the NDP, and he indicated:

"The ours-for-theirs strategy first really came to life in Ontario with the election of the NDP government. As far as I recall, with the NDP the focus of the strategy was principally on agency chairs. And it was under the NDP that the strategy made its first appearance in the labour field. I refer here to the mid-term change of the labour relations board chair that occurred shortly after the NDP formed the government."

Let me say to the leader of the third party that our government will continue to ensure that the independence, the impartiality and the integrity of the board is protected.

Mr Hampton: Let me say that I am impressed by how selectively the minister can quote from a speech. Let me quote the very next sentences that come in this speech. He says:

"I am not personally aware of any instance of incumbent non-chair adjudicators being dismissed or refused an expected reappointment to make way for the NDP government's appointments. And, with a few...exceptions in the filling of vacancies, the NDP government by and large continued" to follow a "competitive selection policy for adjudicators, including...the active involvement of agency chairs."

Minister, what Mr Ellis says is that for the first time in Ontario, we have a government that is inflicting partisan politics into the appointment of quasi-judicial officers.

The Speaker: Question, please.

Mr Hampton: He called on all lawyers across the province to become active in demanding a system which will allow for the survival of a credible administrative justice system.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon Mrs Witmer: Perhaps the member of the third party didn't read the quote, but I won't repeat it. I will simply indicate that he does stress the fact that this issue came to life in Ontario with the election of the NDP government. I want to stress again that our government is going to ensure that the impartiality, the independence and the integrity of the board is protected.

The Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): The Ontario Labour Relations Board is about to accept awesome new responsibilities as a result of your restructuring under Bill 136. You know that you had to give those powers over to the labour relations board when it was seen that your proposed commission was going to be stacked and packed with Tory hacks, and that was unacceptable to the credibility of the process of labour relations in this province.

We have heard in committee hearings today, as short and as strange as they are, that two things are needed for the board: first, increased funding, and second, to restore the integrity of the appointments to the labour relations board before they're given these new responsibilities.

With regard to Bill 136, what exactly are you going to say today to restore the confidence in the new appointments you're going to have to make as a result of the increased responsibilities the labour board is about to take on under Bill 136?

Hon Mrs Witmer: I simply say that I understand the public hearings on Bill 136 have been going extremely well; in fact, I see some very supportive quotes.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Members for Cochrane South and Hamilton Centre, come to order.

Hon Mrs Witmer: The police association indicates:

"We have had extensive meetings. We appreciate the time and energy. We believe the sessions have provided a forum to address our issues in a meaningful and productive fashion. We have gained a better understanding of the government's issues and believe that they, in turn, have gained better insight into the mechanics of our system."

OSSTF says they welcome and applaud the moves that have been made. OPSEU says, "We welcome the amendments being proposed to Bill 136."

The Speaker: Answer, please.

Hon Mrs Witmer: It's obvious that people have recognized that this government, in order to achieve its objectives, is quite prepared to be flexible and —

The Speaker: Thank you.

1420

HOSPITAL FINANCING

Mr Gerard Kennedy (York South): I'd like to address a question to the Premier. I'd like to bring you back to the report from the Ivey school of business and one from the CIBC about your Harris hospital system.

Your earlier answers indicate that you don't understand the gravity of what they said today. Every measure you've taken with hospitals has created significant problems. It has put nurses and doctors in a state of stress. It has taken away from hospitals the very people they need to be able to manage change properly.

The CIBC says you took away $604 million, and you can't deny that. With that $604 million, you took away a lot of care.

Today may be one of the last chances you're going to get to be reasonable, in the sense that the association is willing to talk to you. There still is a sense that the crisis out there in Ontario hospitals can be averted.

Will you do two things: Will you promise to put off the funding cuts until beyond the year 2000, to cancel them entirely, and will you put money back in the system to take care of the problems presented today?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I'll put it off as long as it takes to make sure that the $2 billion we're flowing, the capital dollars we're flowing, the community supports we're flowing, are all in place. If it takes five years, fine; if it takes two years, fine; if it takes three years, fine.

Second, yes, we do commit to make sure that those reinvestments are in place and that the timing is right and to work with the Ontario Hospital Association, as it has asked us to do. I don't know why you have trouble taking yes for an answer.

Mr Kennedy: The reason is because yes in this House has not meant yes in the hospitals. Last year you tried to give them $21 million less than was promised in the public allocations. Last year, your minister said he would give $120 million more to home care that would allow them to accept some of those patients who are being kicked out of hospital quicker and sicker. Instead, he spent $124 million less, $4 million less than the year before. On community mental health you said you would spend $25 million more, and you spent $1 million less.

That's your record, Premier. You need to do better. You need to give patients, hospitals, nurses and doctors an assurance, a guarantee that there will be no cuts to hospitals in your mandate and that if they need it, they can get more money to make up for the money you've taken away, and replace some of the services, like in Windsor today, which occasioned the resignation of emergency doctors, frustrated with you, Mr Harris, and your inability to make the hospital system one of excellence. They said that today. They said: "This hospital system no longer has excellence. It's barely satisfactory."

Premier, will you do this today?

Hon Mr Harris: Yes, we absolutely guarantee that there will be no cuts to health care funding. In fact, we'll continue our policy of increasing health care funding. We also commit to two billion in restructuring dollars to assist with that: $2 billion in hospital and health care restructuring, over that process.

I would give you some quotes, since you are happy with quotes. MacKinnon, the OHA: "strong supporters of progressive and constructive change...not only support the change, but we create change...increased strain on health care delivery services not a new phenomenon but a pattern that has been with us for many years. Liberal and NDP...cut 11,000 beds while hospital visits rose by 300,000." The Ivey report: "The Ivey report is not a study on patient care outcomes."

What we are getting is a report on how we can go from the disaster you left us to quality, first-class, modern health care in Ontario in the 21st century.

FRANCHISE BUSINESSES

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): A question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: The member for Sault Ste Marie has been urging you for the past year to take action on the regulations to protect small business owners who are involved in franchise operations. You continue to say you're going to do something, but you never do.

I have been reading the latest issue of Franchise Times. It's an American publication. It says something interesting about Ontario in the current issue:

"Large franchise corporations shouldn't worry about new regulations in Ontario to protect small business franchisees. There has been a change in government in Ontario, along with a change in the minister in charge of the franchise industry. I think it is becoming more and more dubious as to when, or if ever, this sort of regulation will ever be introduced."

Minister, it's pretty clear that the large franchise corporations understand that you're not going to do anything to protect small business. What's your response? Are you going to do something or not?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Yes, we're doing something.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Supplementary.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): That response is typical of the responses I've been getting over the last two years.

Tomorrow this minister is expected to make an appearance at the huge franchise show here in Toronto. This will be a great occasion for him to change his mind and tell the big franchise operators that Ontario is no longer going to be a happy hunting ground for them.

Terry and Les Stewart from Nutrilawn were in the House last week. They laid a complaint before the franchise association, on your suggestion that the franchise industry should regulate itself. Three days later, they had their loan called by Nutrilawn.

New Canadians and immigrant families are one group of entrepreneurs particularly affected by this. Tomorrow, you meet with the franchisors. Will you tell them that you're going to regulate?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: The member knows full well that we have a meeting on a regular basis with both parts of this sector, the franchisors and franchisees. This is an attempt for the first time to bring some balanced legislation to this province. I could remind the member that when you were in government this did come up before. This is not a new item for you to deal with. In fact, your government indicated a certain amount of interest in doing something, and you know what? It did nothing.

We are now coming forward with something balanced. It's very important for us to come forward with something that's going to be balanced, certainly something that requires disclosure requirements, a piece of legislation that has a code of ethics, has a right to associate. All these various things that have been coming up as concerns from franchisees we will be addressing.

We feel it's very important to us. We are reacting to the interests of the small franchisees because we are cognizant that there are a lot of people involved with this, small business people, who we have a concern for. So the answer is yes.

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: When the leader of the third party was addressing his question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, he made reference to having read the particular franchise journal that he spoke of. I heard from the area of the member for Quinte the interjection, "Was it in Braille?" I don't know for sure what that was supposed to mean, but it seems to be beyond merely even insensitive in the context of understanding what it means to be blind and to require to read by way of Braille. I'm asking if that remark "Was it in Braille?" in response to the leader of the third party —

The Speaker: The member for Welland-Thorold, let me just say quickly I did not hear it. I will go to the member for Quinte. If he said it, he may withdraw it or choose to do whatever he chooses to do. Member for Quinte.

Mr E.J. Douglas Rollins (Quinte): I withdraw it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

TEACHERS' COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is for the Minister of Education. I was under the impression that the Minister of Education announced last Friday that, in response to the demands of the various teachers' unions, the Education Quality Improvement Act would not infringe upon the rights of teachers to bargain collectively or strike. On Monday the Leader of the Opposition claimed that this was not the case. He claimed that the Education Quality Improvement Act somehow secretly allowed cabinet to strip the teachers of Ontario of their right to strike.

I ask the minister, does Bill 160 take away the right to strike, could it ever and does the minister intend to?

1430

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I want to thank my friend and colleague the member for Mississauga South for the question because I believe this may have been an attempt to boil the water a little higher, to turn the temperature up on the part of the Leader of the Opposition, which I think is unfortunate.

I made an announcement before the introduction of the bill that said that in the consultations we'd had with teachers' unions — and I had them one on one following review of Bill 100 — we'd heard their principal issues: making sure they had the right to represent teachers, making sure the principals remained part of the bargaining unit and the importance they placed around the right to strike. We made that announcement before we put the bill in the House.

The Leader of the Opposition made reference a few days ago to a section of the act that he said would impinge on the right to strike. We have outside counsel now that has given us a report that says the enabling legislation would not extend to permit the provincial cabinet to enact legislation relating to labour relations matters. It's very clear, and I regret the fact the Leader of the Opposition, who's a lawyer, didn't get this kind of information before he turned the temperature up in the circumstances in Ontario.

Mrs Marland: This clause that the Leader of the Opposition has interpreted rather strangely is part of the package of reforms that is before the House. What is its purpose?

Hon Mr Snobelen: I regret the Leader of the Opposition didn't investigate this matter a little further, because he would have found that the purpose of this section in the bill was actually to protect students during the transition period, particularly the rights of francophone and anglophone students who may have their schools switched during the course of this transition. This part of the bill makes sure they have the educational services they need, want and deserve. That's why it's there: to protect the children of the province.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): My question is to the Minister of Finance and it has to do with the property tax bill. He will know there is growing concern in the business community about the impact of the property tax bill, that the details are coming very late. We're dealing this afternoon with part of it. But the business community certainly is worried. We are only three months away from the new tax year.

They've watched with interest — I guess that's one way to describe it — the removal of portions of education from the residential property tax, but they were surprised to find they still will be paying, I gather, exactly the same amount for education on their property tax, plus now picking up social housing.

They heard the promise from the Premier that residential property taxes should drop over the next couple of years by 5% to 10%. Earlier this week, the government announced that it would be freezing the revenue from residential property tax and imposing a uniform mill rate on residential properties. The question is, is the government planning the same policy with our commercial-industrial property tax sector?

Hon Ernie L. Eves (Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance): The honourable member will know, because he has already alluded to it, that we are debating Bill 149 in the House this afternoon. I will be tabling some seven amendments and many proposed regulations to the legislation, many of which speak to some of the issues you're talking about. I'd be happy to discuss them with you further after they are tabled later today.

I can tell you that, as the member knows, we had a C&I panel of experts from many fields that advised the government on how we should treat commercial and industrial property, and I can assure you their suggestions and recommendations will be taken into account when the final decisions are made.

Mr Phillips: I appreciate that, but our business community, which is trying to plan ahead, would like a little more than just three months' notice on one of their major expenses.

I go back to the question I just raised with you. Surely if the government has made a decision on this — you've said to the residential property taxpayers that you will have a uniform mill rate across the province — the business community is owed an answer on this. Also, in response you can give us your answer on whether we will have a uniform mill rate.

Secondly, they've asked me to get an explanation of the policy logic of removing education costs from the residential portion but leaving 100% of the current education costs on the business community. What was the policy reason for making that decision?

Hon Mr Eves: The response to that is quite simple. The municipalities wanted more tax room. They came back to us with a Who Does What proposal. We accepted their proposal. I don't think that changes the tax burden on commercial properties. As a matter of fact, there are several measures in Bill 106 and Bill 149 that go to treating smaller commercial properties much more equitably than they have ever been treated in the past.

As the member knows, municipalities will now have the ability to have up to three different commercial rates for smaller commercial properties, taking into account small, medium and large-size commercial properties. We on this side of the House don't happen to think that small commercial properties should be taxed as heavily as larger commercial properties are. If the honourable member disagrees, he should say so.

I understand the need for businesses of all types, be they commercial or industrial, to know what their tax base is, and I can assure you they will have those answers as soon as we can provide them. Some of them will be provided this very afternoon.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): To the Minister of Community and Social Services: The minister knows full well that a terrible tragedy occurred in Toronto earlier this week when two innocent people were murdered and a third took his own life. You see, we've received information that George Holdbrook was in receipt of GWA assistance under the category "permanent ill health, disabled," that his August cheque was held back after he failed to attend at an appointment in July to apply for referral to family benefits, and that one of his major concerns was that he receive a drug card. That meant he had been for two months without medication.

Minister, we agree with your change to the system that no longer puts it on the shoulders of family doctors to determine eligibility. However, this isn't the first tragedy that has occurred because of your drive to force people from social assistance. We are afraid it also won't be the last.

Will you please request an inquiry into the manner in which the case of Holdbrook was handled so that we can determine what, if anything, went wrong and avoid a tragedy like this in the future.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Community and Social Services): First of all, it was certainly a very sad event that occurred when three people lost their lives earlier this week. I know that all of us would feel sympathy and extend condolences to the families that were involved in that tragedy. But I would also like to caution the honourable member that the police are investigating this. There are yet to be facts that will be determined.

I also say to the honourable member that there has been no change in disability regulations; there has been no change in disability policies in this province. They are the same as they were under his government and they are the same as they were under the previous government. I would caution the honourable member about making any deductions or comments about a situation that is yet to be determined.

Mr Kormos: Minister, we know that you take great pride in the fact that some 200,000 people have been forced off the assistance rolls; you've lost 30% of them and you don't know where they've gone to because you haven't been able to identify them after they've been forced off social assistance.

You brought in Andersen Consulting to aid you by withholding cheques from people who haven't provided the technical monthly income verification. We're told that staff shortages in a number of welfare offices mean that some people are having their cheques withheld simply because the data entry is not happening on time. We also know that 60- to 65-year-olds with your new bill are going to be forced off family benefits on to workfare and reduced incomes.

Your system is becoming increasingly punitive, increasingly inflexible. We're concerned that this will continue to generate levels of hostility and despair and frustration among recipients such that case workers and other members of the public may become the victims of that hostility and frustration. Please, will you not conduct an examination into the need for some flexibility —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you very much. Minister?

Hon Mrs Ecker: I find myself quite at a loss that the member would actually be asking a minister of the crown to interfere in a police investigation. I would caution the honourable member that the police are investigating a tragic circumstance.

I would also like to point out to the honourable member that 218,000 fewer people are trapped in welfare. We know that those people have left welfare because they've gone out into paid jobs, and we know that because no government ever bothered to ask the question about where people went. We went out last year and did an independent survey and we found in that independent survey that 62% left for employment-related reasons; that an additional 11% left because they had income increases, which meant they didn't need to have welfare; and that other people listed reasons such as that they went to jail or they found it too much of a hassle to get a government cheque, which would cause you to question their need in the first place. We asked the survey, sir. They had never done that.

1440

YOUNG OFFENDERS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham East): My question is for the Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services and concerns the federal government's throne speech of a couple of days ago. I find it quite astounding that the federal throne speech did not address the very important concern that I think almost every Canadian has: the Young Offenders Act. The vast majority of people in my riding of Durham East agree with you, Minister, that the Young Offenders Act is just not doing the job it was designed to do. They want the federal government to listen to the people and get on with fixing the federal Young Offenders Act. What has our government done to put the issue of the Young Offenders Act on the front burner of the federal government's agenda?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services): I very much appreciate the question. With respect to law-and-order issues, the Liberal throne speech was a significant disappointment, not just for this government but for other governments across Canada which expected some commitment to significant movement with respect to the Young Offenders Act.

Where was the commitment to automatic transfer of young offenders charged with serious offences to adult court? Where was the promise to publicize the names of serious violent offenders? Where was any reference to toughening up a failed act?

The federal government recently received a report indicating strong weaknesses in the system right across this country, and concerns of police officers. One of the quotes in that report was, "Kids learn early on: Even if you do it, you don't have to face up to it." The government of Canada has that report in their hands. They have listened to testimony from various provincial governments and individual citizens across this country and they have failed to act. It is a significant disappointment, and we intend to keep up the pressure.

Mr O'Toole: I publicly want to thank our Solicitor General for his undaunted commitment to the correctional system as well as to victims services. Thank you, Minister.

When you read the throne speech, it talks about developing alternatives to incarceration and trumpets the decrease in certain crime rates and all these fine, idealistic concepts, but nowhere does it mention the reality that the rate of certain serious violent crimes among young offenders is actually on the rise.

The fact is that these violent young offenders need to be dealt with in the correctional system, and despite all the platitudes in the world, that costs money. Nowhere does the federal government make any commitment to put resources into dealing with reality. Minister, tell us today: Is Ontario going to get its fair share of the federal funding for young offenders' institutions?

Hon Mr Runciman: We inherited a system from the Liberal and NDP governments that was failing the people of this province.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Minister.

Hon Mr Runciman: To Liberals and NDPers in the province, the fact —

Interjections.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): What was the question again?

The Speaker: Do you want to ask it again?

Interjections.

The Speaker: Minister.

Hon Mr Runciman: To Liberals and NDPers in this province it's a joke that over 60% of young offenders will repeat and over 80% of our adult population were graduates of their youth justice system. That was a joke, Mr Speaker.

We've set out to correct that system. We've set out to address the concerns of victims in this province. We've set out to address the concerns of ordinary citizens about youth crime and increasing levels of violent crime in this province and in this country. What kind of reaction are we getting from the federal Liberal government? I want to tell you —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Minister.

Hon Mr Runciman: What kind of response are we getting from the federal Liberal government? A reduction in their cost-sharing from 50% to 30% and a further reduction coming up. What are they saying to us? More diversion, more coddling of people who are committing violent crimes in this country and in this province. We believe in a range of alternative programs, but certainly people who do the crime have to do the time. Canadians are fed up with soft, coddling treatment of young offenders and want to see measures that actually work, reduce crime and turn around young people from a life of crime.

ROAD SAFETY

Mr Mike Colle (Oakwood): I have a question for the Minister of Transportation. Minister, last year I told you about my community's outrage when a motorist ran a red light at St Clair and Dufferin, seriously injuring nine people and killing one. The driver got away with a mere $300 fine for running that light and, at that time, you didn't do anything about it when we asked.

Once again, there are calls to make high-collision intersections safer by installing red-light cameras at these killer intersections. Metropolitan Toronto Police Chief Boothby wants these red-light cameras because he doesn't have enough police officers to babysit all these intersections. Furthermore, yesterday Metro council passed a resolution to have these cameras installed.

The problem is that you and your government won't cooperate. Minister, what will do to make safer these intersections that are killing people across this province?

Hon Al Palladini (Minister of Transportation): I want to answer my colleague from across the way in a manner I feel is appropriate obviously. We want to target the drivers, not the vehicles, and we want to make sure that the ones who are breaking the law are going to be punished. I believe that the road safety plan we have put together is certainly working towards that element.

There's still a lot more to do, and I understand that, but what we also need are more enforcement officers out there because that's where I feel we're going to get a lot more of the targeting as far as who is breaking the law. Photoradar or red-light cameras, all it is is a cash grab. We're not stopping people from doing it over and over again.

One other thing I want to say to the member as well: I believe that if enforcement officers are there to stop these people who are breaking the law, maybe there are some other things that are going to evolve from that stop. I really feel that red-light cameras are not going to solve the problem.

1450

Mr Colle: As you know, Mr Minister, you're more than willing to use photo cameras on the 407 to grab cash from people when they use the highway. What people are asking is to try this as a pilot project because police forces across this province have been cut. In Metro they're a thousand police officers short. They don't have the officers to babysit the intersections.

In Metro alone there are 11,000 collisions at these intersections a year; 50,000 across the province. People are running red lights on a daily basis without any regard. This person who killed the person at St Clair and Dufferin got a measly $300 fine, went back to California, and left that person dead and the other nine injured. What kind of deterrent is that? There are no cameras, there are no fines. What can we do? What will you do?

Hon Mr Palladini: I think the honourable member is putting too much emphasis on a camera. It is inconclusive. Although it might have some merit in certain places, it is inconclusive.

I want to say again that this government wants to do the right thing, wants to have more enforcement officers out there who will enforce the law. People are going to be face to face with an enforcement officer, rather than having a camera take a picture and not targeting the culprit. We want to target the driver, not the vehicle.

As far as the honourable member making a reference to the 407 is concerned, I'm really surprised that he would say that, because we're talking about a different element altogether.

MUNICIPAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): I have a question to the Premier. You may have heard me earlier today raise the issue of members of the transition team refusing to come to the standing committee on general government this afternoon to answer questions that we have to put to them. I want to remind you that these are people you have appointed through order in council to, in effect, put together the transition to the new megacity. They're people who had agreed last week to come for about half an hour. We had slotted them in for an hour. They're people who I presume haven't appreciated the fact that what they're doing is refusing to come on a decision that was made not just by me but by the committee as a whole. In fact this morning we voted, with the support of some of your members, to ask them again to come this afternoon.

What I'd like to ask you, Premier, is, will you undertake between now and the beginning of committee this afternoon — I realize time is short — to phone Mr Tonks, the head of the transition team, or have someone from your office call him, and impress upon him the importance of respecting the committee's decision and have him or one of the members of the transition team appear before the committee this afternoon?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): No, I won't interfere with a committee of the Legislature of Ontario. They can order their own business. They can direct what they wish. I think you would find it very improper if I or my office or the cabinet or the minister started to direct the committee.

I understand there were concerns that when the transition team did come before the committee there was an unfortunate demonstration by those who thought screaming and yelling and interfering was more important than getting the facts. I've always said I don't think that tactic works very well. I think reasonable dialogue and discussion is better. If you wish me to provide the transcript of your question to the Chair of the committee, I'd be glad to do so.

Mr Silipo: No, Premier. The issue here is twofold. First of all, you should understand, and perhaps you haven't, that the committee, by a majority which included members of your own caucus, this morning, when we heard they were not coming, voted to request them again to attend this afternoon. We're not talking here about any witnesses. We're talking about people who were appointed through orders in council, people who have been given a task that's directly related to the work of the committee in dealing with Bill 148.

Premier, I'm asking you, because it seems to me it's the only way. The committee made its decision. The committee made the request. Mr Tonks and the members of the transition team are ignoring the committee's decision. So I'm asking you to step in and ensure that Mr Tonks respects the processes of the Legislature and understands that he has an obligation to attend the committee, either in person or through one of the other members of the transition team.

Hon Mr Harris: As you know, the transition commission did make a presentation. All parties had an opportunity to ask questions. If you would still like to ask legitimate questions instead of your grandstanding silly old demonstrations, you're welcome to do that directly to the transition commission. Perhaps you will actually get more productive answers that way. But I'm not about to interfere in the process of the committee or to demand or insist that people do things.

HOME CARE

Mrs Lillian Ross (Hamilton West): My question is addressed to the minister responsible for seniors. Yesterday in the House two members of the opposition raised concerns about the deficit being run up by the Hamilton-Wentworth home care program. Many of these services will soon be provided by a community care access centre which I know will be opening very shortly. I wonder if the minister would provide for the benefit of the members of this House an update on the CCAC in Hamilton and how that will improve the situation.

Hon Cameron Jackson (Minister without Portfolio [Seniors Issues]): I'd like to thank the member opposite for the question, as well as the member for Wentworth East, who asked the same question back on August 26 on behalf of the situation in Hamilton.

I've had an opportunity to look at the letter being referenced yesterday by the leader of the third party. The information he failed to share with the House was "the disturbing news that the home care program must stay within its allocated budget from now on" — the disturbing news that the home care program has to stay within its budget.

Some of the highest per capita costs for home care exist in the city of Hamilton, Ontario. The communities of both the member for London Centre and the member for Rainy River are spending less on a per capita basis and yet providing a very efficient service. We're simply saying to the programs in Hamilton that they must maintain the level of efficiency that exists elsewhere in this province. Quite frankly, the Hamilton-Wentworth situation was $2 million over budget when the NDP were in government, and they did nothing about it.

TEAM CANADA 1972

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm rising to seek unanimous consent to allow the member for Scarborough West to now move a motion with respect to Team Canada 1972 and that immediately upon motion the Speaker shall put the question without debate or amendment.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Unanimous consent? Agreed.

Mr Jim Brown (Scarborough West): I move, seconded by Mr Bradley, the member for St Catharines, and Mr Wildman, the member for Algoma, that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario indicate its strong support for the induction of Team Canada 1972 into the Hockey Hall of Fame.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

PETITIONS

COURT DECISION

Mr Bob Wood (London South): I have a petition signed by 53 people that reads as follows:

"Whereas the courts have ruled that women have the lawful right to go topless in public; and

"Whereas the Liberal government of Canada has the power to change the Criminal Code to reinstate such public nudity as an offence;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the government of Ontario to pass bills empowering municipalities to enact bylaws governing dress code and to continue to urge the government of Canada to pass legislation to reinstate such partial nudity as an offence."

ROAD SAFETY

Mr Mike Colle (Oakwood): Dangerous, high-collision intersections:

"Whereas there are a number of dangerous, high-collision intersections throughout Metropolitan Toronto and Ontario;

"Whereas a pilot project installing photo-radar-type cameras would help monitor these dangerous intersections and act as a deterrent;

"Whereas photo-radar camera monitoring systems have worked well in Australia and other jurisdictions, improving safety;

"Whereas the provincial government is using a photo-radar-type camera on the new 407 to collect tolls;

"Whereas the increase in traffic and growing disregard for speed limits and traffic laws is the cause of great concern to pedestrians, cyclists and safe motorists alike;

"Whereas funding for extra policing is not available and very limited considering the great number of demands on the police,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario as follows:

"That the provincial Solicitor General support the installation of photo-radar-type cameras as a pilot project at Metropolitan Toronto's 10 most dangerous intersections and at various other dangerous intersections throughout the province."

I'll affix my name to this petition.

1500

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): I have a petition regarding the Plastimet fire in Hamilton and the need for a public inquiry.

"Whereas a fire at a PVC plastic vinyl plant located in the middle of one of Hamilton's residential areas burned for three days; and

"Whereas the city of Hamilton declared a state of emergency and called for a limited voluntary evacuation of several blocks around the site; and

"Whereas the burning of PVC results in the formation and release of toxic substances such as dioxins, as well as large quantities of heavy metals and other dangerous chemicals;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to hold a full public inquiry on the Hamilton Plastimet fire."

Where are the other Hamilton Tories on this issue?

NON-PROFIT HOUSING

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): "Whereas we are the residents of Ontario who currently live in supportive non-profit housing, we petition the provincial government not to transfer the financial responsibilities for supportive non-profit housing to our municipality.

"We, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly to consider and acknowledge the difference between non-profit housing and supportive non-profit housing. Options Bytown is supportive non-profit housing. We petition that funding for our home and our support continue."

I sign my name to this petition as well.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas over half the people in Ontario are women;

"Only 5% of the money spent on medical research goes to research in women's health;

"Women have special medical needs since their bodies are not the same as men's;

"Women's College is the only hospital in Ontario with a primary mandate giving priority to teaching, research and care dedicated to women;

"The World Health Organization has named Women's College Hospital as its first collaborating centre for women's health in both North and South America;

"Without a self-governing Women's College Hospital, the women of Ontario and the world will lose a health resource that is not duplicated elsewhere;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the comprehensive model of women's health pioneered by Women's College Hospital through ensuring self-governance of the one hospital in Ontario dedicated to women's health."

This is signed by over 300 residents of Toronto and I am proud to affix my signature.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): The four million library users in this province are very unhappy with Bill 109. We have a petition that's sent to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario re library services and Bill 109, the Local Control of Public Libraries Act. The petition reads:

"The system of public libraries in this province has successfully and equitably met the needs of Ontarians for nearly a century and a half. This has been done through the effective use of independent citizen boards that have been relying on adequate provincial and local funding. Bill 109 and other initiatives of the present provincial government will irrevocably undo this system."

This petition calls on the government to withdraw Bill 109 and to:

"(1) provide for the continued existence of truly independent citizen library boards;

"(2) restore adequate provincial and local funding;

"(3) abolish and forbid user fees; and

"(4) ensure universal and equitable access to library resources and services."

I'm proud to add my name to this petition.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas workers' health and safety must be protected in the province of Ontario, especially the right to refuse work which is likely to endanger a worker, the right to know about workplace hazards and the right to participate in joint health and safety committees; and

"Whereas the Occupational Health and Safety Act and its regulations help protect workers' health and safety and workers' rights in this area; and

"Whereas the government's discussion paper Review of the Occupational Health and Safety Act threatens workers' health and safety by proposing to deregulate the existing act and regulations to reduce or eliminate workers' health and safety rights and to reduce enforcement of health and safety laws by the Ministry of Labour; and

"Whereas workers must have a full opportunity to be heard about the proposed drastic erosion in their present protections from injuries and occupational diseases;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to oppose any attempt to erode the present provisions of the Occupational Health and Safety Act and its regulations. Further we, the undersigned, demand that public hearings on the discussion paper be held in at least 20 communities throughout Ontario."

I proudly add my name to theirs.

FIRE SAFETY

Mr David Caplan (Oriole): I'd like to present a petition to this Legislature. It's entitled, "Don't Get Burned by Bill 84," and is addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Firefighters need speed, experience and teamwork to save lives. The undersigned oppose any legislation that could undermine the work of local firefighters and jeopardize fire safety in my community. Please listen to professional firefighters and amend Bill 84 to eliminate the threat to fire safety."

The petition is signed by 25 residents, and I add my signature to theirs.

BLOOD SYSTEM

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): I have a petition that reads as follows:

"That over 70% of persons with haemophilia were infected with hepatitis C through the use of blood-derived treatment products. With hepatitis C as with HIV, the same institutional players of the blood system failed to respond to the identified risk of transmission, failed to properly notify people of the potential risk of exposure, failed to implement safety measures to lessen the risk of transmission, that is, the failure of the Red Cross to implement surrogate testing for hepatitis C for over four years, and now continue to deny any responsibility for these failures.

"That the representatives of Hemophilia Ontario and its hepatitis C task force have been advocating for financial compensation to those individuals who have been infected with hepatitis C through the Canadian blood system. The provincial Minister of Health, Jim Wilson, has three times cancelled meetings with Hemophilia Ontario, and the provincial and territorial ministers of health have publicly stated that they intend to keep the issue of hepatitis C compensation off their agenda in future meetings; and "Further, that the only prescribed treatment for hepatitis C in Ontario is alpha interferon, which has a less than 25% success rate on clearing the virus among people who have had one exposure to the virus. Many haemophiliacs were repeatedly exposed to the hepatitis C virus through the use of blood-derived treatment products," and, to quote from Blood magazine, volume 87, number 5, March 1996, "The response to interferon therapy in haemophiliacs with chronic HCV infection is poor and appears inferior to that of other groups of infected patients. In view of the generally poor response to interferon therapy in haemophiliacs, treatment with interferon is inappropriate in the majority of individuals...

"Therefore, your petitioners call upon the Minister of Health to meet with representatives of Hemophilia Ontario's hepatitis C task force now to discuss issues related to compensation."

I am proud to affix my signature.

COURT DECISION

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas communities strongly disagree with allowing women to go topless in public;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To enact legislation to require women to wear tops in public places for protection of our children and for public safety in general."

This has been signed by 54 of my constituents, and I'll sign it to put it in the record.

CREMATORIUM IN VAUGHAN

Mr Mario Sergio (Yorkview): I have a further petition here, signed by over 100 residents with respect to a crematorium in the Jane and Steeles area:

"Whereas an application has been submitted to the Ministry of Environment and Energy for a certificate of approval for the development of a crematorium and columbaria at the northeast corner of Jane Street and Steeles Avenue in the city of Vaughan....

"Now, therefore, we, the undersigned citizens of Ontario, petition the Legislature of Ontario as follows:

"We call upon the Ministry of Environment and Energy, which has the primary responsibility for protecting and enhancing a healthful environment for the present and future wellbeing of the people of Ontario, to:

"(1) recognize that we, the citizens most adversely affected by this proposal, have the right to participate in government decision-making;

"(2) honour its commitment to safeguard our environment and therefore reject this proposal for a crematorium of such a large scale and literally at our doorstep;

"(3) acknowledge that the health of thousands of residents will be at risk and thereby refuse to grant approval for this project."

I do concur and I will affix my signature to it.

PAY EQUITY

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Harris government has introduced Bill 136; and

"Whereas Bill 136 strips entitlements to employee status and therefore pay equity rights for home child care providers; and

"Whereas home child care providers are predominantly female; and

"Whereas home child care providers are one of the lowest-paid groups of workers in Ontario;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned citizens of Ontario, petition the Legislative Assembly to withdraw Bill 136 and its implications for the Pay Equity Act."

On behalf of my NDP colleagues, I proudly add my name to theirs.

1510

TVONTARIO

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): As you know, TVOntario is threatened by privatization under this government's review announced recently. There's a massive petition campaign going on across the province, and I have a petition sent to me by V.C. Smith from Lakehead University. The petition reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas TVOntario/TFO is owned by the people of Ontario; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has opposed public support for maintaining TVO as a publicly owned and funded educational broadcaster by putting TVO through a privatization review; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris government has not confirmed that full public participation will be part of this privatization review;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly to hold open and honest public consultation with the people of Ontario before making a decision on the future of TVO/TFO."

I'm proud to sign my name to this petition.

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): A further petition regarding the need for a public inquiry into the Plastimet fire in Hamilton:

"We, the undersigned, request the Ontario Ministry of Environment and Energy and Environment Canada jointly:

"To conduct a full-scale public inquiry into the Hamilton Plastimet fire to determine the complete nature and extent of the pollution it has caused, the health effects on firefighters and others attending the fire, as well as the residents in Hamilton and further afield;

"To ensure safe, speedy and complete cleanup of the fire site, plus residential and all other areas where chemicals from the fire have fallen out."

I add my name to these petitioners.

ROAD SAFETY

Mr Mike Colle (Oakwood): Mine's about red-light cameras trying to make high-collision intersections safer.

"To the Legislature of Ontario:

"Whereas there are over 55,000 motor vehicle collisions at intersections throughout Ontario every year;

"Whereas running red lights is becoming too routine at many high-collision intersections;

"Whereas there is a shortage of police officers;

"Whereas the collisions at these intersections are resulting in serious injury to pedestrians, cyclists and motorists;

"Whereas installation of red-light cameras at dangerous intersections has proven to be successful in Australia and other countries;

"Whereas the provincial government has endorsed the use of similar camera systems to collect tolls on the new 407 freeway;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario as follows:

"That the provincial Solicitor General and Minister of Transportation support a pilot project for the installation of red-light cameras at high-collision intersections to monitor and prosecute motorists who run red lights."

I'll affix my name to this petition.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas over half the people in Ontario are women and only 5% of the money spent on medical research goes to research in women's health; and

"Whereas women have special medical needs since their bodies are not the same as men's; and

"Whereas Women's College is the only hospital in Ontario with a primary mandate giving priority to research and treatment dedicated to women's health needs; and

"Whereas the World Health Organization has named Women's College Hospital as the sole collaborating centre for women's health for both North and South America; and

"Whereas without Women's College Hospital the women of Ontario and of the world will lose a health resource that will not be duplicated elsewhere;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to ensure the continuance, independence, women-centred focus and accessible downtown location of the one hospital most crucial to the future of women's health."

I proudly add my name to theirs.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FAIR MUNICIPAL FINANCE ACT, 1997
(No. 2)

LOI DE 1997 SUR LE FINANCEMENT ÉQUITABLE DES MUNICIPALITÉS (N^{O} 2)

Mr Eves moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 149, An Act to continue the reforms begun by the Fair Municipal Finance Act, 1997 and to make other amendments respecting the financing of local governments / Projet de loi 149, Loi continuant les réformes amorcées par la Loi de 1997 sur le financement équitable des municipalités et apportant d'autres modifications relativement au financement des administrations locales.

Hon Ernie L. Eves (Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance): Before I begin, I would like to indicate that I'll be sharing my time today with the member for Simcoe Centre and the member for Peterborough.

Ontarians know that the property tax system in Ontario needs updating. They know it has become outdated, inconsistent and unfair. They told us to fix these problems, and we are fixing them.

We began to fix these problems by establishing the Ontario fair assessment system, which bases the assessment of properties in Ontario on fair current values and updates those values on a regular basis. We began to fix them by eliminating the outdated business occupancy tax. We began to fix them by giving municipalities more autonomy and flexibility to implement the new property tax system to suit local needs and priorities and by putting in place measures to protect low-income seniors and disabled people.

Building on the foundation established in the Fair Municipal Finance Act, this bill is another step towards our goal of making the tax system fairer for all Ontario taxpayers.

Small business is the engine that drives the Canadian economy. In the Fair Municipal Finance Act we eliminated the antiquated business occupancy tax and provided municipalities with considerable flexibility to recover those revenues in a way that satisfies their community needs.

Business groups, including the Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade, the Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce, the Windsor and District Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto have all responded favourably to the measures taken in the Fair Municipal Finance Act, measures that will result in both tax fairness and economic growth.

In this bill, we are giving municipalities the opportunity to further assist small businesses by establishing lower tax rates for lower-valued commercial properties, such as small retail strip stores and restaurants.

Bill 149 also enhances the property tax protection provided for low-income seniors and the disabled in Bill 106 by extending the deferral and cancellation provisions to include the school portion of property taxes.

Bill 149 introduces specific measures that respond to feedback from municipalities, non-profit organizations, small businesses and others in a way that is fair, clear, consistent and accountable. We are listening to the advice that these groups are providing to us. We will continue to listen.

That is why, to encourage dialogue on these important issues, I am today releasing seven proposed amendments and seven proposed regulations for comment during the public consultation process. We will build on this consultation process over the coming weeks and continue to be open to advice as we proceed with the important task of improving Ontario's property tax system in a fair, thoughtful and consistent manner.

We recognize the benefits that charities and similar organizations provide to communities all across Ontario. Under Bill 149, municipalities will be able to offer such organizations tax rebates of up to 40% when they occupy business property.

To help municipalities administer this program, we are proposing an amendment that will clearly define which organizations can qualify for this rebate and will allow municipalities the flexibility to extend this benefit to other similar organizations, if they so wish.

We're also proposing an amendment to ensure that owners of vacant lands and buildings, which incurred no business occupancy tax under the old system, would retain similar tax treatment.

Through Bill 149, we are taking steps to ensure that the Ontario arts community can continue to thrive and contribute to the economy of our province. We are all proud that Metro Toronto's commercial live theatre industry is the third-largest in the world and attracts 90% of Ontario's live theatre audience. However, Metro's largest commercial theatres pay higher property taxes than their international competitors in New York and London and their publicly owned local competitors. Bill 149 will ensure that these theatres are treated in a fair way that reflects competitive realities.

We have listened to specific concerns raised by publicly owned theatres as well. In response, we are proposing an amendment to Bill 149 that recognizes the importance of not-for-profit operations such as the opera, ballet and symphony and acknowledges the difference between public theatres that are used mainly for not-for-profit productions and those primarily booked by commercial productions.

1520

We also recognize the vital contribution that small live theatres make to communities across the province and their importance as a training ground for the industry. Through Bill 149, these theatres will be exempt from property taxes.

On September 22, the government introduced legislation to exempt Metro's large commercial live theatres from education property tax to help these theatres compete on an international scale. Together, these measures will help support Toronto's competitiveness as an international theatre destination and support the viability of small theatres throughout the province.

In proposing changes to the tax treatment of farm land pending development, our goal is to fairly balance the needs of farmers, municipalities and developers. I look forward to hearing the views of all parties affected by this proposed amendment to ensure that Bill 149 achieves this balance. Fair, consistent tax treatment of rights-of-way properties is necessary to provide tax certainty as well.

It will also help prevent unpredictable tax increases and help stabilize revenue for municipalities. At present, railway, utility and hydro rights of way are taxed at different levels throughout the province. The current system of property tax creates a tax base that is uncertain and very uneven.

For example, under the current system, as a result of the last reassessment in the Halton region, railway properties faced a property tax increase of 500%. Under Bill 149, the province would set municipal tax levels per acre for rights-of-way properties in nine different geographic regions of the province. These regions are defined in the proposed regulation that we have introduced today.

Ontario's international bridges and tunnels play an important role in the development of the province's economy. To help keep Ontario competitive, we are replacing the existing hodgepodge system of assessing and taxing international bridges and tunnels. We are levelling the playing field and putting in place a more consistent system.

We have consulted with representatives of international crossings on our proposed changes. As a result of our intentions, the Peace Bridge Authority in Fort Erie recently announced the approval of phase 1 of a $200-million capital expansion project.

Quite obviously, fair property tax treatment does have a positive impact on economic development in this province. Previous governments have resisted fixing the property tax system because of the difficult issues which had to be faced. Clearly, this inaction was at the expense of property taxpayers and local governments. We are fixing the property tax system. Bill 149 is yet another example of that. It will help reduce barriers to investment and economic growth. It will improve Ontario's long-term competitiveness.

I look forward to hearing further from the people of Ontario on Bill 149. I can assure you that Bill 149, coupled with the reforms already passed in the Fair Municipal Finance Act, will give all Ontario property owners a system of property taxation and assessment that is fair, consistent and accountable. The people of Ontario deserve no less, and quite frankly it's about time.

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Simcoe Centre): I'm pleased to join the debate and follow the Minister of Finance with respect to the Fair Municipal Finance Act, 1997 (No. 2), Bill 149. I'd like to deal with the bill in the context of the initial bill brought in through the Minister of Finance, Bill 106, the Fair Municipal Finance Act, which was introduced in January this year and proclaimed into law in May.

This legislation was the first step in the government's effort to make property assessment and taxation in Ontario fair, consistent and understandable so that taxpayers can hold their governments accountable. The act will be fair, because similar properties in a community with similar values will pay similar taxes. It will be understandable because when the Fair Municipal Finance Act goes into effect, properties across Ontario will be assessed based on their current value: what a willing buyer would pay a willing seller in an arm's-length transaction. It will be understandable because taxpayers will be able to determine how much tax they should pay simply by multiplying the assessed value of their properties by the appropriate municipal tax rate.

I take into consideration my own riding of Simcoe Centre, which is within the county of Simcoe. It's made up of 16 municipalities, seven towns and nine townships, plus the cities of Barrie and Orillia. As a result of two amalgamations, the number of county municipalities in Simcoe county has been reduced from 28 to 16. There has been no county-wide reassessment, although six municipalities were reassessed after the amalgamation. The old assessment base continues to apply to the other 10 municipalities. Barrie and Orillia are not part of the county structure.

It's interesting to note in terms of how the assessments are applied that for the city of Barrie the reassessment year for the tax year is 1987 for 1988, the base year is 1984, and the type of assessment is fair market value. In the town of Bradford West Gwillimbury, it has not been reassessed and there are three parts to the town of Bradford West Gwillimbury. There is the town of Bradford, which has the assessment year for the tax year of 1985 for 1986 tax year and the base year is 1980. For the township of Tecumseth, which is part of this new town of Bradford West Gwillimbury, the reassessment year was 1988 and the base year is 1984 values. In the township of West Gwillimbury, the reassessment year was 1980 and the base year is 1975. In the town of Innisfil, within my riding, the reassessment year was 1995 for the tax year of 1996 and the base year for the assessment is 1992. Also within my riding there's the township of Springwater, with a reassessment year of 1995 for 1996 tax year, with a base year of 1992 values, and they are under the system of fair market value.

You can see that within three towns and one city within my riding you have different base years of assessment which range from 1975 up to 1992. The Fair Municipal Finance Act (No. 2), which is Bill 149, firmly builds on the fairness principles of the reforms the government introduced in January with the Fair Municipal Finance Act. The government has listened to specific concerns expressed by businesses, theatres, municipalities and other groups. We have heard those concerns, and the bill introduces measures that would respond to those legitimate concerns in a fair and balanced way.

Bill 149 includes measures that would mean fair tax treatment for small businesses and owners of business properties, publicly owned and commercial live theatres, municipalities, owners of rights-of-way property, charitable organizations, and farmers and developers.

I'd like to deal with a number of the components within the bill, specifically fairness for owners of business properties, small businesses in particular.

Bill 149 includes a measure that would enable municipalities to protect small standalone businesses. Municipalities will be able to support these small businesses by applying tiered tax rates to properties in the commercial property tax class. Small businesses in lower-valued commercial properties such as small neighbourhood shopping districts or retail strip malls could benefit from the provision. This provision would allow municipalities to create up to three bands of assessment.

Here is an example of how a municipality could put this measure to work: The municipality would set an appropriate threshold for commercial property values; for example, $250,000. The municipality could then apply a lower tax rate to assessed values that fall below the threshold and a higher tax rate for assessed values above the threshold. To ensure that municipalities can target specific businesses for higher taxes, the government can prescribe restrictions on the use of this provision in regulation.

1530

This measure addresses the concerns of small businesses in a way that avoids creating large amounts of red tape for municipalities, and I think it's important because when you look at the context of what we're trying to do here in terms of small business, we're trying to ensure that commercial business sectors are not only kept vibrant, but certainly material within the community, and one of the measures the government is committed to in reform is the business improvement areas in Bill 106.

The government recognizes the important role played by business improvement areas in maintaining healthy, vibrant commercial areas. The changes to the business improvement area legislation are the result of our commitment to rationalizing the property tax system and eliminating the business occupancy tax.

While the changes in the Fair Municipal Finance Act, 1997, will affect some aspects of the BIA operations, the government believes that overall the act will not seriously disrupt these functions. In some ways it will be a better support to the BIAs by creating BIA levies in the same manner as property tax. The changes come about because of the changes to the business occupancy tax in terms of the 50% tax that is applied to commercial properties where there is a business occupying that property, and that's going to be done away with.

The concern that was expressed by business improvement areas was that with that occupancy tax being taken away, what would happen to their business improvement areas? What is going to happen is that they will be continued, and it certainly will have the landlord take a greater role with respect to those business improvement areas. That makes sense, because it's not just the businesses, it's also the landlord that owns the building within which the business operates.

I believe the changes that we're bringing about through Bill 149, the Fair Municipal Finance Act (No. 2) and the measures we brought through on Bill 106 are complementary in terms of our focus on small business, to make sure they are not only viable in terms of being able to operate their business and pay their taxes, but also we create a structure in the commercial core where small businesses can not only thrive but certainly prosper.

The next area I'd like to deal with is vacant business lands and units. Bill 149 would provide fair treatment for owners of vacant business lands and units by recognizing that these properties don't currently pay business occupancy tax. The bill proposes these properties should be taxed a lower rate to recognize the absence of business activity.

That's a fairly important concern for owners of vacant property where the business has not made it or moved and you have a vacant building and you're being taxed at the commercial rate, yet you have no business activity on that property. The previous practice was for the landlord to apply to the municipality to have a different rate structure. It would be changed to residential, which doesn't make a lot of sense, if you own commercially zoned property, to revert to a residential rate.

The changes with respect to the vacant business lands and units will ensure that the rate reduction will be in the legislation rather than dealing with it through regulation.

We are proposing rate reductions of 30% of the full commercial rate for commercial properties and 35% of the industrial rate for industrial properties. This measure would, on average, retain the business occupancy tax preference that vacant business lands and units now have and ensure they are not unduly affected by reform.

With respect to municipalities, Bill 149 gives municipalities flexibility in how they implement a number of tax provisions; for example, charitable organizations. Bill 149 would give municipalities the power to protect significant charities. This would recognize the benefits that charities and similar organizations provide to communities. These organizations could receive tax rebates from the municipality of up to 40% of their total property tax on space that they occupy in commercial or industrial properties. The rebate program would ensure the benefit would go directly to the charity.

To help municipalities administer the program, the government proposes an amendment that would define the charities that are eligible with reference to the well-known definition contained in the federal Income Tax Act. Municipalities would also have the flexibility under Bill 149 to extend this definition of charities to similar organizations if they choose to do so.

Bill 149 will give municipalities the option to decide if this program meets their local needs and priorities. For example, if there are few non-profit organizations in a municipality, the municipality may decide it is more cost-effective to provide support through existing mechanisms.

Another area that I think is important, especially in areas that are in a developmental mode with respect to cities and townships in the surrounding area, and also where there's agricultural property and you're seeing growth in the residential sector — and there's a good example within my riding in the city of Barrie and in the township of Bradford West Gwillimbury and even in the township of Innisfil — the farm lands pending development, there certainly hasn't been a consistent approach in terms of how to deal with this property to fairly balance the needs of farmers, developers and municipalities.

The bill will preserve farm land and encourage bona fide farming. It will encourage development-ready land at a reasonable cost and ensure that municipalities receive a fair rate of property tax according to the use and value of the land.

That's certainly important in that if the property was previously a farm and is not an active farm any more and it has been rezoned to residential but there's no building going on because the developer is not in a position to build due to market concerns, he shouldn't be taxed at a higher level where the property isn't even being utilized.

By proposing three tax rate ranges for different stages of development, Bill 149 will give municipalities the flexibility to address their particular situations. At the same time, the bill would provide an incentive to continue farming on lands that are awaiting development and maintain a tax reduction for these lands.

The next area I'd like to address is rights of way. Bill 149 would bring fairness and consistency to the tax treatment of Ontario Hydro, utility and railway rights of way. That certainly is a big issue in this day and age in terms of railway as a result of the federal government's legislation which they brought in last year in terms of allowing CN and CP to discontinue their rail lines.

I believe that certainly there are some tax considerations that face municipalities that have rail lines that go through their communities. The bill would correct serious inequities in the way these properties are now assessed and taxed. Currently, rights of way are taxed at different effective tax rates throughout the province. Bill 149 proposes to replace that patchwork of tax rates by setting tax levels per acre for nine geographic areas of the province. The proposed approach would provide municipalities with a stable revenue base and would also recognize the need for provincial controls on the taxation of these unique properties that are key to the provincial economy.

With respect to taxpayers, the Fair Municipal Finance Act required municipalities to provide a program of municipal tax relief for low-income property owners who are seniors or who have disabilities. Bill 149 proposes to apply this tax relief to the education portion of their property taxes as well.

As you know, we have been dealing with education and with the taxation structure there. The government has proposed that the province and not school boards would be responsible for setting all education property tax rates. The province would set rates for residential properties. The municipality would collect the taxes and forward the revenues to the local school boards. Supporters of public, separate or French-language education would continue to have the right to identify their support for the school system of their choice, and the government has stated that once these rates are set for 1998, they would be frozen. That's certainly good news for residential taxpayers in terms of planning their own future and their needs and their budgeting.

The province would also set the rates for business support for education. Municipalities would collect these revenues and forward them to the local district school boards on the basis of enrolment. In addition, the province would use other provincial revenues to pay for the grants which all school boards would receive based on student need.

In the province as a whole, residential education tax revenue will be cut in half, from $5 billion to $2.5 billion. Under the new system, all residential taxpayers will pay for education at the same rate. That only makes sense for a common service such as education.

Certainly Bill 149, along with the measures that were taken with respect to improving education and fairness with respect to taxation in education in municipalities and through the province, is consistent with the approach we're taking now.

1540

The Fair Municipal Finance Act also allows municipalities to phase in municipal tax changes resulting from reassessment over a period of up to eight years. That's of fundamental importance to any taxpayers and to municipal politicians who have to bring the tax system into the system we're proposing in terms of fairness and having a set rate. But it's not fair to just push that on to the taxpayer all at once when you've had communities that have had assessment rates that are not current. We are in the year 1997, and if you live in a community where the assessment rate is based on 1975 values, you're certainly looking at a significant change. I think that type of measure, which could be viewed as a sunset provision in terms of giving municipalities eight years to bring the tax changes into effect and up to the standard, is extremely fair.

Bill 149 would ensure that this fairness measure also applies to the education portion of the property tax. These proposed measures would ensure that education taxes parallel municipal taxes. They would also ensure that providing education tax relief won't cost municipalities more money and will avoid the cost and red tape of introducing provincial programs.

On that note, I am very pleased to have joined the debate today. I support this bill. I think it's going to bring significant change, along with the initial bill with respect to fair municipal finance reform earlier this year. I look forward to the changes the government is bringing forth with respect to education taxation. I think the measures being taken are fair not only to municipalities and school boards but also, and most important, to the taxpayers of the province. We should remember there is only one taxpayer and we have to be fair.

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): I too am very pleased today to have the opportunity to share a few of my thoughts on the Fair Municipal Finance Act, (No. 2), better known as Bill 149. The purpose and goal of this legislation are clearly expressed in the name of the act.

Our current system of property taxes is difficult to understand, and I suggest it is very frustrating and unfair to the taxpayers of this province. Currently we have such a complicated process to arrive at property taxes, ie, equalized assessment, that most municipal administrators have difficulty understanding the current property tax system, let alone the general public, the taxpayers of this province. The disparities in our property tax system are enormous, but today I believe, as we debate Bill 149, we are one step closer to improving the overall property tax system.

For too long, previous provincial and municipal governments made it quite clear that the current property tax system did not work well. In my years as a municipal councillor, this situation became quite evident and was very evident on a daily basis. Over the years, as municipalities developed their own systems for property evaluation, discrepancies arose between neighbouring municipalities and in many cases between different areas within the same municipality. For example, in a couple of the municipalities in Peterborough county, local assessments have not been updated since the late 1940s.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): Madam Speaker, on a point of order: I am fascinated by my friend's comments and I'm sure most members of the assembly would like to hear them. Could you check to see if there is a quorum present?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs Marion Boyd): Clerk, would you check for a quorum.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Peterborough.

Mr Stewart: I am pleased that the honourable member suggested my words of wisdom were worth hearing. I thank you, sir, very much.

For example, in a couple of the municipalities in Peterborough county, in the area where I'm from, local assessments have not been updated since the late 1940s. That was 50 years ago. I know change is slow and in some cases difficult, but I believe that inequity is totally ridiculous. We began seeing cases where similar properties could receive widely different assessments, resulting in property taxes that were unfair.

After being elected in 1995, one of the very first problems a constituent brought to my office was a dispute regarding his property assessment and the amount of tax he had to pay. This individual was paying more taxes than a neighbour with a house and lot of equal value. My friends, that is not fair. The taxpayers of this province should not be paying different rates of taxation on properties of equal value. This individual also found similar homes in different areas of the city that were paying, again, different rates of taxes. It appears they were being assessed for areas rather than looking at what the house and the lot consisted of. This, I believe, is totally unfair.

In Metro there are situations where similar houses on one side of the street pay a different amount of tax than persons across the street in like houses. This is not fair. A new property tax system and, I believe, a new unified Toronto will help correct this type of disparity.

One of the major reasons that property tax reform has not occurred is because the total tax burden for the people of Ontario is simply too high. Tax levels are so high that there is very little fiscal room for compromise or reform, but I believe we are addressing this issue. We are addressing the total tax problem.

The first step towards total and complete tax reform must be a strategy to reduce all taxes by cutting the size and cost of government. This has to be done at all levels, and when I suggest all levels I'm talking about federal government, provincial government and municipal government alike, something this government can never be accused of not doing. We are creating a more efficient and effective government, and as a result we are seeing greater opportunities to address the issue that no other government has addressed before. The issue is property tax reform. Granted, previous governments expressed an interest in reforming the property tax system but did not have the political will to do so.

Currently many inequities exist within the province's municipalities. Assessments are calculated differently across Ontario. Some properties are assessed based on an estimation of their market value while others are assessed based on a percentage of their value. The failure of previous governments to act on this important issue has done nothing but cost the taxpayers of this province valuable tax dollars. However, with the introduction of the fair assessment system which reassesses all properties at their current value as of June 30, 1996, we are creating a much fairer, equitable property tax system.

Bill 149 represents the second step in a move to create a property tax system that taxpayers will understand and trust, and most important, can afford. Bill 149 gives municipalities something they have always asked for: flexibility in the area of taxation. This bill allows upper- and lower-tier municipalities to set lower tax rates for lower-valued commercial properties by creating multi-tiered commercial tax rates. In the small business world, which is the foundation of business in this province, they have to have a fair and equitable system. This principle will also give municipalities the opportunity to set tax rates in a manner that meets the needs of their local community. This is the type of flexibility municipalities have been calling for.

1550

As we saw in the Fair Municipal Finance Act, municipalities are allowed to phase in municipal tax changes resulting from reassessment over a period of eight years. This phase-in will provide added security not only for seniors on fixed incomes and Ontarians with disabilities but indeed security for all of the province.

Bill 149 also deals with railways, utilities in Ontario and hydro rights of way. Currently, all three of these features are taxed at different levels throughout the province, once again creating a system that is uncertain depending on what part of the province you live in — a totally ridiculous situation. With this bill, we are proposing that the province would set municipal tax levels on a per-acre basis for nine regions of Ontario and then average the tax changes. This will go to great lengths to level the playing field across the province, stabilize the revenue base for municipalities and prevent large tax increases.

The issue of vacant and industrial property has also been a problem for many municipalities and one that we are addressing head on. Under the Fair Municipal Finance Act, the business occupancy tax has been eliminated. This allows municipalities to recover this revenue from property classes that previously paid this tax. Vacant business land and units will be taxed at a lower rate.

Charities will also benefit from our property tax reforms. Municipalities will be able to provide rebates to charitable organizations occupying business property. Isn't that great, that the charities will now be able to have additional dollars to fund the many needed projects that we want and ask them as partners to do in this province. Rebates could be up to 40% of the total amount of tax. This will allow all municipalities to recognize that these groups paid tax at the lower-end residential rate and did not pay the business occupancy tax.

Currently farm land that is being purchased by a developer is assessed as farm land until farming stops. Some farm land undergoing development attracts very little property tax relative to its value. However, this new bill proposes a tiered approach to the taxation of farm land pending development. This measure would fairly balance the need of farmers, developers and municipalities.

At a recent UDI meeting, one of the lawyers who was a guest speaker at that particular function made a comment about 200-acre parcels across a county road from each other. One was assessed as normal farm land, owned by the same developer as the other one, which was assessed as a commercial operation, or would have been residential. The variance was something like $200,000 worth of taxes. It makes it very difficult for developments to start, with that type of taxation.

The farm tax rebate was a stopgap measure created to assist farmers until a new property tax system was developed that would tax farm land, residential and commercial property in a fair and equitable way. We are doing that. You know, that stopgap measure lasted an unbelievable number of years.

Finally, as municipalities restructure and grow, land is often annexed to accommodate growth. Bill 149 would prevent municipalities that annex unincorporated land from shifting taxes on to property classes that already pay unfairly high taxes.

My friends, Bill 149 is part of a greater package of legislative reform designed to get Ontario working again. Bill 149, in conjunction with our Who Does What initiative, will make the overall property tax system a much fairer system if real restructuring takes place at the local level.

At the end of the day, it is the taxpayer who must pay the bills, and for too long property taxpayers in newly assessed areas have been footing the bill for those living in areas which have not been reassessed for many years. This is simply not right.

Our government is finally addressing the inequities in our property tax system. We are reducing the entire tax burden on the people of Ontario. We are reducing income taxes for the good of Ontario and we are reforming the property tax system, also for the good of Ontario. Total and complete reform of our current system of government can and will lead to tax reductions for taxpayers of Ontario as real change is embraced. Bill 149, coupled with the reforms in the Fair Municipal Finance Act, will give all Ontario taxpayers a system of property assessment and taxation that is fair, consistent, understandable and indeed accountable.

The Acting Speaker: Comments and questions?

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I appreciate the comments of all three government members. I would ask them to respond to two or three things in their response. First, I know the government is moving ahead with imposing market value assessment. I'm just curious about why, before the election, it was Mike Harris's position that they "would never impose market value assessment on Toronto. We remain firm in that position." Maybe the member can answer why Mike Harris said before the election he would never do this and why now, after the election, he is doing it. That was a piece of literature put out by them.

The second thing is that the member has mentioned eliminating the business occupancy tax. That is going to cause some significant dislocation for small business. To date in the bill we've yet to see how the government plans to accommodate it. I've just looked through the proposed regulations and the amendments and there's no indication of how the government plans to help small business. It was the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that in a letter to the government said: "Ironically, the elimination of the business occupancy tax will harm our sector. Smaller firms are concentrated at the low end of the business occupancy tax." It goes on to say that with the elimination of that, they're likely going to face substantial increases. I hope the member can give us an answer on that.

The third thing I'd like from the member: I'd like to know the logic of taxing an acre of land for hydro in downtown Peterborough at exactly the same rate as an acre of land for hydro in the middle of the Haliburton forest. I just want to know the logic of that. If a piece of land is worth something in one area, is it worth exactly the same in another area?

1600

Mr Gilles Pouliot (Lake Nipigon): I too wish to convey in the spirit of sympathy — I've listened intently to the spin, the diatribe as we enter debate on Bill 149. Bill 149 is only the offspring of Bill 106 — doing so at their own peril — for their ill-fated legislation does not work in isolation.

There are winners and losers. None of the three speakers mentioned anything about the bank towers. Under the BOT, the business occupancy tax, they've won the lottery. Those are the people who take in the money big time. They're the winners. A large corporation, for instance in Oakville, the plant operator in the automotive industry will benefit $18 million. The logical question is, who's going to pick up the slack? Where will that $18 million come from? Will Mike Harris and his cohorts send a cheque in the mail to the clerk-administrator of Oakville? They won't. The difference, the slack will have to be made up. It will be made up by residential taxpayers and also by small business people, the commercial assessment.

CNCP will get a break on account of amendments vis-à-vis rights of way. Hydro will also get a break. In the case of Hydro, the mess they're in, they need every penny they can get. But CNCP, whose appetites are insatiable, have been given huge tracts of land since Confederation. It's well documented; we all know. Dozens of books have been written about those people. But la payola, their friends are giving them another tax break.

The Acting Speaker: Further comments and questions?

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: I believe the member for Simcoe Centre was one of the speakers. I don't believe you can comment on your own speech.

Ms Isabel Bassett (St Andrew-St Patrick): I would like to thank the member for Scarborough-Agincourt and my colleagues for their comments today. Ontarians know that our property tax system needs fixing. They have communicated that to us very clearly, so when we were elected we said we would make the property tax system fairer, and that's exactly what we have done.

Bill 149 is building on Bill 106, which was favourably received by many sectors of society, and it makes the tax system much fairer. This bill, Bill 149, carries on and it ensures the fair treatment of farms, small businesses and other commercial and industrial properties. It gives municipalities more flexibility to respond effectively to local priorities. It further protects low-income seniors and the disabled. It also closes tax loopholes to help stabilize the tax base for the future.

I feel that Bill 149 takes Ontarians a step closer to having a much fairer and more equitable tax system. I feel, after many consultations, and there will be more consultations, that this will come back and that will be the message we get.

The Acting Speaker: Further comments? Seeing none, response?

Mr Tascona: I'd just like to respond to the comments made by the honourable members. What we're dealing with here is that in terms of market value assessment, there seems to be confusion in terms of how you value the property. What we're not dealing with here is the highest and best use. There seems to be confusion there. We're looking at the actual usage of the property and its actual value assessment, which is based on a three-year rolling average.

The benefit of this, which was pointed out by the member for Peterborough, when you're dealing with a discrepancy in terms of one part of a community being assessed at 1975 values and another part being assessed at 1997 values, is that some significant changes have to be made. We've addressed that through the three-year rolling average and having it set up in 1996 and the implementation period, which is an eight-year period.

What is important in terms of trying to stimulate economic growth is that having a three-tier system for small businesses and lower-valued commercial property I think all parties should hail as something that's fair to small business and certainly will lead to economic growth. Also, looking at agricultural land in terms of how it is used and when it is purchased for developmental purposes, we should not be looking at an approach that really makes it difficult for the person who has purchased the property to hold it and be able to develop it.

I think the replies weren't on point. I just wanted to comment on that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Further debate?

Mr Phillips: I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate and to say that it will be my intention to share my time with the members for Windsor-Walkerville and Essex South.

I want to simply say on Bill 149 that this is, as the public knows, the second of two major bills on property tax reform, that this will be the most dramatic change in property tax in the history of Ontario. The analogy I used with our caucus was that it's a bit like the early gathering of a hurricane off the Florida coast in its first moments, but this hurricane hits Ontario in a few months. It will fundamentally change the whole property tax system in Ontario.

The concerns I want to raise today are ones that we anticipate will hit Ontario in March or April 1998. The reason we say "anticipate" is because the government has chosen to provide virtually no information on the impact of these bills. I've never seen a government making such a major decision that will impact literally every home and every business in Ontario without at least saying, "Here's likely going to be the impact." Mike Harris says, "I'm going to run our government like a business." No business would ever make these fundamental decisions without having some idea of their impact. I'm surprised, as I've always been, that the back bench haven't demanded it, because I can guarantee you that when this hits it will have huge impacts on communities across the province. I want to begin to spell those out and to suggest that the government perhaps has not done its homework in these areas.

First is the elimination of the business occupancy tax. As my colleague said, the average bank tower in the city of Toronto will likely have its taxes decreased by $3 million a year. That's the estimate that has been provided: $3 million a year. It is going to be made up by the rest of the business sector. Their taxes go down; someone else's taxes go up.

I point out what I said earlier in my remarks, that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business warned us that in a strange way the elimination of the business occupancy tax, which is a tax that's 90 years old, archaic and out of date for sure, without some idea of how it is going to impact on small business — in CFIB's mind, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the elimination of the business occupancy tax, strangely enough, will likely represent a negative impact on their businesses. I had hoped today that we would see from the government its plans for how it planned to deal with that. I've been through the proposed amendments and the proposed regulations, and it's not there. That is our first concern, that small business is going to be hurt by the elimination of the business occupancy tax. We have yet to see how the government plans to deal with that. That's our first concern, which I hope all members in the Legislature share.

1610

Our second concern — this is a more minor point but I had hoped I would have got an answer from the government on this — is that this bill, Bill 149, calls for the province setting the property tax rate on hydro lands, on utility rights of way and on rail lands. The province is going to do that. It's going to set the mill rate on the land.

I'm trying to figure the logic of the government's decision here. What the government is saying is that they will tax an acre of CPR land down at the Gardiner Expressway and Yonge Street, that an acre of land there will pay exactly the same taxes as an acre of rail land up around Lake Simcoe. I'm trying to find the logic of that. Where is the logic of an acre of land in downtown Toronto paying exactly the same property tax rate as an acre of land up around Lake Simcoe? I have not had the logic of that. That's in this bill.

In its property tax plans, for the first time in the history of the province, the government of Ontario is going to play a huge role in setting the mill rates for property taxes. I hope everybody follows this: On average, half of our residential property tax goes to education, half goes to our local councils or our regional councils. The government has said, "We are going to take away half of the education expense, we're going to leave the other half on the residential property tax and we'll set the mill rate."

The government has also determined that they're going to leave all of the educational costs on business. I think many people in the business community, when they heard the government say, "We're going to take education off property tax," thought they would be getting some relief, but 100% of the property tax on business in these bills remains.

The government will be setting the mill rate for the first time ever; for over half of the property tax, the mill rate for businesses will now be set by the provincial government. It's quite an extraordinary move for a province to move into property tax in that way. Certainly it has never happened before in Ontario. The provincial government has never set mill rates and taken property tax money like this.

Yet even today I asked the Minister of Finance during question period: "What is your plan for this? Are you going to have a uniform mill rate for businesses across the province? Are you prepared to say that you are going to freeze the amount of money you'll raise from business, or are you freezing the mill rate?" In his response to me he indicated, "Well, we're going to be dealing with the bill later today and you'll be getting those answers later today." The answers aren't there. We do not know how the government plans to set mill rates on businesses.

I say to the business community that you should be concerned about where property tax is going, for these reasons: They've left all of the education that was currently on business still there. They've now downloaded on to the property tax all of social housing; 100% of social housing now has gone from the province on to property tax. A whole new area of expense in welfare or social assistance has now shifted from the province on to property tax.

The reason the business community should be speaking out on this is that I guarantee you that Ontario, at some stage in the future, will go through a tough economic period. That's just the way it works. We have good economic times and then tougher economic times. Here's what's going to happen: As soon as that happens, as soon as we run into difficult economic times, our business community should recognize that the expenses for social assistance, for social housing, inevitably go up. That's just the way it is. The business community now in some respects have got the worst of all worlds, from their perspective. They've still got all the education costs they had before and now they've loaded on social housing, and many of those are seniors.

I would just say to our business community who say, "I guess they must have studied this and I guess it's the right thing to do," that the business community should be aware that the government appointed a group of 15 people — it was called the Who Does What committee, headed by David Crombie; that's how people may recognize it — to study this matter, to say what things should be on property tax and what things should be handled by the province.

Hopefully I can find the quote, but if I can't, I can remember it fairly well anyway. In his report, David Crombie and all the other commissioners — Mike Harris picked these people, every single one of them — said: "The panel strongly opposes such a move" — putting social housing and social assistance on property tax — "We are unanimous in the view that it shouldn't be done."

The reason I raise this is that I think the business community can look down the road at the pressures property tax will face in difficult economic times. The business community knows as well or better than anyone what happens in difficult economic times. You can just imagine, they've still got all of education that they had before, and now they've got social housing, social assistance, child care, ambulances, public health. The business community now is going to be picking up those costs.

The business community will find those councils facing some terrible, terrible choices, as we can all visualize. Many of the members here have previously been on councils and you can just imagine an economic downturn and people needing help on housing, help on social assistance, understandably, and the battle that will go on around property tax. This is a package and we are dealing with the government making a decision to put all these new costs on to property tax.

One of the difficulties we're going to run into is that, at exactly the same time as this change is coming in — I might say, this change is monumental. I think all of us understand that. Every single property in the province is being reassessed. There will be thousands, if not tens of thousands, of appeals going on a year from now. There will be mass confusion out there, and at the same time this is happening the government has decided, as we've just talked about, to download all these services on to the municipalities, plus add $660 million of extra costs on to the property tax.

Here in the Legislature, we get into a big debate, "Well, it's revenue-neutral; it isn't revenue-neutral." But the government has acknowledged that it has cut out a $666-million municipal support grant. In 1997 they are providing municipalities with $660 million; in 1998 the number will be zero. In addition to all the other problems municipalities will face — believe me they will face huge challenges, particularly many brand new councils coming in, new boundaries, huge new responsibilities for things like social housing, and at the same time they're being told they've got to pick up another $660 million of previous provincial costs that are now on the municipalities. On the property tax bill, we have to view it within that context.

1620

I will speak just briefly about the assessment process because I've been hearing for some time now about the concerns that particularly our professional assessor community has about the approach that's being done. This thing has been rushed, there have been a lot of inexperienced people hired to do it and it is in serious jeopardy of being credible when it's finally announced.

The bill today deals with several aspects to in some respects correct some of the challenges in the previous bill, Bill 106, that we passed several months ago, to expand a little bit on the responsibilities.

Some of the themes that are in Bill 149: I think Bill 149 is almost unprecedented in giving the Minister of Finance the authority to set taxes. I think there are 25 areas here where the Minister of Finance will have the authority to set taxes. I'm not a constitutional expert, but I always thought that it was up to the duly elected bodies to set taxes, not to delegate to a minister tax-setting policy that he can do through regulation. What does that mean for the public? It means that the minister can set, for example, the tax rate on the hydro lines I just talked about; the minister can set the tax rate on those three levels of commercial we talked about. It's unusual.

I'm particularly surprised actually at the Conservative back bench agreeing with a bill that gives that much discretionary power to a cabinet without the public scrutiny and without the public input, because we've all learned that governments come and go and you should also assume that the laws you're passing now could be in the hands of one of the dreaded opposition parties at some stage.

Mr Douglas B. Ford (Etobicoke-Humber): Yes, I agree.

Mr Phillips: Mr Ford is frightened by that thought. I'm just saying to you that this is a law for some time and I would urge you to question, as we have been doing, whether it's appropriate for the minister to have this level of authority. I must say that I raised this question in the Legislature a couple of weeks ago and the Minister of Finance himself said, "I've got some questions myself about any Minister of Finance having that much discretionary authority."

To keep moving on the bill and the areas of concern on the bill, and I will say this is an overview as well, our party has said all along that while we have disagreements with the bill, while we have areas that we think the bill is deficient in, while we have serious concerns about the lack of information, we are not going to do anything that will slow up the bill in terms of ensuring that the government gets this bill passed on its timetable so that it can be implemented as smoothly as possible. The worst possible thing is that this thing be implemented at the last minute.

Frankly, I think the government has been negligent. We should have been dealing with this months ago. The government should have had its act together months ago so that the municipalities could have some idea of what they're dealing with. I just want to say that our caucus has at every step of the way, when the government has said, "We want to be dealing with this," been prepared to deal with it. We believe that we need some public hearings on this, but I think the government itself acknowledges that. I want to be clear and on the record on behalf of our caucus that we have cooperated on both of these bills to make certain they were not held up by the opposition. They've been held up, in my opinion, because the government has had difficulty in getting its act together.

In terms of some of the other issues within this particular bill and some of the concerns we have, I've already talked a lot about the rights of way and what is the policy logic in that. The government has talked about the multi-tier tax rate, where they would have different tax rates for different values of commercial property. They haven't spelled any of that out. I'd hoped we would have seen that today. I'm anxious to find out what they have in mind here, because we are trying to bring in this bill an element of fairness and equity across all of the sectors.

I'm anxious to find out the specific proposals here. For example, if it means that if the building is valued at $500,000, it will pay one tax rate, if it's valued at $2 million, another tax rate, and above $2 million, another tax rate, there's a possibility of some inequities there, because if you rent from a building valued at $500,000, presumably that tax rate's lower than if you rent from a building worth $2 million. It isn't business-specific. It's owner-specific, building-specific rather than business-specific. If the intent is to help businesses and not the owner of the building, then I'm anxious to find out how the government plans to do this.

I also wanted to comment briefly on the use of market value assessment. I raise this because I gather the government, when they got elected, looked at all the options and said: "This is the only one. This is the best one we can find." But I just say to the members — I represent a Metropolitan Toronto riding — that Mike Harris could not have been clearer before the election. I guarantee you, Al Leach would never have been elected if he hadn't made a promise to never, ever bring in market value assessment. If he hadn't made that promise, he wouldn't be here today. There are two or three — Mr Saunderson and Ms Bassett — who made the same promise and are here for the same reasons. Mike Harris was very clear on it: "The policy of the PC Party has always been that we will never impose market value assessment on Toronto. We remain firm in that position." I hate to harp on that, but I'm just saying that's what your members solemnly promised. I'm not being bitter about this — it was quite a nasty attack on the Liberals too — but that's how many of your members got elected. You're going to have to live with that.

You may have examined all the alternatives and said — actually, Mike Harris has never said this — "I'm sorry, but we made a mistake. We shouldn't have done that. We're going with the best possible tax system, but we are implementing market value assessment." The definition in the bill is identical to the market value assessment in the old bill and it's going to be mildly — well, more than mildly — embarrassing for Mr Leach and others to explain. People keep these things. They don't just disappear. They don't disintegrate. They're all still around.

I want to go on to some other questions that we may get answers to at the committee. Payments in lieu of taxes: This is a huge issue for some communities around Ontario, particularly for Kingston, Ottawa and others where there's a substantial payment in lieu of taxes, particularly by the federal government. It looks to me, in reading the proposed bill, that the provincial government has decided to take those revenues into its own hands. If that is the case, and that's how I read the bill, there will be some real concern in some of the communities such as Kingston and Ottawa.

1630

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: On this very important bill we do not appear to have a quorum. Would you call quorum.

The Acting Speaker: Would you check to see if there is a quorum present, please.

Clerk at the Table (Ms Lisa Freedman): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Scarborough-Agincourt.

Mr Phillips: I was just going over parts of the bill that are of concern to us and I was talking about the payments in lieu of taxes and indicating that I think some of the communities like Kingston and Ottawa will want to look very carefully at that, because it does appear to us as a grab by the provincial government.

I also want to talk about the changes that are being made in restricting the right of our first nations for land claims. As I read this, it appears that there are some moves to limit the opportunity for the first nations to look at some additional claims. I want to signal that we've had concerns raised by the first nations and they will want to talk at committee on it. I wanted to raise that.

As well, there are a few other smaller details. The bill presupposes that we pass the education finance bill and it takes some moves here to remove the requirement to identify separate public school support. The government indicated to us in a briefing, "The reason we're doing that is because we plan to pass a bill around financing of education that will make that unnecessary." I would just say that we've yet to see that bill, that in the absence of that bill we wanted to indicate our concern about possible elimination of separate school designation in some areas, not in all areas, and to indicate that until we see the companion bill we will have some significant problems with it.

The other part of the bill that is perhaps most troubling to us is that, as I said earlier, it is being implemented without any opportunity for any of us to look at what the impact will be. I hope you understand why we are increasingly sceptical about how well thought out these bills are. I can remember the first indication I had about being sceptical was Bill 26. We all remember the first major bill that came in, the big omnibus bill. It was seriously flawed. The government itself amended it 150 times. We've seen, as I've said before, toll roads with no tolls; we've seen prisons with no prisoners; we've seen the Minister of Education one day proudly announcing that a cornerstone of their education plan was that the schools would open a week before Labour Day and the very next day saying, "I've changed my mind; they are not going to open."

These are indications that the government has not thought through its proposals, whether it be what's going on right now with our hospitals, where the Ontario Hospital Association itself said, "Listen, this thing isn't properly thought through; you've got to slow down. You are tearing the system apart"; whether it be in our education system, where one of the first things the Minister of Education did was say, "An organization like this has to create a crisis to change." Well, he has successfully accomplished that, but we don't know how he wants to change it.

So you can understand how we are sceptical about where the bill is going. The fact is that the government refuses to give any studies at all, just to say, "Listen, how is this business occupancy tax going to hurt small business?" I repeat, each of the bank towers will be worth $30 million more the day the bill is passed than the day before it was passed. They're going to have a huge tax break, and I understand that, but somebody's got to pick that up and it probably will be small business. What I'm looking forward to, and what I'd hoped we would get today, are the details on how the government plans to address those problems with small business.

To begin my conclusion and turn it over to my colleagues, there is nobody in the province who doesn't believe we need change in property tax law. I don't think anybody who presented to our committee didn't say that. There's no one in this Legislature who doesn't believe there needs to be a substantial change in property tax. The concern we have is we are now three months away from this, the most sweeping change in the history of the province. All of this is coming in, in our opinion, without being thought through clearly. The fact that we don't know even today how the government plans to deal with small business is an indication of that. And at exactly the same time as this is coming in, you're going to have all new councils but many with whole new structures, school boards fundamentally changing and the province setting mill rates on residential property taxes, huge mill rates on business property taxes. We are facing the unprecedented changes in our health care system. If you want to write a recipe for chaos, this would be it. This is how you would create chaos. This bill looks to us like it hasn't been thought through to the end.

I've raised questions on some of our major concerns about it. We're looking forward to the committee hearings, looking forward to some input from our municipal leaders, from our business leaders, from our community leaders, to see if we can't find ways we can improve this bill and make it operate as smoothly as possible.

1640

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-Walkerville): It's a pleasure to be following my colleague the member for Scarborough-Agincourt, our caucus's critic on finance and economic affairs, who has done his usual thoughtful job of analysing a bill that is one in a series of bills that deals with virtually every aspect of how we finance and pay for municipal governance and the functions we associate with municipal governance and education in Ontario.

I want to begin today by looking at the government's broad context of legislation in this area and add to my colleague's observations with respect to the bill itself as well as the context the bill is in, and try to relate to the House and to members in the House some of the impacts I believe will fall out of this bill, particularly for my community and the area I represent in the Legislative Assembly.

When we consider this bill, we have to, as my colleague indicated, consider it in the context of both Bill 106 and the government's intentions with respect to Who Does What, downloading, the realignment of the provision of education and municipal services in Ontario. We have to bear in mind all aspects of the debate.

We are about to embark on or are in the process of reassessing every property in Ontario: every commercial property, every residential property. We are using people, many of whom aren't particularly well trained. We on this side of the House are already starting to hear issues around competence, ability, because we're putting these people out without a heck of a lot of training, without a lot of background. Like many members in the House, I started my public life in municipal government — I spent six years on our municipal council — and I remember that the questions around assessment were always thorny, difficult issues that often required great thought and consideration, especially when you're dealing with people's property.

So we have this happening on the one hand, we have this reassessment. I understand that the government has termed what they're doing here "actual value assessment," which means market value assessment. Like the member for Scarborough-Agincourt, I remember very clearly the Premier's commitment that we won't have market value assessment, and I also remember his commitment that we wouldn't close hospitals, and I remember his commitment that we wouldn't cut funding from classroom education, and I remember his commitment that we wouldn't affect law enforcement in Ontario.

What we are confronted with is a theme from a government. We are seeing a government that is struggling to keep its commitments, and they haven't kept their commitments. They said they could balance the budget, reduce taxes 30% and not touch education, health care or community policing. That's tomfoolery, absolute tomfoolery. What do we have? We have a government that prides itself on fiscal management that can't get its credit rating improved. Why? Because you've sacrificed $5 billion a year in revenue and you don't know how you're going to make it up.

What you're doing is backtracking every step of the way. I say to you, we on this side understand that your first priority should have been to balance the budget, and there ought not to have been a tax cut until the budget was balanced. Had you taken that approach, you might have had your budget balanced next year, like the federal government. Instead, you've created a situation where you will have to raise property taxes on every property owner in this province. There will be hell to pay for you in two years, because those property owners will lay it right at your feet. Why? Because this bill operationalizes the property tax grab. This bill and Bill 106 operationalize it.

In Windsor, for instance, the net result of the download from Mike Harris is that property taxpayers in Windsor will have to pick up an additional $27 million. That works out to roughly a 27% mill rate increase. That's assuming the assessment issue is equal, that is, that the reassessment that's going on in our community doesn't have an even further impact. I should tell members opposite that I've met with our local officials and they're concerned about that.

We went through market value assessment in 1984. We went through the difficulties associated with that. There are always winners and losers. We are glad to have the reassessment that is going on, but we are concerned about the outcome. As my colleague from Scarborough indicated, we should be concerned about the outcome.

We think about many bills. For instance, yesterday we were talking about the Family Law Act and the family support plan offices. You went in and closed the family support plan offices. You didn't give it much thought. You left literally thousands of people, the most vulnerable people in this province, in a bad situation. We saw the Minister of Education last week saying, "We're going to start school a week before Labour Day," and now he's saying he's not going to do that, that he'd consulted and changed his mind. Couldn't he have done that before he introduced the bill? We had that figured out, and so did everyone else in the province.

We think about Bill 26. Just last week we had a court ruling saying that Bill 26, a key component of your bill, is unconstitutional and striking it down.

Interjection.

Mr Duncan: Yes, to the members opposite, the speeches are similar because the themes are similar. This bill represents yet another example of what happens when you don't think things through.

The member from Mississauga long advocated stiffer fines and stiffer penalties around drunk driving provisions, and what happens? We don't do it right. We're back to the drawing board again, no further ahead.

We submit to the government that we ought to think about not only what we're doing but how we're doing it and what we want to achieve when we set forth to improve on a system. We agree on this side of the House that we have to look at how we assess properties, have to look at how we tax municipally. We think it's an admirable goal to get a larger portion of the education bill off the property tax base. The question becomes how you do it.

We can't help but be concerned when we see the recommendations of your own government-appointed task force, the Crombie task force, not being adhered to. We get concerned when municipal officials and others in virtually every municipality in this province expressed their concerns about the net impact. Yes, we can debate that back and forth. We think the numbers are clear. The government has acknowledged at least $660 million in the first year and a one-time transfer to cover that, but what do we do after that?

1650

When you look at that context and when you look at what is going to happen, and supposedly this is all going to happen between now and next January and into the following year, we have very real concerns. Indeed I suspect many members opposite have many concerns about it.

It was interesting to note today, as we talk about property tax reform — how we assess, how we collect, who pays for what, who does what — to hear the Ontario Hospital Association saying on your restructuring: "Wait a minute, it's not working. You're not meeting your deadlines. We can't possibly do it." Even if you can support the concept of what's going on, you're left with the challenge of implementing it and how you do it.

We had a situation today in my home community where the heads of one of our local emergency wards both resigned, in their words, not mine, and these are not political people, "because of the chaos that's been created because we have not had the reinvestments in our health care system that we needed in order to accommodate the closure of two hospitals."

I say with respect to my colleagues opposite that when you consider these kinds of changes, when you look at them and when you think beyond the simple context of a broad question, you've got to think about implementation.

I found it interesting in this bill that the Minister of Finance in the province will now have additional power to set taxes by regulation in approximately 24 or 25 areas, I believe. As my colleague from Scarborough indicated, that's a remarkable power. The minister himself has acknowledged that. We now see a situation where the province of Ontario will be setting the mill rate on a substantial portion of property taxes that is faced by business or commercial property owners.

I want to take a minute to talk about the balance of taxation between income tax and property tax; what is appropriate to be paid off one tax versus another tax. That's how we tie back into the downloading issue.

Let's take, for example, social housing. We are looking at a situation where the province intends to download, not only the administration but the financing of social housing. I must say to members opposite, I believe the administration of social housing can be done better locally and I support the general thrust of that.

In my own community, I had the opportunity for a number of years to sit on the board and chair the board of a group called the Windsor Housing Co, which provided geared-to-income, non-profit housing for senior citizens. I served on that board for about four or five years. Most people would concur that our local non-profit housing delivery units are, generally speaking, very good. The question becomes the dollars and cents and what tax base can afford to carry the cost.

There are some 84,000 Ontario Housing Corp units and another 150,000, 175,000 non-profit and co-op units in Ontario. The province is now submitting that the municipalities, municipality by municipality, should pick up the cost of that. The operating cost doesn't include the potentially high cost associated with redeveloping those properties and bringing them up to current standards.

We would agree that something has to be done. We would agree that we cannot allow the continuing deterioration of our public housing units. What we should be concentrating on is how you do it. What I would submit to the government is that you don't do that by putting the cost of social housing on to the property tax base.

The member for Scarborough-Agincourt spoke well about what happens when the economy goes down. In my community, we are subject to a very cyclical economy. Windsor's economy is tied largely to the auto industry, and we know in our community that we're the first ones out of a recession but we're also the first ones into it.

What happens when the economy goes down? I'll tell you what happens: The welfare caseloads go up, the number of property taxpaying citizens goes down, and those who are left are faced with an increasingly difficult burden. The municipality is put in a position of having to raise property taxes at precisely the time, from an economic perspective, that they shouldn't have to do it. Now as we put these additional costs on to the municipal property tax bill, it's going to be even more difficult.

Mr Peter L. Preston (Brant-Haldimand): Only one taxpayer.

Mr Duncan: Government members say there's only one taxpayer and we agree. That's why we don't understand why you insist on raising property taxes right across Ontario in spite of your promises to the contrary.

I will say this: In my municipality our senior municipal officials have said that they have looked at the numbers and that there is no way they can prevent property taxes from going up, none whatsoever, not unless the government changes dramatically its point of view with respect to downloading; not unless the government starts to listen, listening to people like Mr Crombie, listening to people like AMO, listening to people like your own colleagues, like Mr Skarica, who have spoken out with some courage and honesty.

Yes, there's room to debate these issues and there's room to say, "Can we rearrange services?" Governments have been trying to deal with this for a number of years, but when we move ahead with this kind of massive change and restructuring, we better think through the consequences. What comes through, we say, is that we don't believe the government has considered all the consequences.

Bill 149 provides the framework by which the Minister of Finance can implement the assessment reforms associated with Bill 106, but it doesn't specify what decisions will be made with these new powers. For example, the minister has the authority to define at which stage in the development process lands should pay higher taxes. However, the legislation doesn't specify when the higher rate should apply.

The government has not released any studies to show what impact the proposed changes will have on local property taxpayers. This is the largest change in our property tax system in 20 years, and you're asking property owners to accept the reforms blindfolded. If you have studies, why don't you release them? It's a simple thing to do. If you have a study that tells you what the impact is going to be, release the study. If you don't have the studies, I would submit that you're proceeding with too much haste and you're going to be left with an absolutely untenable situation when the full impact of these things is felt in a year or two's time.

Government ministers, like the minister of — what is it you do? I don't even remember — privatization, laugh. They laugh as they contemplate property tax increases. Why are they laughing? Because they've tried to set up a situation where they're going to be able to force these increases and try to blame it on municipalities; basically a dishonest public policy; basically an opportunity for the minister to sit there and say, "We haven't done this." Well, the people have caught on to you and they will have caught on well before the next general election; people like the mayors in your communities, people who will hold you accountable for these property tax increases that are contemplated in this bill.

This is the bill that will deal with everything from vacant land to charities occupying industrial or commercial lands to rights of way, and it affects everybody. We say that the government ought to take it back, and during the committee hearings we hope you're going to listen. We're glad the government is having committee hearings; as we said, we're not going to stall it, because you've already got yourselves into a time frame, a time dilemma in terms of implementation of all these changes.

We hope you'll listen to the mayors of virtually every major municipality in this province, who have told you unequivocally and documented their points of view. We hope you will listen to them. We hope you will understand that senior citizens on a fixed income can't afford property tax increases when they're trying to stay in their homes. There are many people like that in this province. We hope you'll consider that.

1700

We hope you'll think about the need to consider property tax reform: how you collect the taxes in light of what you're doing with the assessments, your market value assessment project. We hope that you will keep in mind the whole range of things that can result from this.

I think again in my own community what will happen when we download ambulance services to municipalities, for instance, what happens when we download social housing. What is going to happen with education, especially now that you've cut so much money out of the education envelope? Yes, property tax reform is important, but the government in our view has just proceeded too quickly, far too quickly.

What really concerns us, concerns me as a former municipal politician, is the deceptive way in which these municipalities are going to have to make tough decisions that you forced on them so that you could proceed with your tax cut and attempt to balance your budget. We think there is going to be a real mess to clean up in a year and a half. In fact, it will take a long time to clean it up. You're ramming through this legislation without giving anybody a clear picture of where it is going.

Mr Phillips: "No impact studies."

Mr Duncan: No impact studies. The minister said, "No impact studies"; he acknowledged that today. The minister is telling us they're going through the entire property tax system in this province —

Hon Rob Sampson (Minister without Portfolio [Privatization]): What are you talking about?

Mr Duncan: Where are they? Produce them. Show us. What is the impact of Bill 106 and this bill going to be on my community? How many property taxpayers in Mississauga or Windsor or wherever are going to have a property tax increase? I submit, most of them will. You will attempt to hide it, you will attempt to blame everyone else, but unfortunately the people have caught on to you. They know what you're doing. You're cutting taxes for your friends so they can pay higher property taxes.

What's most astounding, and the government hasn't figured it out yet, is that this is going to affect small business. Who pays property taxes in our communities, whether it's Windsor, whether it's London, whether it's Mississauga, Etobicoke? It's small business, commercial.

Mr Phillips: That's what the CFIB said. Remember that.

Mr Duncan: Yes. That's what the CFIB said. This is the CFIB, signed by Judith Andrew:

"Ironically, it is likely that the elimination of the business occupancy tax will harm our sector. Smaller firms are concerned at the low end of the 25% to 75% tax range of this archaic tax. If municipalities opt to recoup the amount on the business tax base, an average 40% rate would see most small businesses paying more."

That contradicts what the minister says. The minister says they won't be. Everyone else says they will be. The government's credibility when they say much of anything is wearing thin at best.

Let's talk about the promises. I'm quoting from a campaign document for Isabel Bassett, which says, "The policy of the PC Party has always been that we will never" — and the emphasis is in the brochure — "impose market value assessment on Toronto. We remain firm in that position."

What is actual value assessment? It's market value assessment. Another game. Wording: "We say it's not, it's not, but we all know it is." You got away with that for a while. You got away with it in the last election.

Mr Ed Doyle (Wentworth East): We didn't —

Mr Duncan: You sure did. People were hungry for that.

What are we getting now? We're getting closed hospitals. We've got thousands of students and teachers marching on the steps of the Legislature just today because they figured you out. You said you wouldn't cut classroom education, but "heat shouldn't be part of the cost of classroom education." Shouldn't be? Well, people are catching on, just as the courts caught on last week on Bill 26. The hospital association is starting to catch on, with hospital closures. "We won't close a single hospital." I don't know what the count is now, but it is going up every day and we expect more.

Anything like the Common Sense Revolution that is premised on falsehoods, that is premised on promises that can't be kept will eventually collapse. We're seeing that. We're seeing that in virtually every major realm of public policy. It will be interesting to watch as this province is completely reassessed in the coming weeks and months. It will be interesting to watch what happens.

I had an opportunity to speak to our mayor, who is very concerned that the reassessment will increase taxes still more, over and above what is being contemplated in the downloading. As always, I like to check not just what happens in our community but what happens across the province. We're hearing that from every municipality. I've seen the documents from Windsor, from Ottawa, from Toronto, from London. All of them are saying the same thing.

The government is operating under tight time frames. It is changing our property tax system, changing the way we govern ourselves municipally at such a pace that we are concerned about the eventual consequences and outcomes. We believe that taken together, this government's policies shift the tax burden from income tax to the property tax base. We believe that property taxpayers are the ones who are going to pay and finance your tax cut. What does that mean? That means we're using a less fair system of taxation to bear a greater share of the public services we all value, moreover, to pay for your promises which thoughtful people all agreed couldn't possibly be kept in the context in which they were stated.

We look forward to the public hearings. We look forward to hearing from municipalities, from the business community, from others who have an interest in this and who have an interest in making sure their property taxes don't go through the roof to pay for the promises that you now know you can't keep. You didn't talk about those property tax increases in your election document. You didn't say that to anybody. They're going to happen, and people will know who is responsible.

We look forward to those hearings, but more important, we look forward to debating these issues in our towns and in our communities when people start to get their tax bill next year, when senior citizens whose income isn't going up as much get large property tax increases. We look forward to that debate. We look forward to holding you accountable for what you're doing not only in terms of trying to address problems we all acknowledge are there but in terms of what you're doing and how you're doing it.

It's our view, the view of the official opposition, that you've chosen to penalize property taxpayers, that you've chosen to penalize municipalities. Yes, the government members are right: There is only one taxpayer. The income taxpayer is the same as the property taxpayer and the same as the person who pays user fees. We intend to work with those property taxpayers and those people who are paying user fees to say no to your tomfoolery and restore a sense of order and decency to this province.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Churley): Questions or comments?

Mr Wildman: I wanted to congratulate my friends the members for Scarborough-Agincourt and Windsor-Walkerville on their presentations with regard to Bill 149. I thought the member for Scarborough-Agincourt was quite clear in the fact that he believes this bill that is being proposed will compound the mess we are going to see beginning in January 1998 as a result of this government's download of so many costs to municipalities because it is being done so quickly, the reassessment is being done in many cases by untrained individuals who may not have the expertise that is required to ensure that the assessments are done properly and that we will see enormous property tax increases at the municipal level because of what this government is doing. I think it's going to be quite a surprise to the one taxpayer we have, as the member for Windsor-Walkerville indicated. The fact is, they may get a few dollars in an income tax break — not very much, but they may get a few — but they are going to see an enormous increase in the taxes on their properties and businesses at the municipal level which will far outweigh what they may save in income taxes. That is going to hurt them certainly, and politically it's going to hurt the government.

I also want to say that I'm very unhappy about the fact that this government has moved to begin taxing off-reserve lands held by first nations without any consultation with first nations people. I don't understand how this government can do this. It's a complete denial of their aboriginal and treaty rights.

1710

Ms Bassett: I want to comment on the remarks made by the members for Scarborough-Agincourt, Algoma and Windsor-Walkerville. I thank you for your comments.

I want to point out that this bill does not give the Minister of Finance undue regulatory power. He has the authority to set tax rates on rights of way, and the other regulations set only the parameters for municipalities to set their own tax rates. This is a very important distinction to make, and these changes are an important step in reducing the duplication and overlap between the province and municipalities.

On the second issue, I want to point out that Bill 149 will assess railway and hydro property lines in nine geographic areas. That is one of the amendments that the member must have missed. The amendment adds a new subsection to section 368.3 of the Municipal Act, creating nine geographic areas in which tax rates for railway and hydro will be set. Therefore, a hydro or railway property in downtown Toronto will not be assessed in the same way as a property in Simcoe. That's another important distinction.

Last, I want to point out that municipalities will be able to create three bands of assessed values and have three rates to meet their local needs. Therefore, the removal of the BOT, which is an outdated tax instituted in 1902 which all three parties have said must be done away with, will not jeopardize small business. It will be up to the municipalities to deal with that, and they now have new powers in order to do that.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): I too want to congratulate my colleagues from Scarborough-Agincourt and Windsor-Walkerville on their comments today. I think an important part of what they had to say was to give the taxpayers of Ontario a warning. The warning is this: There are impact studies that exist — if there aren't, this government should be ashamed for not having them done — but they aren't released. Why aren't they released? What are you hiding? When my community went to market value assessment, the very first thing we did was have an impact study so we could understand just what effect it would have on the community.

A warning: In this and accompanying legislation, the business occupancy tax is folded into the general tax; the warning is that the residential taxpayer is going to have to pay more.

A warning: Gross receipts are being transferred to the province, some $90 million that the province is taking out of municipalities and not giving anything back; the warning is that property taxpayers in municipalities are going to pay for that.

A warning: They have said that seniors and the disabled could have their taxes deferred, and that's good for them in the meantime, but the municipality has to have that money. They have to get it somewhere: from the other property taxpayers in the municipality. Of course the estate — and the seniors and the disabled and their relatives should know this — is then going to have to pay it later on.

A warning: The civil servants in the assessment department have said that this can't be done, you can't do it in the time line that's been set. When new councils sit down next year and don't have the assessment rolls because they aren't ready, they won't be able to set their budgets and it'll be utter chaos.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I want to speak to the issue of the business occupancy tax, because the response the member for Windsor-Walkerville got from the parliamentary assistant about the provincial government moving to remove the business occupancy tax was quite interesting. We know what that means. We're saying as an opposition party, as New Democrats, that if the government does that and gets municipalities to remove the BOT, what'll end up happening is that the money saved on the BOT will be automatically reassessed back on the property taxes of either the businesses or the overall community. The citizens of that community will keep on paying.

What was interesting was that the comment of the parliamentary assistant was, "If the BOT is removed, we're going to leave it up to the municipalities to figure out how they're going to deal with that, so we shouldn't worry." I think we should worry, not because I don't trust municipalities but because the downloading municipalities are receiving from the provincial government is going to put municipal councils of this province in the worst possible position they can be in.

They're losing transfers from the province big time; they're losing revenues in regard to the BOT and other taxes around agricultural land big time; they're having to pick up provincial services being passed to the municipality, everything from ambulance services all the way through education. What ends up happening is that councils are going to be strapped to try to find cash to pay for services. So what do you think they're going to do? Municipal councils are saying already that they're going to have to raise both business taxes and residential property taxes in communities like Iroquois Falls, Kenora, Sudbury, Hamilton and other places, by as much as 50%.

The property taxpayers that you talk about as the one taxpayer are going to remember that, because it means you will virtually be forcing people out of their homes due to property tax increases the likes of which we have never seen before in the province.

The Acting Speaker: Who's going to do the wrapup?

Mr Phillips: I appreciate the comments from the members for Cochrane South, Algoma and Essex South and the parliamentary assistant. I just want to address two or three comments.

The parliamentary assistant helped make my point for me, that is, that I said the bill will now tax an acre of railway land at Yonge Street and the Gardiner Expressway exactly as an acre of land up on Lake Simcoe. The parliamentary assistant is shaking her head, but that's what the bill does. It has nine geographic regions, and one of them is city of Toronto all the way up to Lake Simcoe. That makes my point for me.

Second, the business occupancy tax: The small business community is saying, "Listen, this thing could hurt us badly." Today we still don't have the solution. What is the government planning to do here? No idea — nothing there. My colleague from Essex South I thought expressed it very well, the warnings to Ontario. We now have enough experience with Mike Harris's government that it introduces things without having thought them through to anywhere near the extent that was necessary.

My colleague from Essex South points out chaos in the assessment system, because it was started late and done, we gather, badly. Here we are less than three months from the start of the year, and how are we doing to deal with different levels of commercial assessment, the rights of way, with seemingly illogical recommendations on them?

The government simply says, "Change is needed and we're doing it." I think the public wants change, but change done right. This doesn't look like it's change done right.

1720

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

M. Pouliot : Je prends plaisir à pencher quelques mots au sujet du projet de loi 149. What a mess we're in. With high respect, it didn't have to be this way. With your help, Madame, we'll do it together.

Picture this: In three months' time, on January 1, 1998, coming in your municipality, in your neighbourhood, social housing costs; three months from now, a larger portion of general assistance for the marginalized, brothers and sisters who need a helpful hand. You will pay the cost at the municipal level out of your property taxes. Coming to the same neighbourhood: charities, the elderly, all those of our citizens who need a helping hand.

This is not revenue-neutral. This is not a wash. No government in a western democracy, if it were revenue-neutral, would risk this endeavour. This is very massive. What we're talking about here is 3.8 million units being reassessed or assessed: the largest endeavour, the largest undertaking, in the context of property value ever in North America.

The civil service, those fine women and men who make their daily living monitoring, are saying to expect 600,000 appeals. What a backlog: 600,000 out of 3.8 million. So on January 1, 1998, municipalities shall take on those new responsibilities at a collective cost of approximately $1.2 billion. On the other hand, they will lose $1.6 billion in assessed business occupancy tax. The farm tax rebate will add another $170 million, and so on and so on.

We begin to understand when we look for the substance of the bill, which is to give the opportunity to municipalities to establish subclasses of taxes. If it were revenue-neutral, would they be given that latitude? If this were a wash, would the government, in their proverbial generosity, turn to the municipality and say: "We give you the tools. Be innovative, be imaginative, and you will have the opportunity through flexibility to go and collect left and right"? Well, it ain't so. This is a shortfall of a magnitude never imagined.

The government has the audacity three months before to either sit on or hide impact reports, studies. Where are they?

As you know, Madam, I live in a small village, a small community. Ours is a mere 3,400 people, 850 miles north of Toronto. You know about the great riding of Lake Nipigon. We extend to Hudson Bay. We're 1,000 miles long. The people who live in our communities in Lake Nipigon listen to the Premier. You have to believe someone at some time. In the comfort and privacy of their homes, they sometimes watch question period, sometimes they choose to watch the debate, and they look carefully at the Premier of the province. When he says, "Your taxes should go down anywhere from 5% to 10% in the next three years," our good friends in Manitouwadge and elsewhere are saying, "I believe you, Mr Harris."

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: My apologies to the member for Lake Nipigon. He is a brilliant and compelling speaker. There should be a quorum here to listen to him.

The Acting Speaker: Is there a quorum?

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Lake Nipigon.

Mr Pouliot: I wish to thank the member for Welland-Thorold for reminding government members that it is their duty to have enough people in the House. I know that from time to time on a Thursday afternoon at approximately 5:30 you must compete, if you're a government member, with the likes of the Toronto Club and the Albany Club. I apologize to people at the club that they have to come back into the House to serve the people who pay the freight for all this.

Three months from now, some people's worlds are about to severely impacted. Before the quorum call, I was speaking of Mike Harris's credibility when he say taxes will go down. Taxes will not go down in Manitouwadge. Social housing costs will be added, and the cost for the Ontario Provincial Police alone will add $400 to $500 per house. It will hit the pockets of the taxpayers.

It's nothing short of a sham. If we were outside and I heard it said, this is a great untruth, and why is it so? Because the government in the last election campaign, when they were soliciting, asking people to put their X in the right place, promised a 30% tax cut on the provincial income tax. That 30% reduction adds up to $5 billion per year after the final instalment. Plus, they said: "While we're on the hook, we might as well promise the world. We will balance the budget in the first term."

So they were talking in terms of $14 billion to $15 billion. You have to make up the shortfall. Let's face it, if you don't cap it, if you give a full 30% rebate on the provincial income tax, the more money you make, the more you shall pocket. There's no question about that. Frank Stronach and M^{me} Bassett will do very fine, thank you. Thirty-eight million last year at Magna International and I want to wish him well — no envy, no jealousy. But I have some elders living in the northern reserves who have to subsist, have to make a living on less than $10,000 per year. Many of our senior citizens experience the same dire needs, and the government talks to me about fairness? I don't mind if the rich get a tax break, because of course they pay a lot of taxes, but what I really mind is that they are given the opportunity to run so much faster: faster than the middle class, faster than the small-wage earner, faster than the marginalized and those who have less. I really believe that it is unfair, that it has to stop someplace. Don't take the money away, of course not, but restore some equilibrium, some balance. It makes no sense at all.

1730

But in order to accomplish your agenda, you must move the world. Never in the annals of the province has an undertaking of such magnitude taken place. Three months before, people are frightened — well, they're anxious, and when you are anxious, sometimes it leads to fear. Rumours take on extraordinary proportions. You don't know what the cost will be, but you know that on January 1, you will be asked by your local council to come up with 50% of the previous year's levy. You pay taxes for general purpose; you pay taxes under your school levy. They'll go to a full 50%.

Then the assessment will start hitting. The notices will start hitting around late March or April. You'll already be three months into their fiscal year. Keep in mind that our fiscal year starts on April 1, so there is a discrepancy of three months, plus the great world of the unknown. Then citizens, residents, homeowners, small business, industry will be getting the final tax levy. How much will it be? Nobody knows. But Mike Harris says if they really tighten their belt, they — not "I," but they — should be able to cut taxes.

I'll give you an example. In some of the small farming communities — they abound in Ontario; it's vast, magnificent, very productive indeed — the municipality, the small village, takes 75% or in some cases 80% of its tax revenue from the farm rebate. Now Mike Harris says that money will no longer go to the municipality, but if they tighten their belt, they should be able to enact savings of anywhere from 5% to 10%.

It cannot be done, because they have already been for many years now under a self-imposed austerity program. They are quite lean. They are not about to sell the grader, for as surely as the river flows, there will be winter. They need the grader, one grader operator. Mike Harris says: "No, no. Cut off the grader. You don't need it." That's what he says, because he pockets the money.

Interjections.

Mr Pouliot: Madame, when I say he pockets the money, I want to make a correction: on behalf of the government. He will have to carry the guilt. The money goes into that vat, the general fund, goes into the vortex, and then the accomplices — I mean the Minister of Finance and the Premier — get together and dole it out to each ministry.

In this case it will matter less who governs you, when all is said and done. It will matter where you live. This will be the common denominator. Talk about location, location, location. The local entity will be given the responsibilities without the money, and that is traumatic. No one is saying: "What about recourse? If there's a shortfall, what am I to do? Am I to increase taxes by $500 per year per unit so that two of our seniors, Ms Jones and Mr Smith, are out the door?" Well, you can't do that. They don't have the ability to pay.

You know what I've heard at committee? Two prominent members of the Progressive Conservatives in response to this potential tragedy in shelter, a place you call home. "If you cannot afford to live there, sell it," was one comment. Another comment was, "Have you ever heard of a reverse mortgage?" Devastating. If this is not being provocative, it tells a sad story about our friends opposite. I can understand that philosophically they can be somewhat to the right, but with that lack of compassion and truly understanding, it doesn't augur well for Smith and Jones. I try to remind them that we're all on a waiting list of sorts, but most of them are more fortunate than my friends the citizens Jones and Smith. I guess you don't share.

Who gets the breaks? Winners and losers. Think about it. Newton's third law: For every move in one direction, there is one of equal proportion in the other direction. The banks, because of the business occupancy tax, get a big break. The car plants get a tremendous break; they go from 75% to 42% on the formula.

Who's going to pick it up? If you're commercially assessed, you will pick it up, because you get no break on schools. You will still pay the full complement of your school responsibilities. Then the council will have to decide, in their wisdom, because there is a shortfall big time: Do we hit the homeowners or do we hit the Canadian Tire store? I don't wish to impute motive, but there are 500 houses and there are 30 businesses. Some people will wish to count it that way, and they will show no mercy. They will take no prisoners. They need the money.

The government says the municipality will be given a reprieve. They will be given eight years to implement tax changes. They don't have to do it overnight. If you dislocate because your new assessment is forever impacting, extraordinary — the municipality, you can talk with them. But the municipality has to talk to the banker. At the end of the first year, many will be so far in the hole, they will have a hard choice to make. One of the choices will be to give the keys to the town office: "Here, have it, Mike Harris. I'm under receivership. I'm under receivership, Mikey. You come and run the town." Or they have to pay the banker, and if they have to pay the banker, there's interest, les coûts de manutention. It costs money, so you raise taxes in order to make ends meet.

A sad legacy indeed. Where are the impact studies? Where are they? How will we be impacted in three months' time, not five years down the line? You're reassessing 3.8 million units. You know the way it works. You're spending tens of millions of dollars. You hire those contractors who do assessments. They hire university and high school students, 30 bucks a shot. They put them on a quota and give them 12 bucks an hour. And the contractor — that's okay, the free enterprise system — pockets the difference.

The thing is, they've never done it before. Some of them are afraid of large dogs when they go to assess, because they don't have good news written all over them. As they enter the driveway, they're afraid of large dogs outside and large dogs inside, and they're there with their little notebook, their little "calepin," to see how many square feet and so on, and people know that a few months down the line, many of them will have very difficult decisions to make because their municipal taxes, the most relevant form of government, will come calling. Municipal taxes are the most impacting because you write the cheque. It's very much live, live, live; you pay, pay, pay. It's not taken off at the source. You write the cheque twice a year and it's painful, and people will notice. When they notice, when they put the pay stub on the table — it's sort of a family affair — the family gathers and they say: "Jane and Harry, this is how much we're spending. That's what we have. That's our lot. We get paid every two weeks."

1740

When they see that the municipal bill has gone up they will remember. Passion, vengeance: Get used to them. They will remember vividly specifically what Mike Harris and his brigade, all of you, said and they will say, "My taxes are going up," and you will say, "It's because you have been reassessed," and they will say, "It is because some other people are getting a break."

Many people who get a break will say: "What about retro? I had it coming. What took you so long?" People who don't get a break will say: "You shied away from the truth. You sold snake oil. You were conjurers of illusion." You played cheap magic because you wanted their vote, and you got their vote and you failed to deliver.

One more example of the Common Sense Revolution; it doesn't seem to stop — one would have thought that by this time some of the grey eminence, some of the spin doctors in the Premier's office or down on Bay Street would say they are overestimating the capacity of people to assimilate, to digest changes. We all welcome changes. People are saying, "You put the brakes on, let us be, because if you don't do it, it will be at your own peril and you will pay the political price."

Much more important, in a revolution people get hurt, there are victims, it is inevitable, but you have to show some sensitivity. You have to always seek balance, equilibrium, not the extreme left or the extreme right. You are embarked on a voyage that would make the best Anglican reverend or father proud on a Sunday morning as he delivers an address. You're giving him all the material to show his parishioners what is wrong in society and you represent that.

Many of you are not systematic, but it makes no sense not to know three months before the skies are about to be very low. Three months before, you don't know where you're going. What will it cost? Give us the cost factor. Three months — the train is coming in. Where is it? I have the right as a citizen, as a homeowner, to ask for a feasibility study. How will I be impacted? I'm going to start preparing so I can afford to pay my municipal tax bill. I don't want to be left short at all.

Interjections.

Mr Pouliot: They make light, they mock, it's their role if you're not quite like them, and yet I know it's difficult for ministers from the back seat of a stretch limousine to say, "Okay, stop it here, this is a democratic area, a populist area where average people live, so I'm going to go there." For many of them you don't have to go too far. Just look at their hands; they'll tell the tale. Many of them have Gucci shoes. The unfortunate part is that they don't have Gucci feet. That's the most unfortunate part, but they parade themselves.

I want to get your attention, with high respect, and the attention of the parliamentary assistant to finance, that of Isabel Bassett, the member for St Andrew-St Patrick. She was instrumental, singlehandedly. I was there. You had to be there to appreciate it. When people came calling, democratic theatre, street theatre, the arts, the beauty of the soul, they came calling with their needs, and I see in the proposal, Bill 149, that those concerns have been addressed. On their behalf, thank you very kindly. It's quite a departure from the Phantom and for those who have more to really relate to the contribution they make, and they could be exempt from taxes, although it's not guaranteed yet; there's still some work to be done. This is the one part of the bill that I agree with. The rest of it, and I've searched long and hard for ways to acquiesce, to be positive and to say, "This is a good document" — most unfortunately I was unable to find any other parts of the bill that I could agree with. It's most unfortunate.

The rights of way: You know about CNR, Canadian National, Canadian Pacific. You know about Ontario Hydro. Under the provisions of Bill 149, they've just won the lottery. Since Confederation they were given huge tracts of land. They did very well indeed. Over the years, as things changed, we had just-in-time delivery, truck traffic more than doubled in the past six years, alternatives were sought, door-to-door delivery, and they fell from favour. So they took the good breaks they had before, sold some properties, moved to the States and now they're competing with themselves. At one time, CP had the largest truck company in Canada. They were competing with the railroad; well, it wasn't called CP Rail.

You begin to understand the leaning, the tendencies of you, Ernie Eves, and you, Mike Harris, and I've been watching you carefully. Both of you, with respect, deserve to be chastised. When we confront you, you start shuffling paper and you start talking to one another. I wish the cameras had the ability to pan and see what's happening around here, but I understand that the protocol does not allow them to focus on individual members.

Rights of way will be exempt. The rich get richer.

Ontario Hydro — I'm just going through the book — this is what is happening here with Ontario Hydro. Do you know what the debt is? The debt of Ontario Hydro is about $32 billion. That's what the government says, that it's $29 billion plus another $3 billion. But what they don't tell you is that Ontario Hydro is about to embark on a debenture issue, bond issues, to the tune of $8 billion to $10 billion in the next four years. It will swell their debt to more than $40 billion. In fact, the Macdonald commission — Speaker, I want to share this with you — says, "If you wish to privatize Ontario Hydro, reduce your debt to $15 billion so it will become more manageable."

1750

Aside from Ontario Hydro, let's go back to the provincial debt, the one that keeps increasing every day because this government each and every day borrows more money than it takes in. Every hour this government spends $500 more than it takes in. Unbelievable. Day after day after day, 15% of the money that is spent through taxes, through revenues, is to pay the plastic, the provincial debt. And what do they do? They go on another bender. They say: "Raise the limit on my credit card. I will cut taxes. I'm not going to pay my debt; I'm going to throw a party."

I would pay my debt first. It makes more sense to me. People tell you, "If you win something, pay your credit cards, pay down your mortgage," but not those wizards, oh, no, not those power brokers. What do you do? You get in debt even more. "If we're in debt, there's no reason why you at the municipal level, why you the small homeowner, why you the citizen can't join us."

Mr Kormos: "Come along for the ride."

Mr Pouliot: "Come along for the ride and be in debt."

Savings are at an all-time low in percentage. Ontarians don't save nearly as much as they used to. Personal debt is very, very high. Personal bankruptcies are at an all-time high. People give up and turn away the keys.

When I look at the generation that is growing up and the high degree of unemployment among our young, educated people, it is very painful.

They don't seem to put in the incentives. Oh, they talk a good line, they're smooth, but when it's time to walk the walk, they disappear.

I recall when I was raised many years ago in Montréal, we didn't have much in the neighbourhood but we had so much to look forward to. Today I go right here in downtown Toronto, and the young people seem to have a little more but I wonder if they have as much to look forward to as I had. Those are the people who will be the leaders in the society of tomorrow. They are eager to share, looking forward to the adventure, but you're not going to do it by cutting $1 billion from 1996 to 1997 in education. You acquire the tools to defend yourself, to integrate economically in society. Without education you don't have much of a chance.

When the government says, "We're not cutting," oh, yes, you're cutting. When the government says, "We're not cutting health care," because again you've got to find the tax cut somewhere, of course you're cutting health care. You can say that you're spending the same money, but there are 700,000 more people than there were four and a half years ago in Ontario, so per capita you're sure cutting.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Community and Social Services): You guys stopped the growth. Frances Lankin stopped the growth in the health budget. She put a cap on it, the first minister who was able to do that, actually. There was 11% growth and she brought it down to 1%.

Mr Pouliot: "You guys this" and "You guys that." You can blame the past government, but the fact is, Minister, you have been the government since June 8, 1995. Madam, you take the credit, you take the blame.

You've had a recovery. Our export markets have been doing so well, you could have done otherwise. You had some choices to make. You have chosen to increase the debt. The debt will be fully $20 million more when you finally leave office — none too soon, I might add. The people out there are asking: "Will people cross the floor? Will they come and sit beside us?"

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): That looks better.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Not only is that out of order, it could be construed as assault.

Interjection.

The Speaker: I agree. Member for Lake Nipigon.

Mr Pouliot: This is an extraordinary departure from form. I would ask that Your High Tenure do address — at first I thought it could have possibly been an act of aggression, but I will conclude this sorry episode by saying that I'm a little hurt and somewhat vexed. It interrupted my flow, but more importantly —

The Speaker: Excuse me, member for Lake Nipigon, did you say vexed?

Mr Pouliot: Vexed.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Pouliot: Mr Speaker, thank you for your help. I make the same mistake in three languages, and I'm comfortable in another two, but I do appreciate your help, sir.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): What's the third language?

Mr Pouliot: [Remarks in Spanish]

I want to talk to you, Mr Speaker, while we have five minutes left. I wish to focus on the need to get back on track. Here you have a government that is cutting taxes to the tune of 30%, mostly for the rich. If you're at the bottom end of the pecking order, you hardly get a cup of coffee from the tax cut. If you make $25,000 per year, you pocket $450. Someone who makes 10 times that pockets 30 times the $450: $15,000. Does it make any sense? They call that a progression, yet the debt every hour of every day keeps growing and growing; $247,000 yields you $15,000 at la payola, but if you make $25,000, you get $450. And I'm supposed to believe in you? I'm supposed to go to your altar and respect your manifesto and your mantra. Like heck, if I may be so bold.

They couldn't manage a candy floss shop or a shop of any sort. If I had a few dollars to invest, they would be the last people in the world I would entrust my money with. Would you? Mind you, I would buy their bonds because they pay more, because they will not be competitive for that long. They can improve their credit rating in times of prosperity, but when the cycle hits, when they run out of demographic options in 2006, 2007, will the new government, when we're back, have enough time to rectify the legacy? The party of gloom and doom. You would have thought the Conservatives deserved better. People, we're reminding them, will say: "They overnighted. They stayed one term and they left a very sad legacy. In a time where all around us prosperity was becoming more visible, they chose to augment and to increase the debt."

January 1, 1998, stay tuned, be at your post, be the fine soldier, the sentry, be vigilant, because the bills will start rolling in and they will not give you the shortfall. They will not send you a cheque to make up the difference because the cheque will have gone to Bay Street.

It being 6 of the clock, Mr Speaker —

The Speaker: The member for Mississauga West would like to read the business for next week.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon Rob Sampson (Minister without Portfolio [Privatization]): I have the weekly business statement. Pursuant to standing order 55, I wish to indicate the business of the House for the week of September 29, 1997.

Monday, September 29: Bill 160, Education Quality Improvement Act; Bill 149, Fair Municipal Finance Act (No. 2).

Tuesday, September 30: Bill 149, Fair Municipal Finance Act (No. 2); Bill 160, Education Quality Improvement Act.

Wednesday, October 1: Opposition day, Liberals; Bill 160, Education Quality Improvement Act.

Thursday, October 2: Private members' public business, ballot items 101 and 102; Bill 149, Fair Municipal Finance Act (No. 2).

VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Before we adjourn, I know that all members would like to know that the member for Durham Centre's mother and wife are in the members' gallery. Welcome.

It now being after 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock Monday.

The House adjourned at 1801.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY
COMITÉS PERMANENTS DE L'ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE

Administration of justice / Administration de la justice

Chair / Président: Gerry Martiniuk
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: E.J. Douglas Rollins
Dave Boushy, Bruce Crozier, Jim Flaherty,
Garry J. Guzzo, Peter Kormos, Gerry Martiniuk,
David Ramsay, E.J. Douglas Rollins, Bob Wood
Clerk / Greffier: Douglas Arnott

Estimates / Budgets des dépenses

Chair / Président: Gerard Kennedy
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Rick Bartolucci
Rick Bartolucci, Gilles Bisson, John C. Cleary,
Ed Doyle, Bill Grimmett, Helen Johns,
Gerard Kennedy, Trevor Pettit, Wayne Wettlaufer
Clerk / Greffière: Rosemarie Singh

Finance and economic affairs /
Finances et affaires économiques

Chair / Président: Terence H. Young
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Wayne Wettlaufer
Ted Arnott, Isabel Bassett, Jim Brown, Monte Kwinter,
Gerry Phillips, Gilles Pouliot, E.J. Douglas Rollins,
Wayne Wettlaufer, Terence H. Young
Clerk / Greffière: Rosemarie Singh

General government / Affaires gouvernementales

Chair / Président: David Tilson
Vice-Chair / Vice-Présidente: Julia Munro
Mike Colle, Harry Danford, Barbara Fisher,
Tom Froese, Steve Gilchrist, Rosario Marchese,
Julia Munro, Mario Sergio, David Tilson
Clerk / Greffier: Tom Prins

Government agencies / Organismes gouvernementaux

Chair / Président: Floyd Laughren
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Tony Silipo
John R. Baird, Alex Cullen, Michael Gravelle,
Bert Johnson, Floyd Laughren, Dan Newman,
Tony Silipo, Joseph Spina, R. Gary Stewart,
Clerk / Greffier: Douglas Arnott

Legislative Assembly / Assemblée législative

Chair / Président: Joseph N. Tascona
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Gary Fox
Tony Clement, Alvin Curling, Carl DeFaria, Gary Fox,
Ernie Hardeman, Gilles E. Morin, Peter North,
Lillian Ross, Tony Silipo, Joseph N. Tascona, David Tilson
Clerk / Greffier: Peter Sibenik

Ombudsman

Chair / Président: John R. O'Toole
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Trevor Pettit
Dominic Agostino, Douglas B. Ford, Allan K. McLean,
John R. O'Toole, John L. Parker, Trevor Pettit,
Sandra Pupatello, Bill Vankoughnet, Len Wood
Clerk / Greffière: Tonia Grannum

Public accounts / Comptes publics

Chair / Président: Bernard Grandmaître
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Richard Patten
Marcel Beaubien, Gary Fox, Bernard Grandmaître,
Bill Grimmett, Jean-Marc Lalonde, Shelley Martel,
Richard Patten, Peter L. Preston, Joseph N. Tascona
Clerk / Greffière: Donna Bryce

Regulations and private bills /
Règlements et projets de loi privés

Chair / Président: Toby Barrett
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Marcel Beaubien
Toby Barrett, Marcel Beaubien, David Caplan,
Ernie Hardeman, Gary L. Leadston, Tony Martin,
Tony Ruprecht, Derwyn Shea, Frank Sheehan,
Clerk / Greffier: Tom Prins

Resources development / Développement des ressources

Chair / Présidente: Brenda Elliott
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Jerry J. Ouellette
David Christopherson, Ted Chudleigh, Sean G. Conway,
Brenda Elliott, Doug Galt, John Hastings, Pat Hoy,
Bart Maves, Jerry J. Ouellette
Clerk / Greffière: Donna Bryce

Social development / Affaires sociales

Chair / Présidente: Annamarie Castrilli
Vice-Chair / Vice-Président: Dwight Duncan
Marion Boyd, Jack Carroll, Annamarie Castrilli,
Dwight Duncan, Tim Hudak, Frank Klees,
Lyn McLeod, John R. O'Toole, Bruce Smith
Clerk / Greffière: Tonia Grannum

CONTENTS

Thursday 25 September 1997

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Humber River, private member's notice of motion number 73, Mr Shea
Mr Shea 12413, 12420
Mr Kennedy 12415
Ms Churley 12416
Mr Chudleigh 12418
Mr Sergio 12418
Mr O'Toole 12419
Mr Rollins 12420
Agreed to 12428

Biotechnology, private member's notice of motion number 70, Mr Chudleigh
Mr Chudleigh 12421, 12428
Mr Hoy 12422
Mr Lessard 12423
Mr Galt 12424
Ms Castrilli 12425
Ms Churley 12426
Mr Danford 12427
Mr Curling 12427
Agreed to 12428

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

School bus safety
Mr Hoy 12428
Fire in Hamilton
Mr Christopherson 12429
Ontario apples
Mr Galt 12429
Famine in North Korea
Mr Phillips 12429
Education financing
Mr Kormos 12429
Fiscal responsibility
Mr Bert Johnson 12430
Hospital restructuring
Mr Duncan 12430
Education reform
Mr Silipo 12430
Team Canada 1972
Mr Jim Brown 12430

ORAL QUESTIONS

Education reform
Mrs McLeod 12432
Mr Snobelen 12433, 12434
Mr Cordiano 12433
Hospital financing
Mr Hampton 12434
Mr Harris 12434, 12436
Mrs Boyd 12435
Mr Kennedy 12436
Government appointments
Mr Hampton 12435
Mrs Witmer 12435
Mr Christopherson 12436
Franchise businesses
Mr Hampton 12437
Mr Tsubouchi 12437
Mr Martin 12437
Teachers' collective bargaining
Mrs Marland 12437
Mr Snobelen 12437
Property taxation
Mr Phillips 12438
Mr Eves 12438
Social assistance
Mr Kormos 12438
Mrs Ecker 12439
Young offenders
Mr O'Toole 12439
Mr Runciman 12439
Road safety
Mr Colle 12440
Mr Palladini 12440
Municipal restructuring
Mr Silipo 12441
Mr Harris 12441
Home care
Mrs Ross 12441
Mr Jackson 12441

PETITIONS

Court decision
Mr Bob Wood 12442
Mr Bert Johnson 12444
Road safety
Mr Colle 12442, 12444
Fire in Hamilton
Mr Christopherson 12442, 12444
Non-profit housing
Mr Patten 12442
Hospital restructuring
Mrs Boyd 12442
Mr Christopherson 12445
Public libraries
Mr Gravelle 12443
Occupational health and safety
Mr Christopherson 12443
Fire safety
Mr Caplan 12443
Blood system
Mrs Boyd 12443
Crematorium in Vaughan
Mr Sergio 12444
Pay equity
Mr Christopherson 12444
TVOntario
Mr Gravelle 12444

SECOND READINGS

Fair Municipal Finance Act, 1997 (No. 2) Bill 149, Mr Eves
Mr Eves 12445
Mr Tascona 12446
Mr Stewart 12449
Mr Phillips 12451, 12452, 12460
Mr Pouliot 12451, 12460
Ms Bassett 12451, 12459
Mr Tascona 12451
Mr Duncan 12455
Mr Wildman 12459
Mr Crozier 12459
Mr Bisson 12459
Debate deemed adjourned 12464

OTHER BUSINESS

Members' privileges
Mr Silipo 12431
The Speaker 12431
Visitors
The Speaker 12432, 12464
Team Canada 1972
Mr Runciman 12441
Mr Jim Brown 12442
Business of the House
Mr Sampson 12464

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Jeudi 25 septembre 1997

DEUXIÈME LECTURE

Loi de 1997 sur le financement équitable des municipalités (n° 2), projet de loi 149, M. Eves
Débat présumé ajourné 12464

A 3 ON
X1
-D23

mment
Publications

No. 237A

Nº 237A

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly of Ontario

First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Monday 29 September 1997

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Lundi 29 septembre 1997

OCT 6 1997

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday 29 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lundi 29 septembre 1997

The House met at 1330.

Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Pat Hoy (Essex-Kent): For over a year, Mike Harris has been moving at breakneck speed to close hospitals in Ontario. My colleagues and I have been trying to make the government listen, really listen, to the people they serve; listen and slow down. Recently the OHA released a study conducted by the University of Western Ontario. The study confirms what we have been saying all along, that the speed of restructuring is directly affecting patient care. It means less nursing time per patient, reduced patient supervision, high employee stress and a reduced level of cleanliness. In other words, the government's too hasty agenda is undermining the quality of health care in Ontario.

In my own community, to quote the CEO of the Chatham-Kent Health Alliance, "The amount of change is overwhelming...less time with patients is a reality here." The president of the Kent County Medical Society believes the cutbacks have already adversely affected patient care. He says, "The government hasn't come through with the financial commitments it said it was going to make."

On behalf of all the residents of Chatham-Kent who are already experiencing serious medical underservicing, I urge the government to slow down. Be certain the changes you impose guarantee quality health care for every single resident of Chatham-Kent. The government should only use speed in providing the money required to support our hospitals and community-based patient care.

NORTH BAY DAYS OF ACTION

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): The North Bay Days of Action are technically over, but the spirit and energy lives on. As organizers projected, Saturday saw the largest demonstration ever in northern Ontario. Over 30,000 protesters filled the streets of North Bay in an orderly and peaceful but unmistakable denouncement of the Harris government's policies and their negative effect on working people.

I met teachers, child care workers, custodians, clerks, psychiatric nurses, garbage collectors, community workers, correctional officers, property assessors, professors, government inspectors, students, people from all walks of life joining together to send a message to Mike Harris.

"We won't back down" was the rallying cry of the day, as speaker after speaker spoke about preserving community services, health care and the quality of education. "Fish or cut bait" was the repeated challenge to Premier Harris, in recognition of the fact that he chose to ignore the people in his own home town and instead went fishing with the governor of Iowa.

As one local resident said in response to the question, what did they think of this event taking place in Mike's town, "It's not Mike's town, it's our town." In a similar vein, others added their voices, "It's not Mike's Ontario, it's our Ontario and we're taking it back."

I want to pay special tribute to the team of ordinary working people who planned, organized and marshalled the Days of Action events. They are a true tribute to the skill, ingenuity and energy of the working people of Ontario.

MUSKOKA-GEORGIAN BAY ECONOMY

Mr Bill Grimmett (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): Small businesses are the economic strength of this province and when they are booming, so is the province. It's my pleasure to inform the Legislative Assembly what the small business owners in my riding of Muskoka-Georgian Bay are saying.

Sue Paul, the manager of Northern Reflections in Midland, said, "We've been extremely busy over last year, an incredible increase." "This year there's a lot more tourists, a lot more cottagers, a lot more travellers. We're seeing more from Europe, England and a lot of Americans. We're just running off our feet."

In Bracebridge, Inn at the Falls owner Peter Rickard said of 1997, "This is the best season we've had since we owned the business."

At The Panhandler in Midland, owner Sharlene Bullock says: "This summer has been very strong. I'm having to bump up orders that I thought were sufficient but now realize are not." She said that a noticeable increase in traffic began last Christmas season and it hasn't stopped since. During that time she found that customers were interested in more expensive purchases.

In Gravenhurst, Russ Brown of the steamboat RMS Segwun had a record-breaking summer. "As of the end of August, we had all record months. We're very pleased."

Muskoka Tourism marketing manager Randy Clark said 1997 was a great year for business and he expects the remainder of the year to be busy in anticipation of the upcoming Bala cranberry festival and the fall colours tour.

The chair of the Midland Business Improvement Area said, "There have been a lot more people downtown and more activity on the main street."

I was very pleased to hear these comments from the business owners in my riding. As they benefit from an expanding economy, so do all Ontarians.

SABIN CAUTIS

Mr David Caplan (Oriole): I rise today concerned that this government does not acknowledge the achievements of the Ontario educational system. It was only last week that the Minister of Education called Ontario "the caboose at the end of the education train." I hope the minister will take some time and learn about the successes of our system before he condemns it, by his irresponsible and reckless actions, to mediocrity.

Let me tell my fellow members about the achievements of a student from my community, Sabin Cautis of Earl Haig Secondary School in North York. Sabin is a member of the 1997 Canadian International Mathematics Olympiad team. Sabin was selected from among more than 200,000 students who participated in local, provincial and national mathematics competitions and has been on the Canadian team for the past two years.

The Canadian team of six high school students won two silver medals, two bronze, and an honourable mention at the 38th International Mathematics Olympiad. The Canadian team placed 29th out of 82 competing countries. Since 1981, Canadian students have achieved a total of eight gold, 21 silver and 39 bronze medals.

Obviously, the achievements of Sabin Cautis and many other students in Ontario are a reflection of the good that can come out of the province's educational institutions.

TAKE BACK THE NIGHT

Ms Marilyn Churley (Riverdale): On Saturday I had the opportunity to participate in Toronto's annual Take Back the Night march. This year, the festivities took place in my riding of Riverdale at the Jimmy Simpson Recreation Centre. Inside, there were displays and information tables to let women know about resources and programs available around Metro. Outside, in the park, we were treated to the music of local female singers and inspiring speeches by women directly involved in the fight against violence against women.

By about 8:30, the crowd had grown to about 600, and it was an enthusiastic, noisy group of women who took to the streets to proclaim our right to be free of violence and to walk in our own streets without fear.

Ironically, this year's event coincided with the Solicitor General's release of the news that they will fund 17 shelters and agencies this year; that is to say, 17 of 261 applications from organizations working to prevent violence and to help deal with the devastating effects of violence against women. This is happening on top of cuts to welfare, legal aid, day care, social housing, second-stage housing and rape crisis centres, and the gutting of rent control. And the list goes on.

This government's war against women must stop. I want to congratulate all of those who organized this year's Take Back the Night event and all those working in the trenches to help end violence against women.

EDNA DAVENPORT DONATION

Mr John O'Toole (Durham East): As a graduate of the University of Toronto, it is indeed a pleasure that I rise to inform the House that the U of T has received one of the largest cash gifts in its history, $9.7 million from a former household science student. The donation, from 90-year-old Edna Davenport in the estate of her late husband, John, was announced by the widow's son, Peter, at a dinner honouring six Nobel laureates last night.

Edna, originally from Owen Sound and now living in Florida, was wooed by her late husband, a chemical engineering student from Hamilton, during her flapper years at the University of Toronto. They wed in 1932 on campus in the Hart House chapel. The widow's son, Peter, said his parents wanted to do something special to thank the institution that meant so much to them.

The donation will be used to build a state-of-the-art laboratory on top of the school's aging chemistry building. It will pay for a three-floor expansion of the current building as well as the necessary new lab upgrades.

University of Toronto president Robert Prichard called the donation a "breathtakingly generous gesture." The University of Toronto describes the Davenport donation as a "spectacular act of generosity." This is extremely significant to the university and Canada, because it is the kind of philanthropy that will some day produce future Nobel laureates like John Polanyi, who was the laureate in chemistry in 1986. I am sure all of us will join in thanking the Davenport family for their generous gift. We all wish the University of Toronto success —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you.

1340

PEOPLE FIRST

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): On Saturday afternoon in Welland I attended a public forum sponsored by the People First organization where individuals with disabilities gathered to share with everyone in attendance their needs and their hopes and aspirations. It is unfortunate that all members of the Ontario Legislature were not able to hear what the member for Welland-Thorold and I were able to listen to, as the experiences of these individuals with disabilities were most revealing.

The apprehension felt by everyone about the changes being contemplated in Bill 142 was apparent in virtually all the presentations. What each one of these people was seeking was an assurance that an adequate support system would be in place to assist them in being as independent as possible despite their disabilities. To have some of their needs met requires an investment by the government of Ontario, an investment in people.

The People First forum was not a gathering of the rich and the privileged in some posh, private club. They were not people who by virtue of a powerful position and an accumulation of wealth are able to live comfortably without the financial intervention of government. They are, rather, people who need the understanding and help of elected representatives to give them an opportunity to cope with and overcome obstacles presented by their various disabilities.

They live in fear that in an attempt to cater to those who want to randomly slash social expenditures and take advantage of an income tax cut that favours the richest in our province the most, their support systems will be eroded or removed. Let all of us work to allay their fears to ensure that the people with disabilities are not treated as second-class citizens.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): It's my pleasure to rise today and advise the House that I was also one of those in North Bay this weekend. Even though the Premier thought North Bay wasn't a good enough place to be, there were certainly better than 30,000 of us who thought that was an excellent place to be, and it was, because the message coming out of that rally and those two days of protest is that this government cannot expect that the sham of a process around 136, apart and aside from the content, is going to be accepted in this province. Make no mistake, 136 and 160 are linked decidedly in the minds of all those you have heard from so far about 136.

Talking about 136 and the sham process we just went through, today we received the long-awaited amendments to Bill 136 that effectively give us a completely different bill. Let me point out: There's Bill 136, as originally printed and presented, and there's the 150 pages of amendments we got a few hours ago — 136 then, 136 now. When do we start clause-by-clause discussion of these detailed legal concepts? At 3:30 today, and somehow that's supposed to be democratic? The fact is you have no interest in listening to anyone. You want to ram through your legislation, ram through your hard-line agenda, without giving a care for anyone, as long as it looks good.

The fact is when I was an alderman in the city of Hamilton, I couldn't get a stop sign put up as quickly as you're ramming 136 through.

AIDS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): I'm pleased to rise today and report in the House that it's National AIDS Awareness Week. From the beginning, the Harris government has clearly indicated that AIDS is one of its priorities. We're doing more for people with HIV and AIDS than any other government in Canada.

This year alone, the Ontario Ministry of Health will spend almost $56 million for HIV and AIDS programs, and that doesn't even include doctor billings to OHIP. This is close to $16 million more than the federal government spends for all of Canada.

Our funding goes to a wide range of programs including outpatient clinics, supportive housing and drug therapies for people living with HIV. In the last provincial budget we announced we would invest $10 million in the Ontario HIV treatment network. The network will exist to improve the health and quality of life for people living with HIV and AIDS by ensuring high quality and appropriate treatments. I believe these initiatives demonstrate our government's solid and long-term commitment to people living with HIV.

I would like to acknowledge the passing of Mr Andrew Lafontaine, who died of AIDS in January of this year. He served as the co-chair of the Ontario Advisory Committee on HIV/AIDS for over a year. His work and insight will be greatly missed.

As well, I would like to announce the recent appointment of Mr David Hoe of Ottawa as co-chair, a respected voice in the AIDS community who will complement the work of the other co-chair, Dr Anne Phillips of Toronto.

Our province has come a long way in fighting HIV and there is a lot more to be done.

MOTIONS

HOUSE SITTINGS

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): I move that pursuant to standing order 9(c), the House shall meet from 6:30 pm to 9:30 pm on Monday, September 29, 1997, Tuesday, September 30, 1997, and Wednesday, October 1, 1997, for the purpose of considering government business.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. I declare the motion carried.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to request the unanimous consent of the Legislature to have a question period with each of the evening sessions this week.

The Speaker: The member for St Catharines is asking for unanimous consent to have question periods for each of the evening sessions this week. Agreed? I heard a no.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): I move that notwithstanding standing order 95(g), the requirement for notice be waived with respect to ballot items 105 and 106.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? I declare the motion carried.

ORAL QUESTIONS

TEACHERS' COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Premier. You will know that Ontario teachers have informed us that some time after the beginning of second reading of the teachers' bill and some time before third reading, 126,000 of them, all Ontario teachers at the primary and secondary levels, are prepared to step outside of the classroom and to go on strike. That strike would affect two million Ontario students. There have to be nearly one million families that would be affected if that was to happen.

One of the single greatest stumbling blocks in the resolution of this matter, and you well recognize this, Premier, is found in the person himself of your minister John Snobelen. Teachers across this province do not have any faith in your minister. They do not believe that he understands the importance of the work they do in classrooms. They do not believe that he values teaching or values teachers themselves.

Will you, given that, demand the resignation of your minister?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): From what I have heard, and I have talked with a number of teachers over the last few days, they are concerned. The teachers I have talked to over the last few days and weeks have told me that they were concerned about school boards and their federations cutting deals to increase class size, and they want that to stop. They have told me that they're a little surprised with all the rhetoric, because they know that the Mike Harris who negotiated with them in Nipissing is fair and reasonable and has always fought for quality education.

That's why I appointed as Minister of Education somebody who shares those same goals. The Honourable John Snobelen from Mississauga North is one whose commitment to quality, to improving excellence, to improving our standard of education is unparalleled in North America.

1350

Mr McGuinty: I'll tell you what your Minister of Education has done to date: So far he's robbed our classes of $533 million; he has killed junior kindergarten; he is attacking special education and he is attacking adult education everywhere across the province.

There is another important stumbling block in the way of a resolution of this matter quite distinct from the minister himself, and that is the fact that he continues to maintain that he will remove another $1 billion from education funding in Ontario. Premier, you yourself can, right now, eliminate that stumbling block by promising that not one more cent will be removed from education in Ontario. Will you do that right now?

Hon Mr Harris: The problem is that the member is coming up with the same amount of accuracy as his critic for health. Most of the stuff he is saying is simply not founded in any facts that I've been able to see.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Member for Oriole, member for Ottawa West and member for Hamilton East, come to order, please.

Hon Mr Harris: This Minister of Education has not cut one single junior kindergarten class throughout the whole province. Junior kindergarten is alive and well in Nipissing, alive and well in Durham. Some boards, even though we still fund the full share of junior kindergarten the same as we do for all other elementary classes, have opted not to have it, many at the insistence of their constituents. Certainly this minister has not condoned or encouraged that.

This minister has never used the figure of $1 billion; you have and others have. He has never used that kind of figure. This minister has never taken a cent out of Ontario classrooms. In fact the legislation that is being brought in is to stop what happened in the last four or five years when money was taken out of the classrooms. That's why this minister has brought in a bill to ensure —

The Speaker: Thank you. Final supplementary.

Mr McGuinty: Nobody is buying that. Here is a suggestion, Premier: Leave this Legislature, go into half a dozen Ontario classrooms and talk to teachers, those people who do the work on the front lines, and ask those teachers what this minister has done to them and their working conditions. Then you will gain a good understanding of what's happening to education in Ontario.

Premier, you won't get rid of the minister. You will not promise to stop cutting education. There is one other thing you should consider: Put this bill on ice. Why the unseemly haste? Why do you have to rush it through? Why do you have to engage in this politics of brinkmanship on a regular basis? Two million kids could be evicted from their classrooms as early as this week if you don't do something. You've got to intervene. Will you put the bill on ice and withdraw it for the time being?

Hon Mr Harris: It is teachers who have said we need changes. It is the very front-line teachers in the classroom who have been calling for the kinds of changes we have. I would ask the leader of the Liberal Party, if for the first time in your life you want to be constructive, tell us what it is you object to. Do you object in this bill to limiting class size? Do you object to putting more —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Premier.

Hon Mr Harris: Since this bill takes not a penny from the classroom but merely implements the changes front-line teachers have been talking about, I would ask you, what do you object to? Limiting class size? That's in the bill. Do you object to the longer school year and more contact time with teachers and students? If you do, say so. You see, since you've become leader of the party, you're "No, no, no." You're against everything that comes along. You've never stood for anything constructive, for quality education, for better health care or anything else in this House. That's why you're irrelevant.

The Speaker: New question.

Mr McGuinty: My question is for the Minister of Education and Training, but I might say in passing that arrogance on the part of the government is actually a good sign for us, because it is a classical prelude to the defeat of a government.

Minister, you will know that one of the sticking points in this debate with our teachers is the fact that you have inserted in this bill, through the back door, a provision which allows you to interfere with their right to strike during the transitional period. You have told us that this is purely a technicality and that this was not your intention and really doesn't mean that.

We now have, and you should know this, a legal opinion. The opinion says that such regulatory-making power would permit the stopping of a strike or lockout through regulations resulting in forced arbitration or other methods. No doubt the minister may claim that such power was not intended to be granted; if so, then amendments should be introduced. Will you now admit that you have double-crossed our teachers?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): Nothing could be further from the truth. We obviously met with the teachers' federations and others in education before we brought this legislation forward. We answered their concerns. They had a concern about making sure the federations could represent teachers. We honoured that, although it was recommended in a report that we not do that. We heard them say that they wanted principals in the bargaining unit, that this was the best way to run schools and we honoured that. We heard that the right to strike was very important and we've honoured that.

I showed the Leader of the Opposition last week a legal opinion suggesting that this section of the bill does not in any way, shape or form interfere with the right to strike of teachers. That's my understanding of the legal interpretation of this bill. I'm not a lawyer; the member opposite is. I'm surprised he would bring this up in the first place. What it does do is this: It protects the interests of students during the transition, to make sure their programs are not affected, as we have promised teachers and parents and students. That's what it does.

Mr McGuinty: Your understanding of your bill is wrong. We have a legal opinion that makes it very clear you can stop a strike or a lockout through your own regulations.

Furthermore, you attach such tremendous weight to that provision that you have included in your own bill another section which reads as follows. It says, "In the event of a conflict between that regulation," the one I referred to, "and a provision of this or any other act, the regulation prevails."

What you have taken pains to state in your bill is that if there is any doubt whatsoever, your bill, which reserves unto you the right to interfere with the teachers' right to strike, has to prevail. Your bill, which says you can interfere with the right to strike, will be given primacy. Minister, that's like waving a red flag in front of our teachers. Is this bill really so important that you're prepared to risk putting two million Ontario students out of school?

Hon Mr Snobelen: Again, in view of the fact that I brought this up last week with the Leader of the Opposition, I'm surprised he is taking this tack. I have a letter here from Cassels, Brock and Blackwell that says, "In our view, the enabling legislation would not extend to permit the provincial cabinet to enact legislation relating to labour relation matters." It goes on further to say, "As noted above, the enabling legislation would not give the cabinet the authority to enact regulations relating to labour relation matters."

That's the legal opinion we have on this section of the bill. This section of the bill will certainly allow to us to protect the programs students are engaged in during this transition. This is a legal opinion we have obtained. If he has a counter legal opinion, please send it over and I'll send it to the lawyers in the ministry. I'd be more than happy to do that.

1400

Mr McGuinty: I'll be delighted to send a copy of this opinion over to the minister. Minister, what your words and your actions make perfectly clear to us over here is that you just don't understand how serious this matter is: Two million students have their educational career at risk here; over one million Ontario households are going to be affected by this; and 126,000 teachers have been brought together. That's without precedent. You single-handedly have succeeded in bringing teachers together; in a rather perverse way, you've brought about some unity among our teachers.

You've taken half a billion dollars out of the system. You want to take another $1 billion out. Your actions are about to take our teachers out. Why don't you yourself, Minister, get out? Why don't you simply resign?

Hon Mr Snobelen: The Leader of the Opposition sees a different issue here. I see the issue as being, how do we make sure that our schools provide our students with the opportunities they need? How can we take students in Ontario — despite the fact that we have the best teachers in the world, we have students who are locked in mediocrity, average on the test results in the pan-Canadian international tests.

Our challenge is step by step to build a better education system, to make sure our students have the best performance of any students in Canada. That's our objective. That's what I work on every day. That's what my colleagues and I are behind. I invite the Leader of the Opposition to join us in making a better education for our young people and a better future for our young people, because that's what this effort is all about.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): A question to the Premier: A couple of hours ago, we got a look at your new Bill 136. I must say, it looks like an entirely new bill, and that's a good thing, because the old one was awful. But you've created another problem along the way, Premier. You see, this is the old bill; it's about 63 pages long. This is the new bill; 150 pages of amendments.

You've also got your time allocation order which says that the 150 pages of amendments have to be considered and dealt with in the next 30 hours. What it amounts to is that once again you're trying to change the laws of Ontario without any public consultation, without allowing the public to understand what you're really putting in place. You're simply trying to ram through your legislation. Premier, we know that when you do that your government makes all kinds of mistakes. You've made mistakes on health care; you've made mistakes elsewhere. Will you withdraw the time allocation order and allow the public time to consider what you're really doing?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I know the Minister of Labour is very anxious to answer and I'll let her do so in a minute, but I want to tell you this: The changes that are being introduced have come from the public, they've come from the unions, they've come from the hospital boards and they've come from the municipalities as a result of extensive consultation over the past year.

If you contrast the amount of consultation on this bill, leading to the bill and the amendments, versus the social contract you jammed through without any hearings at all, the contrast is rather astounding. You may have difficulty understanding it, but the unions don't, the municipalities don't, the hospital boards don't. Those who are affected by the legislation don't have difficulty understanding. In fact, most have been rather supportive that this government has been 10 times more consultative than the government we replaced.

Mr Hampton: Premier, there were a whole bunch of folks in your home riding on the weekend who would very much like the time to completely understand what's in Bill 136. Their point is simply this: You introduced these amendments a couple of hours ago. No one out there in the public has had an opportunity to see them, to understand them or to understand what direction they set.

Let me get right to the point. One of the concerns we have is that you are going to use Bill 136 to in effect take away pay equity from a whole bunch of women who work in the broader public sector. As we read the amendments, that is what you're doing. Can you tell us why you're using Bill 136 to take away pay equity settlements for women who work in the broader public sector? Can you tell us that and can you tell the public that?

Hon Mr Harris: I think the Minister of Labour can.

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Minister of Labour): I believe if you take a very careful look at the changes which have been introduced today, you will see in there that there have been changes made to the pay equity provisions. We did what we said we'd do: We listened very carefully last week during the course of the consultations and we have made some changes. You will see that we're going to be focusing our legislation very narrowly on the broader public sector restructuring, so we're going to be dealing only with the issue of a sale of a business and we will not be dealing with the issue of pay equity as it relates to home day care providers or retroactivity.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Final supplementary.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): Minister, you seem to think it's okay for you to hurry up this process for everybody else, that everyone else has to rush through this. Experts, lawyers, labour leaders have been meeting since about 10:30 this morning, just a few hours ago, poring through all these legal amendments, because we have to start voting on them in another hour and a half. If it's okay for everybody else to have to rush through their understanding, let's test your understanding.

All the people who have been looking at subsections 15(6) and (7) of schedule B aren't quite sure what they mean, including the legal labour experts. Will you stand in your place right now and tell us what it means? If you can't, how do you expect your government backbenchers and the rest of us who are on that committee to bloody well start voting on this thing?

Hon Mrs Witmer: If the member opposite would give me an opportunity to find it, I would be very pleased to respond.

Interjections.

Hon Mrs Witmer: I can understand your desire to get into all of the little nitty-gritty details, because you find it totally —

Interjections.

Hon Mrs Witmer: You seem unable to understand that when we said we were going to listen, when we said we were going to consult and when we said we were going to make changes, we actually followed through on our commitment. We made the three major changes: We did withdraw the restriction on the right to strike; we did eliminate the LRTC and give those provisions to the OLRB; and we did withdraw the DRC.

The Speaker: Answer, please.

Hon Mrs Witmer: I would indicate to you that unlike you, we are quite prepared to review the details with you today —

The Speaker: Thank you. New question, leader of the third party.

1410

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): I have a question to the Premier again, but I'd say to the Minister of Labour, that's part of our job, to look at the nitty-gritty, to make sure the laws in this province make sense.

We have looked at the nitty-gritty of your Bill 160, your changes to education. Not only are you attacking teachers and attacking children, you are also attacking the fundamentals of early childhood education. In fact you're taking away the capacity of the Minister of Education to approve child care centres in schools. In effect, you're trying to take child care centres right out of the education system.

Premier, can you tell us, why are you attacking teachers, why are you attacking children and, most of all, why are you attacking the fundamentals of early childhood education?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I know the Minister of Education can.

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): The leader of the third party has I think misrepresented both the bill and the intention of this government.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): You can't say that. It's unparliamentary.

Hon Mr Snobelen: I withdraw that, Mr Speaker. His representations are not consistent with my understanding of the bill; let me put it to you that way.

First of all, this government has very clearly recognized the importance of early childhood education. We have worked with the community to make sure that we have that available in our schools. As the Premier mentioned a few moments ago, we continue to fund junior kindergarten at the same rate that we fund other programs in our schools. We have obviously committed to stable funding throughout the entire year and we are working very hard on finishing an allocation model which will meet the needs of those students right across the province. That's what we're doing. Our track record is very clear. We're keeping the promises we made to the people of Ontario.

Mr Hampton: I know when the Minister of Education is in trouble. First he accuses other people of misrepresenting, and then he mumbles.

It's in your own bill. You no longer have the authority under the Education Act, if your bill becomes law, to provide for capital allocations so that we can have child care centres in our schools. Not only that, you take right out of the Education Act any consideration that a child care classroom in a school is a permanent improvement within the meaning of the act. In other words, you're trying to write child care totally out of the education system.

Already in this province we have over 1,300 classrooms in our schools that are being used for child care. It is absolutely essential in many of our schools, because we have single-parent mothers who want to go back to school, who want to have their children cared for. I put it to you: Why are you attacking early childhood education? Why are you going to make it so much more difficult for —

The Speaker: Minister.

Hon Mr Snobelen: We obviously have viewed child care as a very important issue, and obviously my colleague at the Ministry of Community and Social Services has been working very hard to make sure that those services are available.

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor-Sandwich): You cut the funding anyway. They have been closing down for two years.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Community and Social Services): We have 3,000 more day care spaces, Sandra.

Mrs Pupatello: That is a lie.

The Speaker: You must go back to your seat to withdraw that. You must be in your seat.

Interjection.

The Speaker: Yes, you have to go back to your seat. Member for Yorkview, you can go back to your seat at the same time.

Mrs Pupatello: I withdraw, Speaker.

Hon Mr Snobelen: Those issues are being addressed and are being improved on for the people of Ontario, but the leader of the third party does not recognize that what this government is doing is changing fundamentally how we meet the needs in education right across the province.

I'd invite the leader of the third party to come to my riding and talk to the people who have been waiting three and four and five years since when you were in government to get a school built in their area. It's time to change that, to bring it into this century before we get to the next one. That's the intention of this bill, to meet the needs of our students right across the province and make sure there are schools for them. That's why we're doing it.

The Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): Minister, even the Common Sense Revolution recognized the value of child care for parent students. It promises a learning and earning and parenting program, saying, "Young single parents on welfare will be encouraged to stay in school and complete their educations."

Instead of following through on that promise, you're threatening programs like the YMCA child care program located at the Alexander Henry High School in Sault Ste Marie, where 24 children are cared for while their parents, aged 15 to their early 20s, finish high school.

The supervisor, Penny Kucyk, tells us that she is aware of only four people who have not graduated into the workforce or further education since the centre opened. Why do you want to get rid of child care centres like the one at the Alexander Henry High School in Sault Ste Marie?

Hon Mr Snobelen: I remind the member of what this government has done to support very young people in this province, including the Healthy Babies, Healthy Children program that we put $10 million into; the preschool speech and language services for children, another $20 million;

Better Beginnings, Better Futures, a program you should know about that has $4.6 million. We've committed to over $200 million over the next five years to make a difference for those young people. This is an extraordinary investment in the very young people in this province.

Let me tell you what we're interested in reducing. We're interested in reducing the over 10,000 portables that our students are in, in this province, because of you. That is why we're changing it, to get rid of those portables.

ASSISTIVE DEVICES PROGRAM

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Premier regarding a four-month-old baby girl living in the Ottawa area. Her name is Alyssa Larabie. Her paediatrician has made an assessment that she could die in her sleep as a result of sudden infant death syndrome and has requested that she be provided with a special monitor until reaching the age of somewhere between nine months and 12 months.

You have made a change to the assistive devices program and effectively have said you will no longer pay for these special monitors beyond the age of six months. The paediatrician is saying that this baby should have a monitor until she is at least nine months of age. You have changed the law so that now you're only paying for it until she reaches the age of six months.

I wonder, Premier, first of all if you knew about that; and second, recognizing that the paediatrician has made an important decision in this matter, will you now intervene and ensure that Alyssa Larabie has this monitor until she's at least nine months of age?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): Yes.

Mr McGuinty: Why did I have to learn about this story in the Ottawa Citizen? I had to stand in this Legislature and bring this matter to your attention for you to personally intervene. I'm not sure how many other cases there are like this throughout the province, but just so I'm perfectly clear on this, you are now saying that we are going to change the policy for the assistive devices program in Ontario for every child, and that if any paediatrician deems it appropriate and fit that a child be equipped with a monitor until nine months or 12 months, that's the end of it and you will pay for it? Am I correct in that regard, Premier?

Hon Mr Harris: First of all, you didn't have to raise it in the House; it has already been dealt with. The family has been notified and they will receive it.

I'd love to tell you that in spending the $18 billion that we spend, each and every decision is perfectly executed and there's never any error, there's never any medical decision that is wrong for whatever reason, that everything in the world is perfect. That is not always the case. From time to time there are situations that arise. If you hear of any, we're happy to have you pass them over to us.

There is a policy that has been brought into place that talks in generalities in consultation with the medical community. If there are exceptions to be made, gosh darn, let me know and we'll look after it.

IPPERWASH PROVINCIAL PARK

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): My question is to the Premier. I hope he is as positive and taciturn in his response to my question as he was to the Leader of the Opposition's first question. My question is regarding Ipperwash and the wrongful death of Dudley George.

Earlier today the crown dropped weapons charges against one of the young demonstrators who drove a car at the riot police on the night of September 6, 1995, the night Dudley George was killed. We have known all along that the demonstration at Ipperwash Provincial Park posed no threat to public safety. Even the OPP identified no public risk and told the interministerial committee that at the meeting Deb Hutton, the Premier's executive assistant, attended. On the next day, the OPP buildup occurred, though, and the police used force to try to enter the park. We've been saying that this is an unprecedented buildup that led to a man's death.

Now another outstanding charge is out of the way. This was the last criminal trial arising out of the events on September 6 and it has now been disposed of. There is no reason to stall on a public inquiry. Premier, it's time to call a public inquiry.

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I know the Attorney General —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Attorney General.

1420

Hon Charles Harnick (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): There are still matters of appeal before the courts, there are civil actions before the courts, and my understanding is that the crown is continuing with three charges that are presently before the courts even though a couple of those charges have been withdrawn.

Mr Wildman: To deal with the minister responsible for native affairs and the Attorney General, the Supreme Court of Canada has given some clear guidelines regarding inquiries so there cannot be any excuse about legal issues pending in this particular situation. In the case of Westray and most recently in the Krever blood inquiry, the Supreme Court clarified the circumstances in which you can have an inquiry even when there are civil and/or criminal investigations outstanding. The Supreme Court ruling on Krever states:

"The ability of an inquiry to investigate, educate and inform Canadians benefits our society. A public inquiry before an impartial and independent commissioner which investigates the cause of tragedy and makes recommendations for change can help to prevent a recurrence of such tragedies in the future."

All the information we have is that the government can now have a public inquiry. What is the government hiding? When are you going to call a public inquiry? Will you follow the Supreme Court ruling?

Hon Mr Harnick: The member has been told before, and I will say again, that no one has precluded an inquiry taking place. No decision has been made about that. When all the criminal matters and the civil matter and the appeals are dealt with and the three outstanding charges are completed, that's something we will consider. Consideration of that has never been precluded.

ELECTRICAL POWER

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): My question is to the Minister of Environment and Energy. In my riding the Peterborough Utilities Commission, and many other local municipal electric utilities across Ontario, are in the process of restructuring the manner in which power is supplied to the customer. As you can well appreciate, recent problems at Ontario Hydro have created a number of questions and concerns.

The PUC is of the understanding that potential legislation is being drafted that would permit third-party access to the system. This would allow any electric supplier the option to supply electricity to any customer in Ontario. The supplier would then have to pay a toll fee to the owners for the use of wires required to deliver electricity. Minister, can you inform me whether legislation to allow third-party access is being prepared by your ministry, or can we expect this issue to be addressed in the upcoming white paper on electricity?

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Environment and Energy): Many of the municipal electric utilities are interested in the government's plans to restructure its electricity sector. There are some 306 municipal electrical utilities across the province. We are drafting our paper to introduce a competitive environment in Ontario to ensure that we will have the lowest possible electricity rates for our future generations. That will entail a number of changes in the existing structure. It will introduce competition at various and different levels.

I look forward to introducing this paper and being able to clarify these issues with the public in the very near future. We are not at the present time drafting legislation. That would come after the introduction of the white paper.

Mr Stewart: Third-party access is a very serious issue. Local MEUs feel that if third-party access becomes a reality, it should be phased in over a number of years. Issues such as rate subsidies or preferential treatment of large urban customers over rural customers by suppliers must be carefully thought out. Minister, can you reassure my local utility that issues such as third-party access and all other important issues will be carefully thought out before long-term, permanent actions on restructuring take place.

Hon Mr Sterling: There has already been a significant amount of consultation take place with regard to these kinds of issues. There's the Macdonald advisory committee. My ministry has engaged all different stakeholders with regard to their interests in this issue. When the white paper will be issued, the select committee on nuclear affairs will no doubt be discussing some of these issues as well. Then we will have of course the necessity of introducing legislation in front of this House.

There will be an adequate source of opportunities for the municipal electric utilities to let us know of their feelings with regard to the competitive nature of our structure as well as to the timing of when those particular aspects of that white paper and the legislation should kick in.

I understand their feelings, but our goal is to get to a competitive system in order to provide the best possible rates for our future Ontario citizens.

ELGIN-MIDDLESEX DETENTION CENTRE

Mr Peter North (Elgin): My question is for the Solicitor General. Minister, I've asked you on a couple of different occasions questions with regard to the Elgin-Middlesex Detention Centre. Last week you stood in the House and talked about the federal government and what it was doing with regard to young offenders.

In my questions, I've asked you with regard to the people who have been dismissed by your ministry with regard to the incident at Elgin-Middlesex Detention Centre. I want to know if you can tell me what happened between June 6, 1996, when you made a commitment in this Legislature to a member of the third party to do an inquiry, and June 9, when members of your ministry, the Ministry of the Attorney General, the Ministry of Community and Social Services and cabinet office met on a Sunday afternoon and decided to suspend those four people at that time, and subsequently on what grounds you came to dismiss these people in the months that followed.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services): The member knows there are a number of matters before the courts with respect to this situation and a number of the individuals whom he is representing, so I'm very limited in what I can say with respect to those circumstances. I know he fully appreciates that.

Mr North: I sincerely do fully appreciate that, but I'm not asking you about court proceedings. I'm asking you about process in the Ministry of the Solicitor General, the Ministry of the Attorney General and the government of Ontario.

These people have been fired from their jobs. These people have not been found guilty of a single crime in Ontario. These people have not been served natural justice by the province of Ontario. So I think it's incumbent on me and incumbent on you as the Solicitor General to explain to these people what exactly they are guilty of and why they are fired. It is important to people who are losing their homes, people who are losing their families, people who have lost their dignity in the community, and people who have lost a tremendous amount of respect and in some cases their mental health as a result of the decision that your and other ministries have made. It is time for you to produce some proof, some evidence, some basis in fact to show these people why —

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you. Solicitor General.

Hon Mr Runciman: Again, the member is aware that the process is under way with respect to the dismissals involved where the individuals involved will have the opportunity to have their day in court, if you will, with respect to whether the dismissals were indeed justified.

The member and I have had this discussion with respect to the role played by a minister. The minister in any ministry in this government is not making hiring or firing decisions. Those decisions lie with the senior levels of the civil service and the bureaucracy. They are not decisions made by the minister. I have explained that to him on a number of occasions.

I very much appreciate his concern with respect to his constituents, but because of a variety of constraints, I can say no more.

1430

CHARITABLE GAMING

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): My question is for the Premier. In Mike Harris's Ontario, you said that you wanted to give citizens of the province more say in where we locate casinos. In Mike Harris's Ontario, you wanted to give more autonomy to local governments.

Community after community has said no to charitable gaming casinos. Now we read that municipalities will receive an annual fee of $1,500 per video lottery machine in charitable gaming clubs for services. Premier, who is going to pay this fee?

Hon Michael D. Harris (Premier): I know that the minister —

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): We've gone through a process over the last several months where the municipalities have expressed some concern in terms of what will happen after the implementation of the charity gaming clubs. They have said they need to monitor the process; they need to have some involvement with the processing of the sites to be selected.

We have listened to the municipalities. We are giving them some resources to deal with this. Yes, it's $1,500 per machine.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: I don't believe the municipalities think this is a laughing matter. Clearly what we're trying to do is compensate them for resources they're going to have to utilize.

Let's not lose sight of what this is about. This is about replacing a system that does not work and has not worked under any of the previous governments because of a lack of monitoring, because of a lack of accountability. This is all about accountability to both the taxpayer and the charities in this province.

Mr Crozier: I'd like the record to note that first of all the minister didn't answer the question. I asked specifically who is going to pay the $1,500. Some people have said this is a bribe to the municipalities. I suggest that it's a move to put pressure on municipalities by charities in order that the government can buy some moral persuasion, some moral protection.

Minister, what price will you actually pay to justify your downloading to the municipalities and subsequent attempt through this means to pay them off so that they might accept a charitable casino?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Currently, under the previous NDP government and the previous Liberal government, the system has been that the municipalities have been participating, whether it has been through the charity bingos or whether it has been through the break-open tickets, and certainly with respect to the roving casinos, but unfortunately there has not been the accountability that's necessary to deal with this. This is all about making sure there's accountability back to the various communities, back to the charities and certainly back to the taxpayer.

Despite what the member is suggesting, there are many people across the province and many municipal mayors who are indicating that's not the case. Very recently, on September 27 in the St Catharines Standard, Fort Erie Mayor John Teal indicated that he welcomes the resources and he doesn't see it the same way as the member does. Clearly this is all about creating a new system that works and getting rid of a system that didn't work.

FIRE IN HAMILTON

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton Centre): My question is to the Minister of Environment and Energy. You know as well as we all do that when polyvinyl chlorides are burned, we get dioxins. Dioxin is the most toxic substance known on this planet. Yet when we had the Plastimet fire in Hamilton, there was no declaration of a hazardous materials fire. Had there been — and we know now in hindsight that there should have been — firefighters would have been wearing better equipment, there would have been decontamination units on the site, the evacuation might have taken place sooner. Certainly the people who were sitting by the fire with lawn chairs would have been advised that this was very serious. The police would have been better equipped to protect themselves and protect the public and perhaps there might even have been a need to evacuate the hospital that was ultimately exposed.

Minister, without a public inquiry to determine exactly when a hazardous material fire should be called, how can you guarantee that although there aren't dead bodies in Hamilton because of the fire this time, there won't be the next time?

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Environment and Energy): Of course no one anticipates having a fire in any kind of situation. Therefore, when a fire does occur, there is a call to the Ministry of Environment and we dispatch the information we have in our files to the fire department and the medical officer of health.

In this case, we had information as to the material at that particular site and we informed the fire department within an hour and a half of the fire beginning. I don't know any other kind of system which would provide any more speedy response, which would provide a more technical response than we were able to provide in this case.

Mr Christopherson: Two things, Minister: First of all, the fact that you don't know doesn't mean they don't exist. In fact it points all the more to the fact that we ought to hold a public inquiry so we can find out how we can do that. For you to just say you don't know is not acceptable.

And let me say, to say no one anticipates a fire, what are fire plans for? Give me a break. Of course you plan for a fire. You don't hope it happens, but you plan for it.

Minister, you have sloughed off all calls for a public inquiry by saying it's just politics. I've pointed out to you that our local officials, both of our local councils, other municipal councils across the province and the Hamilton Spectator editorials five times have called for one. You still say we're all playing politics.

The latest one to call for a public inquiry is your own backbencher from Hamilton Mountain, who says, "I believe that the Plastimet fire is a unique event that necessitates a full public probe into how and why it began and how its aftermath was handled by all levels of government." We agree with the member for Hamilton Mountain. What do you say to him?

Hon Mr Sterling: Contrary to how previous governments acted, our backbenchers have their own individual opinions, and from time to time they express those opinions in public. In this case I don't agree with the member for Hamilton Mountain with regard to this particular matter, but I respect him for putting forward his opinion.

TORONTO TRANSIT COMMISSION

Hon Al Palladini (Minister of Transportation): I would like to respond to a question from the member for Wilson Heights on September 16, concerning the TTC and its intention to purchase additional buses.

I would like to start off by saying that thanks to the growing economy, the TTC is blessed with an increase in its ridership and requires additional buses before they were anticipated. In May of this year the TTC issued tenders to purchase 100 monocoque buses with lifts and up to 50 low-floor buses from three manufacturers.

Although there is only one supplier for the monocoque buses, all three manufacturers make low-floor buses and two of these companies bid on the low-floor portion of the tender. Orion Bus Industries manufactures low-floor buses; however, they did not bid on the low-floor portion of the tender.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Answer, please.

Hon Mr Palladini: The TTC is satisfied that it has conducted a competitive tendering process. However, I do have some questions about their decision.

The Speaker: Member for Wilson Heights.

Mr Monte Kwinter (Wilson Heights): It's a little difficult for me to respond when I haven't heard the concerns of the minister, but I will say this: The facts of the matter are quite simple. The government has a policy of funding only low-floor buses, and these particular buses are not low-floor buses. The other thing is that they're going to be built in Roswell, New Mexico, with 60,000 man-days of labour that could sorely be used in Ontario. Again, the government is funding that.

My question is, and I am very anxious to hear the minister's reply to his original statement, what is the government going to do about it? Are they going to allow the TTC to place that order?

Hon Mr Palladini: I am aware, number one, that disabled groups have expressed opposition to the high-floor bus purchases, and several of them have actually written to the ministry and to me personally to express their concerns.

I would like to inform the honourable member that I have written a letter to the Toronto Transit Commission asking for further information about this particular purchase. As I indicated to the member when he asked the question, I am reviewing the TTC's request for another exemption to the low-floor bus policy and hope to have a decision shortly.

1440

TEACHERS' COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): My question is to the Minister of Education. We are on the verge of a crisis of epic proportion in education which is going to affect in excess of two million students because of Mike Harris's new education bill, Bill 160. As late as Saturday evening, on Focus Ontario, you continued to say, "I encourage the teachers to talk to me; I encourage them to dialogue and to meet with me."

Earlier today, in response to a question from the third party, you invited the member to your riding to find out at first hand. This evening in Sudbury members from all the affiliates will be meeting at the Caruso Club to voice their concerns about Bill 160. There will be in excess of 2,000 teachers at tonight's meeting. I have purchased a return ticket for you. Will you accompany me to that meeting tonight?

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): Obviously there is now some dispute about whether or not a plane ticket has actually been purchased. If it has been, please send it over with a page and I'll have a look at it; if it hasn't — well, just send it over and we'll have a look at the ticket.

I can tell you, and the member should know, that I spent an awful lot of time over the course of the last two and a half years in classrooms talking with teachers, talking with students, and I've spent a lot of time talking with parents. I know their concerns. The door remains open at the Ministry of Education, and I'm glad to have this chance again today to say publicly that the door is open, that I'm willing to meet with the teacher union heads at any time to talk about this bill, to talk about the future of education. From what I've heard from teachers, we have alignment on the need to improve education for our students, on the need to find a funding system that better meets the needs of students and teachers in the classroom.

That's what we're working towards. The door is open. I look forward to meeting with those teachers.

Mr Bartolucci: On November 19, 1996, I invited you to tour overcrowded classes with me. Sadly, you said you were too busy. Today you say you're not going. I ask you again, will you accompany me to Sudbury to hear at first hand from the teachers, the group you say you want to meet with, about what their concerns and their alternatives are to Bill 160? Will you come with me or are you too busy again?

Hon Mr Snobelen: The member opposite hasn't responded to the request to send the ticket over. I think there might be some hyperbole going on with the member opposite, but let me tell you I take this very seriously.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Snobelen: While the member opposite would like to engage in theatrics on this subject, it is a very serious one. We do have to have constructive talks. We've demonstrated over the past two weeks that when we get together with teachers' representatives and the ministry, we can come up with agreements that work in the best interests of the young people of the province of Ontario. It's time now to do that again.

I have said time and again, and I've said again today, my door is open. I welcome those conversations. I'll meet teachers' unions whenever they ask me to. I guarantee that I believe and my colleagues believe that those kinds of conversations can be fruitful for the young people of this province. That's why we want to engage in them.

VIDEO LOTTERY TERMINALS

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): My question is to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, and it's with respect to your program of introduction of video lottery terminals. You're proceeding at this point with phase one. I have two simple questions to you. First, could you tell me whether phase one, which I know includes racetracks, also includes the Ontario Jockey Club's teletheatre on the Greenwood site? Second, would you tell me, if the municipality says no to video lottery terminals, will you stop the implementation of them in the racetracks?

Hon William Saunderson (Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism): Mr Speaker, I would like to refer the question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, please.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): I believe the situation is right now that the proponents have been selected for the charity gaming clubs. It is up to them at this point in time to find appropriate locations. This is partly why we're allocating the amount we are for the video lottery terminals and the charity gaming clubs, so they can have meaningful discussions with their communities to ensure that the appropriate locations are selected.

PETITIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): I have a petition here dealing with Bill 136. It's addressed to the Honourable Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"We, the following undersigned citizens of Ontario, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas Bill 136, the Public Sector Dispute Resolution Act, 1997, will not meet its stated objective to facilitate collective bargaining in the event of mergers and amalgamations; and

"Further, if enacted, Bill 136 will interfere with free collective bargaining, impose a new bureaucratic and dictatorial regime, remove the right to fair and impartial arbitration of disputes and the right to strike; and

"Whereas the Ontario Labour Relations Board has a long and successful history of mediating labour disputes;

"Therefore, in the interest of maintaining and enhancing quality public services provided by dedicated public employees, we hereby petition the Ontario government to withdraw its proposed Bill 136 legislation and support a fair and workable system that will not disrupt the supply of public services to the community or the livelihoods of thousands of Ontarians."

It has been signed by some 25 people, and I affix my signature to it as well.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I have a petition sent to Mike Harris's government that is holding public hearings on Bill 136 in the city of Toronto only for four days, and nowhere else in Ontario.

"We, the undersigned, are petitioning the Ontario government to hold public hearings here in Sault Ste Marie on Bill 136."

It's signed by literally hundreds of my constituents. I sign it myself and will pass it on to the Clerk's desk.

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton): I have a petition signed by eight people. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and it reads:

"Whereas the Progressive Conservative government has failed to address the root causes of waste, duplication and unnecessary administration in our health care system; and

"Whereas the provincial government has instead introduced Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, that makes it easier for employers to reduce the numbers of front-line staff and to lower their salaries and benefits and thus causing further deterioration of quality patient care; and

"Whereas Bill 136 also erodes the democratic process by tampering with collective agreements and potentially interfering with workers' choice of bargaining agents;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to withdraw Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, and restructure the health care system in a safe, coordinated and rational way."

1450

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-Walkerville): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly that reads as follows:

"Whereas Windsor-Essex county was the first community to undergo hospital restructuring; and

"Whereas the community supported the recommendations of the Win-Win report based on a funding model that included the expansion of community-based care; and

"Whereas recent reports estimate that Windsor-Essex hospitals are underfunded by approximately $122 per person; and

"Whereas this represents the lowest funding per capita for hospital services of any community in Ontario with a population of over 200,000; and

"Whereas hospitals across the province have been forced to further reduce expenditures 18%; and

"Whereas these cuts have forced hospitals to eliminate emergency services in the west end of Windsor and cut desperately needed services; and

"Whereas the minister acknowledged that additional funding was necessary in high-growth areas;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly to call on the Minister of Health to provide the appropriate level of funding to hospitals in Windsor-Essex which would allow Windsor Regional Hospital to provide urgent care services for the west-end community and to restore equitable health care funding across Windsor and Essex county."

I join with hundreds of my fellow citizens of Windsor in signing this petition.

BEAR HUNTING

Ms Shelley Martel (Sudbury East): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario which reads as follows:

"Whereas black bear populations in Ontario are healthy with between 75,000 and 100,000 animals and their numbers are stable or increasing in many areas of the province; and

"Whereas black bear hunting is enjoyed by over 20,000 hunters annually in Ontario and black bears are a well-managed renewable resource; and

"Whereas hunting regulations are based on sustained yield principles and all forms of hunting are needed to optimize the socioeconomic benefits associated with hunting; and

"Whereas the value of the spring bear hunt to tourist operators in northern Ontario is $30 million annually, generating about 500 person-years of employment; and

"Whereas animal rights activists have launched a campaign of misinformation and emotional rhetoric to ban bear hunting and end our hunting heritage in Ontario, ignoring the enormous impact this would have on the people of Ontario;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ontario government protect our hunting heritage and continue to support all current forms of black bear hunting."

This is signed by about 225 residents of the province of Ontario, and pursuant to the standing orders, I am affixing my signature to it.

EDUCATION ISSUES

Mr Harry Danford (Hastings-Peterborough): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It comes on behalf of many of my constituents and others within the province and it deals with education issues.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): The following petition was presented to me like this, and I understand that T-shirts are not allowed, so I'll put it down, but it was presented by Marg Rondina with regard to that. I said that I would do that.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Progressive Conservative government has failed to address the root causes of waste, duplication and unnecessary administration in our health care system; and

"Whereas the provincial government has instead introduced Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, that makes it easier for employers to reduce the numbers of front-line staff and to lower their salaries and benefits and thus causing further deterioration of quality patient care; and

"Whereas Bill 136 also erodes the democratic process by tampering with collective agreements and potentially interfering with workers' choice of bargaining agent;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to withdraw Bill 136, the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, and restructure the health care system in a safe, coordinated and rational way."

I thank Marg Rondina for collecting these 2,000 signatures, and I sign it.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Progressive Conservative government of Ontario has decided to reduce taxes by 30%; and

"Whereas this government has proceeded to reduce the level of public health care service through the hospital restructuring committee; and

"Whereas complementary legislation such as Bill 7, Bill 26 and Bill 136 are turning the negotiation process into a one-sided sham; and

"Whereas the morale of these front-line health care employees has hit rock bottom;

"We, the undersigned organized service and practical nursing staff of the London Health Sciences Centre, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To withdraw Bill 136 and to re-establish the funding and level of service in the public hospital sector."

I agree with this petition, which is signed by approximately 500 people from London, and I am affixing my signature.

EDUCATION REFORM

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): I have a petition addressed to the Legislature of Ontario and, by the way, it's signed by a number of people from Parkdale and also from Davenport. It reads:

"We believe that the heart of education in our province is in the relationship between students and teachers and that this human and relational dimension should be maintained and extended in any proposed reform. The Minister of Education and Training should know how strongly we oppose many of the secondary reform recommendations being proposed by the ministry and government.

"We recognize and support the need to review secondary education in Ontario. The proposal for reform as put forward by the ministry is substantially flawed in several key areas: reduced instruction time, reduction in instruction in English, reduction of qualified teaching personnel, academic work experience credit not linked to educational curriculum, devaluation of formal education" etc.

I will cut this short by simply adding one more paragraph. I will not read the rest. It says:

"We strongly urge the ministry to delay the implementation of secondary school reform so that all interested stakeholders — parents, students, school councils, trustees, teachers and everyone — are able to participate in a more meaningful consultation process which will help ensure that a high quality of publicly funded education is provided."

I am delighted to add my signature to this document.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Riverside): I have a petition that reads as follows:

"Bill 136 gives employers unrestricted rights to tear up collective agreements. It affects union rights, workplace rights and seniority rights of many working people in Ontario.

"For health care workers who have not had the right to strike since 1964, it takes away the fair and independent arbitration system that up until now satisfactorily resolved contract disputes between labour and management. The existing arbitration system also ensured smooth transitions in hospital mergers.

"With last week's announcement, the government of Ontario is clearly moving in the right direction on Bill 136. However, we have no guarantee of that until we see the wording of the proposed amendments.

"We, the undersigned residents of Ontario, demand that the Legislature of Ontario immediately make public the amendments to Bill 136 and hold public hearings on Bill 136 in communities throughout the province."

That's signed by hundreds of people who are involved in the health care sector in Windsor from AAHPO, CUPE, ONA, OPEIU, OPSEU and SEIU.

EDUCATION REFORM

Mr Alex Cullen (Ottawa West): I rise in my place to present a petition to the Legislature regarding protecting education services in Ontario.

"To the Legislature of Ontario:

"Whereas the Harris government is proposing detrimental changes to education services in Ontario;

"Whereas the government's obsession with the fiscal bottom line will result in a reduction of the quality of education services for our children;

"Whereas inclusive and open consultation on education reform has not taken place;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario reconsider its direction in terms of education policy and that they halt any further changes to the education system until a thorough and inclusive review has taken place."

I am pleased to affix my signature to this petition.

SOCCER FIELD

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): I have a petition that petitions the Ontario Legislature as follows:

"We, the undersigned residents of the province of Ontario, petition the Ontario provincial government to keep the London Psychiatric Hospital's soccer fields for use as youth soccer fields even in the event of the closing of the hospital."

This is the first of a large number of petitions that are coming in and it is signed by 500 citizens of London, Brantford and all of southwestern Ontario.

1500

VIDEO LOTTERY TERMINALS

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): A very topical subject these days: I have a petition to the government of Ontario which reads as follows:

"Since video lottery terminals will contribute to gambling addiction in Ontario and the resulting breakup of families, spousal and child abuse and crimes such as embezzlement and robbery; and

"Since the introduction of video lottery terminals across Ontario will provide those addicted to gambling with widespread temptation and will attract young people to a vice which will adversely affect their lives for many years to come; and

"Since the introduction of these gambling machines across our province is designed to gain revenue for the government at the expense of the poor, the vulnerable and the desperate in order that the government can cut income taxes, to the greatest benefit of those with the highest income; and

"Since the placement of video lottery terminals in bars in Ontario and in permanent casinos in various locations across the province represents an escalation of gambling opportunities; and

"Since Premier Harris and Finance Minister Eves were so critical of the provincial government becoming involved in further gambling ventures and making the government more dependent on gambling revenues to maintain government operations;

"We, the undersigned, call upon Premier Harris and the government of Ontario to reconsider its announced decision to introduce the most insidious form of gambling, video lottery terminals, to restaurants and bars in the province."

I affix my signature as I'm in full agreement with the contents of this petition.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND LABOUR RELATIONS REFORM

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I have a petition and letter from numerous members of CUPE in Sault Ste Marie in opposition to Bill 136. It says:

"This letter is written to express opposition to Bill 136. Bill 136 will only serve to distort the balance between workers and management by shifting all advantages in management's favour. We've worked for years to establish an equilibrium between these two parties, and it's very important that it remain. In the past, employers and workers have completed mergers and amalgamations on their own, very successfully, without government intervention.

"As a member of your constituency" — talking to me — "I'm requesting you to oppose the passing of Bill 136."

I will certainly be doing that.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): Speaker, pursuant to the standing orders, I wish to advise you of my dissatisfaction with the response of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to my question on charitable gaming casinos.

The reason for my dissatisfaction is that I asked the minister who will pay the $1,500 per video gaming slot machine fee to municipalities. The minister did not answer the question. I will file this with the Clerk.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

EDUCATION QUALITY IMPROVEMENT ACT, 1997

LOI DE 1997 SUR L'AMÉLIORATION DE LA QUALITÉ DE L'ÉDUCATION

Mr Snobelen moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 160, An Act to reform the education system, protect classroom funding, and enhance accountability, and make other improvements consistent with the Government's education quality agenda, including improved student achievement and regulated class size / Projet de loi 160, Loi visant à réformer le système scolaire, à protéger le financement des classes, à accroître l'obligation de rendre compte et à apporter d'autres améliorations compatibles avec la politique du gouvernement en matière de qualité de l'éducation, y compris l'amélioration du rendement des élèves et la réglementation de l'effectif des classes.

Hon John Snobelen (Minister of Education and Training): I'd like to mention before I begin that I'm splitting my time today with the member for Middlesex and the member for Huron.

Today I'm pleased to begin a very public debate on second reading of Bill 160, the Education Quality Improvement Act. This bill is a significant step in building the future of education in Ontario, a significant step in building a solid foundation for our youth and a significant step in addressing the decade-old grievances within the structure of our schools.

We would all agree that our students deserve the very best, we would all agree that our students must measure up to the best in Canada and the best in the world and we would all agree that our children should not pay for their own education, as they do when we leave them our debts.

Let me be very clear. When we burden our children with our debts, as we have in the past, we diminish their futures. When we formed the government, each of our students owed $41,000, and year after year deficits have added to this burden. For the sake of our children's future, we must embrace the challenge of change: change in curriculum from fuzzy, feel-good outcomes to measurable, year-by-year standards, standards that are regularly tested and clearly communicated to parents and students through a province-wide report card; change to a four-year high school, a high school that recognizes the needs of the 70% who have been left out; change in the governance of schools, with less bureaucracy and fewer politicians, with clear accountability for the ministry, the boards, principals, teachers, parents and students, a governance model built up from the classroom, not down from the boardroom; and change in how we fund our schools from the general legislative grants system. This is a system that was perfectly designed to hide provincial politicians from accountability. We propose a system designed to meet the needs of our students and to end the old game of hide and seek between the province and the boards.

Make no mistake about it. The easiest way for the province to reduce its costs is to reduce the GLGs, to let the boards pile up more property tax or to add to the provincial debt, as have previous governments, with no intention of paying it off, preferring to leave that burden to our children. This government is committed to a different path, to taking on the burden of fully funding our schools and to being fully accountable for providing for our students; and most important, to being accountable for our students' performance.

In his review of Bill 100, Mr Paroian asked groups presenting to him a simple question: "Where does the buck stop in education?" He got the same answer that has frustrated parents and taxpayers and teachers for decades: "The buck stops nowhere. No one is accountable." Once and for all this bill will allow us to say, "The buck stops here." For too long the legitimate bargaining for wages and benefits for our teachers has been cloaked in what is best for our students, but the result of the bargaining has been the opposite: larger classes and less time with teachers, and this simply cannot continue.

In the last two years a number of school boards have increased their class sizes. Some of them, like York region, Haldimand county and Lakehead district secondary, have done so in collaboration with teachers' unions. Our bill would cap class size and guarantee that quality for our students is not negotiable.

Bargaining has also increased taxes way out of proportion with inflation. Our young people pay for high taxes. They pay with their jobs as investment in Ontario declines. This cannot continue. Our bill would end the spiralling education property taxes.

Over the past two decades, the bargaining atmosphere between teachers and school boards has gotten in the way of making many quality decisions for education. Ultimately, sadly, this diminishes the teaching profession in the eyes of the public. This doesn't serve the interests of our students or the interests of our teachers. I believe we must reverse this trend. That is why I was proud to introduce the College of Teachers and why I believe we must have a forum to discuss the changes openly, publicly and regularly.

Old political wisdom would suggest that we should hide from tough questions like: Why is our student performance not the best in Canada? Why are our costs high? Why do our students spend less time on task than students in other provinces? Why are our secondary school teachers out of the classroom more than their colleagues in other provinces? Tough questions, but it's our duty to ask them openly and publicly and to listen very carefully for the responses.

As this bill moves through the democratic process, our task is to engage the questions and to listen with great care. I sought political office for one purpose and one purpose only: to do my part to leave a legacy to the children that is even better and brighter than the future left to me by my parents; to leave a richer possibility for a better life to my niece and my nephew.

I believe we can do that, but it means having the courage to engage the tough questions, the strength to withstand criticism and the wisdom to listen. In the end, I believe we have the courage, the strength and the collective wisdom to make a better place for our children. That is my purpose and my joy.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Churley): Further debate?

1510

Mr Bruce Smith (Middlesex): It's certainly a pleasure to rise today and have the opportunity to share in support of this bill and to compliment the Minister of Education on his comments previously.

I want to start from the perspective of complimenting and recognizing the achievements of students in this province, because there has been a considerable achievement by many students. When I reflect upon the London area and look at three students who won first place in the Ontario Mathematics Olympics earlier this year and a Bramalea student who has been named the 1996 Junior Citizen of the Year by the Ontario Community Newspaper Association, there certainly are many worthwhile achievements that are being recognized by our young people in this province.

The objective of this legislation and many of the reforms that the minister has introduced is simply to ensure that there are more young people such as the ones I just referenced, young people who continue to be leaders in our society and young people who are prepared to act on the opportunities that I think this legislation will present for young people across the province.

We continually see — and I don't think there would be much disagreement — that children, students in this province, will face a much more complex, fast-paced and highly technological world. They will need a high level of skills and knowledge to meet all of those challenges that are presented to them. They'll certainly need to learn a new set of skills throughout their lives to meet these challenges of tomorrow and challenges that will present opportunities for new jobs in a new century when specialization and education is paramount.

Right now too many students are not as prepared as those young people whom I referred to earlier, the ones I just applauded. There is opportunity to expand upon the numbers of those individuals and move forward. Time and again we hear parents and students talking about the actions of this government and its predecessors, and they have expressed concern about the quality of education in this province. They've expressed concern relative to achievement of students, not just internationally but collectively, locally within the province and on a national level.

There's much debate and many theories of why this has come about and a great deal of time could be spent debating that particular issue. But the bottom line is our students and our children deserve much better. The bottom line is that Ontarians are not getting the best return on their investment in education. Certainly our students deserve more.

My belief is our students should be among the best in the world. As I indicated earlier, many of them are. Our teachers should be among the best in the world. I would recognize, as I have met with teachers in northern Ontario and central Algoma last week, teachers in Elgin county this morning, there is certainly the dedication and commitment that needs to be brought to the classroom on a day-to-day basis to ensure that our students are achieving and to ensure that the delivery of the service is the best it can be.

It's really not about just students and teachers; it's about addressing problems within the system, a system that can be remedied and a system that will provide us with the best education in the world. Previous governments have responded with studies and commissions. I think it's important to realize that no other particular issue has been more studied by government agencies or government itself than the field of education.

I don't believe the students of Ontario need another royal commission. It's time for action. It's time to make the publicly funded school system more accountable. It's time to build a system that will provide answers to parents' and students' needs. It's time to build a new system that will bring education back as the fabric of our province's planning for tomorrow. It's a time to build new partnerships. Certainly, as we move through some difficult transition periods, it's very evident to me in my capacity as parliamentary assistant that those partnerships are materializing, and those are to be encouraged and built upon.

It's time to use proven methods to build a better education system, to understand those methods and apply them wherever possible. Very clearly, whether it's educators, government people, taxpayers or parents, we all can agree that our bottom-line objective here is to bring the best-quality education in the most cost-effective manner, not with the total focus on cost-effectiveness, but one that delivers a quality education for all of our students in the best possible way.

In January the minister announced our government's intention to move Ontario students to the head of the class. Certainly that commitment has been very evident and I think met very positively by most educators in the province. As I have met with teachers, I find, particularly in the elementary panel, a very clear focus, notwithstanding some of the areas of concern, on the issues of quality, recognition of the need to provide a better curriculum framework for students, recognition of the opportunities that can be realized through province-wide testing, and the opportunities a standard report card can bring so that we all understand the achievements of students across this province.

These quality initiatives the minister has introduced I believe strongly will provide students and teachers with the skill sets they need to move ahead, not only as professionals but as students within their academic careers. They're certainly initiatives that will allow parents to better understand how their child is progressing through the school system. In my opinion, it will encourage our children to reach higher and develop skills they need to succeed.

The introduction of Bill 160 is about taking the next step. As I mentioned, we have seen numerous reports, studies and commissions on education in this province, and we are moving into the next step of reforming that system effectively.

The proposed legislation would help ensure a smooth transition primarily in three areas: by improving the governance of schools — I think as we look we will recall that we dealt with many of the school board issues through Bill 104; this is the next logical phase of that to provide for a smoother transition with the amalgamating boards and jurisdictions — and we continue to look at every opportunity for increasing the involvement of parents, and opportunities for simplifying and making the education system more accountable from a financial perspective.

This bill has resulted from many months of hard work, and I want to take the time to recognize the work of many people who have contributed to that bill, particularly those people at the Education Improvement Commission, those people within the ministry who liaised with the commission on a regular basis, and the representatives of school boards who have provided assistance and advice as well.

It's always more important to bring some real life application to this issue, and that experience is best presented by teachers and educators themselves. My colleague from Brampton North shared with me a letter from a public school principal today. While there are concerns raised in terms of implementation and management of change, there is general agreement with the theme of putting students first, which as I said at the outset, no one in this Legislature, I doubt, would argue.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): That's like motherhood.

Mr Smith: Yes, that is a motherhood statement, I would say to the member for Algoma. As I mentioned at the outset, I had the pleasure of being in central Algoma last week to spend some time with students and teachers in that area. I must say that the teachers I met with on the elementary side had a great deal of information and input in terms of the effectiveness of new curriculum initiatives, the effectiveness of implementing a new, standardized report card.

It certainly was beneficial in terms of receiving their input and viewpoints on how we move ahead into the next phase. That's the challenge that lies before us. As I indicated at the outset, this bill represents the next phase of education reform for this province, and a large part of that implementation will require the expertise of teaching professionals across this province.

The member for Brampton North's letter continues to recognize the achievements of the new curriculum the minister has introduced for grades 1 to 8, and other quality initiatives that have been presented by the government to date.

1520

There are some positive indicators coming back from teachers across this province, ones that I think will serve well because, as I said earlier, they are the deliverers, the front-line people who will be dealing directly with the initiatives of the government.

The objective as well is obviously to bring quality initiatives to the forefront and that's a very large part of the initiatives to date, as I've alluded to earlier. This bill recognizes that student achievement generally increases with the amount of time spent with teachers in the classroom. It paves the way for a smooth transfer of administration, a more accountable and streamlined system. The bill requires fair funding of school boards and calls for review of the funding system, a review that would challenge and examine to ensure the standards of fairness are being met in terms of the expectations of our new financing model.

The minister, who spoke earlier about parental involvement and his discussions with parents across the province, has clearly indicated that we want to bring, through this bill, a system that's more accountable to parents and one that looks for their continued involvement in the career paths and education paths of their children.

The bill itself is obviously to some extent controversial for some, but I tend to look more positively to the opportunities, and I think, by and large, people are starting to look more positively to the opportunities that are being presented.

I would refer to the Kitchener-Waterloo Record: "A high school teacher and parent, Bob Bonisteel, says, 'Snobelen's education overhaul is long overdue.' The father of two, who has taught 27 years in the Ottawa area, states: 'Finally we've got a government that means business. We are performing in an okay fashion and it costs too much money for an okay system of education.'"

There is the recognition, as I said at the outset, that we can pursue opportunities to better the system. There are good things happening in education in this province. I find one of the frustrating things about that is that some of the good new things are not being shared to the extent one might think. They may happen locally, within an individual school, they may happen within a specific school board, they may happen regionally, but very often we do not hear about the success stories that are occurring. This bill, as well as the initiatives the Minister of Education has undertaken to date, will complement those things to ensure we can continue to build upon those success stories in the future.

Some tough decisions had to be made, tough decisions that previous governments, for whatever reason, chose not to act upon, tough decisions that in my opinion will better the education system of this province, and tough decisions that need to be acted upon now.

Now is the time to act, and I welcome and support the comments of the Minister of Education and Training this afternoon. I support Bill 160 and believe strongly that as we move ahead into the next phase of education reform in this province, by putting the kids and students of this province first we will have in the long term and in the short term the quality education system we expect in this province.

Mrs Helen Johns (Huron): It's a great opportunity today to be speaking about Bill 160 and I would like to say how pleased I am to be able to speak to this issue. I think I'm one of maybe 12 people who sit in this House who has kids in the elementary school system in Ontario. I, as a parent, am very pleased with the changes that are happening in the education system. I would first like to give my thanks to Minister Snobelen for the work he has done on both bills and then to thank everyone for the consultation that has gone on over the past period of time.

From the perspective of the people who are watching today and my colleagues here, it's important to know I'm very concerned about education and about my children and the way the environment around them works. That's one of the reasons I chose to try to become elected in the last provincial election. I'm concerned when there's debt and we're mortgaging our children in the future. I'm also concerned about the hope and opportunities for our children.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): Did you speak out against the tax cut?

The Acting Speaker: Member for Kingston and The Islands, order.

Mrs Johns: I think it's important that we recognize that there are a few things that are very important to the betterment of our children in Ontario. Of course a strong economy for students to be able to get jobs is important, as is an education that will allow them to compete in an ever-changing world.

I know that when I graduated some 20-odd years ago, and that's probably being very kind to myself, the opportunities were a lot more open. There were a lot of things I could do within the province of Ontario. Today, my children are going to compete in a global marketplace. They are going to have to be able to compete against people throughout the world for very different jobs, technological jobs, different jobs that I wouldn't have even dreamed about competing for 20 years ago. It's very important that we consider, when we're looking at educational reform, putting our kids first.

The first thing I'd like to say is that with my kids in the education system today, the teachers my kids have are doing an excellent job. They spend time with kids. They try and do creative things that allow kids not only to think in the logical terms that I did in past years but also to consider new and interesting environments that we never had the option to consider in the past. I think it's important.

I want to say that over the summertime I hired a high school student who had just graduated from South Huron District High School. He worked in my office for the summer and he was the top graduate out of the high school in my area. One of the things I noticed about him that I can say was not the same for myself when I graduated was how well-rounded he was. He had done a number of things that I had never considered: community involvement; political involvement, I might say; helped work with the federal Tories during the federal election. I'm not saying that you have to be involved with a political party or with the Conservative Party. Don't get me wrong here. But I think, on the other side, a well-rounded group of young individuals is very important for us to have and I was very proud of him. He took independent thoughts and processes and worked through to, I think, a very successful conclusion in the items that he worked through in my riding.

This has happened in my riding despite a very tough education system for the county of Huron. The county of Huron in the past has had a very low education property tax base and as a result of that, we've spent approximately $5,000 per student a year on their education. What has happened in the province since we started with this, what I consider an ill-devised property tax system, was that we created a system where we had two tiers of education. The kids in my community were being educated on $5,000 a year and the kids in some communities were being educated on $9,000 a year.

What I would like to say to that is, I don't believe money is everything in education. I'm the first person to say that in my community there are a lot of things that are different than if you're educated in Toronto or Ottawa. But on the other side, $4,000 per pupil is a computer; $4,000 per pupil is textbooks, it's a speech therapist. All of those things are very important and have led to a two-tiered education system in Huron county.

Mr David Caplan (Oriole): Check your numbers.

Mrs Johns: I'd like to say to the member for Oriole that even Sean Conway admits that the system has been a two-tiered system for a long time. The Liberals are admitting that. Maybe it's because you were just elected that you don't understand that this has been happening in the community. But the member from Renfrew in his dissertation a couple of weeks ago said that this was a very admirable thing the government was trying to do, that other governments just hadn't had the political will to move forward with it.

I'm very pleased that this government had decided that equity and fairness in education are the most important things, and that's what's going to happen with my kids in my system. I'm very pleased about this. I'm very pleased with respect to the financial reform that's involved in this bill, and I think that kids in my riding are going to have a more equitable educational level compared to other people within the province.

1530

We are not in this world here to say that some kids deserve more dollars spent on them in education than others. Every child deserves to be educated. Yes, that is a motherhood statement, but let me say first that I am a mother and I make motherhood statements, and second, if that's motherhood, that's what I believe in: fairness, equity in the education system.

I'd like to take a minute and talk about the curriculum. I am a big fan of this new curriculum. I have a little boy in grade 1 who is an interesting little guy and he's going to have some difficult times with structure in grade 1. There's no question about that. The new curriculum says some very important things that I think parents would be very interested in when they are dealing with their elementary school children. For example, the overall expectation for the first time is that kids will read by the end of grade 1.

I think the kids should be able to read by then. They should be able to read aloud in a way that allows them to communicate. They should be able to read independently, express clear responses. I think it's important that we aspire to those goals for our children, so we should put them down, we should make teachers and students and parents accountable to those goals and we should work as hard as we can to ensure that they meet these goals. We are the province that spends the most money on education and it should be a results-oriented education.

When we talk about writing in grade 1, I'd also like to say that my little boy should be able to communicate ideas for specific purposes. He should be able to write simple sentences. As a parent, I believe that those are the things he should be able to do by the end of grade 1.

We talk about number sense. Math is my little baby, I have to tell you this. He has to be able to understand whole numbers. He has to be able to add numbers together. He has to be able to understand the concept of sequencing: two, four, six, eight, as opposed to just being able to go through the numbers. I think those are all admirable things we should be demanding of our teachers, of our students and of our families for our children.

I also noticed that we have measurement expectations for these children. They have to be able to demonstrate an understanding of and an ability to apply measurement terms. My little boy came home the other day and had to be able to figure out his height, his weight. I have to admit he had to do it in kilograms and centimetres and I had a really tough time trying to help him with it, but I think it's important for them to be able to do that.

He also has to be able to solve problems related to day-to-day environments using concrete experiences. He has to be aware of shapes and sizes. All these are things that parents expect their grade 1 students to be able to do. With this curriculum document, where we can compare what students are doing to where they should be, what the expectations of education are, I know that parents are feeling much more comfortable about the system. We've been sending this curriculum out to parents with the grades their children are in as they call and they have really thought this was an excellent idea and that it met more of the goals the parents had with respect to educating their children.

I want to talk a little bit about class size. I have a little boy in grade 3. As I have watched over the short time he has been in elementary school, I have seen class sizes growing and growing. I think that especially in early elementary school years there needs to be an ability for children to have a relationship with their teacher. For example — and because I'm down here, sometimes I talk to my kids on the phone every day as opposed to seeing them like most lucky parents do — I say to them, "So, did you read today in school?" Before I was so lucky to have this position, I used to go into the school and read with some of the kids who were having trouble in reading. The class sizes are getting too big for teachers to be able to read to students and we need to be able to bring that class size down.

One of the interesting things I have seen as I have watched this, and as a parent it's hard to understand what is happening here — in the backgrounder that went out it says: "Currently class sizes are larger than the number of teachers would indicate. In the elementary grade, there is one teacher for every 17 students, but average class size is 25." That means, and I have thought about this, some teachers aren't in the classroom. They are doing other things outside of the classroom. I don't think there is anything more important in a school than being with the children. From my standpoint of other items that teachers might be doing, I want them with my kids, helping them to learn to read, write and do arithmetic. We can't continue to run a system where kids aren't getting teacher contact all the time. We need to change the system to make it such that the average size is a more realistic size that allows kids to be taught.

I'd also like to talk about teachers in the classroom. Because my kids are only in the elementary system right now, I have not been in the high school system, I haven't seen the ability of the high school system, but a couple of years ago my husband and I had a foreign student who came to stay with us for a year from Germany. She was in the high school system, so I have a little bit of knowledge about this but I haven't had firsthand knowledge, so I have to say my expertise here is more, granted, by the Ministry of Education. As we have all agreed here, because I seem to be provoking some thought, we need to have teachers in the classroom. I see no reason why the average teacher in the high school system spends 3.75 hours in the classroom when the average across the rest of Ontario is 4.5 hours. I think we need to get to the point where the principal job of people in the education system is contact with kids.

One of the things that has really become a good thing in my riding and maybe we were forerunners in it — I admit my board has done some terrific things as they've moved forward — is parent advisory councils. When I was on the first education bill, we heard from a lot of parent advisory councils who were involved in greater roles with their kids in the school system. I think all of us would admit that there is a role for parents in the system. The last thing I want to know at the end of the year is that something has gone awry with my child during that year. I want to be able to work with the teachers. I want to be able to work with my child. I want continually to be able to provide a second source of information to help the teachers. I think there is a big role for parent advisory councils within our school system.

My parent advisory council doesn't only want to be a fund-raiser. They want to decide about things that are happening in their school system. They want to talk about discipline. They want to talk about changing morals and values in the school system. They have had people come and talk to them about how they can better be part of the education system. I went to talk to them about the previous education bill for an evening to try and help parents decide where their children are going and what they need to have. There has to be a greater role for the parent advisory council, and this bill does that.

When I was on the education bill, one of the groups I found the most interesting, and I know a number of us were on this — I think it was in Windsor — was a parent advisory council which had really become involved in the school. I think it was the previous member from Windsor — in the new head of the Education Improvement Commission's riding. They had really got involved with parent involvement and responsibilities within the school system and they were truly amazing. Parents want to be involved. Gone are the days when we want to drop our kids off at the school door and pick them up at the end of the day. Gone are the days when we want to just hear at the end what the report card says. A number of us, and I speak for almost all people in my generation, do a lot with their kids that my parents were unable to do. We run between hockey arena, baseball diamond, soccer field. We do a lot of things with our kids, and I want to be involved with them in their school system. So I think providing a greater role for parent advisory councils is the right thing to do in this day and age. I think it's going to provide a far greater breadth to the parents and the students within the area.

1540

The last thing that makes me very happy about our movement in education is standardized testing. For many years I have heard some really nice things about my kids, and I've heard parents hearing nice things about their kids when they got their report cards home. It's nice to know my child has a good personality — I don't want to rave about my child today — and it's nice to know he interacts well with other people, but I also want to know how he's doing compared to other kids in his class. Maybe that's because I'm a competitive individual, and maybe that's a bad thing, but on the other side, my child is going to have to compete when it comes to getting a job in Ontario, when it comes to getting into university, when it comes to everything. We all had to compete to get these seats we have here today that we're so lucky to represent. So I think it's important for us to know how our kids are doing.

With that information parents will do a lot of things. Some parents will say, "That's fine, I'm not interested." Other parents will say, "I'm going to spend some time with little Johnny or Jarrett at night on that specific issue." Other parents will bring in tutors. Other parents will do whatever it takes to be able to help their children along. Parents deserve to know how their kids are doing. Standardized testing at three, six, along the line to allow parents to know what their kids are doing I think is an excellent opportunity for parents to once again become involved with their children.

I think everything we have done, every movement we've tried to make has been well-thought-out. There has been consultation on those issues. We have looked carefully to see how we can put the student first. It is very important for us to look at this and to say: "This is an opportunity for our kids in the future. This provides us with an even funding base for our children. It provides us with limited class size. It provides us with more teacher hours in the classroom." All of these things are important to our kids getting a big hand up when it comes to education.

It's time for us to move forward with this bill and to look at alternatives we can do to make the system even better. I'm not saying that we do this in isolation; I'm saying we do it in conjunction with teachers, principals, parents and students, because at some levels, especially at the high school level, students are able to give some input into what they think should happen. For example, my husband believes that after grade 13 we should poll these students and ask them: What could have been better in education? How could you have had better teaching methods? These young people are better able to tell us how the system works than some of the people outside, and I think we need to follow through with this. Accountability and fairness are the key to the education system being what we need for our kids in the future.

I'd like to take this opportunity to thank John Snobelen, the Minister of Education, and his parliamentary assistant, Bruce Smith, for the work they've done on these two bills. I'd like to say I'm proud to be associated with a government that is moving forward with a fair and equitable system in education. I think our kids will thank us in the long run.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Gerretsen: Let it never be said in this House again that the opposition isn't speaking to the actual bill because, quite frankly, what the minister, the parliamentary assistant and the last member talked about had precious little to do with the bill.

They talk in generalities about accountability, about being concerned for education and putting children first. Who would be against any of that? Nobody. But the other thing people aren't for is for the Minister of Education to take $530 million out of education already and for the other $1 billion that he's going to take out as a result of this bill. Why don't we talk about that for a while? Why didn't the member mention that?

Parent advisory councils: Sure, there should be greater involvement of parents in schools, but how about talking about the reduced roles of school boards? School boards are going to have no say whatsoever. There's no funding say, no say whatsoever. We are looking at school boards that are so large you wonder why anybody would want to serve on some of these boards when the new trustees have to travel anywhere from three to four hours to get to a particular meeting. Why don't we talk about that?

Class sizes: Why don't you just come forward and say what you want these class sizes to be? They could be larger or they could be smaller than they currently are. There's nothing in this bill about that.

To talk in very general terms about how important education is, everybody would agree with that, but let's talk about what's in this bill. This bill is about cutting $1 billion out of education in addition to the $530 million you've already cut. If everybody is so happy about it, how come the teachers aren't happy? They are the ones who are in touch with our kids on a day-to-day basis in schools. I say shame on all of you.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): I do feel sorry for the poor public who might be watching this, who are being force-fed this Pablum, this grub on a daily basis. I do feel badly because I'm here listening and, I tell you, it's hard to take.

They have eviscerated funding for school boards ever since they took office. You have heard the members for Huron and Middlesex and the minister not comment at all, or barely, on Bill 160. Why? Because they are either ashamed of their own bill or too afraid to talk about its contents. That's why they're not speaking to this bill. By and large, they talk about equity as if somehow these people have become the new champions of equity. Good God. These are the people who are widening the gap between the rich and the poor and they talk about equity.

Mrs Johns: Does $9,000 widen the gap?

Mr Marchese: These people, the member for Huron included, are centralizing control and decentralizing the burden down to the municipal level, in this case boards of education. They talk about putting a cap on class size. We don't even know what those grants are going to be for the boards. I tell you, everybody is quivering with fear. They are quivering because they know they're not going to get what these people are talking about. They're taking the power away from local boards to determine local needs.

The member for Huron must know that needs are as different in cities as they are in some other part of Ontario. She must surely know that. She must surely know that we're not all equal in society. God knows, I wish it were so, but we are not equal. This member pretends to create this illusion that all these kids across Ontario are equal. They're not. That's why boards have had the ability in the past, but no longer, to achieve that equality that they are destroying.

Mr Caplan: I'm very pleased to reply to some of the statements that were made earlier by the minister, the member for Middlesex and the member for Huron. There are an amazing number of inaccuracies in the comments. One comment was to a $9,000 figure as opposed to a $5,000 figure. I would suggest to the member she check her facts. In fact it's way out. If this is just propaganda and spin to sell something, which quite frankly is unsaleable to the people of Ontario, I say shame — shame on the member, shame on this government.

The whole issue around class size is a very interesting one. The member, and all the members, should know that there is legislative protection for class sizes of 8 to 1, of 12 to 1. They are special education classes. So if you're looking for the teachers, I suggest that's where you find them, because they are there. They are in front of students. I ask the members and I ask this minister, is he going to get rid of special education protection for our kids? Are they any less deserving? I certainly hope that's not the response.

As far as this new curriculum and standardized testing, I can tell the member that as a parent in North York, I want nine grades of standardized testing, not the three that this government is proposing. Why don't we raise the level to what we have? Why, as a parent, do I have to have less for my child? The member cannot answer this. The members have no reply as to why now we only have to have three grades of standardized testing.

Why did the Minister of Education virtually plagiarize a curriculum that was introduced five years ago in North York? I don't have any problem with that. It's a good starting place, but it's not a finished product. We can do much better.

1550

Mr Wildman: I appreciate the opportunity to comment on the remarks of the three leadoff speakers for the Conservative government.

I really was surprised and disappointed in the presentation, as the minister is wont to say from time to time. The fact is, these three speakers made presentations which have nothing to do with the real world in education.

What we have today in this province, unfortunately, thanks to the moves made by this government, including Bill 160, is a crisis that is about to happen. We may see a major disruption in the classes of students across this province because the government is determined to take a significant amount of money out of education, $1 billion over the $500 million they've already taken —

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr Wildman: They can barrack all they want, but the point is they are prepared to sacrifice the quality of education for kids in this province in order to get the money out. It reminds me of that Hollywood movie where the athlete is always yelling, "Show me the money." Mr Snobelen is being continually yelled at by the Treasurer of Ontario, "Show me the money," and he's going to get him the money. He's going to get that money out no matter what. If it means ending the special education programs, if it means gutting ESL programs, if it means hurting class size, if it means laying off teachers, he'll do it, because he's got to get that money for Mr Eves.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Middlesex, are you going to sum up?

Mr Smith: Certainly you can approach this issue from two perspectives: one such as the opposition, where they're creating all sorts of chaos, or alternatively approaching the issue as constructive managers of change. This is what we're about. This is a process that we're entering into. I said at the outset that it's not an easy process we're going through, but one that I believe in the long term will benefit the students of this province.

The issue that the member for Kingston and The Islands raised in terms of the $1 billion: I would simply put this matter before you. Last year the government clearly articulated its intention to reduce grants to school boards by 2.4%. That is well known. Instead of finding savings, many school boards simply passed the reductions on to local taxpayers. In essence, they raised taxes $334 million.

That is why there has to be change to the funding system of this province. That is why we're moving ahead to provide a simpler, fairer funding system for the province, one that clearly focuses on students.

You can approach it from a panicked perspective, as the members of the opposition are, or you can deal with it progressively and move ahead. Many of these opposition members were a part of previous governments that have studied this issue to death. As I indicated before, now is the time to act; now is the time to move ahead.

We will be limiting class size. We will be focusing on teachers' expertise in the classroom. We will be addressing student access to specialists. We will provide more time for learning. We'll be providing a simpler, fairer funding model. We will be recognizing free collective bargaining and that whole process. We will be recognizing the needs of those communities that are experiencing growth opportunities.

This is not about panicking about the future and standing up and railing and screaming. It's about doing things properly, things that each of these members on the opposition benches knows has been appropriately discussed for a number of years — some 22 different studies spanning an extensive period of time. The time has come for some changes. Yes, there will be some challenges with that change process. I challenge them to take the appropriate approach.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): This government continues to be absolutely amazing in its sheer bullheadedness and its determination to ram through its agenda regardless of the consequences. It continues to manipulate public opinion in an effort to camouflage the fact that the basic agenda remains unchanged.

We hear today that they may even have managed to convince members like the member for Middlesex and the member for Huron, who I think have some genuine concern for education, that this government's goal is to see some improvement of education. How they can continue to believe that I think is only because they are taught not to look at the evidence of this government's record to date and they are taught not to look at the reality of what is actually happening out in the classroom.

Be that as it may, we are beginning debate today on an education omnibus bill. It is a bill that serves one overall purpose. Let there be no mistake about that. That is to give this Mike Harris government total and absolute control of education in every respect, from funding to the day-to-day activities that go on in a classroom — total control.

This is a bill that has driven the teachers of this province to the point of being ready to take strike action in defence not only of their jobs but of public education itself. This is a bill that is the result of neither negotiation nor consultation. You can't call it consultation when one side comes into the talks with an agenda which is already set in stone, an agenda which is diametrically opposed to everything the other party to the talks believes is important. Yet that is exactly what happened when Mike Harris and John Snobelen said, "We want to talk to teachers." They came in with a set agenda, and it was an agenda that no teacher concerned about education could ever subscribe to.

You can't talk about negotiation when one side sets down ultimatums. That's again what Mike Harris and John Snobelen and the representatives of their government did at that so-called negotiating table. They made their ultimatum absolutely clear: They wanted $1 billion out of education spending and they wanted the tools to cut those dollars out by cutting out classroom teachers. No wonder teachers said no.

Last Thursday, Mike Harris and John Snobelen were still talking about talking. You'd think if they were serious about talking, if the Minister of Education was serious, as he said in the House today, about sitting down with teachers and actually hearing their concerns, we wouldn't be beginning debate today on a bill which is going to force teachers into strike action across this province.

You'd wonder why not only are we beginning debate today, but this bill is being fast-tracked: debate tonight, debate tomorrow night, debate Wednesday night. On Thursday are we going to see a time allocation motion that cuts off debate? How soon are we going to see second reading? How much opportunity is there going to be for any kind of public consultation on this bill?

Why is this debate beginning? Why is it being debated today? Why is it being fast-tracked? It is clearly an in-your-face response, despite the seemingly conciliatory words that the Premier was using last week and the Minister of Education was using today. Why, I ask you, would this government keep pushing this province's 126,000 teachers to the point where strike action, an action which teachers truly do not want to take, remains their only form of protest against government actions which they consider absolutely indefensible, inexcusable and unacceptable?

There is one answer. The answer is that the government really does need the money for their tax cut. John Snobelen promised Mike Harris that he could deliver more than $1 billion for the tax cut agenda. Mike has said publicly that he needs the $1 billion, and he sent John Snobelen out to find $1 billion for him.

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Member for Hamilton Mountain, you must withdraw that.

Mr Trevor Pettit (Hamilton Mountain): I withdraw it.

1600

Mrs McLeod: If you are going to take $1 billion out of education, you do have to do things very differently, as the Minister of Education keeps telling us, but you've got to read something into the "very differently." When this Minister of Education talks about doing education very differently, he's not talking about constructive change for the benefit of students in the classroom. When this Minister of Education is talking about doing things very differently, read for that "very cheaply," because that's what every single initiative of this government has been about.

If you're going to do things very differently and very cheaply, you need to persuade people that the system is so bad that you've got to break it before you can change it. That's the kind of change management that John Snobelen, the Minister of Education, knows best. It's the kind of change management he believes in: "Break down the system, destroy what's there now, and then you can do whatever you want to do without any resistance whatsoever. You have total power, total control. You have the tools to find the $1 billion." That's what this bill is all about, giving John Snobelen the tools he needs.

You'll remember, Mr Speaker, and I'm sure my colleagues will, that John Snobelen promised school boards a toolkit about a year or a year and a half ago. But all the tools he was able to deliver, he found, were to make a direct cut to junior kindergarten classes — the Minister of Education again today and the Premier said they hadn't cut junior kindergarten; this government looked for $145 million in direct cuts to junior kindergarten, and that was something they could control — and they made a direct hit on adult education, cut the funding for adult education to half, and that was something within their control. But Mr Snobelen found that he didn't have the other tools that he needed within his control, so he couldn't deliver the toolkit to school boards. This bill, Bill 160, is the long-promised toolkit. All the tools are there, but they're not tools for school boards to use; they are tools that are vested to be used solely and exclusively by cabinet, by Mike Harris and by John Snobelen. This is total control of education by the central government.

Because John Snobelen needed to destroy the traditional system to get the tools he needed for himself, John Snobelen has been deliberately picking a fight with Ontario's teachers from the time he became Minister of Education. Teachers and trustees, in my view, have been guardians of public education. Teachers and trustees have had their differences at local levels from time to time — there's no question about that — but I believe that teachers and trustees have always shared a belief in public education, a commitment to work for it, to fight for it, to make sure that the actions that were taken, even when there were differences about which actions were most appropriate, were taken to preserve and enhance public education and an equality of educational opportunity for our students. I believe that about teachers and trustees. They are guardians of public education and have been so for over 100 years.

Mr Snobelen, our Minister of Education, describes them not as guardians of public education but as defenders of the status quo. These are the people who are committed to education, committed to make education work on the front lines, in classrooms, with students, but they do resist changes they see as being destructive for public education — of course they're going to resist those changes — so they are opposed to this government's destructive agenda, and because they are opposed to it, they have to go. The first to go with Bill 104, just a few months ago, were the province's school trustees, rendered absolutely ineffective and non-accountable at the local level, as we soon will see. Now, with Bill 160, it is the other partners in guardianship of public education who are under attack; it's the province's teachers.

In the past year teachers have been demeaned by this Minister of Education as being underworked and overpaid. They have been accused of laziness because they failed to take the minister's rather hastily put together summer seminars on the elementary school curriculum, even though only a handful of teachers could have been admitted. They have been portrayed as wasting time that could be spent with students. The minister has now shown how eager he is to replace qualified teachers with non-certified non-teachers in a host of areas, from guidance to libraries to art to music to physed to technology.

But the minister hasn't stopped there. He has consistently undervalued the work the teachers do and he has maligned the public education system itself. He portrays our students as underachieving while the system itself consumes 10% more than the national average across the rest of the country. The Premier actually said in the House a week or so ago that our students were 10th and last in achievement. The Premier had that mixed up with post-secondary education funding, where indeed we are 10th and last. That is not a reflection on the achievement of our students, which is really quite different from what the Minister of Education describes, and even the figures on Ontario spending versus the national average are completely erroneous. But John Snobelen will say whatever it takes to persuade people that the system is broken.

I think the government has been a little bit surprised at how much resistance there has been to the agenda, despite all their efforts to discredit their opponents, so the government has had to at least give the appearance of stepping back on some of their proposals. They're finding that people are a lot more committed to public education than they realized. They have had to launch a $1-million advertising campaign to try and sell their spin. Talk to parents who are concerned about education and they'll tell you what they would have liked to have done to really improve education if they could have spent that $1 million themselves. But that was the government's attempt to try and spin their agenda, to try and convince people they were doing something to improve education. They have had to refocus their attacks at the last minute so they can try and isolate the issues to ones they think they can manage when they find the public isn't supportive of their agenda, so now they are trying to focus their attack on teacher preparation time. I'll get to that later.

But make no mistake. The basic agenda of this government is the same and it is unchanging: The government wants the control that will let them take another $1 billion out of education.

I want to spend my time this afternoon trying to unravel the web of misinformation and myth that John Snobelen and Mike Harris have spun to try and create the impression that this bill is about something else.

The first myth is that this bill is about improving education. The title of the bill — the government tries to convince us with their titles — is the Education Quality Improvement Act. There is nothing in this bill that will ensure any improvement in education. All this bill is is a set of tools to give the power to the minister and to the cabinet to decide what will happen in education. It doesn't tell us how they're going to use those powers, how they're going to use those tools; it just gives them the power.

I ask, do we trust this Minister of Education, this Premier and this government to actually use those powers to improve education for our students? If you have any doubts about the answer to that question, just look at the evidence of this government's record: $533 million in direct cuts after having made the social contract cuts permanent, a total of almost $1 billion already taken out of education on a permanent basis; direct hits, as I have suggested, to junior kindergarten, where they wanted the $145 million in savings; direct hits to adult education; and direct hits to school boards' ability to provide support for the programs that matter, because they have made cuts in the operating grants to school boards. So we have seen larger class sizes, we have seen less special education and we have seen schools that have no textbooks because their budgets have been cut back so far. I heard today from a principal who said, "We have absolutely no money for painting in our school," so when there is graffiti on the school walls, she goes up to the hardware store and buys a can of paint so she can spray paint to cover up the graffiti.

Class size is a big issue, a big issue for parents, a big issue for students and a big issue for teachers, so the minister, when he wants to talk about how he's going to improve education, talks a lot about class size. He talks about it as if larger class sizes — and we have seen larger class sizes, as the member for Huron has said, have seen class sizes grow in the last two years — were the fault of bad decisions made by local school boards, and the minister talks as if he's actually going to fix large class sizes. He's even suggested, and I'm still struggling with the suggestion, that teachers have gone out and negotiated increases in class sizes and he uses that as one of his reasons for attacking collective bargaining.

1610

You have to ask again, why would teachers negotiate larger class sizes? I was at negotiating tables for a lot of years on the management side as a school trustee. In my experience, the focus of those negotiations from the teachers' perspective was always to have lower class sizes, smaller classes. That served their interests as teachers in a classroom, not larger class sizes. I acknowledge that in the last year or so there have been some contracts where the teachers have very reluctantly agreed to some increase in class sizes.

Can I tell you the two examples I know about? One is my home board, the Lakehead Board of Education. Elementary school teachers agreed to have, I think it was, two additional students in their elementary school classes because that was the only way that board could save junior kindergarten. In order to keep the junior kindergarten program the teachers agreed to an increase in class size.

The other example I know about, I hate to tell the member for Algoma this, was in response to the social contract provisions which froze increments and penalized the more junior teachers in the school system. Those increments were not given and they were being paid a lower salary for essentially doing the same work as their more senior counterparts. So I know there are boards that negotiated some increase in class size in order to ensure that the junior teachers in their system could receive those increments.

Those are the only instances I know of where teachers have ever agreed at a negotiating table to larger class sizes.

Why do we actually have these larger class sizes? I suggest to you that if you're concerned about this issue you might want to look at the report of the Education Improvement Commission, which the minister himself set up. The education commission notes that between 1992 and 1997, operating grants fell by just over $1 billion. They also note that enrolment in Ontario's education systems continued to increase at an average rate of 25,000 students per year. They further note that in that same time frame the number of teachers in schools in Ontario fell by nearly 2,000 between 1992 and 1996. The equation is pretty simple: If you have less money, more students and fewer teachers, you are going to have larger class sizes.

I find it quite incredible that the minister's background statement on this bill is as deliberately naïve as it appears to be. It says, "Current class sizes are larger than the number of teachers would indicate." They go on, of course, to talk about the fact that there's a difference between the pupil-teacher ratio and the average class size, but they don't seem to want to talk about where those extra teachers are.

We know where the extra teachers are. My colleague from Oriole has spoken to it. Some of those extra teachers are in special education classes, where the ratio of teachers to students is more like 1 to 8 or 1 to 12, so that individual attention can be given. Some of those extra teachers are in libraries, working with students in libraries. Some of the extra teachers are in our secondary schools. They're in tech shops and in chemistry labs, where you cannot have higher numbers of students because it is not safe for students working with chemicals or with machinery to have larger classes.

Some of those extra teachers are in grades 1 and 2. I was proud to be part of a government that did mandate lower class sizes in grades 1 and 2, not just maximum sizes but lower class sizes in grades 1 and 2. We funded it fully so boards could implement that policy, but as the grants have been cut, trying to keep class sizes lower in grades 1 and 2 has forced boards to have more students in some of the other grades. That's the kind of dilemma that boards have faced when they've been hit by the $533 million in cuts that this government has already introduced. I remind you that these boards are also facing increasing enrolment at exactly the same time.

I suggest to this government that you cannot fix this problem without more money. Fewer teachers, more students make larger class sizes, and the only way to turn that around is to provide more funding directly for the classroom. It will make it worse if you take $1 billion out. The answer surely is not to see all those teachers, who are somehow seen as wasted outside the classroom, disappear, to have those same maximum class sizes in special education or the chemistry lab or grades 1 and 2 that you might see as being a realistic average in the other grades. Surely that won't be the minister's answer to managing class sizes. But until we see from this minister some clear evidence that the dollars are going to be there to provide for the lowering of class sizes, I suggest that his concern about improving the quality of education is entirely hollow.

We would also suggest that the minister's concern about improving the quality of education is entirely hollow. If you want evidence of that, look at what we saw last week, where the hallmark of the minister's current educational reform was to be extending the school year so that students would have more time with their teachers. That was Monday. This was good for education, it was good for students, it would improve the quality of education. By Wednesday morning at 9:30 it wasn't good for kids or education any longer, so the minister decided that he wasn't going to do it.

This is a minister making up our children's educational future as he goes along. How can something be good for kids on Monday and not good for them on Wednesday? It's because at no time has this Minister of Education actually asked what works for students, what is good for students, what will actually improve the quality of education. The basic goal is, if you can get more work out of teachers for less money, you're going to save the dollars you're looking for to get that $1 billion. Will they even care that everyone, anyone, who knows anything about education says that what they're proposing isn't actually good for students?

I'm going to have to hurry up here because I have no less than some seven myths that this government has tried to spin as a justification for this act. The second myth is that the changes in education are needed because our students are doing so badly. Nobody is going to argue that there can be changes that would indeed improve education. Nobody is going to argue that we don't want our students to achieve excellence. Nobody is going to argue against having equity in funding so that every student has a chance. There's no quarrel with that. But I will quarrel over and over again with a minister who takes joy in putting the achievement of our students in the worst possible light, who loves to use the international test results to suggest that our students are doing badly.

Why does the minister never talk about the fact that our students were actually ahead of the United States and Germany in math and science? Germany is always being held up as the example of how effective a streamed system can be, and yet our students were ahead in math and science. Why does the minister never mention that we have a much larger number of students who are being tested than in many other countries because we don't stream out the less academically able, we put them all into a program and we allow them all to be tested and meet a standard.

Why does he never, ever discuss the implication of the fact that in Ontario only 70% of the students who were tested speak English at home? That's lower than in any other province, even BC, with a large immigrant population. In BC, 86% of the students tested spoke English at home. Why doesn't the minister want to talk about the fact that Ontario students performed at the national average or better in measuring and solving problems but have difficulty describing the procedures verbally? It's a verbal problem that some Ontario students had. Does the fact that 30% of our students have English as a second language make that more understandable? Does it explain why some of our students don't do as well in the overall scores? I don't think the minister wants to talk about that, because he doesn't want to enhance understanding; he wants proof that the system is broken.

It is a fact that Ontario's grade 4 students came second among a handful of jurisdictions on international tests that even met the test standards for that grade and that our grade 8 students were slightly above the international average. But that, although it was recently reported, didn't get any headlines and it certainly didn't get any comment from the minister. How well do our students have to do before the Minister of Education stops saying that the system is broken, and when will he look at what the real needs are and what needs to be done? I suggest that it is likely to be never, because then he would have to leave his cost-cutting and political agenda behind.

Despite everything that this minister has done to discredit education and our students' achievement, the recent study by the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education still shows that the public believes that education is doing a good job. Ontario residents are more satisfied than they were a decade ago with education: 60% of parents are happy with the system, and two thirds of adults under 25, the products of the system of the last 10 years, felt the schools were doing well.

1620

Myth number three that is offered up as an excuse for this legislation is that the government needs to get hold of teacher preparation time because the time teachers spend on preparation is wasted time, so by extension, if we take that wasted time away from teachers, education is necessarily going to improve.

I would ask the most basic question about this myth: If you want to save money by taking away preparation time — and the Minister of Education has said he thinks he can save at least $200 million by taking away preparation time — you're going to have to have fewer teachers; it's the only way you can save the money. The estimates are that to do what the minister wants it will be 6,000 to 10,000 fewer teachers in our system. The basic question then is, if you have fewer teachers teaching more classes, how does this improve the quality of education? How does it improve the amount of contact time teachers have with students? It doesn't; it lowers the quality of education.

The second question is, is teacher preparation time good for teachers or good for students? You have to then ask, what are teachers doing with their preparation time? One thing is that they're covering sick leaves. If the minister is going to get a saving, he's going to have to look at that, because there's not going to be as much saving if you have to bring in occasional teachers to replace the coverage the teachers are now doing. But I suggest that more occasional teachers aren't really good for kids.

The second thing teachers are doing with their preparation time is that they're preparing their lessons and they're doing their marking. That's a reality. Then they use the time after school and in the evenings that has been freed up because they've done their marking and their preparation during that preparation time, that after-4 time and that evening time, to coach the basketball team, to provide support to the student council, to work with the drama class, a whole host of extracurricular activities. Surely this government doesn't believe those extracurricular activities are a waste and should be eliminated as a part of the school curriculum, yet I certainly hear the back-to-the-basics folks prepared to give all that up as extra, as frills, as a waste of taxpayers' money. I don't think students and parents will share that view.

This Minister of Education has actually tried to portray all the time spent outside the classroom as being a waste of dollars. Remember when he talked about the $6 billion not spent in the classrooms as if that $6 billion was all spent on administration that could be cut and shaved so that we'd save $6 billion? He didn't acknowledge the fact that the $6 billion included light, heat, maintenance, special education and counselling of kids. Surely all of that is not waste, but it does give you some idea of what the minister thinks is valuable. I heard the member for Huron, indoctrinated in that view, trying to suggest that the only value comes from the teacher in a classroom. Absolutely that is key, that teacher in the classroom, but you've also got to have the full curriculum and the kind of support that the out-of-classroom time provides.

It worries me when we have a government that thinks the teachers only work four hours a day, which is what the minister's friend, Mr Paroian, whom he referred to again, has suggested. Teachers are working outside the classroom when they are spending time with students. I for one consider that to be valuable and important work which should continue.

I'm not going to linger on the preparation time issue. I'm not going to read all the quotations that have come from trustees who believe that preparation time is an essential part of the day. I do want to express my concern that the education information commission — I'm sorry, the Education Improvement Commission; I keep getting that wrong — the Education Improvement Commission suggests that maybe 25% of preparation time could be taken away, and the minister is determined to take at least 50% of that preparation time away. I'm going to ignore the fact that the commission says to allow that time to be used flexibly at the local level and this minister is going to control it entirely from the centre. I'm not going to spend a lot of time on the fact that we are already at the national average — the minister likes to say he's taking us down to the national average in preparation time too — because in Ontario teachers are providing coverage for other teachers who are away.

I just want to express my concern that I think this minister's goal is to use his power to take away all teacher preparation time, to force teachers to be in the classroom the whole time, the whole part of their school day, and that if there is no preparation time left at all, what will be lost in the balance of the day, with the voluntary commitment of teachers after school and at nights, is not going to serve students well.

Myth number four is that the government needs to take control of spending and take taxing powers away from local boards because boards have overspent and have raised taxes. We've heard that argument from the member for Middlesex today.

In this bill, as I trust everybody is now aware, the government is taking over the power to tax property directly. It's going to be very interesting to see how the public feels about the provincial government having the powers to tax property directly for education once they see the uniform mill rate the government is going to impose for residential taxes. We know they're taking 50% of the residential tax burden for education away, but as they download all the other services on to municipalities and apply a uniform mill rate for the other 50% that's going to be raised for education, I think there will be a great many people in a great many communities who actually see their residential property tax bill go up significantly.

We don't know how they're going to tax businesses in our communities for educational purposes, businesses that have to continue to pay 100% of their share of educational costs but in this case are going to be paying it directly to the provincial government. We don't know whether that's going to be a uniform mill rate.

We don't know much about how this government is going to use this power to raise taxes directly on property for education, because I remind you that this bill is not about how this government is going to use power; this bill is only about this government taking power.

But I want to get back to the myth about whether or not we need this power being taken over by government because school boards have been overspending and overtaxing. I ask the question, why have some boards raised taxes in the last two years? Nobody who's an elected politician believes it's in their political interest to be raising taxes in this climate, so why have boards felt they were pushed to raise taxes in the last two years? It is for one simple, obvious reason: Boards of trustees who are concerned about education have had to raise taxes to make up for this government's cut to their grants, and the alternative was to cut programs and services they believe their students need.

Those boards have been desperate to find the dollars to keep junior kindergarten, to find the dollars to try to keep class sizes down so that they don't go up to 35, 38 and 40; to at least keep the class sizes down in grades 1 and 2. They've been desperate to find the dollars to meet those kinds of needs.

Some boards didn't raise taxes, and I acknowledge that. There are boards that had reserves, and last year when they were hit with this government's cuts and when they were hit with these totally untenable decisions they would not make and hurt the programs their students need, some boards went out and used those reserves. Now I think they're wishing they had raised taxes after all, because they're trapped: They can't raise taxes between January and September — the minister's new funding formula doesn't take over till September — and those boards that used their reserves last year instead of raising taxes do not know how they're going to keep their programs, including junior kindergarten, going from now until next September.

As for their spending, what have boards spent their money on? It's not administration. Let's put that myth to rest right away. Administrative spending across this province is less than 5% of the total spending of all school boards. School boards have been spending their dollars on programs that have been mandated by the province, and I will acknowledge that there have been increases in spending as new programs have been introduced by successive governments.

There have been increases in spending because of a previous Conservative government's commitment to special education. Costly? Yes. Important in terms of true equality of education for students? Absolutely.

Spending has risen in the last years because of another government's commitment to having lower class sizes in grades 1 and 2. Costly? Yes. Important in terms of a good start in the elementary grades, the primary grades? I would say absolutely.

Boards have been spending money to try to bring in the computer technology which even this minister acknowledges is crucial for modern education.

All these programs have required increased spending, and remember that we've had increased enrolment at the same time, so we've had increased spending to meet those needs of new students as well. All that has meant increased spending, but all of it has been important in meeting the needs of students.

1630

Again, I want to go back to the minister's own commission. When they recognized what — the government members don't want to take my word for this, and maybe they wouldn't, seeing me as having a vested interest as a former school trustee. But let their commission speak. This was in that period of time when operating grants fell by just over $1 billion. The commission says, "Although some of this reduction was offset by increases in the local property taxes used for education, much of it was absorbed by school boards through service cuts and streamlined operations." Boards have done their best to try and bring about the efficiencies that would allow them to avoid the service cuts.

What is going to happen then when the enrolment continues to increase, when the cuts in funding continue and when the boards cannot raise taxes because this government has taken over the power to fund education and to raise taxes itself? What happens when local needs that are identified by local boards simply can't be met? We will lose the junior kindergartens. There's no doubt about that. We will have larger class sizes in some grades because we're not going to be able to find the dollars to meet the minister's rules by having lower class sizes in the elementary and primary grades. We're going to have even fewer textbooks for our students. We're going to have even less special education. That will be the reality of continued funding cuts. So don't tell me this bill is about improving education. This bill is about control and this bill is about cuts.

The Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, interestingly, found that there was no evidence of a tax revolt on the part of Ontario residents. They found that 50% of people were prepared to spend more on education and to pay higher taxes in order to fund that. I think that is a rather dangerous thing for people to want if your government is basing its entire campaign on spending cuts and tax cuts. You can't have a majority of people out there actually saying: "We want to spend more money on education. We think education's doing a good job. It's important to us. We're even prepared to pay more taxes in order to have better education."

That's not this government's agenda. No wonder they've got to do everything they can to convince that public that the education system is broken, that our students aren't doing well, that they're not getting value for their tax dollars. They've got to convince the public that their support for education is misguided, that it's this government's agenda of spending cuts and tax cuts that makes sense. They put all the emphasis on trying to prove that the system is broken so they can find some public support to go out there and take away the billion dollars in the name of having to control overspending and overtaxation.

I would love it if just one day the minister or the Premier, the Minister of Finance or even one of the government backbenchers would stand up and say, "Which of those programs that boards have spent money on in the last five years, the last 10 years, do you think should go?" The junior kindergarten program? I guess the Minister of Education has spoken to that. The lower class sizes in grades 1 or 2? Let's see what his class size maximums do to grades 1 and 2. Special education? Is that what should go? Which of the programs that have caused an increase in spending should be taken out? Which of the programs the boards have raised taxes to try and protect should the boards have cut?

Myth number six is one that I almost forgot. In fact I just put it into my notes when I heard the Minister of Education make his introductory comments. Myth number 6 is that this bill is going to provide greater local accountability. The reason I hadn't put it in my notes was that I thought that was the reason they brought in Bill 104, to provide greater accountability. I thought we'd had that debate, but I guess this government feels they've got to resurrect their old reasons when they can't come up with really good ones for introducing a new bill. This bill doesn't serve the purpose of greater accountability for education. It certainly tells us where the buck stops, because every single decision in education is going to be made at the minister's desk. Maybe that's what he means about greater accountability being served by this bill.

In terms of true accountability for education, true accountability held by local boards of trustees who can actually meet with their teachers and meet with their parents and visit their classrooms and understand what the local needs are and then make those very tough decisions, including a decision to go out and raise taxes if that's what's needed to protect public education, we don't have that kind of accountability left any longer. That has disappeared with Bill 104, which virtually removes the effectiveness of school trustees, and it disappears with this bill, which takes away any right of local school trustees to raise taxes to meet local priorities.

The accountability for education after this bill passes will be so far removed from classes and so far removed from local needs, from the reality of what's going on in our classrooms, from the real understanding of students' needs, that it truly can't be called accountability at all. In fact it will be very difficult to prove that it's the minister who is making the decisions.

We've heard him time and time again, we heard the Premier today, say the minister has never made a decision about cutting junior kindergarten. The minister cut the funding for junior kindergarten. Does that make him accountable for having to see junior kindergarten classes removed? This minister is going to bring in averages and formulas that are going to be virtually impossible to decipher, and whenever there is a problem at the local level he'll say: "It's not my problem. I'm paying for junior kindergarten. I'm paying for adult education. I've put maximum class sizes in place, for goodness' sake. What more can I do to improve the quality of education? If there's a problem, it's at the local school board level." Decentralized blame with totally centralized decision-making: that's what the president of the public school boards said about Bill 104, and Bill 160 puts it over the top.

Myth number seven is that we have to change the way teacher bargaining is done because collective bargaining doesn't work. I've left this to the last of my myths, because not even the government could get this one going very far. Teachers' collective bargaining, of course, has always been done under Bill 100; not always, but since about 1973 it's been done under Bill 100. Bill 100 is repealed in its entirety with this Bill 160. The reason they haven't been able to talk a lot about Bill 100 not working, collective bargaining for teachers not working as a reason for repealing Bill 100 and bringing in new rules for teachers' collective bargaining, the reason they haven't been able to argue it wasn't working is that it has worked: 98% of teacher contracts under Bill 100 have been settled without resort to strike or lockout. That is a record of success. Why are we changing what is clearly already working? They can't even prove that this system is broken, but they are so determined to change it.

The Education Relations Commission, which has served the purpose on those rare occasions in which there are strikes of advising the minister when students are in jeopardy, will continue for a brief period of time to provide advice to the minister on when students are in jeopardy, but the Education Relations Commission is going to function in isolation. It's not going to be involved in the collective bargaining situation. It's not going to be involved in fact-finding or mediation, so its work on jeopardy will be done in isolation and it will be only temporary, because this bill gives the minister the ability, very shortly I suspect, to assign this responsibility to a person or an entity who will then advise the minister on whether the students' year is in jeopardy in the event of a teachers' strike.

It also incidentally gives the minister total power to give direction to that board or entity as to what he expects them to do. So much for the independence of any future body. God forbid that it should be Mr Paroian who ends up being given the responsibility for deciding whether students are in jeopardy, because we are going to see absolute chaos in the collective bargaining field between teachers and local boards over the next months.

The minister's only claim to needing to change the collective bargaining process now is that some negotiations have resulted in an increase in class size, and that's a myth I dealt with earlier.

You have to again ask a basic question. If local collective bargaining under Bill 100 has been working, why is the government wrecking it? There's no question they're wrecking it, because local collective bargaining cannot work when trustees have no financial ability to settle; local collective bargaining cannot work when significant factors of working conditions aren't on the bargaining table and aren't even within local control outside of the bargaining table. The efforts that will undoubtedly be made to make it work are undoubtedly going to fail. I'm not being a Cassandra; I'm not being a doomsayer; I'm not being a scaremonger. I've been at enough negotiating tables to know the conditions are not there for local collective bargaining to work. This government has made sure of that.

1640

Where it doesn't work and where you have to go to arbitration, the arbitrators will be handcuffed by the ability-to-pay factors introduced by the minister in an earlier bill, Bill 34. They will be handcuffed by the fact that if they should want to look at any sort of salary settlement that might involve an increase in salaries, they have to look at how many teachers would be laid off, how many programs would be reduced with the given assumption that there cannot be an increase in funding or an increase in taxation to support that. How can that be considered fair collective bargaining or fair and just arbitration?

It is not. It is government control where the government appoints the board that manages the process and controls the arbitrators by law. This government, even with all that control, has still kept the ability to prevent strikes by teachers in the transitional period. There is no doubt they need it to have some protection from the chaos that they are about to create.

My leader today has again raised the particular clauses that we have pointed out in the bill. Let there be no doubt about it, that clause 58.1(2)(q) says that, "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations...for such transitional matters as the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers...advisable to prevent disruption in the education of pupils."

If you go further over, it says very clearly on page 59 of the bill, "In the event of a conflict between a regulation made under clause 58.1(2)(q)" — that very specific clause that allows the minister to step in, in the event of any concern of disruption of pupils — and a provision of this or any other act, it is the regulation that prevails.

It's a Henry VIII clause, to quote Justice Campbell, unlike anything we have ever seen before, the ability of government by regulation to override not only this act but any other act — protection they felt they needed to deal with the sheer chaos of what is going to occur in a transitional period, when this government is not only amalgamating boards but has said that every board, whether amalgamated or not, must negotiate a new contract and that those new contracts must be in place by September 1, 1998. Given the impossible conditions for local bargaining, given the requirement that every single board in the province must negotiate new contracts by September 1, 1998, there is going to be chaos, and kids will pay the price for that.

I suggest that all the reasons the minister has given to justify this bill are based on myths. Why is it here? To give total power to government to make the cuts they need to pay for the tax cut. I will say it over and over again, because that is the bottom line. That is the easiest, the most obvious explanation. It may not be the whole explanation, and that scares me too, because at some future point, once this government has its $1 billion or maybe $2 billion out of education, once they have the total control that this bill gives them, they will be able to turn that control over to parent councils through charter schools or voucher systems, and then we will almost certainly see the privatization of public education.

You have to wonder why the bill provides a number for students. Isn't it enough, if you're going to track students, to have the student's name, grade, report card? Do you need a number, or does the number make it easier to assign a funding mechanism directly to the student? The minister talks about funding going with students. When we see that, we'll see voucher systems, and when we see voucher systems, we will see the breakdown of publicly funded education that has attempted, struggled for years to provide some true equality of education for our students.

Why are statutory contracts for teachers being withdrawn in this legislation? Why are seniority lists now going to be established by boards not in negotiations but in consultation with teachers, that essentially remove the requirement for full system-wide seniority? I have to ask, and maybe it's my cynical hat getting even more cynical, but does this make it even easier, if you don't have a requirement for system-wide seniority, to turn hiring over to parents and to school councils?

Another feature of this bill that I find horrendous is that the minister will have the power to determine who can be a teacher, who has to be a teacher to be able to teach kids. So much for the College of Teachers, which this government took such pride in establishing. It's now going to be the minister who decides who has to be a teacher in the classroom. It's an appalling idea that art and music and physical education and libraries and technology, computers, can be taught by somebody who has no understanding of pedagogy. Surely you have to know something about how to teach. Surely this should matter if you're concerned about the quality of teacher time spent with students.

I don't think that's a question the government asked itself. I think this is all about saving money. I do wonder whether or not having more teachers who are not qualified teachers, non-certified people, makes it even easier for charter schools to operate with a minimum of staff.

The future of school boards is certainly in doubt. Whether the government is ready to move immediately to privatization or whether it will just evolve as school boards essentially disappear is perhaps the only unanswered question. It's not because trustee honoraria are being cut to $5,000 in this bill. We knew that was coming. It is certainly not sufficient recompense for the kinds of hours that trustees spend. But that's not why trustees will disappear. It will be hard to get people to run for school boards because it is a thankless job with no local control, no local flexibility. That's the real cost of this loss of local accountability.

As I was saying earlier, there won't be any ability to really understand what's happening at a local level and to respond to those local needs. That's the reason trustees won't continue to run for school board. School boards may just disappear by default. Find out in your area how many people are seriously looking at running for school board a month from now.

The second reason we're likely to see school boards disappear is a direct result of this bill, because it gives the power to the minister to take over school boards to address their financial affairs. The ministry says that will only be in times of extreme financial problems, but that's not what the bill says. Basically, the minister can come in at any point that he considers important for financial reasons.

The bill provides for a review of this funding in five years — not a review of whether or not education is adequately funded; a review of whether or not it is equal. Again, we all support equity in funding, but the question that should also be asked is whether or not the funding is fair and adequate for students. Equity at the lowest common denominator does not serve the needs of students.

It's possible that this bill may be found to be not constitutional. I'm sure there will still be legal challenges. Justice Archie Campbell, when the first legal challenge was made, although he recognized the fact that he couldn't adjudicate on it because some of the actions to be taken under the legislation hadn't been taken yet, described a clause in Bill 104 as being the Henry VIII clause because of the breathtaking power it gives to cabinet in this case — with Henry VIII, it was the monarch — to legislate by proclamation.

He described that power as constitutionally suspect because it confers upon government the unprotected authority to pull itself up by its own legal bootstraps and override arbitrarily, with no further advice from the Legislative Assembly and no right to be heard by those who may be adversely affected by the change, the very legislative instrument from which the government derives its original authority. If Justice Campbell thought that clause in Bill 104 was breathtaking in its scope, wait until he sees Bill 160, which gives cabinet the power to override any act, including this one.

If this bill goes ahead, what do we face? I'm going to take a moment before the end of my time to read a bit of a column that was done by Frank Dubrovnik, a freelance writer now living in Oakville, who wrote this for the Toronto Star. He used to cover boards of education up in Alberta. He said:

"Month after month, trustees were called on to rubber-stamp various policies passed down from the Alberta education ministry, while actual budgeting issues were being decided upon in the back rooms in Edmonton. Despite a 1996-97 budget shortfall of nearly $250,000, despite rotating delegations of teachers and parents complaining of overcrowded classrooms and inadequate busing, the trustees' hands were tied.

"Aspenview's" — this particular school board's — "woes could be traced directly back to two 1995 measures by Ralph Klein's government. It shrank the number of school boards from 181 to 57 and it transferred taxation powers from local boards to the provincial education department.

"Before amalgamation, staffing levels and mill rates were set at the local level, based on the needs of each particular division. After amalgamation, each school division was simply handed $4,099 in annual grants for each student, period. Never mind if student enrolment figures fell short, as they did in Aspenview, despite the fact that staff had already been hired to accommodate them. Never mind that traditional have-not divisions were forced to become one big have-not. That's the price paid for distributing funds equally in Alberta."

It's hard not to predict similar hard times ahead for Ontario, or at least parts of it. It wouldn't be the first time Mike Harris has taken a page from Klein's cookbook, and he's picking up a recipe for disaster.

1650

A recipe for disaster it is. John Snobelen set out to create a crisis and once again he has succeeded. It's the only thing he's been able to achieve in his two years as minister; that and half a billion dollars in cuts. The crisis is almost surreal in its proportions except that it is only too real: 126,000 teachers ready to strike, feeling as though they must make their voices heard, must do anything they can to stop this government somehow. Teachers know the government isn't listening, isn't interested in understanding them, that there is little point in talking to John Snobelen and Mike Harris. They will keep trying but they are afraid that once again there will only be fixed agendas and ultimatums and no real discussion.

Teachers are afraid that the public doesn't understand what is at risk here: not just thousands of teachers' jobs, which are most certainly at risk, but the future of publicly funded education itself. They want the public to understand that their strength and their determination in opposing this bill and this government's agenda come from their belief in protecting what the Mike Harris government is so clearly ready to destroy.

I believe that Ontario's teachers are ready to take huge risks at significant personal sacrifice. I don't believe that Ontario's teachers want to take strike action. I know that teachers want more than anything else to do what they've always done: They want to be able to go into the classroom, close the classroom door and teach kids. But they also want to be able to teach kids outside that classroom. They want to be able to protect the programs and the services they as teachers have been able to provide to their students that truly create a greater equality of opportunity for each student. They know that kind of teacher contact time with students occurs outside the classroom as well as within the walls of that classroom. It is teaching; it is teachers' work. They want to be able to continue to do that as well as teach in the classroom.

I know teachers want to be able to continue to do the voluntary extra work they have always done in providing a full curriculum, including extracurricular activities to students. They want to have qualified teachers in the classroom. They believe that the physical education teacher is not just teaching a sport that anybody can teach; he is teaching students. You have to have some understanding of the student and the child's needs in order to be able to truly make the experience of a physed class an educational experience.

This is what teachers want. They don't want to strike; they want to teach students, but they also know that this government is making that more and more impossible to do. They know that this government's agenda first and foremost is to take $1 billion out of education, because they've been told that, but they know that this government's agenda ultimately is the destruction of public education. As teachers committed to public education, they cannot stand by and let that happen without making their voices known and heard.

I know teachers are concerned, as they stand on the brink, that they may not be understood, but I believe that in part they will be successful. I think this government has to back off the $1-billion cuts they are proposing and it has to back off the cutting of thousands of teachers. If either of these actions go ahead, every word and every action of every teacher and every other critic of this government are going to be made absolutely legitimate, and that's a big political price for this government to pay. The alternative to this government's backing off the $1 billion in cuts, backing off the firing, the laying off of 6,000 to 10,000 teachers, the alternative to that $1 billion in cuts and that loss of teachers will be absolutely disastrous to an already devastated system. That would be too big a price for students to pay and much too big a price to pay for a tax cut.

I think the government will retreat, but we will have chaos in the meantime, and that too is too big a price for students to pay. In the end I believe the retreat will be temporary, because this government will seek another way to move ahead with its agenda. This bill gives them all the powers they need. They will take control and then they will begin to privatize our public system and they will destroy public education.

The bugles of attack have sounded again. Bill 160 is the second assault. The target of the attack is public education itself, and anyone who cares must now come to its defence.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Questions or comments?

Mr Wildman: I'd like to congratulate my friend from Fort William for her presentation on Bill 160. It was most thoughtful and analytical. She has certainly put the issues squarely before the House. As she has emphasized, teachers and boards historically in Ontario, while having some differences, have worked for the quality of education for students. In doing so, that brought teachers and boards squarely into conflict with this government and this government's agenda. As a result, the government has consciously decided first to take away any powers that trustees might have to protect students and the quality of education and now they have turned their guns on the teaching profession. That's what Bill 160 is about.

Earlier I compared this government's approach to education to the Hollywood film Jerry Maguire, where the Treasurer of Ontario is continually, like the athlete in that movie, yelling at Mr Snobelen: "Where is the money? Show me the money." Mr Snobelen has been getting the money. He first cut $500 million from public education in this province, claiming it wasn't going to affect the classroom, but of course it did. It hurt special education, specialized programs, many of which the member for Fort William mentioned. Now he's determined to get another $1 billion out of the system. It has nothing to do with the quality of education, it has nothing to do with protecting students; it's all about getting the money for Mr Eves to help finance the tax cut, and students and teachers are being made to pay for that.

Mr Bill Grimmett (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): I was listening very closely to the comments of the member for Fort William. In her comments she raises some issues that she calls misinformation and myths. I thought I would refer to some of those issues and how they are related in the Liberal Party document, the red book, which the member for Fort William used in leading the Liberal Party in the last election.

The first issue would be international tests. What does the red book say about that? It says: "Just about everyone is worried that our schools are not challenging students to reach high standards of achievement. The lack of consistent standards across the province has left the public concerned, parents upset, students confused, and teachers frustrated.... And we often hear reports that Ontario students don't do as well on international tests as students from other provinces and countries."

Another myth: the need to take control from school boards by the province. "Parents feel especially shut out by the current system's maze of bureaucracy and by regulations that are difficult to understand. They are frustrated by a system that seems overloaded with red tape and administration....

"The core program will be set by the provincial government, not by local school boards." Again it appears that at one time the Liberal Party thought there was a need to take control.

There's another myth, according to the member, that we're not spending too much on administration, but right here in the red book it says: "Sixteen cents out of every provincial dollar and an average of 55% of property taxes are spent on education and training. We must make sure that we are getting value for our dollar. As much as possible, our education dollars must be spent on classroom learning rather than administration."

I think the people at home will see where the Liberal Party really is on education. They can't make up their minds.

Our government said we were going to reform education, and in bills 104 and 160 we're showing that this is what we're doing.

1700

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): I too want to reply to the comments made by the member for Fort William. As we follow this debate over the next few days, I know for a fact that there will be no one in this Legislature who will speak with more compassion and understanding of the education system than the member for Fort William. There will be others who speak about it, and they will speak with compassion and understanding, but not any more than the member for Fort William. Any time I have heard the member speak about education, she has done so having researched the information.

She did bring up some of the myths that exist. It's interesting that the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay would quote from the red book. In fact, it's interesting that they often quote from the red book, to the point that I think they too believe and understand and support some of the issues that we presented in there. More importantly, not only do myths exist today in education; I think there is actually sort of a crime being committed. The crime is that we're taking money away from our students.

The member for Fort William alluded to junior kindergarten. They don't care about early education, it would seem. The problem that I see this government having is that they only look at the bottom line when it comes to dollars; they don't look at the welfare of our children and the future of their education. It has been said before, and we'll repeat it time and time again: Mike Harris knows the cost of everything, but he doesn't know the value of anything.

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): I also commend the member for Fort William for her very thorough analysis of what Mike Harris and John Snobelen are up to, in pointing out that this is all about taking control of the system and taking another $1 billion out of education. I have to say I am more comfortable with the approach she has taken today than that as read back to us that she took during the last election, as described to us by the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay.

I will just say this. There is one part in what she said that while I wish I could agree with her, I'm not sure that she's right — and I do hope that she is right — when she said that she feels that the government will back down on some of this. I don't think that is going to happen. I don't think this government is going to back down from taking the $1 billion out of the system. I think this is what the game plan is all about. It's part and parcel of their taking the total control that they have. It's part and parcel of why they have taken so many powers away from school boards. It's why they are centralizing so much power in the hands of the Minister of Education.

We all know that at the end of the day, if we want the kind of school system that the government claims it wants and that certainly all of us want, which allows our students to do well, which allows them to compete in the world that they are going to be living in, it has to be done not just in a way that plays around with the number of days they spend in school — yes, those things may be important — but at the end of the day, it has to be done by the minister and the government being seen to be investing in real dollars and investing in terms of the attitude and the approach they give in working with our teachers, in working with our school boards, to put the emphasis where it needs to be — on what we teach inside the classroom. You don't make that any better by taking another $1 billion out of the classrooms of this province.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs Marion Boyd): Response from the member for Fort William.

Mrs McLeod: I'm sure my colleagues will understand if I want to focus my two-minute response on the comments of the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay, although I can't help but note to the member for Dovercourt that I will probably be much more comfortable with the defence of local collective bargaining that they will undoubtedly make in the balance of the debate than I was with the imposition of the social contract on the local collective bargaining process when they were in government.

Having said that, I truly wish that the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay and his cohort who hands him the red book, which he reads as a Bible, could take the intentions that were there and the places where there is a genuine consensus about what would work to improve education and learn from it and see how different it is from what their government is doing. Yes, we should take international test results and we should analyse them and we should understand what they say to us about the importance of identifying gaps and meeting those gaps.

I was trying to say in my speech that we may have a problem that we are not providing enough support to students who do not have English as a first language. This government's cuts are going to devastate English-as-a-second-language programs in Metropolitan Toronto and Ottawa and virtually every other community where those have been a significant proportion of the dollars that have spent over the provincial averages of dollars spent on other students. When does the government acknowledge that those are unique needs that have to be met and, if they aren't met, our students will do even more poorly on international tests in the future?

Use the data as a basis for understanding what needs to be done in education. Understand that we all agree about the value of core programs, but ones developed in partnership, not ones that are imposed on teachers at the end of June and they're told they're supposed to come back to school in September and start teaching them, and not programs that set students up to fail because every student should learn to read in grade 1, when they're not being provided with enough dollars to get the support they need to actually learn how to read.

There was a huge difference between the commitments I made to education that would have supported and enhanced public education and a commitment that this government made to find $5 billion for a tax cut and to start by taking it out of education.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Wildman: I guess it's almost trite, now that we've been here with this government in office for a couple of years, to try to put their moves on education in the context of the minister's comments only a week or so after he was appointed Minister of Education and Training, but I think it is important for us to recognize that in this particular case the minister, I believe, has been quite honest with the people of Ontario. He has been very straight. He stated that he wanted to make major changes in education and he described the method that he would use as what I guess has sometimes been referred to as chaos theory, that in order to build anew, one must destroy what is there; that in order to be able to force major change, the public must be convinced that the current system is broken, is not working.

It wasn't a situation of saying that we are indeed in crisis that the minister began his term in office with, but in fact he was saying that he, as minister, must create a crisis, and he's done exactly that. In his whole approach he has attempted to destroy the education system that ironically members of his own party historically have built up over the decades since the Second World War. The minister would like to have it appear that he is moving forward with progressive change, when in fact he's trying to take us back to the 19th century. I don't think even Egerton Ryerson would have accepted what this minister is proposing as new for the province and new for students.

Historically the Conservative Party has valued education as one of the central roles of government. The responsibility of government on behalf of the public in this province is to properly educate our students for the future. We've seen historically with the Progressive Conservative Party where ministers of education — Mr Robarts, Mr Davis and their successors — were given positions of extreme importance in the government and many of them, certainly Robarts and Davis, went on to become the leaders of their party and premiers of the province because education was central to their agenda.

Education is also central to this government's agenda but it's a very different approach. The approach here is to say that what we have is bad and the people who are involved in the system must be punished. The system must be destroyed so that we can build it anew in a different image.

1710

The minister, in making those comments to his ministry staff, which were videotaped, was quite frank: If there isn't a crisis, we'll invent it, and we'll do it in such a way that the confidence that has grown over the years in education in this province will be undermined to the point that the people involved in education, the people who deliver the education for students in the province, will not have credibility. Therefore, when they object, they won't be listened to by the public. That will then make the way clear for the minister to move forward on his own agenda.

What has this agenda been? We've had some discussion about getting the money out. That's certainly the agenda, and I'll be talking more about that later. But I think it's even more insidious than simply taking money away from programs and from students. It is, first of all, centralizing, again a complete contradiction of what the Conservative Party historically has been about in Ontario, taking local autonomy, local say over education away from communities and centralizing that control here at Queen's Park. That's also part of the chaos theory the minister espoused when he became minister. If one is to invent a crisis, if one is to make major change, to force that change, one must have control.

We've seen Bill 104 where the government has significantly, not just amalgamated boards but along with this bill, Bill 160, has essentially emasculated the boards, has put the boards in a situation where they are only a shell of what they used to be as of January 1. I'm not certain why anyone would want to be a school trustee in Ontario any more, because as many of us have said all they will be is a complaints department. They won't be able to do anything. They have no authority. They cannot make any decisions. The decisions are centralized in the minister's office at Queen's Park.

Under this legislation it's even greater. That centralization is taken to the point where boards will not only suddenly be very large on January 1 and be dealing with large numbers of students in urban Ontario and large expanses of territory in rural and northern Ontario, but where they will have absolutely no say over how the school is to be funded or organized.

The teachers will be put in the situation of having to "negotiate" with these agencies, these boards, and of being told by the boards, "I'm sorry, we don't have any money; we have no ability to raise any money; it's all decided already at Queen's Park, so we can't negotiate with you," even on things like salaries and benefits, which are the only things left in Bill 160 that are negotiable. Negotiations will be a joke.

Then if the boards and the teachers are unable to reach agreement in those areas and they decide to go to arbitration, what does this mean for arbitration? Arbitrators will have to take into account ability to pay, and since the decisions over the funding — which we have yet to see because we haven't seen the funding formula — are all made here at Queen's Park by the minister and his staff, and I suppose by the Minister of Finance, the boards won't have any say. They won't be able to respond. The arbitrators are going to have to simply say, "Well, the boards don't have the money."

The minister, in his own ingenuous fashion, gets up in the House and says he doesn't understand why the teachers are upset. After all, he threatened them with a lot of change, serious change, with regard to collective bargaining — he threatened to take away their right to strike; he threatened to take principals and vice-principals out of the bargaining unit; he threatened to say that teachers do not have to be members of the federation in order to teach in the province — and he hasn't done that. That's not included in Bill 160, not one of those three things, so why are teachers upset? He's responded, he's listened, he's consulted, even though he hardly ever meets with teachers, and when he does, all he tends to do is insult them. He doesn't understand why the teachers are upset.

Of course, he will also say, along with the Premier, "It's not the actual teachers who are upset; it's those union bosses and their underlings who purport to speak for the teachers but who don't really represent the teachers." I've often wondered how the people who say that think these people come to be leaders of unions. It's like saying that none of the members of this assembly speak for any of their constituents or the majority of their constituents. How do we get here, then? Anyway, that's what he tends to do.

Let's look at it again in the context of what this government has done. The first thing they did was to make junior kindergarten optional and then they cut the funding for it. The minister says: "It's up to the boards. It's an option. They can do it if they like. They can continue junior kindergarten. They can even expand it if they wish, but it's up to the boards."

If the boards say they don't have any money and if they have the gall to go to the teachers and if the teachers are naïve enough to actually say, "We want to continue junior kindergarten, so we're even prepared to take a situation where classes at the senior levels might increase a bit so that we can maintain junior kindergarten," then the minister gets up in the House and accuses the teachers of negotiating class sizes up and not caring about their students. That is the worst insult I think this minister has perpetrated since he started two and a half years ago.

He said the teachers are underworked and overpaid. He said they're inefficient. He said they are —

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener): When did he say they were inefficient?

Mr Wildman: He said he wants to help them become efficient.

Mrs McLeod: Therefore, they must be inefficient.

Mr Wildman: Therefore, they must be inefficient, if he has to help them become efficient.

Mr Gilles Pouliot (Lake Nipigon): You're going too fast for them, Bud.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Wildman: He said that the teachers are a self-interested group, a special interest group, who are only interested in their own welfare and their own wellbeing. He said a lot of things about teachers. I heard today he said that we have some of the best teachers in the world in Ontario. I'm glad he said that. I don't know whether this is like Saul on the road to Damascus, where he has suddenly seen the light.

I'm afraid, though, that this minister, like the rest of this government, but in particular this minister, doesn't see words in the context of truth or misrepresentation; he simply sees words as tools for achieving his ends. If he says something today and says something different tomorrow, it's not a matter of flip-flop or changing his position, it's just a matter of the circumstances and what's the easiest way to achieve his ends. As long as you believe that the end justifies the means, which of course is central to the chaos theory, then you've got to understand that it's not a matter of telling the truth or not telling the truth; these matters are relative to what the end is that is in sight.

1720

The minister can vary from insulting the people who have to implement the change, who have to teach the students in the province, to complimenting them, but in my view, in many cases it isn't genuine. The minister has engaged in the canard that the system is broken; that it doesn't serve students well in general; that our students do not achieve; that education taxes are sky high and soaring; that Ontario pays more for education than any other jurisdiction, with poorer results; that our students in this province in comparison to other jurisdictions do very badly. I use the term "canard" advisedly. The —

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Did the member for Huron have a comment?

Mrs Johns: I am just cautioning the speaker, Madam Speaker, on the parliamentary language there. I'd like to have your judgement on whether you think that's a proper vocabulary to be speaking in this House.

The Acting Speaker: I would certainly caution the member for Algoma to watch his language and remember parliamentary procedure.

Mr Wildman: The member for Fort William and the member for Dovercourt remind me that "canard" is a French word for duck. I'm reminded by that of the phrase, "If it quacks like a duck and it walks like a duck and it flies like a duck, it's a duck."

What was the second thing? I said the first thing he did was that he got rid of junior kindergarten and then he eliminated the funding. He pretended that it was going to be optional for boards and he took away the funding, so it wasn't optional at all.

Then he eliminated the funding for adult education day programs in the school system and said they could only fund adult education through the continuing education program. This is a denial of the government's and the Conservative party's own program, which is a hand up, not a handout. In other words, they want people to improve themselves, to be able to provide for themselves and their families and contribute to society, but they are at the very same time making it more difficult for adults to go back to school and gain their diplomas so they can indeed do that. Why did they do this? They did it because the minister wants to get the money out, to provide the money to the Treasurer. That's his main raison d'être, his reason for creating the crisis, his reason for the changes he has made.

He ran into a problem, because we actually elected some trustees in this province, up until very recently anyway, who care about education. Trustees were faced with the choice of having to eliminate some of these programs which are central; not just junior kindergarten, not just adult education, but special education programs which by law they are supposed to provide; English-as-a-second-language programs, particularly in Ottawa and Toronto, but also in other centres across the province; special programs for inner-city schools; in the north, some special programs for native students. They had a choice: They could eliminate these programs, or they could try to find the money to continue them, because the government was cutting their grants. So some boards had the temerity to increase property taxes.

The government said: "Wait a minute, this isn't what we wanted. We are talking about equity." They really do subvert the language. For them, "equity" means bringing everybody down to the lowest common denominator: "We want equity. We want everybody in the province, every student in the province, funded at the same level. We do not want flexibility and differences among boards and communities. We're not talking about bringing the students in rural Ontario up to the level, as close as possible, to some of the funding levels in urban Ontario. We're talking about bringing urban funding down." That's how they define equity.

What did they do? They said, "We've got to take on the boards." What they said was, "We'll amalgamate boards and we'll take away powers from boards." In Bill 104 they began that process and it's continued in 160.

That then left them with the education workers, the people who are teachers' aides, custodians, clerical staff and teachers, the people who provide education for students, the people who work with students, as the next target, as part of the creation of the crisis.

I've listened carefully to this debate, and many of the Conservative members have said they want to increase the amount of time teachers have with students, and all of us think that's a good idea. But the inference, the underlying view of the Conservatives seems to be that a lot of teachers are, I don't know, wasting their time or something. I don't know what they think they're doing, whether they think they're sitting in the staff room playing cards all day.

They ignore the fact that while there are a lot of teachers who do not have 32 or 25 kids in their classrooms every day, all the time — they sometimes have preparation; they sometimes have remedial classes for students; they deal with students on a one-on-one basis; they deal with parents on a one-on-one basis; they attend meetings to deal with students' problems and difficulties; and there are teachers who deal with kids with special needs on a much lower ratio of maybe 8, 10, 12 students to 1.

Of course, they don't count the principals and the vice-principals as teachers because they seem to have no idea of what the principal-teacher concept means. They don't see the principal as the leader of a team in a school who is in charge of the teaching approach in the school. They see the principal simply as an administrator who shouldn't be seen as one of the teachers in the system. They decided to turn their guns on this group and that's what Bill 160 is mainly about.

I honestly think that this government, as part of the crisis-chaos theory of the minister, is determined to provoke a confrontation with the teachers and the education workers in this province, in a real contradiction of terms for a minister who says he's interested in putting students at the head of the class. I think the minister would welcome a disruption in classes. I think the government wants to force the teachers to take action to protect their students, the quality of education and their own bargaining rights.

1730

Just look at Bill 160 and what's in it, what they're facing teachers and education workers with. Let's look at a couple of things. According to this bill the minister may make regulations regarding days of work, some or all of the five working days preceding the start of the school year. They may make regulations authorizing the principal to decide what will be done on those days. The government may make regulations "prescribing...the school year, school terms, school holidays, instructional days, examination days and professional activity days."

The inference on things like professional activity days is that there is nothing useful done, nothing that helps students, that somehow this is a holiday for teachers. What does that say to the profession in this province? It basically is saying to them: "We don't value what you do for students. We don't think that you're really interested in the best interests of your students, when you go on a professional development day, you're just goofing off."

It's a little hard to understand exactly what the minister is about, because as has been pointed out in this debate, last Monday the minister said, "We're going to have the students and the teachers going back to school a week before Labour Day." Then on Wednesday and Thursday he backtracked and said, "Oh, no, I was just talking about the teachers." Of course he had justified having teachers and students going back a week before Labour Day on the basis that there needs to be an increasing amount of time when students and teachers are in contact with one another. If the minister was only talking about teachers when he said that, how on earth does that increase contact between teachers and students if the teachers are the only ones who go back a week before Labour Day?

Then, afterwards, he said, "Maybe we'll find the extra time for contact between students and teachers during the school year, and if we have the teachers come back a week early, they can do what they were doing on some of these other days during the year in the last part of August so we'll have more time for contact during the school year."

The problem was even then the math didn't add up, unless he was talking about changing the holidays, shortening the Christmas holiday and the March break. But the minister then said no, he wasn't talking about that. What on earth was he talking about? I don't think he knows. If there is anybody who needs to do a little remedial math, it's obviously the minister because he can't work out the number of days he is talking about in the school year.

Obviously these changes the minister can make to the regulations under Bill 160 will change the number of days that there is contact between students and teachers, and most people would say: "That's reasonable. I don't understand why the teachers would be upset about that." Except they don't understand in making those kinds of statements that on some of the professional development days the teachers are dealing with issues that affect the quality of education for students. That's what those professional development days are about, and if you cut them from nine to five, I guess arbitrarily you're saying, "They can do all that in five days; they don't need to have nine days." The point is that up until now all of these matters have been negotiable between teachers and boards.

This Bill 160 is about constricting the terms of negotiation. It's about constricting the scope for negotiation between teachers and boards. Some would say: "What difference does that make, since the boards have no power anyway? Why should the teachers be concerned? Boards aren't going to be able to really properly negotiate."

Also, Bill 160 says that the government will have regulation-making powers governing class size and the method for determining it, as well as the minimum amount of instructional time in a day, limiting the assignment of a teacher to non-instructional duties, designating non-teaching positions and the minimum qualifications for a designated position. I'd like to go through each of these.

Most people in Ontario — teachers, trustees, students, parents, members of the general public — would welcome limits on class size. The problem is that in Bill 160 it doesn't say anything about numbers. I know the minister has difficulty with numbers, except when it comes to taking money out, because he can't figure out the number of days in a school year. That's part of his problem: He can't add. If he's genuinely interested in lowering class sizes in Ontario, why didn't he put the numbers in the bill? A range: Primary level should have this range of numbers of students in a class; intermediate level, another number; senior level, another number. Why? There are some who might be tempted to think the reason is that he isn't about lowering class size, but he may in fact be aiming at increasing class size.

There's another problem with this, though. If the government is determined to take the $1 billion out, over and above the $500 million they've already taken out of education, and if at the same time the government is limiting class size, how are the boards going to square this circle? Well, that's where we get to the other parts of this machiavellian plot.

What the government is going to be able to do is limit assignment of a teacher to non-instructional duties and deal with questions around preparation time. What is this about? It's about freeing up teachers from prep time to do more classroom work. Most people would say that's a good thing, except they forget what they are preparing for. What do teachers do in preparation time? Why is it called preparation time? They're not playing cards in the staff room. What they are doing is preparing new lessons for their students or they are working with remedial students or they are doing interviews, meetings, whatever, for the benefit of students.

But you only believe that if you actually believe that teachers are interested in students, and I guess those in this government who have said that teachers spend too much time away from students don't really believe that teachers are interested in their students. If they believe that, I don't understand why they think these people became teachers. Surely the only reason for becoming a teacher is because you want to help students achieve. You have a love of learning. You care about kids.

The real reason for limiting preparation time is to lower the number of teachers. The estimates vary depending on what actually comes out of this, but the change in preparation time may mean there are going to be anywhere from 4,000 to 6,000, and there have been estimates as high as 10,000, fewer teachers in Ontario as a result of this change.

How does eliminating positions for teachers improve the quality of education for students? If one of the Conservative members could just answer that question, I would start to understand, I guess, what the minister's program, what his agenda is really about, if it isn't just the chaos theory, if it isn't just about creating and inventing a crisis so that he can change the system substantially.

Let's look at a couple of other things: designating non-teaching positions and the minimum qualifications for a designated position. What this is about is saying that in certain areas people do not have to have teacher qualifications, they do not have to be certified as teachers in order to instruct students.

1740

What sorts of areas? We've had the list before: library. The people who say that don't see the library as a teaching resource. They don't see the librarian as a teacher. So they think we can just bring in technicians who will be able to catalogue books and other learning materials and won't be involved in the actual development of curriculum and teaching of students, teaching research skills, the ability to analyse and to be able to use resource material to solve problems and to learn.

We've also seen guidance, the suggestion that we should have social workers or psychologists doing guidance at the secondary level in particular rather than teachers; the suggestion that at early childhood education, at junior kindergarten and lower, we should really just have early childhood educators trained in community colleges teach. It's important to recognize that their diplomas give early childhood educators the right to instruct children up to the age of 10. We're not just talking about preschoolers.

This is really scary for some teachers and we may be seeing it, certainly in junior kindergarten if it still exists, kindergarten if it still exists after the cuts in education and the money is taken out. We may find in the future people designated who aren't teachers who may be instructing at the primary level, grades 1 and 2.

For those of us who have observed this government and the way it deals with so-called special interest groups, we understand why people are cynical and worried about the intentions of this government and in particular this minister. While the government and the minister say they are interested in improving the quality of education for students, they know the whole purpose is to take the money out, and by changing the designation of a non-teaching position, what this means is that boards can hire people who do not have teaching qualifications and they don't have to pay them the same level they pay teachers. That's what it's about, getting the money out, not improving the quality of education for kids.

These non-designated staff people could also teach other things. They could teach music. They could teach art. They could teach technical subjects. They could do computer studies. The possibilities are endless. Why are the teachers then worried? They're worried obviously about their own positions and their own jobs. There's no question about that. But they are also worried, and this is something nobody on the other side of the aisle seems to understand, about the quality of education for the kids in the classroom.

Teachers aren't the only people who care about quality of education, but they are perhaps, as the minister has said from time to time, the most important people in the system. The most important education tool we have is a dedicated, knowledgeable, caring teacher.

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Students are the most important thing.

Mr Wildman: I said the most important tool for educating students. There's no question the students are what the education system is for. But this government sees the education system as a money cow to help finance its tax cut. That's what it's about.

What position is the board going to be in if the board cannot maintain with dwindling grants the class sizes that will be set out under regulation? In the past, boards have been able to raise municipal taxes, set higher mill rates. What does Bill 160 do about that?

Section 234 of the bill gives the provincial government funding powers requiring that the government "operate in a fair and non-discriminatory manner." That sounds reasonable, except what does it really mean? It means the Minister of Finance will prescribe tax rates for school purposes across the province. This applies to both businesses and residential ratepayers. There will be a uniform tax rate for single-family and multi-unit residential properties for the education portion of the tax bill, and the government has said it will freeze education property taxes.

What does this mean? The power and the accountability for tax levies at the local level has been taken away from the local authority, the school board. It has been centralized at Queen's Park, part of the centralizing agenda of this government. The power has been taken away from the boards and given to Queen's Park. So on the one hand the ministry will cut the grants to get the money out; on the other hand, they will set the mill rates and set the tax rates, and they are going to set class sizes. How on earth are the boards going to be able to comply? How on earth can teachers negotiate with boards that don't have any ability to raise money and will be directed from Queen's Park as to how they can tax and how much money they are going to have?

The ultimate irony in Bill 160 is that it says that if the provincial system for setting tax rates and funding education is found lacking, it may be repealed in five years, and they likely will restore local taxing powers. So we have a situation where the government will by then, I guess they feel, have achieved the $1 billion in savings, where they'll have taken that money out of education, a total of $1.5 billion away from the students in this province, where the boards aren't doing well, the students' education is suffering, and after five years the government can turn it all over to the municipalities again and say: "Okay, now you're stuck with this situation. You raise the property taxes to make up for the problems that have occurred because this government took so much money out of education." It really is machiavellian.

What are we faced with this fall? We're faced with a situation where there is tremendous uncertainty: for parents and students, for teachers and taxpayers. There may be a significant confrontation between the teachers and the provincial government that will lead to a disruption in classes for students right across Ontario. There is the certainty that as of January 1, 1998, there will be complete chaos in the education system because Bill 104, the companion piece, will have taken effect. New boards will be in place. In the next two years those boards will be busy trying to reorganize themselves and they won't be doing very much of anything that is going to benefit the quality of education for students.

The government will have all the power here at Queen's Park. The minister will have achieved the changes he wants. We still don't know what his funding formula is going to be — it may be coming later this fall — but we do know that he will have all the control over the funding of education and he'll be able to get the money out. He'll have gotten that money out. Students will have been hurt. The quality of education will deteriorate. Teacher morale will be very low. Local parents and ratepayers won't have any real say over their local education. But the bottom line is that the government will have achieved a saving at the expense of the students and their education.

1750

Bill 160 does a lot of things. It provides for regulations that will restrict the ability of teachers and boards to bargain. It will set class size and the method for determining class size. Regulations will determine preparation time and instructional time, the length of the school day and the school year. All of these have been matters, particularly class size and prep time, for negotiations in the past. This bill is about limiting the scope of negotiations between teachers and boards. There will be a repeal of statutory teacher contracts.

I guess the school year will have been lengthened, although we're not sure exactly what the minister means by that; he doesn't seem to know himself. But Bill 160 will permit regulations authorizing principals to determine what work will be done before Labour Day. There will be changes in terms of regulations about instructional days, examination days and professional activity days.

There will be some sort of regulations governing class sizes and the method for determining that; again, a matter that used to be a matter for negotiations. We don't know whether that will benefit students, but we certainly know that it is going to be achieved in a way that will make it possible for the government to save money.

Bill 160 will permit positions that are not teaching positions and duties that are not teaching duties, and it will prescribe the minimum qualifications for a designated position, for performing these duties. In other words, people who are not teachers will be taking the place of teachers in front of students and instructing students.

Taxation powers of local boards will be suspended indefinitely and the provincial government will set the rates for business and residential taxes. I guess there will be a new funding formula that hasn't been unveiled yet which will determine the total amount of money available to each board. This funding formula will be reviewed in the year 2003 and it may be changed at that point.

This government has levelled a concerted attack at public education in Ontario. The minister came to power on the basis of a commitment made by his political party in 1995 that they were in fact going to make changes in education without affecting classroom education for students. That was based on misinformation that I think they believed. I may be giving them too much when I say that, but I think they believed that 45% to 47% of school expenditures were outside the classroom, when in fact about 10% or 15% are administrative for school boards; 70% of every board's budget, or close to it, is teachers' and educational workers' salaries.

It is impossible for this government or any government to take the amount of money they are talking about out of the education system without getting rid of staff. It's just impossible.

If members of the governing party believe, as I believe some of them do, that teachers aren't really valuable and aren't important in the education system, I suppose it's okay to cut teachers, but if you believe as I do that the vast majority of people who are in the education system as teachers and instructors are there because they care about kids, they care about learning and they want to help students achieve as much as possible and to reach their individual potentials, then cutting their positions, attacking them, hurting their morale and forcing them into a position of confrontation is not good for education — but it does fit with chaos theory. It does make sense if the person who is designing the agenda and implementing that agenda believes that changes must be made and the way to make change is to ensure that there is a chaotic situation and to undermine the credibility of those who are central to delivering education to students.

We have seen the attacks on trustees and school boards by this government, and now we're seeing the attack on teachers. The government is doing everything they can to try and isolate the teachers from the parents, to try and isolate the teachers from the community, to isolate the teachers from their students and to try and divide the teachers themselves. Frankly, I think the government may have underestimated the determination of teachers to protect the quality of education in this province.

Everyone recognizes that there needs to be continual improvement in education, that education is not static, that it is something that continues to grow. There must be change in order to meet new circumstances and meet new needs for students in the society that we live in and in the community that we serve, but that kind of change must be on a continuum and it must involve the very people this government is attacking. Even the minister must recognize that if there is going to be change delivered in this province in the education system, it must be delivered by the people he is attacking. Surely that is self-defeating.

One does not improve the education system by hurting teacher morale. One does not improve education for students by forcing teachers into a confrontational position. One does not improve the quality of education for students in Ontario by continually badmouthing the very people who deliver that education, by telling people that they're not really interested in the quality of education, they're just in it for high pay and low amounts of work. That in itself demonstrates a misunderstanding of the role of the teacher, the responsibility of the teacher.

Teachers care about kids, they care about learning, and they work very hard, both in school, during the school hours, at home and in the community after school on behalf of their students. If we had a minister and a government that would recognize that and work with teachers to improve education for students, then we would be in the tradition of people like Robarts and Davis. I had lots of differences with them and their successors, but I believe they were genuinely interested in education. Now we have a government that calls itself Progressive Conservative, that only sees dollar signs when they see kids in schools and teachers in schools, and is only interested in cutting the amount of dollars going into that system. Well, the teachers won't allow it. They care enough about their students that they will not let some theorist about chaos theory destroy the very system they have worked so hard to make serve the interests of students.

Bill 160 must be changed. It must recognize the central role of teachers and education workers in the lives of our students and in the future of our communities. I call on the government to withdraw Bill 160 and start over by consulting with the people who are important in terms of delivering education for our students.

I think at this time it would be best to adjourn debate.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): It now being past 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until about half past 6.

The House adjourned at 1801.

Evening sitting reported in volume B.

ERRATUM

No.	Page	Column	Line	Should read:
236	12421	2	21	misunderstood. Dr John Aw, president of Calex Bio-
236	12421	2	24	concerns with the future of food safety. Dr Aw wrote to

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO
ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lieutenant Governor / Lieutenante-gouverneure: Hon / L'hon Hilary M. Weston
Speaker / Président: Hon / L'hon Chris Stockwell
Clerk / Greffier: Claude L. DesRosiers
Clerk Assistant / Greffière adjointe: Deborah Deller
Clerks at the Table / Greffiers parlementaires: Todd Decker, Lisa Freedman
Sergeant-at-Arms / Sergent d'armes: Dennis Clark

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Algoma	Wildman, Bud (ND)
Algoma-Manitoulin	Brown, Michael A. (L)
Beaches-Woodbine	Lankin, Frances (ND)
Brampton North / -Nord	Spina, Joseph (PC)
Brampton South / -Sud	Clement, Tony (PC)
Brant-Haldimand	Preston, Peter L. (PC)
Brantford	Johnson, Ron (PC)
Bruce	Fisher, Barbara (PC)
Burlington South / -Sud	Jackson, Hon / L'hon Cameron (PC) Minister without Portfolio (seniors issues) / ministre sans portefeuille (affaires des pernonnes âgées)
Cambridge	Martiniuk, Gerry (PC)
Carleton	Sterling, Hon / L'hon Norman W. (PC) Minister of Environment and Energy / ministre de l'Environnement et de l'Énergie
Carleton East / -Est	Morin, Gilles E. (L)
Chatham-Kent	Carroll, Jack (PC)
Cochrane North / -Nord	Wood, Len (ND)
Cochrane South / -Sud	Bisson, Gilles (ND)
Cornwall	Cleary, John C. (L)
Don Mills	Johnson, Hon / L'hon David (PC) Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, government House leader / président du Conseil de gestion, leader parlementaire du gouvernement
Dovercourt	Silipo, Tony (ND)
Downsview	Castrilli, Annamarie (L)
Dufferin-Peel	Tilson, David (PC)
Durham Centre / -Centre	Flaherty, Jim (PC)
Durham East / -Est	O'Toole, John R. (PC)
Durham West / -Ouest	Ecker, Hon / L'hon Janet (PC) Minister of Community and Social Services / ministre des Services sociaux et communautaires
Durham-York	Munro, Julia (PC)
Eglinton	Saunderson, Hon / L'hon William (PC) Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism / ministre du Développement économique, du Commerce et du Tourisme
Elgin	North, Peter (Ind)
Essex-Kent	Hoy, Pat (L)
Essex South / -Sud	Crozier, Bruce (L)
Etobicoke-Humber	Ford, Douglas B. (PC)
Etobicoke-Lakeshore	Kells, Morley (PC)
Etobicoke-Rexdale	Hastings, John (PC)
Etobicoke West / -Ouest	Stockwell, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Speaker / président
Fort William	McLeod, Lyn (L)
Fort York	Marchese, Rosario (ND)
Frontenac-Addington	Vankoughnet, Bill (PC)
Grey-Owen Sound	Murdoch, Bill (PC)
Guelph	Elliott, Brenda (PC)
Halton Centre / -Centre	Young, Terence H. (PC)
Halton North / -Nord	Chudleigh, Ted (PC)
Hamilton Centre / -Centre	Christopherson, David (ND)
Hamilton East / -Est	Agostino, Dominic (L)
Hamilton Mountain	Pettit, Trevor (PC)
Hamilton West / -Ouest	Ross, Lillian (PC)
Hastings-Peterborough	Danford, Harry (PC)
High Park-Swansea	Shea, Derwyn (PC)
Huron	Johns, Helen (PC)
Kenora	Miclash, Frank (L)
Kingston and The Islands / Kingston et Les Îles	Gerretsen, John (L)
Kitchener	Wettlaufer, Wayne (PC)
Kitchener-Wilmot	Leadston, Gary L. (PC)
Lake Nipigon / Lac-Nipigon	Pouliot, Gilles (ND)
Lambton	Beaubien, Marcel (PC)
Lanark-Renfrew	Jordan, W. Leo (PC)
Lawrence	Cordiano, Joseph (L)
Leeds-Grenville	Runciman, Hon / L'hon Robert W. (PC) Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services / solliciteur général et ministre des Services correctionnels
Lincoln	Sheehan, Frank (PC)
London Centre / -Centre	Boyd, Marion (ND)
London North / -Nord	Cunningham, Hon / L'hon Dianne (PC) Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, minister responsible for women's issues / ministre des Affaires intergouvernementales, ministre déléguée à la Condition féminine
London South / -Sud	Wood, Bob (PC)
Markham	Tsubouchi, Hon / L'hon David H. (PC) Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce
Middlesex	Smith, Bruce (PC)
Mississauga East / -Est	DeFaria, Carl (PC)
Mississauga North / -Nord	Snobelen, Hon / L'hon John (PC) Minister of Education and Training / ministère de l'Éducation et de la Formation
Mississauga South / -Sud	Marland, Margaret (PC)
Mississauga West / -Ouest	Sampson, Hon / L'hon Rob (PC) Minister without Portfolio (privatization) / ministre sans portefeuille (privatisation)
Muskoka-Georgian Bay / Muskoka-Baie-Georgienne	Grimmett, Bill (PC)
Nepean	Baird, John R. (PC)

Constituency Circonscription	Member/Party Député(e) / Parti
Niagara Falls	Maves, Bart (PC)
Niagara South / -Sud	Hudak, Tim (PC)
Nickel Belt	Laughren, Floyd (ND)
Nipissing	Harris, Hon / L'hon Michael D. (PC) Premier and President of the Executive Council / premier ministre et président du Conseil exécutif
Norfolk	Barrett, Toby (PC)
Northumberland	Galt, Doug (PC)
Oakville South / -Sud	Carr, Gary (PC)
Oakwood	Colle, Mike (L)
Oriole	Caplan, David (L)
Oshawa	Ouellette, Jerry J. (PC)
Ottawa Centre / -Centre	Patten, Richard (L)
Ottawa East / -Est	Grandmaître, Bernard (L)
Ottawa-Rideau	Guzzo, Garry J. (PC)
Ottawa South / -Sud	McGuinty, Dalton (L) Leader of the Opposition / chef de l'opposition
Ottawa West / -Ouest	Cullen, Alex (L)
Oxford	Hardeman, Ernie (PC)
Parkdale	Ruprecht, Tony (L)
Parry Sound	Eves, Hon / L'hon Ernie L. (PC) Deputy Premier, Minister of Finance / vice-premier ministre, ministre des Finances
Perth	Johnson, Bert (PC)
Peterborough	Stewart, R. Gary (PC)
Port Arthur	Gravelle, Michael (L)
Prescott and Russell / Prescott et Russell	Lalonde, Jean-Marc (L)
Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings / Prince EdwardLennox-Hastings-Sud	Fox, Gary (PC)
Quinte	Rollins, E.J. Douglas (PC)
Rainy River	Hampton, Howard (ND) Leader of the New Democratic Party / Chef du Nouveau Parti démocratique
Renfrew North / -Nord	Conway, Sean G. (L)
Riverdale	Churley, Marilyn (ND)
S-D-G & East Grenville / S-D-G et Grenville-Est	Villeneuve, Hon / L'hon Noble (PC) Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs / ministre de l'Agriculture, de l'Alimentation et des Affaires rurales, ministre délégué aux Affaires francophones
St Andrew-St Patrick	Bassett, Isabel (PC)
St Catharines	Bradley, James J. (L)
St Catharines-Brock	Froese, Tom (PC)
St George-St David	Leach, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing / ministre des Affaires municipales et du Logement
Sarnia	Boushy, Dave (PC)
Sault Ste Marie / Sault-Sainte-Marie	Martin, Tony (ND)
Scarborough-Agincourt	Phillips, Gerry (L)
Scarborough Centre / -Centre	Newman, Dan (PC)
Scarborough East / -Est	Gilchrist, Steve (PC)
Scarborough-Ellesmere	Mushinski, Hon / L'hon Marilyn (PC) Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation / ministre des Affaires civiques, de la Culture et des Loisirs
Scarborough North / -Nord	Curling, Alvin (L)
Scarborough West / -Ouest	Brown, Jim (PC)
Simcoe Centre / -Centre	Tascona, Joseph N. (PC)
Simcoe East / -Est	McLean, Allan K. (PC)
Simcoe West / -Ouest	Wilson, Hon / L'hon Jim (PC) Minister of Health / ministre de la Santé
Sudbury	Bartolucci, Rick (L)
Sudbury East / -Est	Martel, Shelley (ND)
Timiskaming	Ramsay, David (L)
Victoria-Haliburton	Hodgson, Hon / L'hon Chris (PC) Minister of Natural Resources, Minister of Northern Development and Mines / ministre des Richesses naturelles, ministre du Développement du Nord et des Mines
Waterloo North / -Nord	Witmer, Hon / L'hon Elizabeth (PC) Minister of Labour / ministre du Travail
Welland-Thorold	Kormos, Peter (ND)
Wellington	Arnott, Ted (PC)
Wentworth East / -Est	Doyle, Ed (PC)
Wentworth North / -Nord	Skarica, Toni (PC)
Willowdale	Harnick, Hon / L'hon Charles (PC) Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs / procureur général, ministre délégué aux Affaires autochtones
Wilson Heights	Kwinter, Monte (L)
Windsor-Riverside	Lessard, Wayne (ND)
Windsor-Sandwich	Pupatello, Sandra (L)
Windsor-Walkerville	Duncan, Dwight (L)
York Centre / -Centre	Palladini, Hon / L'hon Al (PC) Minister of Transportation / ministre des Transports
York East / -Est	Parker, John L. (PC)
York Mills	Turnbull, David (PC)
York-Mackenzie	Klees, Frank (PC)
Yorkview	Sergio, Mario (L)
York South / -Sud	Kennedy, Gerard (L)

A list arranged by members' surnames and including all responsibilities of each member appears in the first and last issues of each session and on the first Monday of each month.

Une liste alphabétique des noms des députés, comprenant toutes les responsabilités de chaque député, figure dans les premier et dernier numéros de chaque session et le premier lundi de chaque mois.

CONTENTS

Monday 29 September 1997

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

Hospital restructuring
Mr Hoy 12465
North Bay Days of Action
Ms Lankin 12465
Muskoka-Georgian Bay economy
Mr Grimmett 12465
Sabin Cautis
Mr Caplan 12466
Take Back the Night
Ms Churley 12466
Edna Davenport donation
Mr O'Toole 12466
People First
Mr Bradley 12466
Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Christopherson 12467
AIDS Awareness Week
Mr Baird 12467

MOTIONS

House sittings
Mr David Johnson 12467
Agreed to 12467
Private members' public business
Mr David Johnson 12468
Agreed to 12468

ORAL QUESTIONS

Teachers' collective bargaining
Mr McGuinty 12468, 12469
Mr Harris 12468
Mr Snobelen 12469, 12475
Mr Bartolucci 12475
Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Hampton 12470
Mr Harris 12470
Mrs Witmer 12470
Mr Christopherson 12470
Education financing
Mr Hampton 12471
Mr Snobelen 12471
Mr Martin 12471
Assistive devices program
Mr McGuinty 12472
Mr Harris 12472
Ipperwash Provincial Park
Mr Wildman 12472
Mr Harnick 12472
Electrical power
Mr Stewart 12473
Mr Sterling 12473
Elgin-Middlesex Detention Centre
Mr North 12473
Mr Runciman 12473
Charitable gaming
Mr Crozier 12474
Mr Tsubouchi 12474
Fire in Hamilton
Mr Christopherson 12474
Mr Sterling 12474
Toronto Transit Commission
Mr Palladini 12475
Mr Kwinter 12475
Video lottery terminals
Ms Lankin 12476
Mr Tsubouchi 12476

PETITIONS

Public service and labour relations reform
Mr Gerretsen 12476
Mr Martin 12476
Mr Beaubien 12476
Mr Bartolucci 12477
Mr Lessard 12478
Mr Martin 12479
Hospital restructuring
Mr Duncan 12477
Mrs Boyd 12477
Bear hunting
Ms Martel 12477
Education issues
Mr Danford 12477
Education reform
Mr Ruprecht 12478
Mr Cullen 12478
Soccer field
Mrs Boyd 12478
Video lottery terminals
Mr Bradley 12478

SECOND READINGS

Education Quality Improvement Act, 1997, Bill 160, Mr Snobelen
Mr Snobelen 12479
Mr Smith 12480, 12486
Mrs Johns 12482
Mr Gerretsen 12485
Mr Marchese 12485
Mr Caplan 12485
Mr Wildman 12486, 12495, 12497
Mrs McLeod 12486, 12496
Mr Grimmett 12495
Mr Crozier 12496
Mr Silipo 12496
Debate deemed adjourned 12503

OTHER BUSINESS

Notice of dissatisfaction
Mr Crozier 12479

Erratum 12503

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Lundi 29 septembre 1997

DEUXIÈME LECTURE

Loi de 1997 sur l'amélioration de la qualité de l'éducation, projet de loi 160, M. Snobelen
Débat présumé ajourné 12503

CAZON
X1
-D23

Government Publication

No. 237B

Nº 237B

ISSN 1180-2987

Legislative Assembly
of Ontario

First Session, 36th Parliament

Assemblée législative
de l'Ontario

Première session, 36e législature

Official Report of Debates (Hansard)

Journal des débats (Hansard)

Monday 29 September 1997

Lundi 29 septembre 1997

OCT 1 1997

Speaker
Honourable Chris Stockwell

Clerk
Claude L. DesRosiers

Président
L'honorable Chris Stockwell

Greffier
Claude L. DesRosiers

Hansard on the Internet

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. Our address is:

Le Journal des débats sur Internet

Notre adresse pour faire paraître sur votre ordinateur personnel le Journal et d'autres documents de l'Assemblée législative en quelques heures seulement après la séance :

http://www.ontla.on.ca/hansard/hansard.htm

Index inquiries

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at 416-325-7410 or 325-3708.

Renseignements sur l'Index

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au 416-325-7410 ou 325-3708.

Copies of Hansard

Information regarding purchase of copies of Hansard may be obtained from Publications Ontario, Management Board Secretariat, 50 Grosvenor Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone 416-326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1-800-668-9938.

Exemplaires du Journal

Pour des exemplaires, veuillez prendre contact avec Publications Ontario, Secrétariat du Conseil de gestion, 50 rue Grosvenor, Toronto (Ontario) M7A 1N8. Par téléphone : 416-326-5310, 326-5311, ou sans frais : 1-800-668-9938.

Hansard Reporting Service
3330 Whitney Block, 99 Wellesley St W
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Telephone 416-325-7400; fax 416-325-7430
Published by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario

Service du Journal des débats
3330 Édifice Whitney ; 99, rue Wellesley ouest
Toronto ON M7A 1A2
Téléphone, 416-325-7400 ; télécopieur, 416-325-7430
Publié par l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday 29 September 1997

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lundi 29 septembre 1997

The House met at 1830.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FAIR MUNICIPAL FINANCE ACT, 1997 (No. 2)

LOI DE 1997 SUR LE FINANCEMENT ÉQUITABLE DES MUNICIPALITÉS (Nº 2)

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 149, An Act to continue the reforms begun by the Fair Municipal Finance Act, 1997 and to make other amendments respecting the financing of local governments / Projet de loi 149, Loi continuant les réformes amorcées par la Loi de 1997 sur le financement équitable des municipalités et apportant d'autres modifications relativement au financement des administrations locales.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We don't seem to have a quorum. As a matter of fact, we seem to have less than 10 members in the House right now.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Would you check if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I believe it was the NDP last time, so I recognize the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay.

Mr Bill Grimmett (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): I'm pleased to continue second reading debate on Bill 149. Assessment is the main issue in the act, and the members will recall that in Bill 106 our government brought about reforms to the assessment system to try and address the kind of confusion that was present in Ontario's assessment system. I can certainly recall from my background as a small-town solicitor that the assessment system had many problems in it that had been gathering up over years and years of development.

There were systems in Ontario that were widely different from one another. I know in the area where I practised in Muskoka, they adopted a much more up-to-date market value system than was present in some parts of the province. Of course there are lots of stories out there about the system that existed in Metro Toronto where many of the assessment records indicated values that dated back to 1949. This was often referred to as a patchwork quilt of assessment systems in Ontario. You had very up-to-date systems that were based on market value, some of them updated as frequently as every two, three or four years.

What we tried to do in Bill 106 was address the concerns in Ontario with the assessment problems and the fact that assessment throughout the province was very dissimilar from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. Some municipalities used it to advantage to attract commercial and industrial investment and some municipalities used it to attract residential development. It was not a level playing field and we, as a government, felt it was important to try and level out the playing field, try and bring about a process whereby all jurisdictions in Ontario had the same assessment system. We adopted an assessment system in Bill 106 where we would have universal assessment values all across Ontario based on 1996 values.

The provisions set out in Bill 106 referred to an update that's done on a regular basis using rolling averages. As well, we addressed the concern of the business community and of municipalities with the business occupancy tax. I know from having dealt with several municipalities as a solicitor and, in some cases, providing advice to commercial clients or real estate purchasers that the business occupancy tax was a problem for municipalities. It was a problem for municipalities because they had difficulty enforcing it against tenants of properties who chose to leave the jurisdiction. It was not enforceable against the owner of the property and so what we brought in in Bill 106 was a more flexible system, a system whereby the municipality will have more opportunities to collect what would replace the business occupancy tax.

We also said in Bill 106 that we would set tax rates for six standard property classes: residential and farm, commercial, farm lands and managed forests, multiresidential, industrial and pipelines.

Bill 149 is a follow-up to Bill 106. It contains amendments around Bill 106 and around the statutes that Bill 106 affected. In many ways I think it's a demonstration of our government's commitment to consultation, to listening to people who have concerns, and it demonstrates our willingness to fine-tune the changes that we bring about to legislation.

The comments that we received from small business indicated that they felt that there should be provision in the assessment rules in Ontario to allow municipalities to be flexible in dealing with businesses, to make sure that if a municipality felt it was fair, they could set up a tiered tax rate system, so that if you're in a lower-valued commercial property and you're a small business, you could be treated according to your circumstances by the municipalities.

Under Bill 149, small businesses will benefit because they will now have the opportunity to be part of a system with up to three bands of assessment. I can see in my own riding how there would be an opportunity for municipalities to tailor their assessment system so that they can direct it at encouraging small business to continue to stay in the downtown areas in municipalities, something that's a great concern to a lot of small towns. They don't want the residential or the retail flavour of the downtown area to change; they want to maintain it. They don't want everyone to flock from the downtown area out to the malls. I think this provides a tool to municipalities where they may be able to address the issues of concern for downtown merchants in small towns.

1840

Bill 149 also provides that properties can be taxed at a lower rate when there's an absence of business activity. What we are doing with our proposed amendment is that we would inscribe the rate reduction in the legislation rather than in regulation. This is something that was suggested to us and we're acting on it. That's why it's in Bill 149. It's a fine-tuning of the broad brush strokes that were in Bill 106.

What we're proposing in Bill 149 is that if a full commercial-type property is not being occupied or fully operational, the municipality could provide a rate reduction of up to 30% on the assessment for that property, and if it's industrial property, the reduction could be as much as 35%. Again, we're addressing the concerns raised by the commercial and industrial community with respect to the assessment reforms we want to bring in, and Bill 149 provides the municipalities with the tools so they can deal with the concerns raised by industrial and commercial ratepayers in their municipalities.

Bill 149 also provides some flexibility for municipalities when they're dealing with charities. We wanted to be sure that municipalities had the necessary flexibility and we wanted to recognize the great benefits that charities can bring to municipalities and other communities. In Bill 149 charitable organizations can receive a tax rebate from the municipality of up to 40% of their total property tax on space they occupy in commercial or industrial properties.

To help the municipalities administer this program, we're proposing an amendment that would define charities that are eligible with reference to the federal Income Tax Act. We want to keep it simple. That's the general way that charities are identified in Canada. That's the way for municipalities to define how that special category of rebate would apply.

Of course, we're concerned about farm lands and we're proposing that there be three tax rate ranges for different stages of development in farm lands. We want to provide an incentive to farmers to continue farming and also to recognize that while they are awaiting development they should not be harmed by the assessment system.

Mr Gerretsen: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I know what the member says is extremely important and there should at least be a quorum in the House to listen to him. I don't believe there is a quorum right now.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you please check if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay.

Mr Grimmett: As I was saying, farm lands are being recognized in Bill 149 as requiring special attention. Of course, our government is very concerned about the interests of farmers in Ontario and we've responded to the concerns that they raised with respect to our new assessment regime. We suggest in Bill 149 that there could be three tax rate ranges for the different stages of development in farm lands. The bill provides an incentive to continue farming on those lands that are awaiting development rather than penalizing farmers who are considering development and we would maintain a tax reduction for those properties until the development actually occurs.

In regard to theatres, the theatre industry, the theatre community spoke to our government. They raised concerns. They wanted to have a level playing field. Bill 149 proposes that competing, publicly owned theatres in Metro make payments in lieu of taxes at the same rate when they're used for staged, for-profit productions, and all smaller private theatres in Ontario with fewer than 1,000 seats would receive the same property tax exemptions afforded to their publicly owned counterparts. I know that's going to be an item of great interest in my riding where the summer theatres are a very important part of the culture. I'm sure they will benefit a great deal from this special recognition contained in Bill 149 for smaller, private theatres.

Bill 149 also contains relief for seniors and it contains some clarification of the issue of how seniors are going to be dealt with under a new assessment regime. I've recently met with constituents who had considerable concerns about how they were going to continue to deal with their property taxes in their retirement while they're on fixed incomes.

Bill 106 requires municipalities to provide a program of relief for low-income property owners who are seniors or who have disabilities. It also allows municipalities to phase in municipal tax exchanges resulting from that reassessment over a period of up to eight years. Bill 149 extends this tax relief to the education portion of the property taxes.

Again, our government is working to make property assessment and taxation consistent and understandable. We're trying to increase the accountability. We know that Ontario and Ontario's small business is the engine that drives the Canadian economy and there are special recognitions of small business contained in Bill 149.

We are also addressing the special area of concern around rights of way. Again, it's a hodgepodge, where the commercial entities that own rights of way are dealt with by municipalities in a variety of ways. We want to make sure they are all dealt with in a similar fashion.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): Tax them to the hilt.

Mr Grimmett: I know the NDP would love to tax them to death. We don't think that's fair. Everybody deserves tax fairness in Ontario, even the people who own rights of way. Bill 149 sets out some great rules to clarify how we're doing to deal with rights of way. We're going to break up the province into regions and we're going to make sure that those commercial entities that have rights of way are dealt with fairly. We don't want to drive them out of the province because of assessment reform.

Mr Bisson: On a point of order, Speaker: I would point out that yet again the government doesn't seem to be able to hold a quorum in the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Please check if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay.

Mr Grimmett: I'll conclude my remarks now.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr David Caplan (Oriole): It's very interesting to listen to the member's presentation on this bill on property reassessment, particularly given that every municipal official, every mayor in Ontario is saying they just don't believe this government when it comes to their downloading proposals.

It says that there's going to become accountability in the property tax system, yet the role of the Ontario Municipal Board is going to be eliminated. This is a very serious matter and requires serious attention to fix some inequities in the property tax system, yet the provincial government will not share any numbers. There are only three months left in this calendar year. Businesses need the time, they need some knowledge about how they can plan one of their very important expenditures and, unfortunately, the government refuses to provide any kind of numbers or provide any kind of planning data so that a business can know what its expenditures are going to be.

We have not seen the tax rates that are set by the minister and in fact the government has not even done any impact studies. They haven't even asked for that information to be provided for what the impact of this bill is. I would say it's pretty fundamental in any piece of public policy to know what the effect is going to be of any piece of legislation, and that just hasn't happened here. There has not been enough thought and enough planning that has gone into this document. They've refused to provide the numbers, and it's unconscionable that a piece of legislation as important as this would proceed without that kind of information.

1850

Mr Bisson: This bill in so many words is MVA. This is the bill with which the Harris government is going to impose market value assessment on cities — basically in the city of Toronto — something they said they wouldn't do when they were in opposition. I remember, Mr Speaker, because I was a member of the government, as you were a member of the official opposition during 1990 to 1995 when the then government, the Bob Rae government, looked at imposing market value assessment on the city of Toronto. There was huge opposition on the part of the opposition parties of this assembly, as well as the municipal councils of Toronto and others, who said: "Stop MVA. This is not something we want imposed by the province." I remember at the time the then third party had a very different position from the one they have now.

The other point I make to the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay is that he talks about how this bill, in his words, "will make sure that everybody is treated the same." Somehow or other that's supposed to mean that people who have rights of way, like rail companies and others across Ontario, will be taxed the same and that somehow will save them and consumers or taxpayers money.

The reality is that there are a number of companies that are charged differently when it comes to rights of way for very real reasons when it comes to historical perspective. If you take a look at the issue of CN and CP in the city of Toronto and how municipal taxes have been applied, it dates back some years and it was utilized at the time as an ability to attract investment into the city of Toronto. For the member opposite to somehow suggest that introducing this will make sure that everybody is treated the same and that therefore equals lower taxes — excuse me. In the end it will mean that a lot of people who own rights of way will see their taxes go up, not down.

When this government purports this to be a decrease in taxes, I think they've got to be clear. For a number of people in Ontario it will mean they'll pay more property taxes, and people who have rights of way, like rail companies and others, will see their taxes actually go up, depending on the community. So much for tax fighters.

Mr Gerretsen: I think the point the member for Cochrane South made was an excellent one in that this is MVA. This is market value assessment. We all remember what the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing ran on during the last election campaign. He handed out posters — I was looking for one here and I know you wouldn't want me to use it anyway — that said basically the Mike Harris government would never introduce market value assessment, and we've seen it now.

People change their minds from time to time, but what this government doesn't do is at least acknowledge to the people, "Yes, we are implementing market value assessment, and yes, what the minister said during the election campaign, and the other minister" — I believe it was the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism — "when they said they were against market value assessment and the Mike Harris government would never introduce that, they were wrong." Then at least they would have some credibility with the people out there.

But to somehow disguise it under another smokescreen is — I can't say the word —not quite truthful; it is not quite the same. I think you can draw your own conclusion. When you run on a platform and hand out a piece of propaganda during an election campaign saying, "The Mike Harris government will never introduce market value assessment," and then come in with a bill that introduces market value assessment, I think the people of Ontario can make up their own minds as to whether or not those two particular members have remained truthful to their election campaign.

That's what this is all about. I will continue in a few minutes in the same vein.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): This is another of those bills presented in this place by this government that's fraught with pitholes and traps first of all to try to convince people, on one hand, that it's wonderful, it's evolutionary, it's changing in a direction that's progressive, but on the other hand, when you get into it and you begin to see the detail and understand what it's about, it's fraught with traps that will ultimately end up costing us all more, particularly property taxpayers in province, and that's unfortunate.

It's one of these Trojan horse bills. They bring in the Trojan horse and it looks very nice. Everybody is impressed and bowing down and saying, "Wow, isn't this wonderful?" But only a short time later when you open the door and the enemy comes jumping out and begins to slaughter all around, you find that it is too late. That's what this government is about. But any of you who have been back home in your constituency, who have been reading the papers, know that the people are beginning to realize what you're doing and they're going to be calling you to task.

Just as my colleague from Kingston said a few minutes ago, I think it's important to note that this bill is a complete flip-flop from the position taken by this government in the election campaign. Here's a government that prides itself in keeping its promise, and yet in a pamphlet put out by the minister himself, Mr Leach, during the campaign he says, "My party and I will never" — and he underlines "never" —

Mr Gerretsen: Oh, you have it.

Mr Martin: I have it. "My party and I will never support the imposition of market value assessment in Metro Toronto."

So what do we do? We change it from "market value assessment" to "actual value assessment." How stupid do you really think the people out there are?

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay, you have two minutes.

Mr Grimmett: I'd like to thank the members for Oriole, Kingston and The Islands, Sault Ste Marie and Cochrane South for their very insightful comments.

Just as we listened to the comments from stakeholders in the community when we came in with Bill 106, I've been listening to the comments of my colleagues on Bill 149. It's very likely that they have read Bill 149 in detail, but I would urge them to read it again in detail. I think if the member for Kingston and The Islands and the member for Sault Ste Marie read it in detail, they will recognize the distinctions between "actual value assessment" and "market value assessment."

The difference is quite clear. We're updating the values based on actual sales of properties and we're using rolling averages. It's a very accurate system. It's quite different from a market value system.

It's also important that when they're looking in there, they'll find in the bill that we're providing the kind of relief that a lot of stakeholders who talked to us about Bill 106 were looking for. One of the areas of relief was with respect to these major rights of way that we find in Ontario, and the commercial operators who own those rights of way were very concerned that they be treated fairly. One of the great marks of Bill 149 is the way we deal fairly not only with small businesses, farmers and municipalities, but also with the owners of rights of way. They know this is a government they can come to, no matter how big they are, no matter how big a corporation they are, and they're going to be dealt with fairly. We're also dealing with farmers and developers in this bill, but when we deal with the rights of way, we deal very fairly with those people.

When my colleagues look very closely at Bill 149, the difference between actual value assessment way over here and market value assessment way over here will become clear to them.

Mr Bisson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to ask for unanimous consent to allow the member from Muskoka two minutes to explain the difference between AVA and MVA.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? No. Further debate.

Mr Gerretsen: That's very interesting, what just happened in the House. Here the opposition agreed to let a government member explain the difference between actual value assessment and market value assessment and then government members themselves denied that member the opportunity. It surely has to be a first in the House that government members don't want one of their own colleagues to get up and explain something to the people of Ontario that he thinks is very easy to explain. But I can't see it, because whether you're talking about the actual value of something or the market value of something, you're talking about exactly the same thing. All I can tell you is that we had two ministers who campaigned on a promise not to implement market value assessment and they've brought it in with this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Kingston and The Islands has the floor.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: He has the floor, so please stop interfering.

Mr Gerretsen: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

I headed a municipality that actually went through one of these reassessments in 1982 and I can tell you from that experience that the people of Ontario don't know what's going to hit them until this is actually implemented. The fatal mistake we made in 1982 when we implemented it was that we relied on government figures and statistics as to what it was actually going to do to property values.

1900

We at that time as a council, believing that the province would at least give us the right figures, relied totally on that, and we were told by a Davis Conservative government in those days, and the people who worked for them, that the differences will be no more than 10%, 20% at most on the vast majority of properties, over 90% to 95%. Then we saw the result after it was actually implemented, and I can tell you that people got a heck of a shock, because the studies that were produced prior to the implementation and what actually happened after implementation, whether it was actual value or market value, were totally different. In some cases the values and the taxes on properties went up by 80% to 90% and in some cases they went down by 20% or 30%. I can well understand this government's hesitancy to produce its figures now, because it wasn't just the experience in Kingston and The Islands that they had in 1982. There were many other similar experiences that they went through and that subsequent governments have gone through where market value has been implemented.

The reason they don't want to show the people the accurate studies is because of the tremendous impact it's going to have on what people are actually going to pay in taxes. You can minimize it — I don't care what you do right now — but a year from now you'll agree with me whether you like it or not. It's going to have a much greater significance in each one of your communities, what people are going to be paying in property taxes. It's a no-win situation, because the people whose taxes are going up are going to say, "Yeah, you're an all right sort of fellow but you're the guy who raised my taxes," and you, the government members, will have to account for all that. If somebody's taxes go down, you know what they'll tell you: "I always told you I paid too much. It's about time something was done about it."

I think the only way you can get into it on a province-wide basis is by telling people what the effects will be before you implement it. Let's just wait and see, but I can almost guarantee you that you'll live to regret it, because this is going to affect the people of Ontario perhaps even more than the downloading bill. The downloading bill is going to affect people overall by about a 10% or 15% tax increase, but this is going to affect individual property owners, and in some cases they'll go up 100% and in some cases they may go down 60% or 70%. It's going to happen. It didn't just happen in my community; it happened in other communities that implemented it as well. That's one thing I wanted to say.

Release your impact studies. The ministry has those studies. The minister knows what the numbers are. He knows how it's going to affect property values in Ontario, and I dare say that's probably one of the reasons the business occupancy tax has been done away with. They have discovered that if they had that in place as well, some commercial properties would just skyrocket in the amount of tax they would have to pay. There's a connection there, I can assure you.

The other aspect of it deals with the seniors' tax relief. In other words, there is an implicit understanding there that the taxes on a lot of homes that are occupied by seniors will increase; why else give a provision whereby some of the increased taxes on houses that senior citizens live in can be delayed? I don't know about you, but most of the seniors I know, the vast majority of whom own their houses, pride themselves in the fact they can still stay in their own houses and look after themselves and pride themselves in the fact that they don't have any debts at all. They're usually the first ones to go down to city halls and town halls to pay the taxes whenever the tax bill comes out. They don't owe any credit card debts. They don't owe any mortgages on their houses any more. They're debt-free and they feel good about it.

We're now saying to these people, "If you can't afford the property tax increases, we can somehow have it be a charge against a house that we can collect from you after you're gone or if you sell the house." I know of no senior citizen who would like a debt against their house of let's say $1,000 just building up year after year. People feel very uncomfortable about it. These are the people, you may recall, who went through the Depression and saw the tremendous effects the Depression had on their own lives. They don't want to owe anybody anything and they certainly don't want to owe any money to the city hall or the town hall, particularly when most of them have a notion that if you don't pay your taxes for three years, the city can come along and sell your house for back taxes etc. They're the first ones to pay up every year and they're proud that they don't owe anybody anything.

Now as a sop the government is saying, "We noted in most cases that your taxes are going up, but you don't have to pay it now; we'll just put it as a charge against your house and you can pay us 10 or 15 years from now when you leave," but of course it's a building fund. If it's going to be $1,000 one year, the year after that it may be $1,100 and then $1,200, and before you know it, it may be a total of $20,000, $25,000, $30,000. Most seniors I know don't want this relief. They just want to be left alone. They just want to live out the last days of their lives in a very useful and contented manner knowing that they don't owe anybody any money.

That's just a pure fallacy. It's something that has been created to say, "We can deal with you in this way by setting up this senior tax relief." They don't want it. Why don't you produce the figures so they can make up their own minds as to whether they think it's a good deal? I can assure you that the vast majority does not think it's a good deal.

The other interesting one — it affects particularly a municipality like my own — is the way this act deals with tax-exempt properties. In my community we did some studies a number of years ago, and I think about a third of all the properties are tax-exempt. That means they are federal or provincial government buildings, educational institutions, hospitals, in my case penitentiaries, and a number of other quasi-government buildings where the government basically doesn't pay any taxes. They don't pay taxes based on the actual value of that property or the market value of that property, and usually the grants that have traditionally been given, in lieu of those taxes, to those municipalities that have a lot of those tax-exempt properties are about half of what the taxes would be on that particular property. It's never a done deal, there are always negotiations going on, and every now and then the amount is raised, but it's not an automatic thing that you have with, for example, ordinary property taxation where a council sets a mill rate, applies it to the value of a property and determines how much tax that property has to pay. It's always a case where the municipality has to wait around and see how much the federal government and the provincial government in their good graces say they're going to get in grants in lieu of taxes that year.

This is a perfect opportunity for the government to do something about it. In our community we have argued this point for at least 30 years. Why don't they just pay the normal tax or even three quarters of the normal tax or half the normal tax? At least make it in such a way that the treasurers and the CAOs of those kinds of municipalities can determine that yes, that's what the amount of money is going to be.

1910

I can tell you, not only didn't they fix that problem, they made it a lot worse, because now it is no longer $75 a bed as it was with respect to hospitals and university students etc. Now it's something that can be done by way of ministerial regulation. The exact words are, "The Minister of Finance may make regulations governing what the distribution of the money on tax-exempt properties will be." In other words, it has been made even more nebulous than it is right now.

Interjection.

Mr Gerretsen: That's what it is right now, sir. Right now, it's $75 a bed, which was —

Interjection.

Mr Gerretsen: Just a minute now. That's the way it is right now. You are going to do it by way of regulation so that it could be one amount one year and, if a government feels magnanimous, it may make it more the next year and that sort of thing. There's absolutely no certainty there at all, so it's hurting municipalities that have a lot of tax-exempt properties.

The other thing that I found very interesting in what the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay said is that another reason why we have Bill 149 here is that we're fixing some things that we did wrong in Bill 106. Bill 106 was passed less than, what, three, four, five, six months ago? We're already starting to fix things now? Why don't we give these matters sufficient thought in the first place so that we don't have to do these kind of fixings?

But of course we've seen it with the megacity 2 bill. That came two or three months after the megacity 1 bill. We've seen it with so many different acts. Why are we sitting late at night on an ongoing basis? Because we're fixing legislation that was approved in one form or another three, four, five, six months ago. What that really speaks to is that this government doesn't know what it's doing. It's got some broad ideas as to what it wants to implement, and then it goes around the province or in this House saying, "That's not really what we want to do."

Take the education bill, for example. They've already taken over $500 million out of the education system. This new bill that was talked about this afternoon is going to take another $1 billion out. Rather than them honestly saying, "That's what it's all about. We think that too much money is being expended for the public good in this province and that's why we're taking money out," all we're getting is stonewalling. "Oh no, that's not why we're doing it." The reason all the teachers and all the teachers' unions are upset has got nothing to do with Bill 160. It was such a good thing for everyone. You know why? Why are the teachers, who are on a day-to-day basis involved with our students, so against it?

The other thing people have to understand is that this is all part of a scheme to download as much responsibility on municipalities with total disregard as to whether municipalities can actually afford the downloading that's being done to them. That's really what it's all about. We already have about a $670-million download that has been — don't take my figures for it. Take the figures from all of the various mayors who have written in or all the various CAOs and all the various organizations like AMO. What do they tell you? They all tell you that you've dumped $650 million worth of services on them.

I know what the municipal councils will do after they get elected in November. They don't want to go to the people with a 10% or 20% tax increase. They know they're going to get a lot less money and they're going to have to take on a lot more services than was the case previously and they will try to whittle it down, because they've got a choice. They can either keep the service level at the same level, in which case you're probably looking at about a 10% or 15%, on the average, property tax increase in the province, or they can reduce some of those services. They will probably reduce some of those services and, of course, that's basically what you want them to do.

Why don't you just come straight up front and tell people that? Tell the people of Ontario they've got too many municipal services, that you don't think that the average taxpayer should pay for those services to the extent that they are and that's why you want to make changes, that's why you want to decrease the service levels in Ontario. But don't stonewall it by saying — what does the Premier always say? He always says, "It's revenue-neutral." Yet everybody in the province that actually deals with these figures says it isn't so.

Now we're all waiting for October 6, because the province has finally decided that it is now going to reveal the figures, at least that's what we thought until a couple of days ago. A couple of days ago we found out in a letter that was written to Hazel McCallion, mayor of Mississauga, an individual I had many pleasant dealings with when I was involved with AMO for a number of years — she gets a letter from the minister which in effect says it may not be October 6. Hazel, being the good mayor she is, says it may be after the municipal election on November 10.

The minister for privatization knows about it and so do some of the other cabinet ministers. The deal is in. They've talked about it in the cabinet room and they've said, "Look, we're not going to tell the municipalities anything until the election is over and then everybody will be happy because they can't do anything about it, and if they're not happy, too bad for them." That's exactly what is happening.

If the province disagrees with the figures that have been presented by the municipalities with respect to the $665 million worth of downloading, why don't they produce the figures? The minister said at a committee in this Legislative Building a couple of weeks ago that he would have them on October 6, and now apparently he's not going to have them on October 6. I hope to be proven wrong on that. I hope he will come on October 6 with his figures to each municipality and say, "This is what you can rely on for your funding next year." I think we owe it to the municipal councillors, we owe it to the councils, but even more so, we owe it to the taxpayers out there. They've got a right to know whether all the different changes in funding responsibilities are going to cost them more on the property tax base.

When you add up the effects of all the downloading legislation, when you add up the effect of Bill 149 that is going to implement market value assessment even though the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing said that he was going to be dead set against it and Mike Harris was not going to do that, when you put the effects of all those bills together, all I can say is the municipalities and the local taxpayers are going to be in for one heck of a shock come next year. I think that the people of Ontario can expect better than that from their government.

Mr Michael Gravelle (Port Arthur): Demand it.

Mr Gerretsen: And we should demand it. I think what the government would be very wise to do is to withdraw this bill and give the people of Ontario the figures as to how it will affect them.

1920

Mr Martin: I want to congratulate the member for Kingston and The Islands for a speech well given. He obviously comes from a background in municipal politics where he knows whence he comes.

I think it would behoove all of us in this place, when we listen to presentations made, to consider for a second where they are coming from. You get members like the member for Kingston and The Islands, who obviously has been around politics a long time at a very grass-roots level, a level that the members of the Conservative Party speak as if they come from, but I note in going through the biography of a number of the elected members from across the way that they don't have much experience in municipal politics. I would suggest that the member for Kingston and The Islands probably has as much experience under his belt as any half dozen of you over there put together.

I suggest that you listen to the member when he tells you that what's happened so far by way of the agenda of this government has not in any way been in keeping with the traditional relationship between province and municipality. It has been all one way; it has been take and no give. The bill that he was speaking to is going to do exactly that. It's going to maintain the track record. It's going to maintain the consistency in approach. In fact, as he said in his speech, we will find in the end that as the Minister for Municipal Affairs said in one of his campaign pamphlets, "My party and I will never support the imposition of MVA in Metro Toronto." He knew why he wasn't going to support the imposition of MVA, yet he's doing it now under the guise of AVA and that won't sell, that won't wash.

Mr Grimmett: I'm pleased to make some comments on the speech given by the member for Kingston and The Islands. I'm always interested in his comments as they relate to municipalities because, as the member for Sault Ste Marie said, the member for Kingston and The Islands has a wealth of municipal experience. I just want to clarify one point that he raised. Our government has never suggested that we are fixing Bill 106. What we're doing is completing the picture. Bill 106 and Bill 149 together form the basis of some serious and substantial reforms of the assessment system that are long overdue in Ontario.

I found it rather curious that the advice given by the member for Kingston and The Islands was rather typical of people who come from his party. You should be doing the things that are safe. Assessment reform is not safe. You're not going to satisfy the people whose taxes might go up by assessment changes because they'll criticize you for their taxes going up, and if people's taxes go down as a result of these assessment reforms, they'll just say, "They were too high anyway."

That is not the view of our government. Our government views assessment reform as something that's long overdue. It's a matter of equity. It's a matter of trying to make the situation fair, not only for all residential taxpayers but also the relationship between different classes of commercial and industrial taxpayers and how they relate to residential taxpayers.

Mr Gerretsen: Read the bill.

Mr Grimmett: The member wants me to read the bill, and I haven't suggested that he hasn't read the bill, but many of the comments that were made by the member give me the impression that he wants to talk about downloading. He doesn't want to talk about the bill itself, Bill 149. But again, the whole situation with the Who Does What process indicates he doesn't think we should be taking it on because there's risk involved. But we're interested in trying to restore fairness in Ontario in the relationship between the province and the municipalities.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): I too have appreciated the comments of my colleague from Kingston and The Islands, who quite clearly has a great deal of municipal experience to bring to some of the scepticism which he has indicated tonight about a government that will not show the numbers to back up their claims that their downloading and offloading are actually going to result in no tax increase at all.

I believe the member for Kingston and The Islands is quite right to be sceptical, and I think if I'm correct in having listened to his comments, he has not had an opportunity to think about the impact of the uniform mill rate assessment for educational tax purposes. This is another area in which we have asked the Ministry of Education to show us their numbers and they will not produce any numbers to show the effect on different communities across the province of having a uniform mill rate for educational purposes in every community.

Quite clearly, when you add that in with the downloading that's being done to compensate for the fact that the government is picking up 50% of the residential taxation for education, we're going to see communities that have significant increases in their residential mill rates overall.

We don't of course know what's going to happen on the commercial side when the government starts taxing directly for education because the government doesn't even know how it's going to do that. So I guess we can't ask them to show us the numbers there since they don't have any proposal for actually levying the taxes.

It's all very ironical because of course the government's original intention with their so-called property tax reform was purely political. Once again, it has nothing to do with real reform. It had to do with a government that wanted to be able to take over educational funding in order to take $1 billion out of education. That's where it all started.

Mega-week of downloading starting with the announcement that they were going to take education off the property tax so that they could control the funding of education. They found they couldn't do that. They had to retreat. They're going to tax education directly on the property and our taxes are undoubtedly going to go up overall as a result.

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): It's a pleasure to speak to the discussion that we had here from the member for Kingston and The Islands. It would really do the government well to listen to someone who has worked at the municipal level as a council member in his city, has worked with the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and of course has served as mayor of that city, because he has experience that is valuable.

What we see again and again is this government not listening to the experience of those who have been at the level of government that is being affected. We find that this government rushes into things, makes mistakes, and has to then bring forward additional bills to correct those mistakes. The member was quite right to talk about the incompetence that this government is displaying in it whole legislative program, but nowhere more particularly I think than in this whole business of the download of responsibilities and the way in which it is affecting the ability of municipalities to maintain their ability to provide services, their ability to maintain taxes at a decent level in their communities and their ability indeed to just cope with the huge influx of change that they're expected to manage in a very short period of time.

I think it would be very, very wise of the government to listen to the advice of the member for Kingston and The Islands when he tells the members of the government party that the people in his municipality, in his constituency and all across the province are not convinced that this government knows what it's doing.

Mr Gerretsen: I'd like to thank the members for Sault Ste Marie, Fort William, London Centre and Muskoka-Georgian Bay for making those comments.

Yes, I believe in equity and fairness, and the first principle of equity and fairness is that when you lay something before people, they know what the effects of that are going to be. But to do something in the abstract and hope that somehow it'll wash somewhere down the road is a totally unfair way of bringing principles and proposals forward.

Second, your comment that somehow it will bring a greater equity between residential and commercial and industrial taxpayers indicates to me that you don't know what's in the bill. The bill allows for different classes of residential properties which don't exist right now. It allows for five or six different classes of commercial and industrial properties and all of them are not related one to another, because in each one of those cases different rates of taxation can be applied, so that a municipality, if it wanted to, could almost totally ignore the market value of commercial properties vis-à-vis residential properties by applying totally different rates to them. Read the bill. I can tell you, some of your own officials were somewhat surprised by the fact that so many different classes had now been opened up, which wasn't the case before.

The point still is that the people of Ontario don't really know what you're doing in this respect because you haven't provided them with the figures that you have in hand to indicate to the average person in Ontario how this act is going to affect them on a day-to-day basis as far as their own property taxation is concerned. That's where you've failed totally.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate? The member for Cochrane South.

Mr Bisson: Merci, Monsieur le Président, pour avoir la chance de participer encore dans ce débat.

I've got to say — I cannot resist that this government yet again I think is demonstrating by this bill that they really have a hard time trying to get things right. They came to this House less than a year ago with Bill 106. It was supposed to fix a whole bunch of problems, as they said, around the whole issue of assessment and a number of other issues. Apparently they got it right.

I remember back then the Mike Harris government knew everything. Everybody else was wrong. It was the fault of everybody else that there was any problems in Ontario. If there were problems, it was the NDP. If it wasn't the NDP, it was the former Liberal government, and if it wasn't the NDP and the Liberals, then it was the fault of that bad old Bill Davis. Everybody else was wrong.

1930

Then they come into this House now in the fall and are dealing with Bill 149, which is — whoops — a way to fix Bill 106. Yet again you guys have demonstrated that you move too fast, you don't think through what you're about to do, you don't look at how things fit together — and that's something that I think this government needs to do a little bit more of — and quite frankly you don't take the time to get things right.

I'm amazed that a government that has such a busy agenda would really not be a little bit more ashamed of having to come into this House yet again with about the third or fourth bill where they have had to come back and fix mistakes they have made in bills they have passed before.

We just saw it when they passed the megacity bill. The government made mistakes in megacity. The New Democrats told them they made mistakes, the Liberal opposition told them they made mistakes, the people of the cities of Toronto, Scarborough, Etobicoke and all the other ones affected said they made mistakes. The people told them they made mistakes. "Oh, no. We know better. We're going to do what has to be done because we're the Mike Harris government. We've got it right. We're smart. Everybody else doesn't know what they're talking about." Whoops, they slipped up again. They messed up the megacity and they had to come back with another bill to fix some of the problems on the megacity.

Again, we see it in Bill 149. It's another one of the "whoops" bills that they're bringing into this Legislature because they don't take time to do it right.

Today my colleague the member for Hamilton Centre asked a question of the Minister of Labour around Bill 136, that huge bill with which they wanted to take away a whole bunch of bargaining rights from municipal employees and people who work for the MUSH sector within government. The government is rushing through on 150 pages of amendments. They want to get that done in lickety-split time. I saw in amazement the minister stand up today and say: "Oh, no, opposition, you guys shouldn't worry about the details. Just trust us, because this is going to work. You guys just worry too much about details."

This assembly, the process of legislation passing through it and the way we deal with bills in committee is all about detail. It's about making sure we get things right. We have to remember that in this assembly there is a role for the government to pass legislation and to govern on behalf of the people of Ontario, and we in the opposition are here to criticize when the government does something bad and to try to make amendments to legislation to make it work for the people of Ontario.

But there's a problem with the equation. The government thinks only they are right, everybody else is wrong, and if there are problems in the world, it's everybody else but them. It doesn't have to be that way. We can't return to a time in this province when this assembly worked in a way that both the opposition parties and the government of the day, under Bob Rae or David Peterson or Mr Davis or Mr Grossman, when opposition parties and government worked together to a certain degree to try to make bills right. I remember sitting on the government side on a number of bills that we passed, and I had responsibility as parliamentary assistant or as a committee member, when opposition members used to come forward and say, "Listen, you guys have messed up there, there's a problem," and you know what? We used to fix some of those problems.

But the only time this government moves is when there is huge political opposition to it, such as they had with Bill 136, when they feel that the polls tell them, those rolling polls that they call every night, that they can't survive the fight, and then they hurry back to do a bunch of amendments on their legislation, as they did with Bill 136. That ain't good enough. That's not how government is supposed to be run. Government is supposed to be run by a bunch of people who take the time to get things right, and yet again, this government has got things wrong. If I were the House leader for the government, I would be somewhat embarrassed to come into this assembly with yet another one of those "whoops" bills.

Let's take a look at what they're doing here. The other part of this bill, other than fixing up the mistakes that are in Bill 106, is supposedly creating something new. What do they call it again? Is it "current value assessment" or "actual value assessment"?

Mr Martin: It doesn't matter.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. The member for Sault Ste Marie makes the point, "It doesn't matter." The reality is that this government is allowing market value assessment under another name to be assessed in the city of Toronto and other communities where market value assessment doesn't operate.

If the Conservatives of the day, at the time the third party, the now government, had taken a consistent position when they were in opposition with what they do in government, I would say, "They campaigned on it, they said they'd do it, and they're doing it," but they're not. I was on the other side of the House when our Minister of Municipal Affairs brought in a bill that introduced market value assessment to the city of Toronto. Mr Speaker, you were here, and you will remember the cries. You were part of that caucus that denounced the former NDP government for having brought forward market value assessment. And you know who else helped you, Mr Speaker? Mike Harris, the now Premier of Ontario, Chris Stockwell, the now Speaker, and a whole bunch of other Tory caucus members who are now in cabinet stood in this House and said, "We denounce the Bob Rae government for having introduced MVA to the city of Toronto."

The Tories said they were credible and honest people, which they are, I can't argue that, but there's a bit of a difference between the position they took then and the one they take now.

We, the Bob Rae government, at the time when we introduced MVA through our Minister of Municipal Affairs, listened to the cries of the opposition because they raised points that were real. If the Bob Rae government had introduced MVA to the city of Toronto, municipal taxes for residents in the downtown core would have hit the roof and, more importantly, those people that have rights of way, like the rail stations, in and about the city of Toronto would have ended up having to pay a huge amount of assessment that they'd never had to pay before. Quite frankly, it would have chased a lot of business out of Toronto.

The residents at the time, along with the business owners, organized with the opposition to put pressure on the Bob Rae government and we backed down. We said: "Okay, we understand. MVA was something that was asked for by a certain group of people within Toronto. We thought at the time it made some sense, but on further reflection, it's wrong. We withdraw." We took our lumps, and quite frankly we paid for some of those things in the last election.

But this government now comes to this House in their first term as a government, after having come out of being the third party, and have completely flipped their position. They're now saying, "We're going to introduce actual value assessment. No, it's not MVA. No, not us. We're opposed to MVA. We're going to introduce actual value assessment," or current value assessment or whatever you want to call it.

What's the difference between current or actual value assessment and MVA? Market value assessment assesses a building on the basis of the market: How much can that building fetch in the market? Current value assessment assesses the value of the building based on the current value of the building, which is based on the market. There's no difference. MVA and current value are the same thing.

I see my friend across the way, the government member, sort of snickering. I'd be snickering a little bit too if I was on that side of the House having to wear this one. You weren't a member of that third party caucus that made these arguments when we were the government. The reality is you're bringing MVA into the city of Toronto and you know what the effect is going to be. It'll mean a number of property owners in the city of Toronto will see their taxes go up. Yes, some will go down; we know that. There are some property owners who will come out on the positive side of this, but there are many more who are going to end up paying much more tax than they're paying now.

You can argue all you want, "We want to make it fair." How is it fair that somebody pays $1,100 taxes and the other person pays $2,200 taxes? It comes down to a real simple principle: If you've been paying $1,100 and your taxes go up by $1,000, an increase is an increase is an increase, and you guys are increasing the taxes, period. Don't argue fairness. It has nothing to do with fairness.

The other point is — and I want to make this because the parliamentary assistant made the point well. He talked about needing to ensure that we're able to apply a standard when it comes to applying assessment on people who have rights of way in municipalities. That's fair.

Mr Speaker, you know what it's going to mean as well as I do. First of all, because of this bill, municipalities, because they're now going to have to cope with all of the costs of the downloading, will have the ability to charge assessment against property that has rights of way, like rail stations and others. Some would argue they should pay their fair share of taxes. I'm not opposed to that. I think everybody should pay their fair share and everybody should pay their own way. But what it's going to mean in a lot of cases is that some of these businesses are going to start looking around at how to get rid of that property or how to reduce their liability when it comes to taxes by pulling out of entire communities. In most cases it's going to mean that their businesses will pay more taxes. I thought this government was in favour of helping business. This has nothing to do with helping business.

The other thing that it does — I've got to say this. On the whole issue of market value assessment, not only did the third party, the Conservatives of the day, rail against MVA and didn't want to see MVA introduced; a number of candidates in the last provincial election ran on platforms they and their party, meaning the Conservative Party of Ontario, would not introduce MVA to the people of the city of Toronto.

1940

Who had that in their election leaflets? None other than the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Honourable Al Leach, the member who is carrying this bill. How can he bring this bill into the House and have the gall to do so when his own election platform, in his own leaflet it said, "My party and I will never support the imposition of market value assessment in Metro Toronto." Period. "Never" is underlined. The people who voted for him said: "Oh, we believe him. Al Leach ran the TTC. We've got to believe what he says. We know the TTC always runs on time, so Al Leach's word has got to be his bond."

You know what? He made another promise in the last election. He is the Minister of Municipal Affairs, is he not? He said he wasn't going to scrap rent control. He was going to strengthen it, along with a whole bunch of other cabinet ministers in the Metro area who ran on the same platform and the same promise. They put it inside their election leaflets, and what did they do? They broke their word to the people who elected them. The people thought they were electing somebody who was opposed to MVA, somebody who was opposed to getting rid of rent control. These people did a flip-flop, did an about-face and turned exactly the opposite way and ran into the arms of Mike Harris and are saying, "To heck with my constituents, to heck with my promises, I'll do what I have to do to keep my cabinet post."

At one point you will be accountable, and I think that time will come in the next provincial election.

I have to say, especially when it comes to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr Leach, I don't dislike him. Al is not a bad guy. I was municipal affairs critic for a little bit better than a year when we came back in 1995, and I kind of like Al. He's kind of a nice guy. He's a regular kind of Joe in his own way; he's got more money than I. He's pretty easy to get along with, but I have to ask myself the question, does this guy want to run again? He certainly demonstrates to me that he has no inclination whatsoever of wanting to get re-elected in his riding because there's no way in heck that guy could get re-elected. He couldn't even get elected as the dog catcher in his riding, given what he has done in about-faces when it comes to MVA, when it comes to rent control and when it comes to everything else he's done. He used to run the biggest transit authority in Canada and is one of the ministers responsible for decreasing the funding to that very same transit authority and making it less sustainable as far as being able to provide the level of service that people are accustomed to.

Let's look at a couple of other things this bill does. It eliminates the business occupancy tax. On the surface, everybody is opposed to having to pay less tax, but you know what? I kind of like this. I like the idea that businesses are not going to be assessed this tax on the surface, but you start to think about what it means. There's a whole bunch of things that I like to do but I might not go out and do them because there are consequences to those actions.

It's the same thing when it comes to the elimination of the business occupancy tax. You're going to go to municipalities in Ontario and say, "You're not to levy the business occupancy tax any more." That means a person who is renting a storefront pays the business occupancy tax. In the future, because of this bill, boom, it's gone. "It sounds like a good thing. Hey, everybody likes that. We pay no taxes." But you know what? It means that municipalities are going to lose — listen to this — $1.6 billion of assessment, $1.6 billion on top of all of the municipal download the province is throwing down to the municipalities, downloading transit responsibility, downloading housing, downloading ambulance services, downloading whatever. There's nothing that is not being downloaded. They're going to lose $1.6 billion in assessment by the loss of the business occupancy tax.

The government says: "There's no problem. We're just going to let the municipalities deal with this. We're going to give them the stuff in the bill here to make sure they can make it up somehow." How do you think they're going to make it up? You and I, the property taxpayers. How do you think they're going to make it up? Money doesn't grow on trees. This government seems to think that money grows on trees for municipalities and that somehow or other municipal politicians grab a shovel and go into a little hole and they dig up millions of dollars and they pay their bills. I'm sorry, it doesn't work that way. I would think the Conservative Party would be one that understands economic issues.

The reality is that the people in the cities and towns across this province are going to see their property taxes go up. This government is not only downloading responsibilities on to them, they're not only cutting municipal transfer payments, such as the northern support grant in northern Ontario and other grants all across the province, they're also getting rid of certain assessments. Municipalities are going to have to make that up.

What do you think Barbara Hall is going to have to do in the city of Toronto come the next election, or whoever runs in the city of North Bay or Sudbury or Sault Ste Marie or Timmins or Sarnia? What are they going to have to do? They're going to have to pay for the services or get rid of them. Most municipal politicians are like you and me: They want to make sure their communities are safe. That means they need fire departments, they need police services, they have to have water and sewer plants that are running efficiently. They've got to plow the snow off the streets. They've got to operate the arena so their kids can go and play and hockey on Saturday afternoon. They've got to make sure the pool works so that you're able to go out and keep in shape and stay out of the health care system — something maybe I should do more often — but they're not going to have the money to do so.

Those municipal politicians, come the next municipal election, afterwards into the next budget year, are going to have to say: "Do we close the pool? Do we close the arena? Do we stop plowing the streets? Do we not pay for ambulance services? Do we cut the day care? Do we raise property taxes?" I think it's going to be a combination of both. There is going to be some reduction in services, there's no question, because in most municipalities it means, if they were to offload the entire cost of the municipal download and loss of assessment and loss of transfers to the property taxpayers, that their taxes would go up by 40% and 50%. There's no council in Ontario, no alderman or mayor or councillor, who wants to see that kind of tax increase.

What do you think they're going to do? They're going to go and cut your services: You will have less police; you will have fewer firefighters; you will plow less often; you will pick up less garbage; your sewer plants are not going to be as modern as they should be; when roads have potholes, they're not going to fix them as fast; and your property taxes are going to go up.

These guys ran on the promise that there's only one taxpayer. Do you remember that? I remember it. It's called the Common Sense Revolution: "Call 1-800-903-Mike and you can get your copy of this." It says, "Historically, municipalities have responded to provincial funding limits by simply increasing local property taxes." What's different? What do you think they're going to do after the next election? Grow money on trees? I don't think so. I think they're going to cut services and they will raise property taxes.

The solemn promise of the then third party in the Common Sense Revolution is: "We will work closely with municipalities to ensure that any actions we take will not result in increases to local property taxes." You tell me how you're going to do that. You tell the council of the city of Timmins or the town of Iroquois Falls or Black River-Matheson or Kapuskasing or Hearst or Toronto how in heck they're going to achieve that. When you say they are going to have to take on all these new responsibilities, you're going to take assessment away from them as far as business occupancy tax and the farm tax rebate, and they're not going to raise property taxes. How are you going to do that?

You are by this very bill, Bill 149, allowing municipalities to create new subclasses when it comes to assessment: six new subclasses in residential, and I think it's an equal amount, six in the industrial-commercial sector. If you don't want them raising property taxes, why are you allowing them to create new subclasses when it comes to assessment if you don't want them to use them? If you didn't want them to use them, you would have said, "We're not creating any subclasses." But you're creating them. What does that tell us? It tells us you're giving the power to municipalities to go out and raise property taxes.

We have a responsibility in this assembly. We have to make sure that our kids end up in the future inheriting the same Ontario we had. When this government cuts everything the way they have, we're not able to ensure that our kids will inherit a system of education or a system of health care or a system of municipal services. It is our responsibility in this House as the opposition, as the New Democrats, to make sure that tomorrow our kids have a future. With this bill I don't think they're going to have a very good tomorrow.

Hon Rob Sampson (Minister without Portfolio [Privatization]): I listened very intently, as I try to do, to the debate in the House and the member for Cochrane South speaking to us I think with some background in municipal politics. I don't know all of his CV but I think he has some involvement in municipal politics. I found quite intriguing the realization about three quarters of the way through his debate today that he has now realized that money does not grow on trees. On behalf of the many taxpayers in my riding who encouraged me to become involved in politics and gave me the chance to stand in this House and speak, I say it is unfortunate that his revelation that money does not grow on trees did not occur on or about 1990, before he took this province on a rampage of spending at the expense of the taxpayer and burdened many of the taxpayers, both young and old in this province, in my riding and also in his, because I think he does have taxpayers in his riding, with this tremendous debt problem.

1950

The debate about MVA, by the way, I find quite intriguing as well. I didn't have the luxury of being in this House when that topic was raised by your then government. I was outside of this chamber as an ordinary citizen. I do recall, though, that when I heard the issue raised by the Bob Rae government, the basic principle of their particular position at that time was to try to create some equality within tax classes, especially on the residential side, the very same reason, by the way, that we are standing here in this House encouraging the government of the day to proceed with some assessment that does make sense on a residential basis.

The member also spoke briefly about reassessment issues and how that will impact the taxpayer, and I think that was leveraging off the discussion of the member for Kingston and The Islands. I would encourage the member for Cochrane South to take a look at the history that the member for Kingston and The Islands spoke to. He will find that it was within the jurisdiction, the authority of that then council to be able to deal with the tax increase by lowering the mill rate, and they didn't. They kept the tax win.

Mr Caplan: I listened to the words of the member for Cochrane South with great interest. He indicated that it's possible that taxes would go down. I can tell the members, and any Metro members of the government or opposition caucuses would well know, that on the basis of the 1988 market value study, those properties which would see tax reductions under this bill have already been appealed. So the individuals who would enjoy any kind of tax relief — there are none. The only people who are going to be affected will see their taxes go up, and go up significantly. This has escaped attention and I'm really surprised that the government members from the Metro area would not point out this flaw in the bill.

Mr Gerretsen: Particularly the minister without portfolio.

Mr Caplan: The government House leader, for one, the Attorney General, many of the others would want to point that out and to be a voice for the people who live in their communities. I know I certainly am committed to that, because it was very clear to me as I knocked on doors in Oriole this past summer that the tax burden that this government is committed to putting on people who live in my community is unbearable and untenable. I must say that it is just totally devastating to a community, particularly one in Metropolitan Toronto, and I really think that there needs to be some thought and some rethinking about what the impact of this is going to be.

I would say one further thing to the members. Why is the government afraid to share any numbers? They keep pushing back the dates when we'll have numbers ready for the municipalities because they know that the impact of this bill and the other measure on property taxes, Bill 106, will in fact be devastating.

Mr Martin: I also want to be on the record this evening in congratulating the member for Cochrane South for the excellent presentation he made here, pointing out to all of us and to the folks listening out there the inconsistencies in this government's track record: what they said during the election, what they said in the Common Sense Revolution, and then the flip-flops, particularly by the minister who is handling this piece of legislation. That seems to be becoming his trademark. I think the member is absolutely right. He must have absolutely no intention of running again, because anybody out there in his constituency who knows of his record, who's been watching him at all, must be asking themselves what in the world they did and why the person they trusted so much with their vote has now turned around and has begun to sell them this bill of goods that at the end of the day is not going to serve them well, is not going to serve anybody across this province well.

He makes the point as well that this piece of legislation is consistent with so many other pieces of legislation that have been brought before this House. At first blush, from the name even, you'd think it was going to be something wonderful and progressive and evolutionary. At the end of the day when you go through it and you begin to take a sharp pencil in that exercise, you begin to see that instead of gaining, instead of winning, instead of advancing, the taxpayer out there — and he says, quite rightly, there is only one taxpayer — is the one who's going to get hit two and three and four times.

I'm also supportive of his position that this government as well is very good at passing the blame, blaming somebody else, pointing fingers. I've got two letters here, two constituents who have the federal government as the bogeyman —

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Grimmett: I'd like to make some comments on the speech given by the member for Cochrane South. With his usual enthusiasm, he's discussed a number of issues in the bill and of course quite a number of issues that weren't mentioned in the bill. I would like to comment again on the rights of way issue.

I'm sure in his part of the province where he lives there's a significant interest in this issue because there would be a lot of owners of rights of way. Ontario Hydro and utilities and railways would be affected by this issue. I think it's important for the public to recognize that under the system we had when we came into power in Ontario there were great inconsistencies from one jurisdiction to another in the treatment of these rights of way. Some jurisdictions treated them as one category of property and then right next door there could be a municipality or another jurisdiction that treated them totally differently. The owners of these properties were looking for consistency. They didn't want to keep dealing with the inconsistency. They wanted us to address this issue.

What we're proposing in Bill 149 is that the province would take control of the rates on these rights of way, that we would do it on an acreage basis and that we would set up nine geographical areas in the province. We would give some assurance to the municipalities that they're going to continue to have a strong revenue stream from these properties, and we wanted to give assurance to the owners of these properties that they weren't going to run into difficulties forecasting the cost that they would have to be paying the municipalities for tax assessment.

I think Bill 149 is very sensitive in the way that it deals with that important issue, which is very important to the people of Timmins. But it's also important that the owners of these properties be given the assurance that they can continue to operate in Ontario without fear that they're going to go from one year to the next with an impossible increase in their tax rates. Those are the issues that we had to deal with on rights of way.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Cochrane South, two minutes.

Mr Bisson: To the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay, I find it very interesting that as a member of the Conservative government you would say you want to make sure that those people who have rights of way, such as utilities or gas companies or whatever it might be, have some assurance that their taxes aren't going to go up too much and they're going to be able to afford to operate in Ontario. Mr Speaker, you were in the House with me when Bill 26 was passed, and Bill 26 allowed municipalities to go out and annex, or do whatever you want to call it, take over unorganized communities or other communities into their own tax base. In our communities in and around the area of Timmins, Iroquois Falls and Matheson, Iroquois Falls came very close to annexing part of the municipality, part of the area around the municipality. Why? Because they would have been able to get at the assessment of TransCanada Pipelines. It would have meant an increase of $1.5 million in assessment.

For this government member to say you want to make sure the business community has a stable situation when it comes to how property taxes are applied to their businesses and to their property, your first bill — as the former Speaker used to call it, your first ominous bill — made darned sure that municipalities had the ability to go out and grab extra assessment. As it turned out, Mayor Ken Graham and his council in Iroquois Falls backed down, because they recognized that this was not a good idea at the time and the government was basically making them do their dirty work for them. The point is, you're the government that's really causing these inequities.

To the member for Mississauga West across the way, who says we just came to the realization that money doesn't grow on trees and, "Where were you in the time that you were in government?" I only say, when it comes to taxes, when it comes to the increase in municipal taxes, remember what you just said in this House, because in fact you're going to be making sure that property taxes are increased to the municipal taxpayers of this province and they're going to find out that money doesn't grow on trees.

2000

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr E.J. Douglas Rollins (Quinte): It gives me a great deal of pleasure to stand up and speak about Bill 149. When the government came to power, when we started campaigning, when Doug Rollins started campaigning in the area of Quinte, there was a concern out there that people around the province needed some balance between who pays a heavy amount of tax and who pays a little amount of tax.

I think this government has seen fit to try to bring some evenness throughout the whole system, and it's not an easy chore to do. As the previous speaker said, when they started to bring a fair market value tax into Metropolitan Toronto, they seemed to get a lot of heat. All of a sudden they decided, "The heat is going to be a little bit too much and we should back down from it," so they decided the best thing to do was just forget it and scrap it.

I think most people in the province had to realize that people who have a small house, whether it's just out of Kanata or a house in London or a house in Elliot Lake, should be paying somewhere close to the same amount of assessment to start with and then they could bring it into the tax. This bill goes together with Bill 106 to make sure that can happen.

In this bill we put in some different categories to help out, and one of the areas we have helped out is the people who are on a fixed income and people who have a disability. Those people who have a disability are going to be given the opportunity to defer their taxes, to make sure those taxes don't increase. Our municipalities are going to have the opportunity to bring that in over a period of approximately eight years if they see fit. I think that will allow a lot of people in Ontario to slowly get to the point where fairness in assessment of property should be even, regardless of where they live in the province, and at least pay tax accordingly in the same category.

As a businessman for 30 years of my life, there was always a tax bill for business occupancy tax. There aren't too many people who haven't thought that the business occupancy tax was awfully hard as far as business was concerned. I can tell you, on the first day you opened that business and said, "Holy jeepers, I'm in business," you turned the key, and the first guy who was there was the tax collector, particularly for business tax. He was the very first one who came there. In fact, he came there sometimes before the mailman did. He got there and wanted that bill paid. He wanted that paid right now. "Give me that money."

For a lot of big corporations, that business occupancy tax probably is of little or no importance, but to a little individual like Doug Rollins or a little place that has a small business, that money means an awful lot, and right off the bat that has to be paid out. Now we're going to be able to take that money off the tax and allow that businessman to have a little breathing room and not have to pay that business occupancy tax right at the start.

I know we hear a lot of noise from the other side sometimes that it doesn't feel that's exactly right, but I think we've got to be able to get that. They continually say that we're going to roll the actual value assessment into a three-year average to make sure property that is valued at that amount of money — that in a three-year period those people will be able to roll that assessment in together.

All of a sudden people talk about mill rates, and a lot of people don't understand mill rates. It's nice for the member from Kingston because he was a mayor and he understands mill rates, but there are hundreds and hundreds of people in Ontario who do not understand when you start talking mill rates. If you put it in as a percentage of tax, then they understand it, but they don't understand it as a mill rate.

I think these are the kinds of things we're going to be able to simplify, to balance the playing field and make sure that people are equally treated. It's only fair that everybody in Ontario should be equally dealt with, regardless of whether they are in downtown Toronto, downtown London, Elliot Lake, Thunder Bay or wherever it is. I think everybody wants to be on the same level playing field. Yes, there will be some taxes that go up —

Mr Bisson: Equity doesn't mean you all get treated the same.

Mr Rollins: That's right, it doesn't mean they will all get the same, but it starts out at the same. You cannot try to get an even start if you have some up there and some down here. You all have to start at the line together. By making assessment level across the province, it will certainly help to make the raising of taxes start from the same place.

One of the other areas in this bill that we've dealt with is theatres. I know in our little town of Belleville we've got a small playhouse on Pinnacle Street. It's a non-profit organization, very, very small. Yes, we need to have an improvement. We've got BCI down there —

Mr Bisson: Doug, one of these.

Mr Rollins: Don't worry.

BCI has just looked at bringing in an arts centre. I think if we develop that into an arts centre and a cultural centre, it will hold somewhere around 1,000 people. If that piece of property is exempt from taxes, as it can be under Bill 149, that will allow it to be developed, and some people, who may start out in acting and dancing, that kind of career, and the extra hours of activity that those people put in, could make themselves a lifestyle. I want to be very proud to be part of a government that has seen fit to have the foresight to allow those people to have exemptions.

Charitable organizations also should be dealt with under the Fair Municipal Finance Act. We know who they are in our community. Our members of council will be able to categorize them and give them the exemption of not having to pay tax so that those people will not have to go back to the same tax people in their city hall and ask for donations to run. They will be given the opportunity to keep those places without paying taxes on them. Those are the kinds of things we need to have.

We also have to look at farm lands, particularly the underdeveloped lands that are sitting there. We see them all around our small towns. I was in Trenton on Saturday and looked at an industry, and right at the edge of that industry where they just put a little development there's a corn field. There aren't too many farmers that close to Trenton; however, that land is being used for corn production. It's going to be developed before very long into industrial land. It can be adjusted under those tax conditions so it will encourage some people to make sure they keep that land productive in agriculture until such time as they have to put it into development. As soon as it goes into development, certainly the meter runs a lot faster on the tax bill on developed land than it does when it's on land that is being taxed on a farm basis, because the lowest amount of tax is what it's going to be taxed at.

One of the other payments we have are payments in lieu of tax. This is an absolute nightmare across the whole province, in every municipality, every council, whoever has the strongest council to argue about what they have to pay. It's a little bit like a wildfire, because if all of a sudden in Kingston they get paid X number of dollars for having a prison or a school or something that's run by the government in lieu of taxes, they hear about that in Trenton or they hear about it in Sault Ste Marie or Sudbury and they want the same kind of dollars. It's just continual with no continuity of where it's brought in. I think this will make it a little bit fairer. It will bring it into a little more level playing field.

One of the other things, as the speaker before me from Muskoka-Georgian Bay mentioned is about rights of way. Any of the companies that pertain to rights of way, whether it's Bell Telephone, Hydro, the railroad, the gas companies, certainly want some continuity as far as the dollars in taxes that are paid across the province. I think when the province starts to set those rates, those rates will be equal. They will not have the opportunity to increase in a municipality in Hastings county and then go to Renfrew or some place like that where they might be a lot cheaper or a lot lower. That company realizes, when it has X number of miles of railroad or X number of square hectares of right of way, those people will basically be paying the same tax on it. Once again, it just levels the playing field. We have to have the playing field as level as possible for the taxpayers, the tax collectors and everybody in the whole system.

2010

We have heard some concerns from time to time that taxes are going to be raised. Yes, there's no question that some people have had a lot less taxes to pay over the last few years. Some people could say that they had a free ride. I don't say it's a free ride, but they had a ride that they haven't been paying the fair freight on. Those people are going to be asked to bring the tax bill up to it. I think that's only fair. Most people in the province of Ontario want to be dealt with fairly. They're not asking for a free ride; they're asking to be dealt with, as far as fairness is concerned, in the even amount of taxes that they have put in.

There are some other properties that are owned by municipalities that have got to be dealt with in a little bit different category. We've got six categories of properties that we've got to put in. I know the different business categories that have to be dealt with. When there are different businesses, they are different circumstances that they're under and they must be taxed more fairly so those people can compete on the open and the global market and they are not overtaxed as far as the amount of dollars and taxes they have to pay, because those companies are the same people who, if we keep the tax dollars from being eroded away from them and deal with them fairly, are going to hire workers and keep the payrolls going on.

I stood in amazement here and listened — and I know over the time we do listen to some things that happen from across the road — and the speakers from over there continually say that we're going too fast. I'm awfully glad that they didn't go any faster over the previous five years before we got elected. The only speed that there was then was the size of the debt, where it started out and where it ended up at. That was at an awful fast rate. I wish we could take it down as fast as they were putting it up. We would really accomplish a fantastic amount of things.

We are trying to take those taxes down; we are trying to look after that deficit and maybe, before the five years is up, we will get back on to a balanced budget and start paying down some of those dollars that were — I wouldn't say "squandered," but not spent wisely while we were on the other side of the House.

Mr Jim Flaherty (Durham Centre): Say "squandered."

Mr Rollins: You did say they squandered some. I think maybe some of it was a little bit on the squandered side. The people of this province who have dug in and done a lot of taxpaying over their days, when they get a little bit older in life, want to stay in their house and not be forced out because their tax bill is going to be raised too much. We have put a provision in there to make sure those people can take their time, back up their taxes a little bit —

Mr Gerretsen: And incur debt. It's a nice legacy you're leaving people.

Mr Rollins: It's a nice legacy to leave. When you leave this world I suspect even a gold credit card isn't going to help out some of those members from the other side. They probably won't stand the heat either. You've got to look after those people who have little in life and not be quite so bad about that. They'll stand a lot of heat. A lot of ours will handle the heat.

The biggest fairness of this is to make sure that the municipalities are given the tools that they want to be able to make some adjustments among the commercial sectors and to make sure that our commercial class — that they can adjust those tax brackets. When you see the councils sit down and bring out their budgets, they're going to have a way of being able to fairly deal with the conditions that they're under.

Yes, they're going to have to sharpen their pencils and do a good job on it, there's no question about that. There are going to have to be some concerns for the people who are less fortunate than some others and who cannot afford to cover that. But all of those things relate to one thing in Bill 149: the fairness to make sure that these taxes are met with fairness throughout the province, not just within the municipalities but throughout the province. We have to start from a good foundation. A lot of the things in the government that we're trying to do, the foundation has to start from a fair, even, well-balanced assessment. That's where it's got to start.

I know as a kid going back in my younger life — and that's going back quite a little way, probably back further than some of my colleagues from across the road — I can remember my grandfather was an assessor. He was a good guy. He was an assessor in the township of Thurlow. It was amazing even as a young child, probably 12 or 13 years old, when my grandfather used to assess, they went all up and down the township and assessed the roads, the different stories he told when they were assessing of how poor the place looked and one thing and another and then "Don't raise the taxes."

In those days two or three people walked in from the street and took a look at the place and said: "You've got a nice house here and you've got a nice barn and you've got a pretty good-sized business. We see last year you were assessed at so much. Should we assess you at something different?" I can never get it through my head that something was worth maybe, in those days, $10,000 or $12,000 as far as the value of the place was concerned and they were arguing over an assessment number of $2,500 or $2,100. It took me a long time — maybe I'm a slow learner —to be able to figure out that the assessment had no relative value tied to the actual value of the property. There was always that fluctuating point in there.

The thing was that many, many of those taxpayers couldn't figure out why the guy next door who had supposedly just about as nice a house, maybe a little bit bigger barn, was paying $200 or $300 less in taxes than that guy. They came to find out, maybe with their friend the assessor —

Mr Gerretsen: Maybe one was a Tory and the other wasn't.

Mr Rollins: Maybe one was voting on the other side of the fence — that might well have been — and that is not fair. That has nothing to do with the ability to pay taxes or what their property value is. This is trying to bring back some level of continuity into it so that the people of Ontario can look at it and, with assurance, feel that they are getting a fair deal as far as their tax bill is concerned. A fair deal is that it's an actual value assessment.

Yes, that adjustment is going to be allowed to be rolled in on a three-year average, so when those people look at their assessment bill, they can relate those dollars right to their tax bill without worrying about whether you've got a lot of assessment on to it. The prime and key thing is that everybody should be even. If you start out with an assessment that is even — I'm sure we can get the value brought back to where it's even. Whether it be in downtown Toronto or downtown Belleville or wherever it is, people with the same value of place should be assessed close to the same value, within a three-year average. Then we can address the problem of fair taxes not only for just one place in the province but from parts all over this province.

I do wonder a little bit, when you see some of these other people saying: "We thought of doing that and then we backed off. We decided the people were crying." Lots of times, when people start in hollering and cry too loud, all of a sudden, yes, they're getting close to something that's right. I'm awfully glad to think that we've got enough fortitude and foresight to, as a government, make sure that the actual value assessment does get put into place and that some day in the future somebody will say, "Wasn't it nice that they fixed the problem that started years and years ago in this province and nobody had the backbone to sit in there and make it fair and make it happen."

With the support of Bill 149 and with the fairness that it will bring to the taxpayers of Ontario — yes, there will be some who say that taxes went up; but likewise there will be some who say that the taxes went down. We've got to look after those people. We've got to make sure that our companies and our industry are clearly enough assessed that we can make sure we're competitive not only in Ontario but also in Canada and also on the global market. We've got to make sure that everybody pays their fair share; nobody gets away with a complete free ride, but everybody pays their fair share. That's what this bill is all about: fair assessment.

Mr Gerretsen: It's hard to know where to start with this member. I like him as a member; he's a good neighbour up Belleville way. But he somehow leaves the impression that once we reassess all the properties, whether they're actual value or market value, clear across the province, then we're all going to be paying the same amount of taxes. What he forgets is that in order to come at your actual property taxes, you have to do two things: You have to assess the property and you apply a mill rate to the assessment. You multiply the two and you get the tax bill. That's how you get it.

2020

Listening to him, you would think this exercise is all about everybody in Ontario somehow paying the same amount of money. Well, he is dead wrong, because if one municipality has a high tax rate, they're going to be paying higher taxes based on the same assessment than another municipality. When you add into that mix the fact that this legislation allows you to set up different classes within, let's say, a commercial assessment — you can have, I think, four or five different classes, and the same thing within the residential assessment — you in effect can have about two or three or four different tax rates, different amounts of taxes that are going to be charged in the municipality.

So don't make it sound as if you're for fairness and equity. We're all in favour of fairness and equity. What we're saying is that this bill doesn't necessarily do it, particularly when you add on top of this that one of the services the province has downloaded is the assessment function. The province used to do it and it was done in a fair manner. Whether or not it's going to be done in a fair manner locally, clear across this province, is debatable, because remember, that's the reason it was taken away from the municipalities in the first place, about 25 years ago.

Mr Bisson: The member for Quinte certainly gave what I thought was an interesting perspective as to this debate. I want to touch on three points. On one of his logical points he went for about five minutes and it led us to the following conclusion: If everybody is mad at you, you must be doing something right. Well, I'll tell you, I've been around politics, like most people in this Assembly, for a little while, and the whole purpose of politics is to be able to govern effectively so that you don't get a bunch of people mad at you.

Everybody knows that, being government, there will always be somebody mad at you, because you don't always, with every decision you make, please everybody, and that's not my point here. But for this member to somehow say that when everybody is mad at you, you're doing something right — boy, I'd love to be at some of those caucus meetings. What are they telling these guys? It's really scary. "Don't worry, guys. They're all mad at us. Everything's fine. We're doing great. Hey Mike, the teachers. Hey Mike, the municipal councillors. Hey, what about the firemen? What about the police? What about the ambulance drivers? What about the women? What about the children? They're all mad at us, so we've got to be doing something right."

What logic. I'll tell you, those caucus meetings must be really, really something.

The other point he makes is that taxes will go up and taxes will go down, but you have to remember that more taxes will go down than will go up. Take a look at study after study that has been done on this whole issue of MVA, because this is MVA for anything other than the word. The number of appeals that you're going to get when you introduce this system of actual value, current value, market value assessment, whatever you want to call it, is going to be in the neighbourhood of around 600,000 appeals. That tells me that you've got a big problem on your hands. The reality is that what you're handing municipalities is a ticking time bomb.

I'd really love to get invited to one of your caucus meetings. It must be fun.

Mr Grimmett: I am pleased to add my two cents worth of comments on the speech by the member for Quinte. I wanted to talk about some of the issues that he brought up, especially relating to small-town theatres and how the member for Quinte was indicating that there was a great benefit in Bill 149 to small-town theatres.

In my riding there are a number of small-town theatres that would benefit greatly from this provision. There's a theatre in Port Carling, there's a theatre in Gravenhurst, there's one in Huntsville, and I know the member for Quinte has several theatres in his riding too. They always have difficulty maintaining a year-round bank account. How can they pay their taxes on a year-round basis when they can't even maintain a bank account through the seasonal period that they operate?

Bill 149 indicates that where municipalities wish to do so, they can exempt small live theatres. This has a very significant impact on a small community.

As many people know, our government is very, very close with the arts community and we're very concerned about the arts community. So we have taken special efforts in Bill 149 to deal not only with the small-town theatres but also the theatres in Toronto. As many people would know, Toronto has the third-largest live theatre audience in the world — the third-largest live theatre audience in the world in our theatres in Toronto.

We want to maintain the theatres in small-town Ontario; we also want to assist the theatres in Toronto to be competitive with their counterparts in other parts of the world. So what we've come up with is a competitive way for these theatres to be treated when it comes to assessment. We're going to make sure that the not-for-profit operations get the same tax treatment as the public theatres, and then the private theatres also. They all get dealt with in the same manner. It's all very clear.

Mr Gravelle: It's so interesting listening to the member for Quinte and all of the other government members who have been speaking this evening. They talk about fairness. They talk about fairness all the time and it's hard to imagine what could possibly be fair about a piece of legislation that essentially asks people to accept at face value that things are going to work out a certain way. Why won't they release the studies that show what impact these proposed changes are going to have on local property taxpayers? It's not fair if you don't do that. That's a minimum.

What's fair about moving so quickly with all their legislation that they frequently now have to come back and fix a previous bill up? They've got to fix the bill up. Surely that should be a message to the government members themselves. If you've got to fix a bill up, something is wrong. There's nothing fair about that.

What's fair about all the downloading that's taking place in the municipalities — the downloading of social housing, the downloading of ground ambulance services, the downloading of public health — when indeed it was advised by their own Crombie commission that these are things they shouldn't do?

When one looks at some of the issues in finer detail, such as public health, you see a Minister of Health who acknowledges potentially that genetic health counselling, for example, which is important in northern Ontario and needs to be maintained, is something they say they will maintain, yet we have not yet seen the proof of that and we've got to push it. There's nothing fair about that.

There's nothing fair about taking away the municipal support grant; $666 million taken away. There's nothing fair about that. They say it's all going to work out. You know, you look at a city like Thunder Bay; that's $20 million taken away. That's before the downloading. So you take away $20 million and then another $19 million, and you've got a huge, huge burden being put on the municipality, and then you add on the confusion over what's going to happen with Bill 149. There's nothing fair about that.

What's fair about telling municipalities, "We'll give you the details of the downloading on October 6," and then saying, "Well, maybe we can't do it by October 6"? It's not fair. The member for Quinte should acknowledge that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): The member for Quinte has two minutes to respond.

Mr Rollins: I'd like to acknowledge the member for Kingston and The Islands for the tax cuts that he generated for Kingston while he was in charge of that great city down there; the members for Cochrane South and Muskoka-Georgian Bay; the member for Port Arthur. I think that you people all have different perspectives on this bill, the same as maybe what some of us have is a little bit different. I think the biggest thing that we've got to look at is to be able to bring some continuity into the taxation of the province of Ontario to make everybody realize that we've got to deal with industry in particular; that it doesn't matter what part of this great province they're in, they're going to be dealt with fairly, evenly, so that they can compete not only in Ontario but in Canada and in the global market. If we don't have that continuity to make sure that happens that way, all we get is the bumps and bubbles as far as those companies trying to establish themselves is concerned, whether it's in the great riding of Quinte or in some other ridings around the province.

I want to say that as long as we can deal with the people who are disabled, the people that are on fixed incomes; if we can deal with groups like the theatre groups, if we can deal with the right-of-way people, to look after them and to bring that kind of continuity into it, we can probably accomplish more by working with those people and making sure that there is and evenness and fairness about this whole taxation system, so that when those people realize there's some fairness in it, if the tax goes up, they're not nearly as upset as when there's no fairness in it and there's no continuity throughout this great province of Ontario.

Mr Speaker, thank you for allowing me to say these few remarks today.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate.

Mr Caplan: This government is creating a great deal of concern and confusion about the property tax assessment system, particularly when it is three months before this new system is going to be implemented and in place. That's astounding. In their haste to fix Bill 106 with this piece of legislation to ask municipalities, to ask businesses to do any kind of planning for the new tax year, to do any kind of planning at all, they allow only three months for that to take place.

2030

This is a very serious issue. It is the most dramatic property tax change ever seen in Ontario.

I was very interested. The member for Quinte was talking and he acknowledged that this will cause property tax increases. I'm very surprised, given that this government is telling people it's keeping its promises. I recall very specifically that in their Common Sense Revolution document this government, Mike Harris's government, said no action they take will cause property tax increases. Perhaps the member for Quinte and many of the other members will want to stand in their places and explain to the people of Ontario, explain to my constituents in Oriole, why they've broken that very key and fundamental campaign promise.

As I said, this piece of legislation comes into effect January 1, 1998, which is just three months, an incredibly short time line if you're in business, and I have been in business and many of the members opposite and on this side have been in business. That is simply not enough time to do the proper planning, to do the proper projections and to have your finances and everything in order, to meet whatever deadlines need to be met.

We haven't even seen the tax rates — those are being set by the minister — tax rates for graduated rates for commercial properties, for rights of ways, for gross tax receipts and many others. Why? If this is of such key importance to this government, why the delay? The minister sets about 25 different tax rates under this bill, subject to whatever amendments may be proposed, and no information has been forthcoming. It's very clear to me and to the people of Oriole that this bill doesn't achieve any kind of consistency; it just creates even more unfairness.

With the removal of the business occupancy tax, you're going to start pitting small businesses versus large bank towers. Can this government explain what's going to happen to those small businesses in comparison to the large bank towers that are right here in the heart of this city?

The rights of way: The member from Muskoka was telling us how this had all been fixed and it was all going to be changed. Well, can he explain why there will be higher rates for rural areas under the rights of way?

Another point of unfairness is that we graduated rates for commercial properties. This will penalize large mall owners. In fact, many of the mall owners over the past five years have been appealing their tax assessments, quite successfully I might add, to the Assessment Review Board, to the Ontario Municipal Board, which by the way under Bill 149 will be eliminated as a route of appeal. These mall owners know the unfairness and they're going to be gouged even further. What does that mean? More uncertainty for the tax base, for municipalities, for school boards, for all those institutions which are dependent upon the tax base.

I have to ask myself, what are Mike Harris and this government trying to hide? Why will they not release any impact studies? They must know what the results of Bill 149 are going to be on local taxpayers, on local businesses. In St Catharines, the mayor of St Catharines, along with several other mayors, has gone out and funded an independent study to look at what the impact is, because this government will not produce any kind of numbers at all about what the impact of Bill 149 is.

We had the member for Mississauga here earlier telling us what a great town it was. Perhaps he should consult with the mayor of Mississauga, who says the same thing. In fact, every mayor in Ontario, every municipal councillor, is telling us the same message, that without the numbers they don't know what the impact is going to be. They have some ideas. They've projected some things out with the downloading, with the impact of this, but the government refuses to share those numbers. Why? What is there to hide?

As I said, this new system is going to be in place on January 1, 1998. No tax rates have been set. Businesses cannot do their planning; municipalities cannot do their planning. We're just getting mass confusion, needlessly. An open consultative process would certainly go a long way to making this bill much more palatable.

In a third vein, we've had two finance bills, Bill 106 and Bill 149, but we still have no bill from the government on education financing. Why not? That is a key component of the tax system. In fact they're leaving a great deal of it on. Where is the plan? Where is the vision? Where is this all going? The members opposite can't answer that. The Minister of Education, the Deputy Premier, the finance minister can't answer that. Why? Because there is no plan. It's being made up as they go along.

Perhaps the most unpalatable part of this ripoff by Mike Harris of property taxpayers, both residential and commercial, is this whole downloading plan. Just to touch on a number of the areas: welfare, family benefits, drug benefits, long-term care, home care, public health, public housing, child care, highways, ambulance services. All of these are being downloaded on to unsuspecting residents, unsuspecting businesses, resulting in higher property taxes. I know the Premier, at AMO, pinkie-swore that this would not result in any property tax increases. He called this revenue-neutral.

It is really interesting. It's a question of credibility. Whom do the people of Ontario trust? Do we trust David Crombie? Do we trust Joyce Trimmer? Both of these people, by the way, have been asked by the Conservative Party to do some studies for them. Do we trust the Metro Toronto board of trade, good friends of this government? How about the Toronto Real Estate Board? How about every mayor and every council in Ontario?

You have the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Premier, the Minister of Finance all telling us that this is neutral, this is good for us, it's not going to make any difference, and you have everybody else in the province telling us that's not the case, that this is going to place an additional burden on residents and on businesses, and that it's bad for business, it's bad for our communities and it's not well-thought-out and really is a terrible mistake.

The downloading plan is adding about $660 million to the property tax base and it could mean potentially a 4% or 5% increase in property taxes. Of course, it may not. You can cut your services. We can cut transportation, road maintenance, all of the ones that are being downloaded: drug benefits, long-term care, home care, public health, public housing, child care. These are things which obviously the government doesn't value because it doesn't want to pay for them. They want the residents to pay for them and you have to make a Hobson's choice. You can either cut it or you can raise taxes. Those are your choices.

I remember at the outset of all this the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing said this would result in a 10% decrease in property taxes, yet won't commit to reducing the portion of the property tax bill they are setting. In fact the minister was shown such disregard at the recent Association of Municipalities of Ontario meeting held back in August that he was laughed out of the room. This, for a minister of the crown who has extensive experience in the public sector, who should know better. It really does show the lack of confidence our public leaders have in this government and in the actions it's taking.

It's very interesting. One of my colleagues said, and I've been saying this to the people in Oriole, don't listen to what this government is saying, look at their actions, look at what they're doing. We've heard things like: "We want quality education. We're going to protect the classroom." Yet their Minister of Education cuts $533 million from Ontario's classrooms and has admitted that it has affected kids and their education. We've heard from this government on countless occasions that they're going to protect tenants, yet they introduced Bill 96, which is a direct assault on tenants. We have seen this whole area of property tax, where the government said that no action they take will result in increased property taxes, yet the member for Quinte admitted that property taxes will go up as a result of this legislation and the other actions of this government.

2040

So look very clearly at the record: They say on the one hand and do on the other, and the two are not the same. The people of this province and the people of Oriole — I know from talking to them over the last two months — are not fooled.

It's clear that the government is spinning out of control: The downloading, the property tax changes, the amalgamation, the education changes are all happening at the same time. It's just a jumbled up puzzle. It seems that the various ministers and the Premier and the leaders in this government keep taking pieces out and throwing them away, and now we're supposed to fill in a puzzle which is totally incomplete. That is not the way that government is supposed to work. It is supposed to be rational. We are supposed to be here to provide service for the people of Ontario. We are not here to create undue hardship and increase hardships on people who live in our communities.

I am very concerned about the effect this legislation and in fact all the actions of this government are going to have upon our communities and upon our businesses. We have had deafening silence from the government benches. They cannot produce any numbers, they refuse to show us any kind of studies and in response to queries and questions from municipal leaders, they keep pushing back the deadlines.

We've had a Minister of Education who promised a toolbox over a year and a half ago; it was empty. Then the gentleman said we'll have a fair funding model for all students in the province — nothing, still nothing, and September 1998 is very close. Boards need to start planning, municipalities need to start planning and people need to know where they stand, but right now this government is flip-flopping around, cannot decide whether they're going to have extra days in the school year, whether they're going to cut the 13th year out of Ontario's education this year or the next year. They just cannot decide what it is they stand for, where it is they're going, and the people of Ontario know this.

Why doesn't this government just stand up and say: "We need help. We've made some mistakes"? Fine. We're very generous. We want to help. We want to all make sure that Ontario is and continues to be a community that thrives and is prosperous for all our citizens. Work with us. The government members should look to all our communities as resources, but unfortunately don't. They take the attitude: "We know best. All of you are just special interests. You have no idea of how these things work, and we'll take care of you." That's a very offensive attitude on the part of this government.

In Bill 194, the minister is giving himself dramatic taxing power by regulation. Backbenchers in this government should be appalled. I thought this neo-conservative movement was all for decentralization, minimizing and reducing the amount of government in people's lives. Why is this government centralizing power in the hands of a minister by regulation? Why have they done that in Bill 26 with health care? Why have they done that in Bill 103 with municipal affairs and housing? Why have they done that in Bill 104? It's a consistent pattern: the need to grab power, to make decisions and sidetrack the legitimate, democratic institution we have, the Legislative Assembly, and somehow slip in the back door these types of methods and these types of directions, which are not accountable, not democratic. The government backbenchers particularly should be ashamed of themselves.

There has not been enough time for the people of Ontario to absorb and understand all the changes this new system is going to bring into effect. I'll just highlight one. The Ontario Municipal Board used to be the final arbiter in any matters relating to assessment and taxation. That route has been effectively cut off; it is now the Assessment Review Board. That appeal process was very important, because it was an independent appeal. Everyone could go that route. With that kind of change, there are certainly strategic implications to anybody looking to appeal their assessments, be they municipalities or be they residents or businesses.

In fact, the recommendations in Bill 149 go against the recommendations of their handpicked panel on social housing. Why does the government not listen to its own experts? We've seen this in other areas as well. The Minister of Education says, "We're going to have an expert panel give us some input and some thoughts on educational matters." One of those was to reduce preparation time by 25%. What does the minister do? He said, "Great: 50%." The expert panel said that any saving found in education should be reinvested in education. What does the minister do? He waffles and won't commit to anything. He won't commit to kids. This government will not commit to the people of Ontario, and that is tragic.

Everybody in this House and everybody across Ontario wants to see fairness, but Bill 149 increases the unfairness within the property tax system, as I outlined earlier. It takes the concept of fairness and twists it and perverts it.

We really do have a government which is spinning out of control, which is wandering aimlessly, which has lost its sense of direction. It knows it has certain targets to meet in terms of funding a tax cut, in terms of deficit reduction. By the way, the initial promise from this government was to reduce the deficit in their first term. They're not going to make that; it's not even going to be close.

I really wonder, where is the commitment of this government to anything? Why will the government members, particularly the backbenchers, not stand up and say, "We will be accountable"? Why the refusal to be accountable? Why create all these arm's-length panels to give you advice, to get order-in-council power? Why not stand up? Why not say, "The buck stops here. This is our decision and we're going to live by it"? If you've made a mistake, admit your mistakes. That's fine. The people of Ontario are very generous. But that's not the case. The government is confused and moving out of control, and it's their confusion which is causing great concern and even more confusion and angst among the public.

This is terribly disheartening. When I went door to door in Oriole many people said to me: "What's the point of even going out and voting when we have a government that is wandering aimlessly, does not know where it's going, does not know what it's doing and, even worse, refuses to listen?" They refuse to listen to the good sense and to the recommendations of the people of Ontario, the people who have built this province. It's not a government; it's people. I would encourage and invite the members opposite, particularly members of the front bench, to start to include the people of Ontario in helping to restore and rebuild public confidence in this province and in our community of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and comments? The Chair recognizes the member for Cochrane South.

Mr Bisson: Chair, it's always a pleasure to see you in that chair. I want to comment on the speech just made by the member for Oriole, two points that came out of it.

Early in his speech he talked about the AMO conference that took place about a month ago. I, as the member for our caucus, was there for the three or four days it was on. I was there when Al Leach, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the minister of ministers when it comes to municipalities in this province, talked about how the whole downloading exercise was going to be revenue-neutral. The member is right. The Tories don't want too many people to remember this, but the minister was laughed at. The leaders of the municipalities of Ontario laughed at the Minister of Municipal Affairs, because he stood in front of all those people who are at the receiving end of his downloading exercise and had the gall to say, "Don't worry, this is going to be revenue-neutral." They all laughed, and they didn't laugh because they thought it was funny. They laughed because they thought: "Is this guy delusional? How can it be revenue-neutral? We're the ones that are going to get all these services you want us to take on and we're the ones that are going to end up with the increased costs." That's the point they make.

The Premier a couple of days later came in to give the big speech of the AMO conference, and he spoke very convincingly, I must say. The Premier can speak a good line when he's out there in front of the people. He made the same comment: "This is revenue-neutral." You know what the leaders of the municipalities of Ontario did? They booed, because they understand that this is not revenue-neutral, not at all. This is about the province offloading its financial obligations and responsibilities on to municipalities. The province ends up decreasing its expenditures, at whose cost? At the cost of the municipalities and their taxpayers. They're the ones who will end up paying in the end.

2050

Mr Grimmett: I'm pleased to address the comments made by the member for Oriole. Unfortunately, I'm a little disappointed in the member for Oriole. He's been here for

